While some critics decried the shows as base, sometimes exploitive entertainment, audiences and networks embraced them. "The Real World," "Survivor," "The Bachelor" and others are entrenched on television.

The Bunim-Murray productions targeted a young audience. "The Real World," for instance, threw a mixed group of young adults together as roommates, with an unblinking camera keeping tabs on them.

"Mary-Ellis opened our eyes and our hearts to a whole new way of looking at young adult programming," Judy McGrath, MTV Networks Group president, said in a statement.

The native of Northampton, Mass., is survived by her daughter, Juliana. A memorial service was scheduled for Feb. 7 at Forest Lawn.

– Lynn Elber, Associated Press

"Real World" creator Mary-Ellis Bunim died of breast cancer Thursday.

OK Go is a band that is hardly just OK

By Nick Romanow
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Chicago quartet OK Go, best known for their 2002 poppy arena rock anthem hit "Get Over It," breezes into Cambridge tomorrow night to play the Middle East, audiences can look forward to the band's trademark mix of pop and indie rock music, a fun but earnest mix that is refreshing in a sea of manufactured Britney Spears' and whiny emo groups that take themselves far too seriously. The band will also bring new songs from their upcoming sophomore album to the stage with them.

"We'll probably have between five and 10 new songs," singer/guitarist Damian Kulash told The Collegian in a phone interview last week. "The idea is to try out some new stuff and see how it feel [and] play it in front of people."

Kulash is also looking forward to seeing how some of the new songs translate into live performances.

"We sort of work things out in the studio differently than we do live," he explained. "A lot of the way we write is sort of to sit down and work on the way a particular thing feels…[you] pick up any guitar or any keyboard that's lying around and make something you like with it but that doesn't always translate to the four or five person rock arrangement."

When asked to describe what the new record might sound like, Kulash is excited and spoke quickly and enthusiastically, as he often tends to do.

"It's in its infant stages enough that it's hard to say. So far it looks like it might be a little darker, a little more aggressive with some farther flung influences… there's a falsetto soul song, [and] a little more groove oriented disco rock song."

Kulash also sees the band members' own influences playing a bigger role in the new album's sound.

"Most of us listened to a lot of aggressive alternative rock in the '90s," he said. "We were big Fugazi fans and big Pixies fans and that stuff, which I don't think you heard much of on our last record, and there's probably a little more of that [on the new record]."

The band is working on a fairly loose schedule though, with no release date scheduled and only home demos recorded.

The first album contained one song, "C-C-C-Cinnamon Lips," written and sung by bassist Tim Nordwind. Kulash would like to see more of other members singing in the future.

"I really like the idea of having other people sing songs," he said. "It's nice to get a break from one person's voice over the course of 45 minutes. [On] 'News Of The World' by Queen…everyone sings…they've got the best singer this century has seen and the drummer still sings songs on the record."

Part of what makes OK Go so distinct is how they are able to mix their love of Fugazi and the Pixies with their love of Queen and the Cars. They are able to play relatively poppy music and get away with things that bands such as Fugazi could never dream of, such as playing on the Nickelodeon show "All That."

OK Go
Tues. Feb. 3
The Middle East
Cambridge
$16 advance, $12 door

IMAGES FOR BITTEN BY WOLF.COM. PHOTO COURTESY LIARA KUHNERT/CROD

OK Go make its first Massachusetts perforamce in over a year when they play the Middle East in Cambridge Tuesday.

"We're pretty shameless about stuff like that. As long as you keep your humor about things like that, why not?" he said. "At band practice we always have these 'are we gonna this or are we not gonna do this' [conversations] and I think everybody was like 'fk it, we like little kids, let's do it'" Kulash said with a smile. However he gets a bit more serious when discussing the too-strict rules of the indie/punk world.

"I've gone back and forth several times on…how much should somebody 'play the game'…or how much do you sleep with the enemy," he said. "I think what failure, in artistic respects, is is when you don't hit your mark… We're kind of aiming at something that's accessible and emotional and fun and it's not limited. I think Fugazi is not about accessibility they're a lot about anger and…politics and…intention and emotion in that way. It would represent a total hypocrisy for them to be on Nickelodeon. If the Cure were to be on Nickelodeon," Kulash stopped and chuckled about that prospect, "you'd think it would be kind of funny but you'd also think it makes sense. 'Boys Don't Cry' is a song everyone can get."

OK Go definitely – to use Kulash's terms – hits its mark. Fans will no doubt be excited about the band's first area performance in a year and curious listeners should find themselves satisfied as OK Go bring their pop music and indie sensibility to the Middle East in Cambridge tomorrow night.

MondayFebruary2

ART

South Deerfield photographer Barbara Brady Conn's "A Celebration of Water" exhibit is on display today at the Burnett Gallery at the Jones Library in downtown Amherst. The photos show a range of water in its many forms and to pique wonder and appreciation for one of nature's most beautiful elements. The exhibit runs till Feb. 28 and the opening reception is on Thursday, Feb. 5 from 5-8 p.m. during the monthly Amherst Gallery Walk. The Burnett Gallery is located on Amity Street.

MUSIC

The Amherst Jazz Orchestra plays the first of two shows they have this month at Amherst Brewing Company. The set begins at 8:30 p.m. and is scheduled to conclude at 11 p.m. ABC is located at 24-36 North Pleasant Street. This is a free event.

WednesdayFebruary4

SHOW

Xtreme International Ice Racing will be racing at the Mullins Center starting at 7 p.m. It is expected to be exciting, fast-paced action never seen in the Pioneer Valley. The series showcases the best athletes in professional motorcycle and quad racing. Tickets are on-sale at the Mullins Center Box Office, all Ticketmaster locations, by phone 413-733-2500 or www.ticketmaster.com

ThursdayFebruary5

PERFORMING ARTS

Chi, a renowned and revolutionary dance troupe from Shanghai, China, stands ancient tradition on its head with their breathtaking fusion of kungfu, acrobatics, opera and theater tonight at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall The performance begins at 7:30 p.m. and to purchase tickets call 1-800-999-UMAS or go online to www.fineartscenter.com/tickets.

FridayFebruary6

PERFORMING ARTS

Maureen Fleming brings her multi-media performance to the Bowker Auditorium in the Fine Arts Center. Using dance, artwork and stage performance she will explore the decay and rebirth of the feminine archetype in her project titled, "Decay of the Angel." The show is set to begin at 8 p.m. and tickets are $5 for students and $12 for general admission. To purchase tickets call 1-800-999-UMAS or go online to www.fineartscenter.com/tickets.

SaturdayFebruary7

MUSIC

Dub is a Weapon, a Brooklyn-based dub reggae band plays a show tonight at Club Helsinki in Great Barrington. The Village Voice has described this group led by Dave Hahn and Larry McDonald as "drum and bass coming so hard and dangerous you can see the competition's bloodstains." Doors open at 9 p.m. and there is a $12 cover charge. Club Helsinki is located at 284 Main Street in Great Barrington.

SundayFebruary8

MUSIC

Singer-songwriter Matt Nathanson performs a set at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton tonight. Nathanson has been on tour in support of his new album, "Beneath These Fireworks" - his first major label project. Opening for Nathanson is Toby Lightman, the bluesy female singer and guitarist. The show begins at 7 p.m. and tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door.

weekly pinup

GRACELAND

World-famous South African Zulu-singing accapella group Ladysmith Black Mambazo invades the Calvin Theater Thursday, Feb. 5. The show begins at 8 p.m. and ticket prices range from $22.50 - $37.50.

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
(34 years of service—and counting!)

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2004 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 2 (Mon) •Feb. 3 (Tues) Room 101 for •Feb. 4 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb 5th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9 Two miles East of Amherst Center • On the Bus Route

www.hampfit.com

Click On:
• Class Schedule
• Pool
• Courts

And M...

Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you

- Full size Indoor Pool
- Aqua Aerobics
- Cybex Nautilus Circuit
- Boxing Studio
- Indoor Tennis
- Jacuzzi/Saunas
- Yoga/Pilates
- Cybex Free Weight
- Full Court Basketball
- Volleyball
- Aerobics/Step/Bosu
- Cardio-Vascular Equiptment

JOIN NOW FOR A SEMESTER SPECIAL OF 15 WEEKS FOR $179* PLUS A FREE TEE-SHIRT
*FOR STUDENTS

MasterCard VISA Open 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun Tel 256-6446

"Vibrant & captivating" USA Today
"Simple yet very powerful" "Brilliant" neil young & crazy horse greendale

Sunday, March 21, 2004
UMass - Mullins Center

TICKETS ON SALE NOW

UMASS TEXTBOOKS AT JEFFERY AMHERST

WE CARRY TEXTBOOKS FROM THE FOLLOWING UMASS DEPARTMENTS accounting

afro-american studies animal science anthropology arabic
art
art history astronomy bio-chemistry biology civil engineering chemistry chinese classics computer science community health communication disorders communications comparative literature dance electrical engineering economics education engineering english entomology exercise science forest management french geology german history hotel & restaurant administration human development italian journalism landscape architecture legal studies linguistics mathematics management marketing microbiology mechanical engineering
music nursing nutrition philosophy physics
plant & soil science political science psychology public policy regional planning resource economics sociology spanish statistics theater university without walls wildlife and fisheries conservation

MANY TITLES ARE DISCOUNTED!!

- SUPERIOR CUSTOMER SERVICE
  SHORTER LINES, PLEASANT SHOPPING ENVIRONMENT, FRIENDLY FACES
  PHONE CALLS WELCOME ANY TIME
  VISA, MC, AMEX, DISCOVER, PERSONAL CHECK, PURCHASE ORDER OR VOUCHER
  WE ACCEPT ALL SPECIAL ORDERS
- SUPPORT YOUR LOCAL ECONOMY!
- EXTENDED HOURS

Hours
JANUARY 25-FEBRUARY 14
MONDAY-SATURDAY, 8:30 – 8
SUNDAY, 12-5

The Jeffery Amherst College Store is located behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop and Veracruzana restaurant at 55 So. Pleasant Street 253.7816
textbooks@jeffbooks.com

THE HARDEST DECISION YOU'LL EVER HAVE TO MAKE IN COLLEGE.

TUITION FOR A YEAR?

THE ULTIMATE DORM ROOM?
(complete with flat screen TV, surround sound, laptop and more)

A NEW CAR?

NOT TO MENTION TONS OF OTHER AWESOME PRIZES LIKE A DJ STARTER KIT, BMW MOUNTAIN BIKE, PERSONAL TRAINER, OR YOUR CELL PHONE BILL PAID FOR THE YEAR!

ENTER: ?

THE CONTEST WHERE YOU CHOOSE THE PRIZE!

LOG ON: mtvU.com

mtvU THE CHANNEL JUST FOR YOU. NOW ON YOUR CAMPUS.

No purchase necessary. Contest open to legal residents of the U.S. at least 18 years old and currently enrolled at a college or university that is a current carrier of the programming service currently entitled mtvU. Entries must be received by February 10, 2004 at 10:00 AM (EST). Void where prohibited or restricted by law. Contest subject to the Official Rules. Visit mtvU.com for details. ©2004 MTV Networks. All rights reserved.

UMass haults Warriors

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

A day after scoring the easiest four points of its season, the Massachusetts hockey team followed up with another two points, downing Merrimack 3-1 at the Mullins Center Saturday night.

Thomas Pöck scored the game winner late in the second period, and Marvin Degon — fresh off a short absence due to a coach's decision — added two assists, as the Minutemen solidified their grip on second place in Hockey East. They are now 15-5-5 overall, with an 11-3-2 conference record, thanks to the four points gained from UMass-Lowell's forfeit of five wins for using an ineligible player. Included in that group are the two games played between UMass and Lowell on Jan. 3 and 4. The River Hawks won both games, 3-0 and 1-0, but those victories will now count for the Minutemen.

UMass	3
Merrimack	1

Merrimack falls to 9-16-3 overall, and 4-11-3 in Hockey East, which leaves the Warriors in a tie for fifth place with UMass Lowell. The Warriors gained two points from their overtime loss to Lowell on Jan. 16.

Pöck gave the Minutemen a lead late in the second, one which they never relinquished. Mike Warner took a shot on Merrimack goaltender Jim Healey (20 saves), and the rebound trickled dangerously back out to the slot. Pöck, creeping in from the point, slipped the rebound inside the near post, giving UMass a 2-1 lead with 52 seconds left in the middle frame. It was Pöck's 14th goal of the season, and his 32nd point.

"That had a big effect, not only giving it up, but the way we gave it up," Merrimack coach Chris Serino said. "If there's one guy you don't leave open on the PK, it's Pöck. That was just a mental breakdown."

Tim Vitek opened up the scoring for UMass, converting on a Josh Hanson rebound at 10:41 of the second for his fourth goal of the year. With Mike Alexiou serving a Merrimack too many men penalty, Hanson attempted a wraparound from behind the net, but was stopped. The puck bounced out to Vitek, sitting just outside the crease, and he popped it back in.

The Warriors responded two minutes later, with a power play goal of their own. Eric Pedersen took a slap shot from the point, and Steve Crusco, camped comfortably in front of UMass goaltender Gabe Winer's net, tipped it past the goaltender to knot the score at one goal apiece.

The Minutemen's third goal came from an unlikely source. Stephen Jacobs, staked firmly in front of Healey, tipped a Marvin Degon wrister from the point, scoring his first goal of the year, and his second in a UMass uniform. It also gave Degon his second assist of the night.

"I thought Marvin played pretty well tonight," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "He was a little rusty, but tonight was one of those hard games. This sport is a grind."

The first period began slow, and ended anything but. Neither team cracked the scoreboard, but starting around the eight minute mark, the Minutemen began to find the net, peppering Healey with a number of quality shots.

UMass was inches away from putting a goal up on the visitors twice in the period. With 6:43 to go, Marvin Degon took a pretty pass in the slot, and fired a wrister that trickled through Healey, but was swept clear by Bryan Schmidt just before crossing the goal line.

Four minutes later, a UMass dump took a tricky bounce off the corner boards, and caromed off the net as Healey looked the other way. Josh Hanson got a stick on the loose puck, but Healey recovered to make the save.

Winer was solid, but didn't get much exercise, as the Warriors only put 14 shots on him.

"I think Gabe has developed a good mindset for these stretches," said Cahoon, who also remarked that UMass was probably the only college hockey team to ever earn eight points in a weekend.

"For two periods, it really was a one-sided game," Serino said. "We didn't get much going, and they played very well."

Minutemen on a roll

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – Before the sixth-largest crowd ever to watch a basketball game at the University of Rhode Island, the Massachusetts men's basketball team got a little more of exactly what it needs.

Winning.

Trailing by as many as 10 points in the second half of a seesaw contest, the Minutemen rallied to tie the game at 62. Then, freshman Maurice Maxwell nailed a three-pointer with 25 seconds remaining to help solidify what may be his team's biggest victory of the season, 67-63 over URI on Saturday afternoon before 6,705 at the Ryan Center.

UMass	67
URI	63

"We knew we could win a road game against a good team," team captain Anthony Anderson said. "We just finally proved it to ourselves, let alone anyone else."

All five starters were in double figures for the Minutemen, as freshman guard Art Bowers led the way with a game-high 18 points, while Anderson, Jeff Viggiano and sophomore Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week Rashaun Freeman added 12 points a piece.

Senior guard Brian Woodward paced URI with 13 points, while Dustin Hellenga chipped in with 12 points and Dawan Robinson with 11.

"This ranks right up there [among most memorable wins] at UMass," Lappas said. "The guys were as happy in the locker room as I've seen them, and they deserve that."

With the score tied at 62 and the game clock winding down, It was Maxwell who stepped up and hit the biggest shot of his young career – draining a long 3-pointer over Hellenga to give the Minutemen a 65-62 lead with 25 seconds remaining.

In a season gone wrong, something finally went right for the Minutemen.

URI did not go away, however, as Woodward drew a foul while shooting a 3-pointer halfway into the left corner and went to the line for three shots with a chance to even the score.

After making his first free throw, the senior was unable to connect again and UMass took possession of the rebound, allowing Anderson to hit a pair of free throws to ice the Maroon and White's first road victory of the season.

"I just decided to be aggressive on that one," Maxwell said of the game's biggest play. "And it went in… I'm happy it went in."

"I knew it was going in right when he shot it," Viggiano added.

URI came out firing in the second half, as Hellenga was relegated to using the backboard to convert his first of four 3-point attempts on the afternoon, and also tossed in a pair of hoops on an 11-2 Ram run that pushed the score to 41-31 with under 17 minutes left to go.

Later, with Rhody back in front 51-45, the Maroon and White pulled within one with five straight points from Bowers, including his second trey of the afternoon, and took their first lead since the waning seconds of the first half when Viggiano drained a three from the right corner at the 5:44 mark to make the score 55-54.

Rhode Island then became the beneficiary of a disputed call, as a foul was called on the floor against the Rams seconds following a made 3-pointer by Hellenga. After consulting the video replay, the referees ruled the basket good, giving URI a 57-55 edge.

The teams then continued to trade the lead until the 41-second mark, when Woodward gained possession of his one miss getting to the line and draining two foul shots to tie the score at 62.

Women's hoops falls

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The injury-plagued Massachusetts women's basketball team came out scrappy against conference rival Fordham, but couldn't finish the job over the stretch.

UMass held the lead only once against the Lady Rams, on the initial basket of the game by senior guard Judit Zsedenyi. Zsedenyi and the Minutewomen struggled from then on and suffered a 61-45 loss.

UMass	45
Fordham	61

The Maroon and White was down 25-23 at halftime, but couldn't keep the same intensity coming out of the locker room. With a slew of walking injured, including forward Glamora Maeweather and point guard Monique Govan, the Minutewomen were sluggish as the game pressed on.

"We didn't have Cleo or Mo for practice, so we're down, and Edris got hurt in the first half," UMass scor. Junior guard Monica Mack hit coach Marnie Dacko said, "This is one game where I think it's clear that our defense let down and we didn't shoot particularly well so we hung in there the first 20 minutes; we just didn't have what it takes in the second half."

With only seconds remaining in the half, Edris Bailey charged down three-quarters of the court and heaved a desperation shot that fell short. Bailey landed awkward and aggravated her left knee, forcing her to be helped off the court.

Fordham had trouble figuring out and turned the ball over 16 times. The Minutewomen, however, couldn't use the opposition's miscues to their advantage and shot a meager 29 percent from the field.

As the second half began, it was clear that Fordham was the aggressor. Junior guard Monica Mack hit a jump shot, which was followed by a UMass turnover. The Lady Rams capitalized on the miscue, as Patricia Williams received an open feed and nailed a three making the score 30-23.

Monica Mack led all scorers on the day with 18 points, and she also dished seven assists and grabbed four rebounds.

The Minutewomen couldn't muster any offense against Fordham's two-three zone. Aside from Joyce Massey's first field goal of the half, UMass was held to free throws for the first five minutes.

"They're trying but we have to be able to finish inside," Dacko said. "We have to be able to make free throws, we just need more bodies and we don't have them so were trying to make due with what we have."

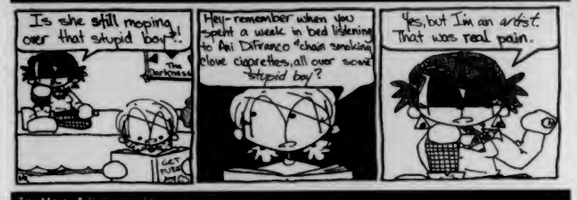
Part of UMass's woes stemmed from poor shooting from leading scorer Judit Zsedenyi. Aside from her first basket of the game Zsedenyi was 0-for-9 from the field, including 0-for-4 behind the arc.

"Shes struggling, she's in a slump, she keeps putting it up and she keeps working on her shot," Dacko said.

At one point during the half the Lady Rams jumped out to a game high 20-point lead. The Minutewomen only turned the ball over four times in the half, but were continually forced into poor shots and couldn't finish the few opportunities they were given.

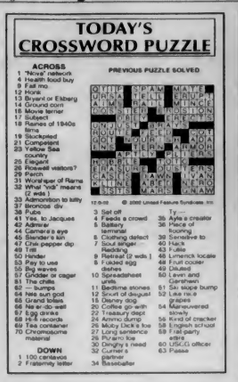
The defense just broke down and the offense couldn't fix anything.

Beetlebeep Festival

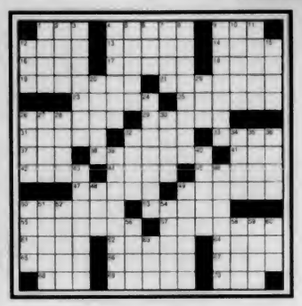


Lost Hoosier

Get Fuzzy



Lio



ZooMass

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cavatelli Supreme
- Battered Fish
- Soy Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Mamou
- Southern Fried Steak
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 34
- Low: 23

TUESDAY
- High: 38
- Low: 23

WEDNESDAY
- High: 28
- Low: 11

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Scott Eldridge II
COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl/ Katie Dwan
PRODUCTION STAFF
Diana Mogilevsky/ Jennifer Fashwood/ Ryan Flaherty

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You buffoon, you forgot about your plans.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Sit and think instead of standing and acting.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your old roommate misses you.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Relax and wish you were here.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Get in touch with loved ones you've left behind.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Be careful of the mud all over campus. It's cold, dirty, slippery and ruins pants.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Just start typing. The words will come later.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Just let it out. There is no point in hiding your emotions.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Worry about yourself and no one else for once.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Go get something to eat. I know your hungry.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Where have you been? People have been looking for you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It was nice of you to finally show up.

Quote for the Day

"Am I mixed up too much, am I mixed up too hard?"

-Bob Dylan

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
4 hours of your group's time
PLUS
our free (yes, free) fundraising solution
EQUALS
$1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartment for Rent

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

96 Accord 105K Runs great Reliable Less than book value $4500 256-1505

Sporty! Nissan Pathfinder SE Utility 4door with 4 wheel drive 1995. $4500 1-413-687-7510

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power

2000 Kia Sportage cheap, reliable, safe winter transportation, well-maintained, excellent tires, CD, AC, 4WD, Sunroof, 83,000 gentle miles $6,000 or B/O 413-695-3034

Employment

CAMP CANADENSIS, A PREMIER RESIDENTIAL SUMMER CAMP, located in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. (2 hours from New York City and Philadelphia). Our counselors teach, supervise, and share in the day-to-day experience of each camper, together forming lasting friendships. Our staff brings enthusiasm and motivation as well as understanding and sensitivity. We are looking for qualified staff to instruct athletics, LEG, WSI, waterskiing, wakeboarding, sailing, jet skiing, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, cooking, arts & crafts, outdoor adventure; including high and low ropes, climbing walls, mountain biking, motor bikes, fishing and much more. Excellent facilities and great salary! ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS, 2/23-2/27. Call 800-832-8228 or apply online, www.canadensis.com

Employment

Northampton Bicycle. Bicycle Sales, assembly, minor repairs. Twenty plus hours, or full-time now. Full-time summer. Experience strongly preferred. Gerry 586-3810 586-4125

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

D.P. Dough Drivers and Kitchen Help Needed Apply at D.P. Dough Downtown Amherst

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Employment

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time paid assistance during the school day for students speaking German, Korean, Russian, Sinhala, Spanish, or Vietnamese Contact: ESL/Bilingual Office 413-362-1857 Amherst-Pelham Schools An Equal Opportunity Affirmative Action Employer

STAGE HANDS WANTED at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr Variable Schedule- week day availability preferred 9-noon, 1pm-5 Applications at Production Services rm 146 FAC

House for Rent

New Salem Single Family 6 room, 2 bed A-frame 17 miles from UMASS. Ideal for college professor. Abutting MDC land with buildable second lot (total 10 acres). Electic home designed by the owner as artist's retreat. Surrounded by tall pines, this unique home features open space living with all wood features, in and out. Full basement, high ceilings. $380,000 GilletteRealty.com 781-397-7600

Miscellaneous

Go all night! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk... to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Hey Ma Bell, bite me! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk... to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Miscellaneous

I give great phone! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk... to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Phones go wild! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk... to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Room for Rent

Room available Now through semester. $350/month. Call Kate at 549-6202

Services

LEGAL PROBLEMS? Get free advice at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center. 545-1995.

Travel

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS. America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and

Travel

Florida: Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact NTA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK SOLUTIONS You pick the destination, we will get you there Group Discounts, Free Trips, we meet or beat any reliable competitors price! Free party package with every trip www.springbreaksolutions.com 1-877-2-THE-FUN

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The new dynasty

SUPERBOWL from page 1

Two plays later, Delhomme found Muhammad behind the New England defense for an 85-yard score, the longest play from scrimmage in Super Bowl history, to give the Panthers a 22-21 lead with 6:53 left. Fox again went for the 2-point conversion and failed.

Brady came back with the TD pass to linebacker Mike Vrabel with 2:51 remaining, and Kevin Faulk ran in for the 2-point conversion to give New England a 29-22 lead.

New England	32
Carolina	29

About two minutes later, Delhomme and Proehl hooked up to tie the game, setting up Vinatieri's heroics.

The game was scoreless longer than any previous Super Bowl — nearly 27 minutes.

Then the teams got going — 24 points in the final 3:05 of the first half that left the Patriots with a 14-10 lead.

New England dominated that dormant period and finally took a 7-0 lead on the first of two five-yard TD passes by Brady. The quarterback found Branch after Vrabel had sacked Delhomme, forcing a fumble and giving New England the ball at the Carolina 20.

At that point, New England had outgained Carolina 125 yards to minus-7, and Delhomme was 1-of-9 for 1 yard and had been sacked three times.

But the Patriots' touchdown seemed to wake up the Panthers. Delhomme led Carolina on a 95-yard drive, tied for second longest in Super Bowl history, capping it with a 39-yard TD pass to Steve Smith, who beat Tyrone Poole in single coverage. That tied it at 7-7 with 1:14 left in the half.

Brady came right back, hitting Branch for 52 yards behind Ricky Manning Jr. to set up the second five-yard TD pass, this time to Givens.

Carolina wasn't finished, either.

Vinatieri squibbed the kickoff and Kris Mangum returned it 12 yards to his own 47. With 12 seconds and a timeout left, the Panthers crossed up the Patriots by handing the ball to Stephen Davis, who rushed 21 yards to the New England 32.

After a timeout, Kasay kicked a 50-yard field goal to close the half.

New England looked as if it might get off to a quick start, shutting down the Panthers on their first possession, then moving to the Carolina 13 after Troy Brown's 28-yard punt return.

But Vinatieri's 31-yard field-goal attempt was wide right. It was only the third time he had missed indoors in 34 attempts, all of them in Houston.

The Patriots continued to keep the Panthers backed up.

Carolina got its first first down with just over two minutes left in the first quarter on a holding penalty on New England's Ty Law but had to punt three plays later. Carolina's defense held up its end — Will Witherspoon ended another Patriots threat by dumping Brown for a 10-yard loss on a reverse to take New England out of field-goal range.

Dynamic duo strikes again

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — With a chance to put the Patriots ahead early, Adam Vinatieri missed — not once, but twice. With a chance to put them in control late, Tom Brady threw his worst pass of the playoffs. When it really counted, New England's two coolest customers were perfect.

Brady stood up to Carolina's nasty pass rush, making the throws that got New England in position to win another Super Bowl on a last-second kick. Vinatieri then delivered again with four seconds left for a 32-29 victory Sunday.

The dependable duo had done it again.

With his second Super Bowl title in three years, Brady stamped himself as one of the game's best clutch passers. But he was feeling a lot more like a failure after throwing his only interception.

The Patriots were already well within Vinatieri's range early in the fourth quarter when Brady threw one that he immediately knew he should have just flung away.

Instead of letting Vinatieri make the kick and put the Patriots up by eight points, he made an uncharacteristic mistake. Brady, who didn't throw an interception in any home game during the regular season, simply threw it and hoped.

Reggie Howard's interception in the end zone left him hoping for another chance.

Brady got it, and delivered a last-second drive that was a bookend to the closing seconds of the Patriots' win over the Rams two years ago. With the score tied and 68 seconds left, he made three clutch throws that decided it.

Thirteen yards to Troy Brown, then 13 more to the same guy. Then, with overtime looming and the clock running down, a perfectly timed 17-yard pass to Deion Branch along the right sideline.

As Branch tumbled out of bounce with nine seconds left, another Lombardi Trophy was within the Patriots' grasp. All they needed was a 41-yard field goal from Vinatieri, who beat the Rams with just such a kick.

This time, he had a few troubling things on his mind. He had missed his first two tries — one wide right, one blocked — and wasted a chance to put New England ahead and get the early momentum.

Now, he was lining up in the only domed stadium that has befuddled him. He missed two in a regular-season game in Houston during the regular season — the first time he'd ever been off the mark in a dome.

This time, the ball stayed true.

"I looked up and it was going down the middle," he said. "I've been very fortunate, very lucky to be on such great teams."

Tim Burton's 'Big Fish' sports visual delight

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Are the New England Patriots ready for the 'D' word?

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 74

Appointed ALANA seats eliminated

UMass vice president's recommendation leads to decision

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Correspondent

The ALANA Caucus-appointed seats in the Student Government Association Senate will not be recognized this year, it was announced yesterday. Additionally, the appointed seats will be removed from the SGA by-laws and not be added to the SGA constitution.

Jared Nokes, speaker of the Senate, recently passed down a memo dated Jan. 30 and attached with it an additional memo from Terence P. O'Malley, general counsel and vice president of the University of Massachusetts system, and another memo from Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs.

"It is my opinion that the approval of the ALANA representation provision by the Board of Trustees would be unconstitutional," O'Malley said in his recommendation. He went on to cite several Supreme Court rulings.

The decisions, he stated, were based off the Equal Protection clause of the 14th Amendment, declaring that seats may not be reserved based on race or ethnicity.

O'Malley explained his position by using the example of the recent court rulings on considering race in the admissions process for the University of Michigan. This past June, the Supreme Court ruled that although race and other non-academic factors may be considered in university admissions, no admissions policy may use race as a predominant factor.

He stated that race can be used "to advance the interest" for diversity in education, but said that even if the ALANA seats did just that, then the appointed seats themselves are unconstitutional.

"The [seats are] discrimination for its own sake and not demonstrably tailored to further an interest in educational diversity," O'Malley wrote.

For Nokes and for Gargano, this recommendation seems to conclude the debate on appointed seats in the Senate.

Last semester, Nokes ruled that he would not recognize the ALANA appointed seats. In response, in three referendum questions on last fall's ballot, the student body voted for a constitutional amendment that would allow for the appointed seats.

At the last meeting of fall semester, the Senate voted to approve the appointed seats. In his memo, Gargano rejected this enactment.

The ALANA caucus just received notice yesterday evening.

"I think it's sad; it's pitiful," said Gladys Franco, chair of the ALANA caucus. "[Nokes] is not backing up the students, the University is not backing up the students. The students clearly said what they wanted."

The ALANA caucus is looking into appealing this decision. "It's only the opinion of one person," Franco said.

Gargano said if the seats were to be set aside based on race, then the SGA would not be in compliance with Supreme Court rulings.

With O'Malley's memo, Nokes said he felt justified.

"I feel a little vindicated. There were some comments in the paper and campus-wide that gave me a bad name," he said. "I wouldn't have made such a controversial decision if I knew it wasn't right."

He feels confident that the Senate will be able to move on and "concentrate on the broader mission."

"We haven't done much governing [this year]," Nokes said.

Nokes still believes that the ALANA caucus has an important role to play.

"Their mission shouldn't change — representing the ALANA community. They can be elected into the senate. The important thing is to introduce policies to help further diversity ..." he said. "We haven't changed anything this year. We've focused on ourselves."

The SGA will hold its first meeting of the semester tomorrow at 7 p.m. in room 163C of the Campus Center.

Four arrested after Super Bowl

By Erika Lowley
Collegian Staff

A disturbance following the New England Patriots Super Bowl victory in the Southwest Residential Area that included an estimated 2,500 students resulted in four arrests Sunday night and early yesterday morning.

"We anticipated and planned for a large gathering and we did see one," said Barbara O'Connor, University of Massachusetts Police Department chief of police.

Two arrests were made for riot related charges. Jesse D. Malloy, 21, of Lynn, was arrested for rioting and failure to disperse. Kevin Olson, 20, of Weymouth, was also charged with rioting and disorderly conduct, as well as police animal interference. One juvenile was arrested for breaking and entering and larceny over $250.

Although there were several reports of minors with open alcohol containers, only one alcohol-related arrest was made during the disturbance. Vernon G. Welch, 18, of Aquinnah was taken into custody for disturbing the peace and intoxication.

"Most of the people out there were just celebrating," said O'Connor. "There [was] nothing unlawful about that until fires, fireworks and fights were started. Then it became unlawful and we needed to break it up."

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, said yesterday that there are still more arrests to be made. Gargano was present in Southwest during the disturbances to observe the situation.

"Many of the students reacted in a very positive manner. However, there was a small group of about 20 students that continued to act in a juvenile way. That group of students we will identify and will follow through with due action," he said.

According to O'Connor, the celebration was defined as a minor disturbance, not a riot. The crowds that gathered were lawful until a man shot fireworks into the crowd, starting a small fire and causing several crowd members to assault him.

About 60 UMPD police officers were joined on the scene by 50 state cops, six K-9s and three UMPD horses to give the dispersal order.

At least 500 students left the quad immediately after the order was given. However, police officers were met with resistance by a few intoxicated individuals. After being verbally warned to return to the residence halls, students who remained were dispersed with several rounds of pepperball.

"Overall, the students were pretty well behaved," said O'Connor.

One of the biggest problems encountered by police was the failure of students to evacuate the area.

"People want to stay around and watch. Then, they subject themselves to arrest," she said.

Gargano said he eye witnessed students setting fires in the Southwest quad as he stood in the John Quincy Adams tower courtyard.

"I encouraged a number of students to act responsibly, but a couple, even at my urging, decided not to act in a good way," Gargano said. "We handed them over to the University police."

While the disturbance was much smaller than the disturbances UMass experienced during the Boston Red Sox wins and losses this past fall, Gargano feels that there is still plenty of room for improvement.

"We had a number of students that were extremely intoxicated. Also, there were many underage students walking around with open containers of beer," he said.

Gargano is planning to review the alcohol task force reports over the next month and install several new regulations into the alcohol enforcement system.

There were no damage estimates available at press time.

Students gather in the Southwest Residential Area to celebrate the New England Patriots' Super Bowl victory, Sunday night.

Sign me up

A University of Massachusetts student registers to vote between classes Monday morning at the Student Union.

UMass nanotechnology center plans in the works

By Laura Sparks
Collegian Correspondent

Charlena Seymour, provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs, announced that the University of Massachusetts plans to establish a nanotechnology research and development center to be called MassNanoTech.

MassNanoTech will act as an umbrella center to coordinate nanoscience research efforts currently conducted in many different University departments, including the Polymer Science, Engineering, Physics and Chemistry departments.

The words "nanotechnology" and "nanoscience" refer to the size scale at which scientists in this field, work. Objects are measured in nanometers; for comparison, there are about 25 million nanometers in one inch.

The desirability of building electronic devices smaller and smaller has fueled aggressive research into and funding for this relatively new field. According to a June report by the National Science Foundation, "the emerging fields of nanoscale science, engineering, and technology — the ability to work at the molecular level, atom by atom, to create large structures with fundamentally new properties and functions — are leading to unprecedented understanding and control over the basic building blocks and properties of all natural and man-made things."

UMass has been a prominent force in nanoscience research. According to Paul Kosteckl, vice provost for research, 25 UMass scientists from eight departments have received more than $22 million in funding since 1996. That means that UMass ranks seventh in the nation for nanotechnology research funding. Mark Tuominen of the physics department will co-direct the center along with James Watkins, of the chemical engineering department. Tuominen's own research is a good example of the kind of work being done at UMass. His research group is a collaborative effort, involving faculty from several different departments.

"Everyone brings different expertise to the team, and by doing that we're able to accomplish things that we wouldn't otherwise be able to accomplish ..." said Tuominen. "The best way to get discoveries is to get physicists and chemists working together with engineers."

Tuominen spoke of some of the fields where nanotechnology will make an important difference in the future. His own research group, including Tom Russell of polymer science, uses advanced copolymer techniques to grow a template of cylindrical spaces that can then be filled with magnetic materials that could be used to store information. The cylinders are spaced only about 20 nanometers apart, yielding an incredibly high density for information storage.

Another application is the use of nanotechnology for medical testing. Researchers envision one day being able to place a single drop of blood onto a small disposable testing strip that would then simultaneously test for a hundred different things. DNA also falls into the realm of nanoscience, since the width of the DNA double helix is about three nanometers. It will be possible with nanotechnology to create surfaces that will select proteins in a specific location.

Environmentally, researchers are exploring ways to filter out "nanoparticles," or very small pollutants that can travel hundreds of miles. The technology is beginning to exist to deal with these small particles.

"We are moving ahead with confidence and energy to create a nanotechnology center because we know we have a tremendous amount of talent in this area and the time is right to project our research work onto the stage of industrial innovation," Seymour said.

In addition to being a center for the coordination of research activities, organizers envision the construction of a major research and development facility on the Amherst campus.

"The entire project of designing and constructing a state-of-the-art nanofabrication facility, as well as raising funds for this, will take several years," said Michael Wright, managing asso-

See NANOSCIENCE on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reed
News Editor Perron Sulsiker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Martis Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lugris
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Assistant Production Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kiggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Graphics Assistant Charlie Huggins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Page Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marsella
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year, except during vacations, examinations and weekends. Entered as periodical postage paid at the Amherst, MA 01004 Post Office. The Collegian is printed on recycled paper. Total press run 15,000 copies.

dailycollegian.com

One killed near Northeastern University yesterday

By Martin Finucane
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — A 24-year-old Boston man was charged yesterday with vehicular homicide after he allegedly killed one man and injured three others by driving his car drunkenly into a crowd celebrating the New England Patriots' Super Bowl victory.

Stanley Filoma pleaded innocent in Roxbury District Court to a variety of charges, including motor vehicle homicide while operating under the influence and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Police said Filoma, a resident of the city's Mattapan section, defying police orders to stop, drove into a street crowded with revelers near Northeastern University early yesterday, killing James D. Grabowski, 21, of West Newbury.

Filoma was ordered held in lieu of $10,000 cash bail by Judge Milton Wright. A pre-trial hearing was set for Feb. 26.

Filoma's attorney, Steven Sack, didn't immediately return a message seeking comment.

City officials said they deplored the incident and other incidents of vandalism and violence that occurred in the city late Sunday night and early yesterday as fans' championship euphoria turned inexplicably ugly.

"We're sorry that something like this happens. It's outrageous," said acting Police Commissioner James Hussey. "It's awful that we have people who can ruin a time where we should be celebrating."

Grabowski was the son of State Police Capt. Daniel Grabowski. A State Police spokesman said the family had no comment.

Jason Stackiewicz, 21, of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., was in critical condition yesterday afternoon, police said. Another victim was treated and released from the hospital, while the third victim was still in the hospital with non-life-threatening injuries.

Suffolk district attorney spokesman David Procopio said Filoma would likely face additional, more serious charges.

Also in the Northeastern area, six cars were overturned, several others were damaged and three men were arrested on charges of malicious destruction of property, police and prosecutors said. Police said they expected to bring charges in those incidents.

In the Kenmore Square area, near Boston University, college-aged fans thronged the streets, setting small fires and breaking windows in businesses and cars, police said.

Police said that by early yesterday most of the crowd had dispersed, but those who remained turned violent, throwing bottles and other objects at officers. Police fired pepper spray balls to get them to disperse. No arrests were made in that area.

And in the city's busy Allston neighborhood, which is home to many students and has many bars and nightclubs, firefighters hosed down revelers to disperse the crowd. Temperatures were in the mid-20s.

Police said they were asking anyone with any information to come forward to help them determine who had participated in the disturbances.

Officials at Northeastern and Boston University decried the incidents that happened near their schools.

Northeastern University president Richard Freeland said the vast majority of students had celebrated appropriately, but some had demonstrated "unacceptable behavior" that would not be tolerated. He pledged that the university would try to identify students involved and pursue disciplinary actions.

Neither Filoma nor Grabowski were Northeastern students, a college spokeswoman said.

Boston University spokesman Colin Reilly said, "Any student of ours that we learn — and we will — that broke any laws or did any vandalism, we're going to hold them accountable as we have so consistently done over the years." Meanwhile, the city planned a parade that would begin at noon Tuesday at Copley Plaza, then wind its way to City Hall Plaza, where two years ago about 1.2 million fans celebrated the Patriots' Super Bowl win over the St. Louis Rams.

A crowd mingles around a buring pile of garbage and an overturned grocery cart early yesterday morning in Boston's Kenmore Square area following the New England Patriot's Super Bowl victory.

Community Service Fair tomorrow

Over 70 organizations ranging from the Peace Corps to the Girls Scouts of Western Massachusetts will offer volunteer and internship opportunities at tomorrow's Spring Community Service Fair.

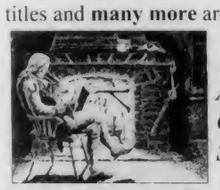
Representatives will provide information about community service opportunities and information about receiving academic credit for volunteer work. The fair will take place from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

"This is a chance to make a contact in the community," said Brian White, the coordinator for the event. Volunteer work can be found in almost any area including, human services, the environment, law, government, art and culture.

White expects at least 1,500 students to participate in the event. He calls the fair a great opportunity for students looking to add community service learning to a class, or to get some extra credit this semester. Many classes, such as My Body My Health, require community service as part of the course work.

Students eligible for financial aid can use these volunteer opportunities for work study, if the organization is approved through Financial Aid Services. The fair is sponsored by the Office of Community Service Learning, a Commonwealth College program, and has been in the works since the beginning of January.

For more information, call 413-545-2015 or e-mail servelearn@acad.umass.edu.



—Andrea Dickey

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

StudentCity.com
The Ultimate Spring Break Experience
Spring Break
Last-Minute Specials
from $199*
For More Info Call
1-888-SPRING BREAK
(1-888-777-4642)
WWW.STUDENTCITY.COM

FRENCH 110, 112 Manley, Horizons Annex:$40.00 Jeff: $37.50
GEO 131 Busch, Lab Manual Annex: $55.00 Jeff:$50.75
MICBIO 310 Madigan, Brock Bio... Annex: $124.00 Jeff:$116.25

These titles and many more are discounted, at the

JEFFERY AMHERST COLLEGE STORE

Where will YOU get YOUR books this semester?

Come visit us in downtown Amherst for superior service and lower textbook prices!

CHECK OUT OUR EXTENDED HOURS:
JANUARY 25 – FEBRUARY 14
MONDAY – SATURDAY 8:30-8
SUNDAY 12-5

The Jeffery Amherst College Store is located behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop and Veracruzana restaurant at 55 So. Pleasant Street 253.7816

textbooks@jeffbooks.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is now accepting applications for the position of features editor.

•

The job requires a nose for reporting and the ability to write 1200 to 1500 word news-based feature articles weekly.

•

For more information, call The Collegian at 413-545-1809 or see Managing Editor Dan Lamothe

Bush proposes new budget; cuts arts education, social programs

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush proposed a $2.4 trillion budget yesterday slicing scores of programs from prisons to arts education in the face of record federal deficits and the costs of war. His budget chief warned a fresh request for operations in Iraq and Afghanistan could reach $50 billion.

The election-year blueprint would pour funds into the military, domestic security and some education and health initiatives. It provides the first dollars for what ultimately could be a hugely expensive effort to visit Mars, and renews his call for making permanent the tax cuts he has shoved through Congress.

Handcuffed by shortfalls he projects will surge to an unprecedented $521 billion this year, the spare plan for 2005 offers few dramatic initiatives. It is aimed mostly at familiar Bush priorities like war, terrorism, the economy and struggling schools plus a new goal: Halving the deficit in five years, which he projects he will achieve with a 2009 shortfall of $237 billion.

"I'm confident our budget addresses a very serious situation," he said at a Cabinet meeting. "And that is that we are at war and we had dealt with a recession. And our budget is able to address those significant factors in a way that reduces the deficit in half."

Last year's deficit hit $375 billion, the highest ever in dollar terms. Though Bush projects next year's red ink at $364 billion, that excludes U.S. military efforts in Iraq and Afghanistan, which White House budget director Joshua Bolten said could hit an "upper limit" of another $50 billion.

"Hopefully the needs will be less, but it will all depend entirely on the security situation," said Bolten.

Administration officials say that request would come next year — after this November's presidential and congressional elections.

Democrats derided Bush for shortchanging social programs, pursuing tax cuts largely helping the rich and producing an unyielding stream of huge budget shortfalls.

"The president clearly does not understand the economic, social and security challenges that our nation faces today," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., a leading presidential contender.

"Today the President released a budget that deepens the deficits that his policies have helped to create," said Rep. John Spratt, D-S.C., of the House Budget Committee.

If Bush's deficit and spending projections come true, the government will borrow 22 percent of what it spends this year and 15 percent next year. His plan sets aside $178 billion next year just for paying interest on its debt.

Bush provided few details on how he would halve deficits, other than broad references to economic growth and spending restraint.

His budget assumes the one-third of the budget Congress writes every year — the rest is automatically paid benefits like Social Security — will grow by a total of 3.7 percent over the next five years. That figure is so low lawmakers are unlikely to heed it.

Bush also proposed $1.1 trillion in tax cuts over the next decade, mostly to renew expiring reductions for individuals and businesses but also reworked plans to encourage saving.

Bolten, the budget chief, said Bush wants to eliminate 65 programs for a savings of $4.9 billion and cut 63 others. Congress has ignored such proposals before.

Though Bush proposed an overall 3 percent education increase — a figure Democrats say is too skimpy — 38 programs slated for extinction were in the Education Department. They included a $35 million arts in education program, school counseling and Even Start for improving poor children's reading skills.

Programs Bush would cut include water projects, rural conservation, aid to state and local law enforcement agencies, the Amtrak passenger railroad, and federal prisons, which would drop from $4.76 billion to $4.71 billion.

The president's budget is a proposal that triggers work on spending legislation by Congress, which is controlled by Republicans.

MassNanoTech set to open

See NANOSCIENCE from page 1

ciate for MassNanoTech. "Though now in its infancy, the center will eventually coordinate research, make specialized facilities available, commercialize technology, educate students, and interface with the world at large on nanotechnology."

Tuominen says that among the center's outreach programs there will be an effort to work with local technical colleges in preparing specialized workers for this field. There will also be outreach to local K-12 schools and teachers to keep the public engaged in new findings. The center will also seek to educate the public about the impact of nanotechnology, and help to separate fact from fiction with regard to what is physically possible.

Organizers hope that the establishment of MassNanoTech will help to secure the Commonwealth's place in this explosive field.

"We will be organizing an industry consortium to work with our faculty on specific research projects that can lead to commercialized technology," said Wright. "We'll be particularly interested in Massachusetts companies for this consortium, so that the jobs that result will be in this state."

According to Kostecki, MassNanoTech will also coordinate its efforts with the Massachusetts Technology Collaborative, an organization seeking to "harness and expand the critical mass of activity in nanotechnology in the Commonwealth," and "continue the growth of Massachusetts as the global center for research, development, and commercialization in nanotechnology."

Join the Greek Area Recruitment

The past, present & future leaders of America

- Saturday, Jan. 31st @ the Bluewall Casino Night, 9-1 am
- Tuesday, Feb. 3rd @ the Mullins Center Ice Rink FREE SKATE, 7 pm
  - 1st 25 students receive free skate rentals
- Wednesday, Feb. 4th @ the Student Union Ballroom Greek Wide Info Session, 7 pm
- Thursday, Feb. 5th questionnaire sessions @ 7:30
  - Patterson lounge
  - Kennedy 5th floor classroom
  - Crabtree lounge
  - Butterfield lounge
  - Cashin lounge
  - Field lounge

Join the best to be the best...
Fraternity recruitment begins Feb 1st
Sorority recruitment begins Feb. 6th

For info or questions please call Michael Wiseman 545-2711 or email michaeldwiseman@stuaf.umass.edu

THE HARDEST DECISION YOU'LL EVER HAVE TO MAKE IN COLLEGE.

TUITION FOR A YEAR?

THE ULTIMATE DORM ROOM?
(complete with flat screen TV, surround sound, laptop and more)

A NEW CAR?

NOT TO MENTION TONS OF OTHER AWESOME PRIZES LIKE A DJ STARTER KIT, BMW MOUNTAIN BIKE, PERSONAL TRAINER, OR YOUR CELL PHONE BILL PAID FOR THE YEAR!

ENTER: ?
THE CONTEST WHERE YOU CHOOSE THE PRIZE!
LOG ON: mtvU.com

MTV U

mtvU THE CHANNEL JUST FOR YOU. NOW ON YOUR CAMPUS.

No purchase necessary. Contest open to legal residents of the U.S. at least 18 years old and currently enrolled at a college or university that is a current carrier of the programming service currently entitled mtvU. Entries must be received by February 10, 2004 at 10:00 AM (EST). Void where prohibited or restricted by law. Contest subject to the Official Rules. Visit mtvU.com for details. ©2004 MTV Networks. All rights reserved.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass response to victory improves

For the second time in the last three years, the New England Patriots have won the Super Bowl in exactly the same custom — a lone field goal breaking a nail-biting tie. For the second time in three years, the students at the University of Massachusetts have acknowledged the team's victory in exactly the same fashion — a large-scale celebration in Southwest.

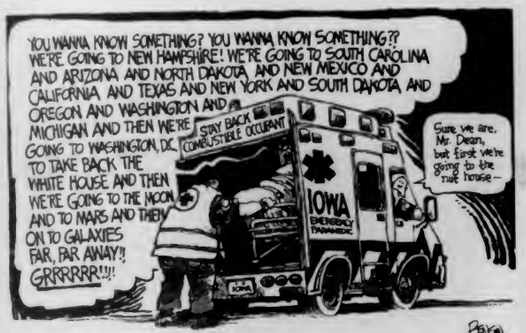
However, the festivities held on Sunday night were much different from the post-Super Bowl gathering that took place on February 3, 2002.

This year, it was only a disturbance.

After the 20-17 Patriots Super Bowl victory in 2002, a riot broke out in Southwest that included over 3,000 people. Shirts, toilet paper and several small fires burned as fireworks were set off, sometimes hitting the 18th floor of John Quincy Adams tower. The arrests were numerous, as were the injuries. Referred to by Police Chief Barbara O'Connor of the UMass Police Department as the "walking wounded," students suffered burns, cuts and bruises at the hands of their peers.

Thanks to the hard work and planning by the UMPD, the Student Government Association, the UMass administration and the students themselves, the University was better-prepared to deal with the situation than ever before — allowing the night to end with reasonable smoothness and safety.

This success was due to improvements in all facets of the University — improvements that probably kept the student body from stemming into another Super Bowl riot. However, it was not only because the UMPD had a full staff donning riot gear, horses and dogs. It was not only because the SGA encouraged students to behave responsibly. It was not only because the administration planned secure places for students to watch the game and sponsored a Super Bowl party in the Blue Wall.



This year, the students themselves adopted a more mature, respectful and cautious means of behavior. When police gave the dispersal order, most students returned to their residential halls almost immediately. According to O'Connor, there were no reported damages — a huge improvement from the Red Sox disturbances this past fall, which cost the University at least $200,000 dollars in damage.

Most importantly, there were no reported injuries.

While the night was not an entirely flawless performance (there were four arrests, a fire and visible underage drinkers), The Massachusetts Daily Collegian feels that overall, the UMass student body should be proud of their behavior.

The Collegian also credits the many anti-riot columns and letters to the editor we received, which may have helped encourage students to celebrate in a non-violent and respectful fashion. Hopefully, we can continue to shape the tone of our sporting celebrations to reflect the mature, learned and responsible student characters our University is known for.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The spirit of 1943 pennies

Yousef Munayyer

If you have ever looked at a penny from 1943, you will notice that there is something different about it than almost any other penny you have seen. No, Abe Lincoln isn't winking. Still, there is something special about a penny from that year. As soon as you glance at a 1943 penny, you will notice a remarkable difference: it isn't copper colored. That is because pennies from 1943 were made out of steel (except for what is believed to be about 40 copper ones that were minted by accident). What sets them apart though, is not only that they are made of a different metal but rather the reason behind this drastic change.

During World War II, copper and nickel were needed for the war effort, so the penny had to change. Every time I see one of these coins, I can't help but think about what it must have been like to see it for the first time back when the bombs were falling over Europe. Surely, it was a symbol that signified unity, sacrifice and even patriotism.

Where, I ask, is this now? Today so much has changed. We are far removed from the battlefield. We cannot identify with our armed forces beyond knowing they are fighting under the same banner which is saluted half-heartedly. Our leaders, dare we call them such, cannot identify with the army any more than we can. Many of them have never seen combat, that is, if they had been enlisted at all.

The armed forces have increasingly become the last resort road taken for the wrong reasons. When I see the reports and pictures of the dead and wounded coming back from Iraq and Afghanistan, I see the faces of minorities from urban areas, or whites from the mid west. I see the faces of my peers, men my age, coming home in boxes from a place they never should have gone to. When I see this, I can't help but wonder what happened to that spirit of 1943. What happened to the collective patriotism that meant giving something up for the war effort? Today that spirit is missing. Replacing it, however, is a perverse form of patriotism that is displaying Old Glory in front of your house.

What we need today is to resurrect that spirit of steel pennies. Not by placing national colors on our lawns, pick-up trucks and tattoos, but rather by becoming involved in our nation's affairs. How can anyone bear to sit and watch the news of their nation's children dying in a place they were sent to fight by leaders who do not know what it's like to face a bullet? And worse still, not only has this gone unquestioned, but people wave their flags, displaying their banal nationalism. How are we to explain that America has become a nation of followers, a nation silenced and a nation of flag wavers?

How are we to explain that America has become a nation of followers, a nation silenced and a nation of flag wavers?

We have no just explanation for this, because there isn't one. Our patriotism now must become civic engagement and activity within public political discourse. Our patriots must become those who stand up for the values and rights that have recently vanished. Our leaders can no longer be draft-dodging warmongers.

Let's think about that for a moment. The current administration is lead by Chickenhawks, that is war mongrels who "had other priorities in the '60s than military service," as Dick Cheney said, than fighting in Vietnam. Thanks a lot, Dick!

Still, it is these personalities that are the most eager to send our troops into battle. Cheney, George W. Bush, Paul Wolfowitz, Richard Perle, Tom Delay and Trent Lott are just a few of the Chickenhawks that vociferously advocated the war on Iraq. They are not over there fighting, and I can guarantee you that their children are not either. What were they doing in the '60s? Maybe they had desk jobs at the Ministry of Truth, conjuring up ideas while loading up on freedom fries and victory gin? The bottom line is they were not fighting with the rest of America.

I am not arguing that Vietnam should have been supported; I'm not arguing that we should send more troops to Iraq. What I am arguing is that there is a great degree of hypocrisy in the actions of these Chickenhawks, and this force is left unchecked. Civic engagement is dead, and it is your job, your duty as a patriot, to get up and say something. It is your job to become involved. Put the flag that you're meaninglessly waving down for a moment and go find out what it stands for.

That is what we can do now to chip in to the effort. The effort, that is, is constantly making this nation a better place, and that is not going to happen if we allow hypocrites to lead underprivileged youngsters into faraway battlefields when the change needs to happen here.

Maybe you will not see a steel penny, but still we must work to bring the spirit of those pennies, the spirit of civic engagement, back into our culture. Or else we shall all attend the funeral of the American Dream.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Step aside, New Hampshire

Rachel Smith

I braved barbarically low temperatures, attack dogs guarding people's homes atop steep, icy inclines and perhaps the most intimidating obstacle of all: New Hampshire voters. I knocked on doors. I called. I held signs. I joined the most nonsensical, incongruous part of the modern democratic process; I was a primary election campaign volunteer.

Imagine a place where powerful political figures are knocking on your door, inviting you to breakfast and most amazingly of all, listening to your every concern and pet issue. What would you do?

Would you share a cup of joe with Joe Lieberman? Would you grab a bagel with John Kerry or fresh baked cookies with Howard Dean? How would you evaluate each candidate, considering representatives of and/or the candidates themselves are available essentially 24 hours each day? Would you ask about key issues, such as the economy and the environment, or would you just inquire about the next free meal?

"I was going to vote for Joe Lieberman, but I met John Edwards and he was so much better looking in person," a New Hampshire voter and Edwards supporter told me.

Why is one of the most influential political events in the Democrats' presidential nomination process, the first in the national primary, held in a tiny republican state?

I asked her which issues are important to her, and how that influenced her decision.

"Health care is vitally important to me because I work in the industry, but it was ultimately the way Edwards presented himself that swayed me over to his side."

Had she looked at Lieberman's or Edward's health care plan? "No."

"What are you going to have with the bagels?" Frank, another New Hampshire voter asked me when I called to invite him to breakfast with Senator Joe Lieberman. I told him cream cheese.

"If you can get Jox I'll consider coming," Frank said.

The most important issue for Frank was social security, but he preferred smoked salmon to politics and wasn't familiar with the candidates' positions on that issue.

This tiny New England state, according to the U.S. Census, is home to around one million residents and a little more than 800,000 registered voters. It shapes national politics every four years in a manner larger states like California and New York could only dream of. Additionally, New Hampshire is disproportionately republican; the state is represented by four members of the GOP in congress. The Granite State is also unique from many other states because it holds an open primary, meaning independent voters can participate in normally closed primary elections.

So why is one of the most influential political events in the Democrats' presidential nomination process, the first in the national primary, held in a tiny republican state? Ironically, this process is intended to foster democracy. Instead, it inspires pandemonium.

Once upon a time, parties selected presidential nominees during conventions. The infamous smoke-filled rooms were places where state delegates would pick the nominee best suited for the national election. This system changed in the 1960s when chaotic town hall meetings populated with inattentive voters replaced confidential conferences among party elites. Democrats and Republicans hoped to reform the nomination process by making it more egalitarian.

What neither party probably counted on was the New Hampshire phenomenon. In a rational world, New Hampshire's early primary would be just a footnote to Super Tuesday, when several states including Massachusetts, New York and Georgia hold their primaries. Super Tuesday is clearly a better indicator of national sentiment than the tiny, racially and culturally homogenous New Hampshire.

However, the media, hardly a rational organization to begin with, somehow decided that New Hampshire was the most important indicator for candidates' success. Thus today around a million people get to shape candidates' issue platforms for the rest of the country.

To make matters worse, New Hampshire voters don't take their responsibility seriously. As late as the week before the Democratic primary, undecided voters polled into the double digits; this is simply inexcusable. Factoring in the access New Hampshire residents have to information about the candidates, their inability to make an informed decision by the last week of the election indicates a group of voters who are either unwilling or unable to synthesize political data.

New Hampshire voters sometimes don't even understand why they like the candidates they vote for. Perhaps the most enduringly popular candidate to win the Granite State is Republican Senator John McCain. My good friend Ken Campbell, a campaign volunteer for McCain during his bid for the nomination in 2000, said he encountered a great deal of apathetic and uninformed voters even among the Arizona congressman's supporters.

"Most of the people who even bothered to answer the doors said they hadn't decided yet," Campbell said. "A lot of people were concerned about issues like Social Security, but they didn't have any idea how the candidates stood [on those issues]."

The commercial news media can't be expected to stop covering the New Hampshire primary as if it in any way represents national sentiment, let alone the typical views of the Democratic Party. The mass media hasn't made a rational, let alone altruistic decision since Watergate, and they can't be expected to provide decent political coverage now.

So, I am imploring the state of New Hampshire to step aside and give another state, or hopefully group of states, the opportunity to be first in the nation. One million voters deciding the nomination for around 100 million nationally registered voters, is not democratic, especially for the Democrats.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Minutemen unite community

Zach Oeschlagel

As an out-of-state sports fanatic, there was something I admired about Red Sox nation when I first arrived at UMass last year.

I grew jealous of the passion that consumed Massachusetts from March thru October, and was even more amazed that people could be so enthusiastic about a team that had lost for so long. These people had fought for a long time, hoping for a championship, and their team had let them down every time. I saw a connection among all of these fans like no other, along the lines of two completely different people being held together by virtue that they were both Sox fans.

Then I wondered why that same community didn't translate into a great community at UMass. I wondered why UMass didn't come together like Red Sox fans did. We all share something, don't we?

That really started to bother me last semester after I attended the Umass-Boston College hockey game, where we lost 4-1. It was a decent game from a neutral perspective, as both teams had their chances to score, the difference being that BC put their chances in the back of the net. Regardless, the loss put a damper on the rest of my night, as I had been getting pumped up for this game for almost a week.

Afterward, I met up with some friends of mine who did not attend the game, and they saw the look on my face and knew that the hockey team had lost. Then someone mentioned to me that they were "sorry that my team lost." I told her that her team lost too, which netted me a confused "What? My team?" look, as if to say that the hockey team losing only mattered to those who participated.

The greater meaning of this, however, pointed to something even worse.

I've often told people that the biggest problem with UMass is the size of the state. The fact that the majority of campus lives within a two hour drive home is an absolute killer of community. I would guess that the average in-state student misses about five weekends a semester, which makes home an ultimate safety valve. Half of college is about growing up and being on your ow- for once, and people don't le, that nearly as well when they have that safety valve of home, with their old friends, family, and dog ready to greet them. People going back to their friends at home means that they aren't building friendships here; they aren't going to sporting events here, and they aren't becoming part of the UMass community. College isn't supposed to be people hunched over their computers in their rooms telling their friends on instant messenger that they'll be home in three days. Every time someone goes home because they miss their cat or because they have to go back to their job means the University hurts a little more. And that just stinks, doesn't it?

Without question, college athletics are one of the best ways to build community within the University.

Without question, college athletics are one of the best ways to build community within the University. They make you feel like you're a part of something, they give you a place to hang out with your friends, and most importantly, you start to identify with the school. UMass doesn't remain the place where you take your classes, but the era where you spent some of the best years of your life. You might find yourself saying things like: "Hey, that's right you guys, I go to UMass, home of the Minutemen." "Yeah, I go to UMass, and our Mass Attack is going to whip your butts on Friday night." "I go to UMass, and I love it here."

Things that happen on campus aren't mutually exclusive. We will all feel the effects of our hockey team losing; we will all feel the effects of a certain department losing its best professor, and we will all feel the effects of budget cuts, one way or another. Like it or not, the kid who lives down the hall who you never talk to will affect you somehow, and the same goes for the kids who got arrested for rioting after the Sox won.

The person who told me that she was sorry my team lost is missing out on something. Community at a university is much more important than sporting events or other extra curricular activities; these things are just a means of building it. Only when we come together will we ever be considered an outstanding university. It should never be said that, "the hockey team lost."

My hockey team lost. Our hockey team lost. And man, are we ever going to whip your butts come Friday night!

Zach Oeschlagel is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Big Fish' tells tall tale

ALL PHOTOS COURTESY COLUMBIA

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

The consensus is in: Tim Burton is a genius director.

"Big Fish" has being hailed as an exceptional work of art by most of the director's fans. Some even profess that "Big Fish" should be included in the top 200 films of the century.

However, while "Big Fish" harbors the extraordinary, fantastical visual elements, the film seems to be lacking in the plot department. Compared to the rest of Burton's canon, this movie about storytelling ironically lacks some of Burton's usual storytelling prowess.

'Big Fish'
Directed by Tim Burton
Starring Ewan McGregor, Billy Crudup
Sony
Rated PG-13
125 mins
Grade B+

Perhaps it is unfair to hold Burton accountable for a lack in the story department. He was likely drawn to the story, adapted from a novel of the same name by Daniel Wallace, for its gothic moments. Tales of a witch with a glass eye that tells how those who look into it will die and a secluded, surreal town hidden deep in a forest are luring elements taken from the pages of Wallace's novel and were adapted for the screen by John ("Go") August. However, despite the strength of Burton's fantastical elements, the story remains weak.

The story of Edward Bloom, "Big Fish" tells the tale of a man on his deathbed who has lived an extraordinary life — that is if you trust the stories he so fondly tells everyone he meets. This man has walked with witches and giants, found a hidden utopia amongst the trees, planted a field of daffodils for the woman he loved and wrestled with a fish the size of an alligator, among other things. However, his estranged son, Will, played by a stone-faced Billy Crudup, doesn't quite buy into his father's anecdotes and is searching for a grain of truth in Edward's extraordinary recollections.

It's a touching account of father and son and a moving reminder that it is never too late to rekindle a relationship gone astray, but the character Edward Bloom simply isn't compelling enough. His life was fantastic, as he seems to tell everyone, but in the end he gets everything he wants and this makes for a less than exciting hero.

See FISH on page 6

Another Jackson under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's top broadcasting regulator on Feb. 2 ordered an immediate investigation of the Super Bowl halftime show in which Justin Timberlake tore off part of Janet Jackson's costume, exposing her breast.

Federal Communications Commission chief Michael Powell said he was "outraged."

Timberlake blamed a "wardrobe malfunction," but Powell called it "a classless, crass and deplorable stunt."

MTV, which produced the show, and CBS, which broadcast it, said they had no idea the Feb. 1 halftime show would include such a display.

"CBS deeply regrets the incident," spokeswoman Leslie Anne Wade said.

The two singers were performing a flirtatious duet to end the show, with Timberlake singing "Rock Your Body," and the lines he sang at the moment of truth were: "I'm gonna have you naked by the end of this song."

With that, Timberlake reached across Jackson's leather gladiator outfit and pulled off the covering to her right breast, which was partially obscured by a sun-shaped, metal nipple decoration.

The network quickly cut away and did not mention the exposure on the air.

In a statement, Powell said: "I am outraged at what I saw during the halftime show of the Super Bowl. Like millions of Americans, my family and I gathered around the television for a celebration. Instead, that celebration was tainted

See JANET on page 6

Omarion's film 'serves' no purpose

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

High-energy dance sequences accompanied by an excellent soundtrack were enough to save this movie from an "F" rating.

However, these elements weren't enough to cover up the overall lack of good acting, the cliché story-line or the racial stereotypes that emerged from somewhere amidst the back flips and head spins of "You Got Served."

Each scene is sopped in sociological commentary that could potentially be poignant if balanced delicately with believable characters and good acting. Yet with these aspects amiss, "Served" only served to make the audience laugh uncomfortably throughout the supposedly 'serious' scenes.

The basic plot of "You Got Served" follows best of friends David (Omarion of singing group B2K) and Elgin (Marques Houston of IMX) and their dance crew as they strive to be the number one street dance team in Los Angeles. When they aren't dancing, this group of young men struggle with the harsh realities of everyday life as poor African Americans from the inner city.

'You Got Served'
Directed by Chris Stokes
Starring Omarion, Marques Houston
Sony
Rated PG-13
97 mins
Grade D

Sound familiar? That's because music video director Bille Woodruff's first feature length film "Honey" starring Jessica Alba and Mekhi Phifer is virtually the same movie, with a little less sass.

Both "Honey" and "You Got Served" had potential to drive the message home that even the extreme disadvantaged, inner city youth can aspire to greatness. Unfortunately, both of these films fail to articulate this "feel-good" message. Rather, than choosing specific obstacles common to inner city minorities, the characters here are forced to overcome every potential hurdle a person could face. Thus, each dramatic conflict is demeaned and the overall film appears as a collage of stereotypes.

From left to right: J-Boog, Lil' Fizz, Omarion, Marques Houston.

For example, look to the story line that depicts David and Elgin as misguided and desperate for money. They have to deal drugs in order to survive. Young kids lives are jeopardized by drive-by shootings. Contrary to their struggles, even though these kids are broke, they somehow afford to have the best of clothes. As far as the climactic moment goes, it doesn't get much more cliche. The quintessential rich Caucasian and Asian kids battle it out with the predominantly African American and Hispanic crew.

Okay, okay, so granted these economic demographics stand in most cities — but it is insulting and devastating that the only reason provided for the "enemy" dance team to be portrayed as such is because it is comprised of rich white rivals. One can certainly argue this was not the intention of director and writer Chris Stokes; granted there was a range of diversity present in both of the teams. But in the end, it undeniably seems to boil down to a dance off between black and white.

In an era where minorities in America rightly raise their voices to insist that they don't fit into any one category — for example, not all young black men are drug dealers living in poverty; not all black men can play ball and freestyle — this movie seems to claim the exact opposite and insist that inner-city black men do all of these things.

It is no coincidence that one of director Stokes' only other professional undertakings was as producer of a video release of a B2K concert tour. This film is quite possibly and probably a showcase for the talents of B2K. Omarion, Raz B, J Boog, Lil' Fizz — they were all present and dancing to their hearts content.

There is no denying these boys of their talent. The young men of B2K are formidable singers and dancers. However, like all professions, it is important for the men of B2K to specialize and master their own craft. There is no need to spread oneself too thin, too fast. Hopefully, the disaster that is "You Got Served" will prompt Omarion and crew to focus on the stage instead of the screen.

Regardless, the movie will likely be much enjoyed by its target audience — B2K fans who plaster their walls with Omarion posters.

Jennifer Freeman stars in "You Got Served," but fails to make the film believable.

Janet's halftime show shocks FCC

JANET from page 5

ed by a classless, crass and deplorable stunt. Our nation's children, parents and citizens deserve better."

He promised that the commission's investigation would be "thorough and swift." It could result in a fine of up to $27,500 or — if the FCC applied the sanction to each CBS station — in the millions.

Messages seeking comment from Jackson's record company and her personal publicist were not returned.

An estimated 89.6 million people watched the game, in which the New England Patriots defeated the Carolina Panthers 32-29. The viewership was a slight increase over last year's game, Nielsen Media Research said. It was the most-watched Super Bowl game since the 1998 Green Bay-Denver contest was seen by 90 million people. Nielsen estimates that 143.6 million people watched at least some part of the game, the most-ever for a Super Bowl.

The FCC has come under fire from lawmakers and outside groups who say the agency hasn't done enough to shield the public from indecent programming on radio and TV.

Legislation has been introduced in Congress to increase by 10-fold the $27,500 maximum fine for indecency. The Bush administration has endorsed the bill raising the fine to $275,000. The agency itself has said it may start issuing the fine per incident rather than per program, and is talking about revoking licenses.

Last month, the FCC proposed a $755,000 fine against Clear Channel Communications for the "Bubba the Love Sponge" program that aired multiple times on four of its Florida radio stations. The segments included graphic discussions about sex and drugs that were "designed to pander to, titillate and shock listeners," the FCC said.

That fine was a record for a single complaint. The largest cumulative fine for indecency was $1.7 million paid by Infinity Broadcasting in 1995 for various violations by Howard Stern.

MTV, CBS' corporate cousin in Viacom, issued an apology, saying the Super Bowl incident was "unrehearsed, unplanned, completely unintentional and was inconsistent with assurances we had about the content of the performance."

Timberlake said he did not intend to expose Jackson's breast. "I am sorry that anyone was offended by the wardrobe malfunction during the halftime performance of the Super Bowl," Timberlake said in a statement. "It was not intentional and is regrettable."

Wade said CBS officials attended rehearsals of the show all week, "and there was no indication any such thing would happen. The moment did not conform to CBS' broadcast standards and we would like to apologize to anyone who was offended."

The show also featured P. Diddy, Nelly and Kid Rock.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue called the conduct "offensive, embarrassing to us and our fans, and inappropriate."

"We will change our policies, our people and our processes before the next Super Bowl to ensure that this entertainment is far more effectively dealt with," he said.

Joe Browne, NFL executive vice president, said earlier that it was "unlikely that MTV will produce another Super Bowl halftime."

—Associated Press

Burton brings book to big screen

FISH from page 5

Ed Bloom got the girl, saved a town from destruction, made a fearful cave dweller step out into the spotlight and was eventually loved by his son. While all of these things are certainly fascinating, it is difficult to relate to a character who is seemingly perfect. The tragic flaw has been a dramatic must long before the days of Oedipus Rex and is not to be neglected.

The difference between this film and other Burton fare is the lack of a truly gothic lead character. Edward Scissorhands, Beetlejuice and Jack the Pumpkin King have achieved cult status among quirky fans resulting in dolls, T-shirts, etc. However, it is hard to imagine an Edward Bloom doll. Actually, an Edward Bloom doll would simply be an Ewan McGregor or Albert Finney doll, as these two actors represented his young and old self. Despite his interesting tales and interactions with interesting people, on the surface Ed Bloom is just an ordinary "looking" guy.

There is nothing wrong with ordinary "looking" people. In fact, when compared with Burton's other freakshow characters in past movies, maybe it is a desirable message. Even the very average looking guy that rides next to you on the bus may lead an incredible life.

Even so, some tend to prefer the classic Burton characters — those with a ton of white face make-up, skeletal facial features and metal hands.

COURTESY COLUMBIA

Jessica Lang brings one of Daniel Wallace's characters to life.

COURTESY COLUMBIA

Director Tim Burton (left) talks with Albert Finney. Finney plays the older Edward Bloom in "Big Fish."

There will be a meeting today at 5:30 p.m. for all Arts & Living writers in the newsroom.

voiceglo.
talk. talk. talk. talk. talk...
to any phone in the world
The Best Phone Bill Is No Phone Bill.
FREE phone service instantly
www.glominuteman.com

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9 — For more information call 253-7571
Full Aerobics Programs Included with membership:
Cardio Kickboxing
Yoga
And Many More
Nutritional Consultation / Tanning / Sauna / Juice Bar & Supplements / Personal Training
Stairmasters / Precor / Treadmills / Lifecycle / Recumbant Bikes / Lifecycle Upright Bikes / Precor / Crosstrainers / Body Masters and Icarian Free Weights / Cybex Circuit / Training Equip.
SEMESTER SPECIAL $160
Now offering aerobics only memberships!
UNLIMITED TANNING! For $39
With Purchase of Semester Special
NO ENROLLMENT FEE!!
Inquire About Pilates

Dining Services
TAMALES
Great Mexican food that's good for you!
at the Hatch
Grand opening
Wednesday, February 4, 2004
11:00 - 2:00 p.m.

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(34 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2004 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 2 (Mon) •Feb. 3 (Tues) Room 101 for •Feb. 4 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb 5th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Coca-Cola
Coca Cola Presents
The 2004 AMA Xtreme International Ice Racing Pro Series
at the Mullins Center February 4, 2004 at 7PM

Two and four wheeled gladiators will go all out as they battle bar to bar on the all-new XIIR pro racing tour, entertaining crowds with thrilling, non-stop, side-by-side racing action that can only come from the fastest sport ever to take place on frozen H2O! These machines accelerate from 0 to 60 mph in less than 3 seconds with 1,000 screws on their back wheels and over 500 on the front, and they do all of this speed with no brakes. XIIR will bring top international speedway riders from around the world.

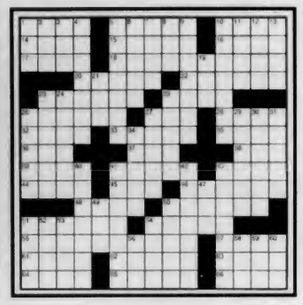
Ticket prices are $15 for the VIP Starting Line Section, $10, $8, and $6 with a $2 discount for UMASS Students with valid ID. TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW at the Mullins Center Box Office, all Ticketmaster outlets, all Filenes, locations, Ticketmaster "Charge by Phone" at (413) 733-2500 and www.ticketmaster.com.

MULLINS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
SMG
An SMG Managed Facility

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"... I know I'm who I am today because I knew you ..."

--Glinda, singing to her best friend Elphaba, the Wicked Witch of the West, in the new musical "Wicked"



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Fuel cartel
5 Slags
10 Arrived
14 Nut phony
15 Narrow street
16 On a rampage
17 Tend
18 End of trail
20 Large parrot
22 Wild animals
23 Protozoans
25 Field crop
26 Stretched to see
27 Diamond —
29 Yodeler's home
32 Poses into 33 Pillows
35 Your highness
36 PC maker
37 Faith to be
38 Light brown
39 Tell all
41 Bamboo muncher
43 Actor — Kruger
44 Hitler
46 Pro assistants
48 Thin layer
49 Mock bullfighter
50 Cuts off
51 Having fine views
54 Squeal car sound
56 Bird that hammers wood
57 Syllogism word
61 Queen Elizabeth's daughter
62 Us
63 Queens ballpark
64 Jam or pickle
65 Hauled
66 Carbon deposit

DOWN
1 Moon, poetically
2 Canadian prov.
3 Have a snack
4 Team, actually
5 Waterfall
6 Radius segments
7 Mauna Kea lava
8 Small number
9 Pictures, often
10 Beach huts
11 Author Kingsley
12 Drop feathers
13 — out (makes do with)
19 Pro —
(contractor)
21 Lincoln nickname
23 Rich as Nimrod
24 Cat or rat
28 Gluteal body
29 Insurrectionists
30 Keeps yielding
31 Mexican gent
34 Pipe wrenches
40 Stained glass
41 Maxim
42 Stalked firmly
45 Lordly
47 Feral lady?
49 Teacup on
50 Kitchen gadget
52 Dog paddled
53 Bridge's shape
55 Ages upon ages
58 Distort, as data
59 Corp. bigger
60 Letter before tau
64 Earth in comics
66 Breakfast grain

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Macaroni & Cheese
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER
- Honey Garlic Roast Pork
- Scrod with Herb Topping
- Black Bean Tofu Steak (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 38
- Low: 29

WEDNESDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 19

THURSDAY
- High: 34
- Low: 15

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Tamalynas

COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub, Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Wear stripes. They are a nice change from solid colors.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Remember phone numbers. Your cell phone always breaks at the worst times.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't put all your eggs in one basket. Put them in the refrigerator, or they'll spoil.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Be careful about napping in public places. Kid-nappings happen.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Let your hair down ... if it's not too windy.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't wuss out. Just be confident. You can do it.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
All we really need is to see you flabbergasted.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You're so friendly. You're like a Care Bear.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Go through your closet and donate everything you don't wear to charity.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't stand around like you don't have anything to do.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You are a terrible chef. Stick to Hot Pockets and Easy Mac.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Focus and get everything done quickly.

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
February Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

96 Accord 105K Runs great Reliable Less than book value $4500 256-1505

Sporty! Nissan Pathfinder SE Utility 4door with 4 wheel drive 1995. $4500 1-413-687-7510

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power

EMPLOYMENT

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

Northampton Bicycle. Bicycle Sales, assembly, minor repairs. Twenty plus hours, or full-time now. Full-time summer. Experience strongly preferred. Gerry 586-3810 586-4125

Partender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

D.P. Dough Drivers and Kitchen Help Needed Apply at D.P. Dough Downtown Amherst

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time paid assistance during the school day for students speaking German, Korean, Russian, Sinhala, Spanish, or Vietnamese Contact: ESL Bilingual Office 413-362-1857 Amherst-Pelham Schools An Equal Opportunity Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line Entry Level on board positions available, great benefits. Seasonal or Year round. 941-329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

STAGE HANDS WANTED at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr. Variable Schedule- week day availability preferred 9-noon, 1pm-5 Applications at Production Services RM 146 F.A.C.

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

FURNITURE

Double Bed Set with frames, 2 years old, very comfortable! Call Jimmy @ 603-303-0167

HOUSE FOR SALE

New Salem Single Family 6 room, 2 bed A-Frame 17 miles from UMASS. Ideal for college professor. Abutting MDC land with buildable second lot (total 10 acres). Eclectic home designed by the owner as artist's retreat. Surrounded by tall pines, this unique home features open space living with all wood features, in and out. Full basement, high ceilings. $380,000 GilletteRealty.com 781-397-7600

MISCELLANEOUS

Call your grandmother! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk... to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Call me! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk. to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Female freshman willing to put it all on the line! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Talk to me! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

SERVICES

LEGAL PROBLEMS? Get free advice at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center. 545-1995.

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price. UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com for more information on tour STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK SOLUTIONS You pick the destination, we will get you there Group Discounts, Free Trips, we meet or beat any reliable competitors price! Free party package with every trip www.springbreaksolutions.com 1-877-2-THE-FUN

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800 426-7710

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A dynasty to come?

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — Bill Belichick shies away from the "D" word. Yet even after winning their second Super Bowl in three seasons, the New England Patriots seem to be as close to a dynasty as any team can be in an era of parity.

But if "D" doesn't mean dynasty, it could certainly mean dominant.

"I don't want to get into all of that," Belichick said yesterday, less than 12 hours after the Patriots beat the Carolina Panthers 32-29.

"The NFL is so competitive, 32 teams on a level field banging their heads to get here. It's hard to think that way."

On the surface, the Patriots seemed dominant. They finished with 15 straight wins, joining the unbeaten 1972 Dolphins (17-0) as the only teams to accomplish that feat in a single season.

But nine of New England's 15 victories were by eight points or less, and only a 31-0 win over Buffalo in the regular-season finale was truly one-sided. Both their Super Bowl wins have come on last-second field goals by Adam Vinatieri, unquestionably the best clutch kicker in the game.

Still, in a league where the salary cap and free agency make it difficult for a successful team to keep its players, New England is in a unique situation.

The Patriots have so many players chosen for their ability to play a specific role, it should be easier for them to keep their roster nearly intact, unlike Baltimore, which won in 2001 and has just started to rebound after shedding a number of high-salaried players.

But the Patriots do have some cap problems.

Quarterback Tom Brady and cornerback Ty Law, will count somewhere around $17 million against the $79 million cap next season.

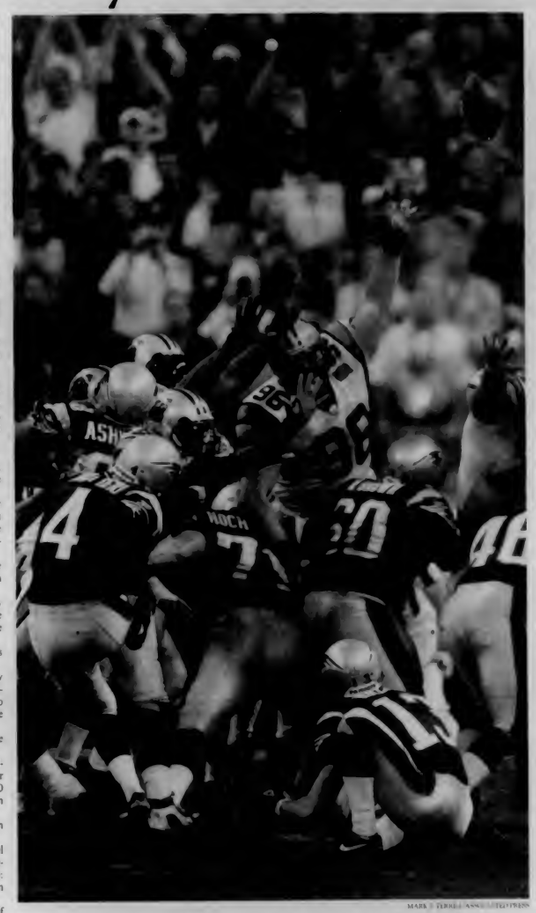
The 26-year-old Brady, who won his second Super Bowl MVP trophy, certainly isn't going anywhere. But Law, who had three interceptions in the AFC title game and who will be just 30 next season, could go — unless he restructures his contract.

Still, the Patriots separate themselves from the pack by their ability to plug in an obscure player for a solid starter and not lose a thing.

For example, Belichick cut safety Lawyer Milloy just before the start of the regular season. Rookie Eugene Wilson, a cornerback in college, took his place with little dropoff.

Rookies also could be a big part in next season's Patriots.

Six made major contributions this season, and New England will have two first-rounders in April's draft — the 21st and 32nd overall. That could allow them to trade up for a prime player or simply sit back and take what Belichick prefers: guys who fit specific roles.



Most importantly, the Patriots are a "team" in the true sense of the word.

None of the Patriots' three top receivers — second-year men Deion Branch and David Givens and 11-year veteran Troy Brown — are stars. Yet Branch had 10 catches for 143 yards in the Super Bowl, while Brown had eight for 76 and Givens five for 69.

"I wouldn't trade that group of receivers for any in the league," Brady said.

The offensive line, which held Carolina's powerful front four without a sack, also included no-name players. Three were fill-ins with very little NFL experience: rookie center Dan Koppen; right tackle Tom Ashworth; and left guard Russ Hochstein.

So, count on the Patriots to contend, especially if they continue to draft as well as they have in past years.

MARK J. TERRILL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England Patriots kicker Adam Vinatieri kicks the game-winning field goal in the final seconds to beat the Carolina Panthers 32-29 in Super Bowl XXXVIII on Sunday at Reliant Stadium in Houston.

Face it: These are the days

Andrew Merritt

It is two days later, and it's still pretty hard to grasp it all.

The New England Patriots are the champions of the National Football League, and one of the best teams in NFL history.

Doubters may not want to read further, because the above statement is considered chiseled in stone by this writer, as well as by anyone who has a grip on reality.

It is two days later, and yet the feeling lasts in such a mysterious way. It seems like you could pop open the retractable roof at Reliant Stadium, and the Patriots would still be celebrating. Even today, when they ride their duck boats (or whatever vehicle they'll use to get to City Hall), and greet the thousands of cold, aching, jubilant fans, it won't just be an event; it will be a continuation of the feeling.

Will that feeling end? Yes. It does for every team, even the Yankees, in between World Series wins. But that doesn't mean the feeling isn't a sign of something else.

The entire Boston sports universe must take on a new identity. What the Patriots have done, thanks to the strong toes of Adam Vinatieri, and the nimble work of Tom Brady, on two February evenings 728 days apart, is completely disrupt the balance of the sporting universe for Boston. Because right now, Boston, you have the winning team, and it's no fluke. There are no more naysayers (at least with credibility). There are no more facts to cloud the truth: right now, Boston is on top of the world.

The trouble is, many won't be able to accept it. That's because those beloved, hated, scrutinized, idolized Red Sox still haven't quite gotten it together for the biggest game of them all. There's still that thought in the back of your head, "This is great ... now if the Sox could only win it all ..." It's time to change that mantra.

Boston sports fans have enjoyed quite a run in the last five years. Aside from the diehard Bruins or Celtics fans, who are limited to only the B's or C's exploits for sporting karma, there have been great moments, great teams and great times in the last half-decade.

The Patriots have established themselves as not only contenders, but the preeminent team in the NFL, to such an extent that CBS recently anointed them the network's premier team for national broadcast. To think that just 14 years ago, the Pats were so bad, the only way to catch the game from home was to plug in a radio, since they didn't sell enough tickets to get on TV. Now, they are the cream of the crop, media darlings, and the franchise by which many other NFL teams are trying to mold themselves.

Those Red Sox, though they tore your heart out in October, and could very well do it again this year, are so aggravating because they are so good. That they come up short is frustrating, but the distance they go in the postseason, the talent on the team and the general spirit for its work is immeasurable. Admit it, as much as you rued the day the Sox hired Grady Little, as much as you want to turn away and detach yourself, you're still looking forward to that day when the truck is loaded up for Fort Myers.

The last two days have been gravy, and there are still plenty more days when someone will cut you off in traffic, you'll get a parking ticket or that good-looking person will shut you down. Yet you'll keep a smile on your face, because no matter what, they're going to raise another banner at Gillette Stadium this fall, and the Sox will be in it until the nights get cold again.

This time, though, that feeling ought to last. Everyone who dons a Boston/New England jersey, from the faithful talk radio listener to the casual fan, should now understand that Boston isn't the low life of the national sports arena. The Red Sox aren't bad; they just have terrible luck. The Patriots are the best team in their league. The Bruins give you something to watch nearly every night and could make a playoff run. And though the Celtics are in a rut, there're clear signs of a bright future. That's not even to mention the Revolution, who have become contenders, or the many college teams (including those here at the ol' State U.) that succeed on a yearly basis.

For weeks, the only team worth talking about in the NFL will be the Patriots. And when the Red Sox start heating up the spring nights in Florida, it will be with renewed vigor, and a roster that should bring a smile to every face topped by the red 'B.' The Bruins just benefited from Glen Murray's hat trick, and his fifth goal in three games. The Celtics, well, there's still hope, and believe that Danny Ainge has something interesting up his sleeve.

It has all changed. There is no reason for Boston sports fans to feel like the abuse they take from their neighbors in the Big Apple is anything more than good-natured fan arguments. There's legitimacy in thoughts of a championship this October, and reason to believe in it all again.

Boston is not cursed, and it's time to wake up to that. Boston sports are a religion, and the congregation needs to stand up and testify, because it really doesn't get much better than this.

Pitchers and catchers report in 17 days.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com.

Colonials celebrate a pair of milestones

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

George Washington has been one of the most successful Atlantic 10 programs for the greater part of a decade. Through all the winning seasons, two of the greatest achievements in the program's history occurred on the same day.

Joe McKeown became the 41st head coach in Division I history to achieve 400 wins, when the Colonials rolled over LaSalle on Jan. 31, 81-64, pushing their winning streak to six straight. Already the winningest coach in the A-10, McKeown now posts a career record of 400-142 (.738) overall. This ranks him 16th nationally in the winning percentage among active coaches.

McKeown was the big story from the bench, but junior Anna Montanana was the story on the court by recording the second triple-double in GW history. After flirting with a triple-double over the past couple games, Montanana finally secured the milestone with an 11-point, 12-rebound and 13-assist performance.

The victory increased the Colonials' lead in the A-10 West Division, with a 6-0 record in the West, and 1-1 against the East. LaSalle and Richmond are tied for second place in the West, with a 5-3 conference record and two losses in the division.

The rocky road

UMass Coach Marnie Dacko, who is one win away from No. 100, had to take a step back this season. Losing the veteran post tandem of Nekole Smith and Jen Butler along with senior guard Ebony Pegues, Dacko had to start rebuilding in her second year and the transition has been a struggle.

Dacko has waited to reach the century mark in victories since Jan. 11, after a 78-68 victory over Dayton in Amherst. However, the Minutewomen set a new program record for consecutive losses on the road when they fell to Temple on Jan. 29. The 18 straight road losses surpassed the previous mark of 17, which spanned from Jan. 23, 1989 to Feb. 3, 1990.

The two positive factors among the young Minutewomen team have been the improving defense and the sharp shooting of senior Judit Zsedenyi. UMass ranks second in the conference in scoring defense, holding opponents to 59.8 points per game, while holding two opponents under 50.

Zsedenyi, a native of Budapest, Hungry, has found the long-range touch Dacko was looking for when she recruited five-foot-10-inch forward. Zsedenyi has connected on 35-of-96 3-point attempts (.365).

Still perfect

LaSalle shot just 8-for-20 from the free-throw line in its 81-64 loss to George Washington on Jan. 31. Senior Jill Marano, who ranks fourth in the nation in free-throw percentage, didn't make it to the line.

The five-foot-seven-inch guard has hit her last 41 free throws. She is more than halfway to breaking the national record, which is 60 straight free throws by Richmond's Ginny Doyle in 1992.

RALPH LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Rookie on the rise

Freshman Art Bowers earned Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors after averaging 18 points and six rebounds in UMass' two victories last week. The Minutemen are in Trenton, N.J. tonight to face Rider at 7:30 p.m.

Mullins Center hosts 'Xtreme International Ice Racing'

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Super Bowl champions parade through streets of Beantown

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 75

Deadly powder delivered to Senate

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — A jittery Senate faced its second attack with a deadly toxin in 28 months on Tuesday, this time in the form of ricin powder sent to Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist. Another letter containing ricin and bound for the White House had been intercepted in November, a law enforcement official disclosed.

No illnesses were reported in either case, but dozens of Senate workers were being monitored and work in the Senate slowed to a crawl.

Health experts expressed optimism that casualties would be averted in the new attack. None of the dozens of congressional employees who were near the Tennessee Republican's office on Monday when the white powder was discovered was believed to be sick.

"As each minute ticks by, we are less and less concerned about the health effects," said Dr. Julie Gerberding, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The ricin-laced letter addressed to the White House had been detected at an offsite mail processing facility, the law enforcement official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The investigation into that letter continues, and there have been no arrests, the official said. Authorities determined the letter posed no threat to health because of the ricin's low potency and granular form.

A Capitol Police officer stands outside closed entrance to the Dirksen Senate Office building on Capitol Hill Tuesday Feb. 3, 2004. Three Senate office buildings were closed after a suspicious white powder, apparently delivered through the mail system.

On Capitol Hill, all three Senate office buildings were shut on Tuesday and could be closed the rest of the week.

That included the Dirksen Senate Office Building, where the substance was found Monday afternoon by a young worker in Frist's fourth-floor mailroom. A sign stating "Closed" hung from one of Dirksen's main doors. Yellow sheets cordoned off areas inside.

The Capitol building — where heavy security and a persistent case of nerves have reigned since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001 — was closed to tourists.

Frist and others said tests overnight showed the substance was ricin, a natural and potent poison made by refining castor beans.

Health officials urged Senate staff to watch for swiftly developing fever, coughs or fluid in the lungs over the next two or three days. When inhaled in sufficient quantities or injected, ricin can be fatal — and there is no known vaccine or cure.

Frist's offices in Tennessee were also closed as investigators checked mail there, said Frist spokesman Nick Smith.

In Washington, senators gave many aides the day off and brought others to work in small Capitol offices the lawmakers normally use as private hideaways.

The FBI and other agencies were conducting other tests. At Fort Detrick, Md., Army scientists were using electron microscopes to determine the size of the ricin's particles — crucial to determining whether any of it may have been inhaled.

Student fights for Lotto winnings

By Thomas Coyle
Collegian Staff

In a legal dispute that has received national attention, Erika R. Schmitt, a University of Masssachusetts student is alleging that a Westboro convenience store clerk stole a $20,000 winning scratch ticket from her.

According to the 18-year-old freshman, on Jan. 19 she was outside the Milk Street Getty Mart in her hometown with several friends who had already purchased lottery tickets when the clerk, who Schmitt knew as "Tony" motioned for her to enter the store.

Once inside, Schmitt bought a Lucky Star ticket and proceeded to scratch it in front of the store clerk, Antoine Reiche, 34, of Westboro. It was then that Schmitt realized that she had won a prize of $20,000.

According to Schmitt, when she went to show the clerk, Reiche seized the ticket out of her hands and told her that the ticket was worth only $100. When Schmitt demanded to see the ticket, the clerk told her to take the money and leave the store, claiming he had already entered it into the lottery register.

Schmitt called the Westboro police, who were unable to get the clerk to hand over the ticket, claiming the ticket had been thrown away. Police have since charged Reiche of the Getty Mart in connection with the incident.

According to the Worcester Telegram & Gazette, Reiche was arraigned in Westboro District Court on Feb. 2 on a charge of larceny of more than $250, a felony in the state of Massachusetts. Reiche's hearing had been postponed because he required a French interpreter. Regarding the media attention that the case has received, Ms. Schmitt said, "I didn't think it was gonna get this big at all."

Following Reiche's initial hearing in January, Schmitt agreed to speak with WBZ, Channel 4 in Boston. Several local television news crews soon besieged her aunt's house.

Schmitt said that the story has been reported in newspapers as far away as South Carolina and Los Angeles. She has also been interviewed by several radio stations, including one in Seattle. All of this attention culminated with two separate appearances on CNN live. She has also found herself

See LOTTO on page 2

Food science professor receives Lifetime award

By Tayana Chouloute
Collegian Correspondent

Professor Fergus M. Clydesdale

Professor Fergus M. Clydesdale, head of the University of Massachusetts Food Science department, has been appointed a lifetime national associate of the National Academies. He was given the prestigious award due to numerous years of work for the Institute of Medicine and National Research Council.

The Academies serve as advisers to the government and nation on science, engineering and medicine.

"I was surprised," said Clydesdale. "I didn't even know that I was being considered, but I am very humble and I feel honored."

Professor Clydesdale has recently been in Washington D.C. working with 12 other scientists to develop the new U.S. Department of Health and Human Services food pyramid, scheduled to be released in June. He is also working to reform the national dietary guidelines for Americans.

This was not Clydesdale's first recognition as a remarkable member of the UMass faculty. In May 2003, he received the Distinguished Professor award by former university President William Bulger.

According to Clydesdale, actor Richard Gere was a student in his Food Science 101 class during the 1970s.

Clydesdale is originally from Canada, and came to UMass during the late 1960s after earning his masters degree from the University of Toronto in 1962. He originally planned to stay at UMass for only one year — long enough to complete his doctorate in Food Science. He eventually decided to remain at the University, becoming a full-time professor in 1976.

"I heard about the reputation of UMass and I knew that the food science program was really good here," Clydesdale said.

Today, Clydesdale is one of the most acknowledged members of the Food Science department and has been the department head for more than 15 years. He specializes in food chemistry and nutrition. Some of Clydesdale's research interests include physical-chemical changes in food processing and color-sensory interactions in foods. He has also been published in many prestigious journals such as Science.

"I love UMass," he said. "And although I don't have as much time to teach [now], I would never give up on my students."

John Kerry victorious

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

John Kerry rolled up big victories in Missouri, Arizona and Delaware to solidify his position as Democratic presidential frontrunner, but John Edwards countered by taking his native South Carolina in a dramatic seven-state contest Tuesday.

Kerry, Edwards and Wesley Clark battled for Oklahoma, the closest race of the night and a critical test for Edwards, who hopes to prove his presidential mettle outside the South. Howard Dean was shut out along with Joe Lieberman, who dropped out of the race.

"It's a huge night," Kerry told The Associated Press. "I'm stunned by it."

Aiming for victories in several other states, Kerry dismissed Edwards' singular win.

"I compliment John Edwards, but I think you have to run a national campaign, and I think that's what we've shown tonight," the fourth-term Massachusetts senator said. "You can't cherry-pick the presidency."

Missouri and Arizona were the night's biggest prizes, with 129 delegates at stake — nearly half of the 269 delegates up for grabs Tuesday. In state after state, Kerry won among voters who wanted a candidate with experience or who could beat President Bush, exit polls showed.

Edwards had said he must win South Carolina, and he did by dominating among voters who said they most value a candidate who cares about people like them.

"We won South Carolina in a resounding fashion and won both the African-American and white vote in South Carolina, and we go from here to other states — Michigan, Virginia and Tennessee," Edwards told the AP. "It's very easy to lay out the map to get us to the nomination."

To the roar of his supporters, Edwards declared, "The politics

See LIEBERMAN on page 2

Death toll reaches 101 after terrorist two suicide bombings

By Scheherezade Faramarzi
Associated Press

IRBIL, Iraq (AP) — The number of dead rose to 101 Tuesday in the twin suicide bombings of two Kurdish political offices, the highest confirmed toll in any terrorist attack since the U.S. invasion of Iraq. Kurds blamed Ansar al-Islam, a militant group allegedly linked to Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida.

The string of insurgent attacks killed another American soldier Tuesday and came as U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan met with President Bush and announced he'll send a team to Iraq to break an impasse between the U.S.-led coalition and the Shiite Muslim clergy over how to transfer power to Iraqis.

In Baghdad, the U.S.-led Coalition Provisional Authority put the death toll from Sunday's attacks against the offices of the Kurdistan Democratic Party and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan at 101, with 133 people still hospitalized.

The attacks by bombers with explosives wired to their bodies — were the bloodiest since at least Aug. 29, when a vehicle bombing outside a Shiite mosque in Najaf killed more than 85 people. Some estimates have placed the Najaf death toll much higher.

The victims of the earlier attack included Shiite leader Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim.

U.S. Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt said the U.S. investigation has not determined who was behind the attacks in Irbil, though he would not rule out either Ansar al-Islam or al-Qaida.

Kimmitt, deputy chief of staff for operations, also said there had been an average of 23 engagements each day over the past week between U.S. forces and Iraqi insurgents, a slight increase over the figure of 18 reported last week.

One American soldier was killed and another was wounded Tuesday when a roadside bomb exploded during an operation to clear such weapons, the U.S. command said. The explosion happened near Iskandariyah, 35 miles south of Baghdad.

Earlier Tuesday, insurgents fired two rockets at Baghdad International Airport but caused no casualties, the U.S. military said. The airport is used as a major base for the military.

West of Baghdad, in Ramadi, witnesses reported insurgents fired mortars after sundown but caused no damage. Police said they believed the attack was aimed at the home of Ramadi's police chief, Ii'dan Mohammed al-Alwani.

Despite the violence, Annan announced Tuesday in Washington that he had given the final go-ahead to send a team to Iraq to study the feasibility of early legislative elections as demanded by the Shiite clergy. The United States believes security is too precarious for elections and instead wants legislators to be appointed in regional caucuses.

The legislature would in turn select a new government to take power by July 1.

During a meeting at the White House with Bush, Annan said the U.N. team would work with the Iraqis "in finding the way forward" and talk to as many Iraqis as possible to "steer things in the right direction." Annan had earlier said he wanted to make sure the team's security would be provided.

"I believe that the stability in Iraq is in everyone's interest. The U.N. does have a role to play," Annan said. Annan noted the differences about how to establish a provisional government, and said the U.N. team would try to help resolve those issues.

Bush said the United States was still committed to the June 30 deadline for turning over power and formally ending the American-led occupation.

"We've discussed ways to make sure that by working together, the Iraqi people can be free and the country stable and prosperous and an example of democracy in the Middle East," Bush said. "And the United Nations does have a vital role there."

The attack on the PUK office was filmed by the party's television station. Cameraman Saadi Sultan Mamch told The Associated Press that he saw a man dressed in beige trousers and a blue-and-white checkered shirt shuffle through the crowd to greet PUK officials on the first day of the Islamic holiday Eid al-Adha.

As the man shuffled into the camera's frame to shake hands with Kurdish official Bakir Iola, Mamch heard a terrific explosion and "my camera lens went red with blood."

"All those who died were my friends and colleagues," Mamch said Tuesday from a mattress on his living room floor where he was recovering from leg wounds. "We were like family."

"I have watched the clip more than 50 times," Mamch, 27, said. "The only gratification it gives me is that I was able to film the moment so that the truth would be known. So that al-Qaida would be exposed. There would be evidence."

Two days after the attacks, this Kurdish city was grieving from the loss. Black banners announced the deaths of loved ones, and nearly every mosque was filled with mourners attending wakes for the victims.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NEWS SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LEISURE EDITOR Glen Straub
GAME EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reed
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salzsilver
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
ASSOC. EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
TECHNICAL MANAGER Mark Lagatta
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
PLANNING MANAGER Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
PERSONNEL MANAGER JaAyan Sorensen
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Josh Kuggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHIC ARTIST Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LEISURE Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LEISURE Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT NEWS Paige Crain
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Loyles
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT NEWS Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT NEWS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT NEWS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE SUMMER AND FALL SEMESTERS, EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATION PERIODS. THE COLLEGIAN IS PRINTED AT THE PRINTING CONNECTION IN SPRINGFIELD, MASS. THE OFFICES ARE LOCATED IN THE STUDENT UNION BUILDING. THE TELEPHONE NUMBER IS 545-3500. THE FAX NUMBER IS 545-3699. THE WEBSITE IS WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM. THE COLLEGIAN IS A MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS. THE FIRST COPY IS FREE. ADDITIONAL COPIES ARE 50 CENTS EACH. SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE $150 FOR THE ACADEMIC YEAR. ADVERTISING RATES ARE AVAILABLE UPON REQUEST. ALL CONTENTS ©2004 THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN.

News meetings Mondays at 4:00 p.m.

STUDENTCITY.COM The Ultimate Spring Break Experience
Spring Break
Last-Minute Specials
from $199*
For More Info Call 1-888-SPRING BREAK (1-888-777-4642)
WWW.STUDENTCITY.COM
*Based on quad occupancy. Valid for select departures. Call or visit website for a complete list of options.

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

February 4 - February 10 2004

Today

University of Massachusetts – Xtreme International Ice Racing (XIIR) comes to the Mullins Center at 7 p.m. The event features former World Champions, Anthony Barlow and Louis Smith. Local riders will be able to participate in the Quad division. Those interested in competing can email their credentials to quads@xiir.com. Tickets are available through the Mullins Center Box office and all Ticketmaster locations, ranging in price form $6-$15. UMass students will receive a $2 discount.

Tomorrow

UMass – Chi, a combinations of acrobatics and martial arts originatig in Shanghai, China will perfonn in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 7:30 p.m. Tickets cost $7-$15 for students and are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Smith College – Arline Isaacson, co-chair of the Massachusetts Gay and Lesbian Political Caucus, and Rev. John C. Rankin, president of the Theological Education Institute debate the two opposing sides of "Is Same-Sex Marriage Good for the Nation?" at 7:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall.

Amherst College – At 8 p.m., Dolores Huerta, co-founder and first vice president emeritus of the United Farm Workers of America will lead a Dr. Martin Luther King Celebration at Johnson Chapel.

Friday

Amherst College – The Amherst Club Benefit Concert "Love Notes", an evening of music, dance and story-telling, will occur at 7:30 p.m. in Buckley Recital Hall of the Arms Music Center. Entertainers include tenor Alan Schneider, pianist and composer Eric Sawyer, violinist Yeon-Su Kim, international dance team Billbob Brown and Rebecca Nordstrom, and the wonderful stories of Onawumi Jean Moss. Tickets cost $20 for the concert and $35 for the concert and Meet the Artists party afterwards. They can be purchased at Hastings and Amherst Books.

UMass – Bestorfest, a celebration of the works of Charles Bestor, will take place at 8 p.m. in Benzanson Recital Hall. Performers include tenor William Hite Lynn, saxophone Lynn Klock, percussion Eduardo Leandro, Estela Olevsky,on piano, and conductor Laura Rexroth, conductor. Vocal performers include soprano Paulina Stark and a Faculty Chamber Wind Ensemble. Tickets cost $5 to $10 and are available by calling 545-2511. Proceeds go to the Ann Elder Bestor Memorial Scholarship Fund.

UMass – At 7 p.m. the Newman Center will host a "Date Auction." Ladies are invited to come down to the Newman Cafe and bid on the UMass man of their choice for a Valentine's Day date. All proceeds will go to funding the spring break service trip. The Newman Center is located at 472 N. Pleasant St.

Saturday

Smith College – Lungfish of Dischord Records and Sinaloa from Boston will perform at 8 p.m. in the Davis Center Ball Room in a WOQZ event. Admittances costs $5.

Sunday

Smith College – Meridel Rubenstein, Harnish Visiting Artist, will give a slide lecture entitled, "19th, 20th, 21st: Mixing Mediums, Metaphors, and Centuries" at 2 p.m. in Graham Hall, Hillyer of the Brown Fine Arts Center.

Smith College – At 4 p.m. soprano Jane Bryden with the Smith College and Five College colleagues under conductor Craig Smith will perform the music of J.S. Bach and John Harbison at Sweeney Concert Hall in Sage. A panel discussion with the performers will follow at 5:15 p.m.

Monday

UMass – Elaine Brown, first and only woman to lead the Black Panther Party, will speak on "New Age Racism" at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. There will be a reception and book signing following Elaine Brown's talk.

Tuesday

Hampshire – Jane Elliott, recipient of the National Mental Health Association Award for Excellence in Education, will present "The Anatomy of Prejudice" at 7 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall.

Lieberman Drops

KERRY from page 1

of lifting people up beats the politics of beating people down."

Clark, a retired Army general from Arkansas, needed a victory in neighboring Oklahoma to keep his candidacy alive. His supporters were braced for a bad night.

"I think the general is about to meet Sitting Bull," said David Paterson, Senate Minority Leader of the New York legislature and a Clark backer.

Dean plans to continue campaigning without a victory, though advisers privately acknowledged that his chances for a political revival were slim at best.

"We're going to have a tough night," Dean told supporters as he promised to keep "going and going and going and going — just like the Energizer bunny."

At stake were 269 pledged delegates — more than 10 percent of the 2,162 needed for the nomination —in Missouri (74), Arizona (55), South Carolina (45), Oklahoma (40), New Mexico (26), Delaware (15) and North Dakota (14).

An AP analysis of the delegate count showed Edwards winning 26 of the 269 total pledged delegates at stake Tuesday night, Kerry netting 18 and 225 delegates yet to be allocated.

Kerry, who just six weeks ago was written off as a candidate, reshaped the race with victories in Iowa and New Hampshire. "I'll keep working and fighting until I win the nomination, and then I'll keep working and fighting until I beat George Bush," he told the AP.

In nearly every region of the nation, the most diverse group of Democrats yet to cast votes this primary season said they had a singular priority: Defeat President Bush this fall.

"I don't care who wins" the Democratic primary, said Judy Donovan of Tuscon, Ariz. "I'd get my dog to run. I'm not kidding. I would get Mickey Mouse in there. Anybody but Bush."

Kerry is racking up endorsements as he tries to unite the party behind his front-running candidacy. To that end, the 1.2 million-member American Federation of Teachers, the country's second largest teachers' union, planned to back Kerry on Wednesday, a senior union official said.

$20k ticket fight battles in court recognized locally and around the state by people who have seen her on TV.

STUDENT from page 1

The state Lottery Commission has determined that a book of Lucky Star tickets containing a $20,000 winner was at the Getty Mart. According to The Boston Globe, the Lottery Commission has suspended the lotters license of the store pending an investigation. The commission has informed Schmitt that assuming someone else does not return the ticket, in one year she will be awarded the $20,000 that the ticket was worth.

Erika says that when and if she gets the money she will use some of it to buy herself a used car, put $5,000 into savings and use the rest of the money to help her aunt pay the fees and loans associated with attending UMass.

JOHN C. WHITEHEAD SCHOOL OF DIPLOMACY AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS
SETON HALL UNIVERSITY

The John C. Whitehead School of Diplomacy and International Relations prepares students from around the world to be effective and ethical leaders in their professional careers. Through a unique link with the United Nations, students are exposed to today's leaders and policymakers while experiencing diplomacy at work.

Innovative programs in global studies and leadership include:

- Graduate, undergraduate and five-year combined B.S./M.A. programs
- Dual graduate degrees with law, business, public service, communications and nonprofit management
- Internships with the U.N., business, government, and NGOs
- Specializations in human rights, economics and finance, negotiation and conflict management, area studies and a new initiative on global health and international security
- Intensive study seminars at U.N. headquarters, the European Union and our main campus just 14 miles from New York City

A Whitehead School representative will be visiting your campus.
Contact our Office of Graduate Admission at (973) 275-2514 to schedule an appointment.
Visit our Web site at diplomacy.shu.edu

SETON HALL UNIVERSITY
McQuaid Hall
400 South Orange Avenue
South Orange, New Jersey
07079

IN ALLIANCE WITH THE UNITED NATIONS ASSOCIATION OF THE U.S.A.

WATCH DAWG:
Person who claims they were among the first to start downloading movies.
THE NEWEST WAY TO GET HIT MOVIES: DOWNLOAD THEM.
STUDENTS GET 25% OFF* ALL MOVIES AT COLLEGE.MOVIELINK.COM
Movielink™ movies on demand

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Parents speak out in Florida abduction case

The case of the alleged kidnapping of 11-year-old Carlie Brucia in Sarasota, Fla. made national news when the parents of the girl spoke out on NBC's "Today" show Tuesday morning.

Early Sunday night, Carlie was returning home from a friends' house. She was taking a short cut that passed behind a local car wash. While on her way, she was approached by a white male who appeared to be in his late-20s or early 30s. He was dressed in a mechanic shirt. What followed was an act that has become all too common in today's world, and an event that is as deplorable and frightening as anyone can think of — Carlie was kidnapped. According to the security cameras at the car wash, which captured the abduction on videotape, the man led Carlie away by the arm. It did not appear that she knew him.

Carlie was scheduled to meet up with her stepfather in order to get a ride the rest of the way home. When the stepfather arrived in the area and was unable to locate Carlie, a local search began. The police raised an amber alert on Monday, and since then state officers and the FBI have joined in the search for the sixth grader. The police told Carlie's father, Joe Brucia, that they have no prime suspect as of yet.

Yesterday morning, Joe Brucia, with Carlie's mother Susan Schorpen by his side, used the services of NBC to get in touch with their daughter's kidnapper.

"To the man who abducted her, you've done a considerable amount of damage," Brucia said on "Today." "Please stop. Release my daughter. Let her go. With some help and some love she can heal. Give us back our daughter."

The community has been reacting quite well to the shocking news of Carlie's disappearance. At Carlie's middle school, for example, security has been increased to make the other students feel safe. Counselors are also working with the students to prepare them for all possible outcomes of the case.

Certainly all eyes are on now on the state of Florida, and as the search continues, the country holds its breath.

The national coverage that this story is now getting will hopefully help the police in gathering as much information as possible. So far the investigation has uncovered a few clues, and combined with the information provided by the videotape, it will hopefully be enough to bring this sad story to a happy end.

We at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian would like to extend our deepest sympathy to the friends and family of Carlie Brucia. At tragic times such as these, it is important to remain optimistic and hopeful that young Carlie will be found and returned to her parents safe and sound.

Information from cnn.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The 2000 Election now repeats

Robert Carey

Prior to winter break, the Democratic nomination was turning out to be a toss-up race with about six or seven legitimate candidates. Now that we have returned to school the biggest hands have been dealt, and the winner of the chips has been the one man who is probably the most inept at beating George Bush — John Kerry. I have to give Kerry credit for playing cut-throat politics in order to surpass some of his more challenging candidates (by stealing endorsements, raising funds and making behind-the-door promises no doubt), Kerry's long experience as a politician has proven useful to him, but for all of us who wish to see George W. Bush ousted in 2004, seeing John Kerry run against him couldn't be more disheartening.

This is not to say that Kerry is incapable of playing brute bare-knuckle politics with George Bush, but as far as appealing to the nations' public and looking like someone with integrity instead of a spineless, character-shifting yes-man who's ghostly frame might collapse and blow away into dust at any moment, well, George Bush has him beat.

At first I found myself falling into the same idealistic trap I did last election when I decided I was favoring Howard Dead. Then I wised up.

His moronic strategy was to appeal to the youth campaign. Did he learn nothing from the Nader/LaDuke ticket in 2000? It seems young voters always mean well when they're at the rallies and loud political parties, but it is rare to see even a quarter of them turning up at the polls on Election Day (thus leaving the candidate that they had so passionately supported high and dry). I still like Howard Dean, but it seems he lacks the political instincts that Kerry has in spades. Next time he should try hiring a better advisor.

Dean's boyish sense of invincibility and Spartan existence might swoon the provincial electorate of Vermont, but screaming like he had just been elected High Chancellor of the World after coming in a distant third at the Iowa caucuses isn't appealing to the majority of voters, and rightly so.

But you have to give credit to Dean for being himself; there were no cheap tricks and no shameless acts of acceptance to try and con people into liking him. Bush, if nothing else, was himself in the 2000 election, and the voting public responded to someone who didn't change according to the whims of the populace. The result was that many voters, particularly in the southern states, were attracted to his oafish adolescent, and small vocabulary. People do not respect candidates who put on a facade of someone they're not in a pathetic attempt to relate to some contingency of voters that they feel they're not in touch with. Even the most slack-jawed, brainwashed, inbred forms of existence that are allowed to hold a vote in this country can see through such stupid tricks.

Aside from being suspiciously secretive, and completely untrustworthy, John Kerry is a spineless, electoral gimp, with no detectable signs of integrity, or character.

Remember all those painfully tragic kisses Al gave Tipper in the 2000 election, after he was criticized for being too robotic and unanimated. The same will go in this election with a slight change in cast — this time around it will be John Kerry playing the cold, mechanical democrat.

And nothing could epitomize this more than the leather-clad John Kerry riding a Harley on "The Tonight Show." These inane parlor tricks on late night TV do not work, unless the candidate is showing a side of himself that is genuine. Anyone can detect a political fraud, and rightly feel offended by it. This is why Clinton's sax appearance worked so well — it was genuine.

This is why I fear a horrible repeat of the 2000 election, except with less cheating from the Republican side, as none shall be necessary. Aside from being suspiciously secretive, and completely untrustworthy, John Kerry is a spineless, electoral gimp, with no detectable signs of integrity, or character. If he runs against Bush he will lose, and lose badly. The Democrats best chance at winning this election would have been to mirror the Republican's strategy — have a fool as your front man, and allow him to be controlled by an army of corporate juggernauts who dictate his every move.

However, the Democratic Party is going in the same direction that it did four years ago. Al Gore wasn't appealing last election, his second coming will be less so in the post 9-11 mania. And so 2004 is shaping up to be a rematch between another characterless schlub and a twit who is inevitably going to win. This will result in another four years of war that vaporizes a nation of defenseless people, more jobs going oversees fleeing away from the shriveling domestic economy, another senile, pro-life relic from the days of lynching laws being elected to the Supreme Court, and maybe even another terrorist attack prompted by the continuation of our reprehensible part in foreign affairs.

Robert Carey is a Collegian columnist.

Relationship science fiction

Thomas Naughton

I couldn't see very well, which is bad when you're driving. Both of my contacts were intact and in place, I wasn't drunk, or blindfolded — I was crying. Ten seconds before finding myself sobbing at the wheel of my car, I was hugging my ex boyfriend, kissing him and crying while kissing him, mumbling some god awful sentimental crap while crying. I was a mess. I hate crying in front of people because my lips are really big so I tend to look like Julia Roberts in "Steel Magnolias" — my face all crunched up and two big balloon lips spilling over wet with tears (the upside is Julia Roberts is really hot). Mike, my ex-boyfriend, and I ended our four-month relationship in September in the midst of my return to UMass. I hugged Mike, who was crying — which is a big deal for the ex-high school footballer — then got into my car and drove away. I wiped away the tears that clouded my vision and thought, "Well, hey, its not so bad, since he'll be dead tomorrow."

When I woke up the next day after a long night of Julia Roberts, forcing myself to sleep, it hit me. He's not going to be dead. He's going to be alive, and what's more, he is going to be alive to date other people (Re-enter Julia Roberts, stage left). On television, when one of the main characters breaks up with the person that they are seeing, said person is written out of the show, never to be seen by viewers again unless during the illusive amnesia episode wherein he/she is called in to jog the memory of the main character. I was prepared to be sad that we were breaking up, I was prepared for the break up, sort of, but I was not prepared for anything after that.

In television, you, the main character, do not have to worry about running into your ex at parties, bars, the super market, church or the video store.

In television, you, the main character, do not have to see this person ever again. You do not have to be friendly. You do not have to worry about running into your ex at parties, bars, the super market, church or the video store. You do not have to worry about receiving long text messages on your cell phone from your ex who says he has your "stuff". For all intents and purposes, your television show goes on and you move on to another lover, another story line, a new haircut and its as though the whole relationship never happened.

Where's the reality of relationships on TV (and I'm not talking about the stupid "dating" reality shows)? Where's the season of "Sex And The City" where Carrie and Boyfriend have to live together until he finds a place? Or the episode of "ER" where Carter's ex-girlfriend still comes over to have dinner with his mom? I want to see the "Nip/Tuck" where Christian does a penis-reduction surgery on his ex-girlfriend's new boyfriend who is way hotter than him. Except for the prospect of penis-reduction surgery, all of these television ideas are boring and are therefore not explored by our favorite shows.

What's even worse than the break-up misconceptions conveyed by TV is the idea that is so embraced, celebrated, and looked upon to be the universal truth in the world of TV relationships: there is that one person out there whom you will live the rest of your days with. Is lifelong monogamy possible or even healthy? My parents have been married for over 30 years, a relationship they have worked through very hard. I am proud of them to have stayed together for so long, but I can't help but wonder if they would have been happier had they had more relationships than just puppy love with other people in grade school and then their marriage out of college. Would I have been as happy as I am today if they had divorced when I was younger?

Are my parents just as in love as they were when they were first married? No, they're in a different kind of love. They don't have to hold hands all the time or call each other stupid names. They are in love for sure, and they're also way too stubborn to let one another have the last word, so they have to keep talking. They grew up in an age very different from ours, wherein couples booked the local American Legion for their Golden Anniversary after they returned from their honeymoon.

Nick Lachey totally wants out. You can see it in his eyes. He met Barbie, married her, deflowered her, and now the only thing keeping him from breaking it off with Jessica "I'm A Bad Singer" Simpson is the fact that "Newlyweds" is the only thing keeping his career going. He's ready for Skipper now (and Ken, if my speculations are correct).

I have diffused some Relationship Science Fiction for you, the readers, as an early Valentine's Day present.

Scenario: You broke up with your partner.
Science Fiction: He'll die tomorrow or be deported.
Reality: He's alive, he may live with you, and chances are, you are going to see him again.

Scenario: Your ex wants to be friends.
Science Fiction: You won't care because of your new playmate, Antonio(a).
Reality: You can't be friends. Your ex does not want to be friends, he/she wants someone to have sex with between relationships.

Scenario: Your ex believes that your relationship could work under different circumstances.
Science Fiction: You agree and can't wait until the different circumstances come around.
Reality: The different circumstances are when he/she is not a big jerk.

Scenario: Your ex contacts you after finding some of your "stuff" at their residence.
Science Fiction: Your altruistic ex would not want you to be without an undershirt or a pair of "tighty-whities."
Reality: You're being screwed with. Wal-Mart has cheap undies.

Scenario: You see your ex, and he/she tells you that they are very happy to see you and even calls a couple days later.
Science Fiction: Its "different circumstances" time!
Reality: If you believe that crap, you're the captain of this starship.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

The best things in life are ...

Deborah Geiger

Why do we all love free stuff? Why are humans somehow preprogrammed to crave anything that doesn't have a price tag? Well, if you consult your psychology book, it has to do with mommy giving you lots of free stuff (like love and attention and box drinks at soccer games) or not giving you that stuff at all ... either way, we all crave whatever is free.

It's the same reason we sign our stupid lives away for those free T-shirts on credit card application stands. Thirty years worth of debt for a really ugly, glow in the dark "absolute college" T-shirt. Maybe this can explain why the word "free" is used so freely in advertising. "Free" is such an enticing word, that you'll see just how often and many companies are always trying to incorporate it.

Especially in food and drink.

Calorie free, fat free, sugar free. Not "no calories," "no fat," or "no sugar." That sneaky little word inveigles us so well and so predictably that we will drink, eat, and consume limitless amounts of anything — "anything" that is free; stuff that really isn't good for us. If you're a girl, you'll know especially what I mean — welcome to the world of Diet Coke. A little stressed about that test tomorrow? Crack one open and hit the books. I confess that I have consumed a two-liter in a day. Diet soda may be calorie-free, but it can't be healthy — it's all chemicals! It's probably a lot worse for you than the real stuff! So why do we drink it — and so much of it? Because we're bored? Because it tastes good? Actually, come to think of it, does it taste good?

I'm sitting at my desk writing paper number two for the evening, and I need a lift. I need a lift, but nothing as blatantly caffeine rich as coffee.

Nothing feels better than cracking open a can of Diet Coke. It can be the dead of winter and I still crave that cool gasp of O2 as I crack open the can.

The bubbles are satisfying. It's so sweet that I don't need to eat a snack that late at night. And best of all, it's free. It's diet so it won't make me a fatty. No late night pop tarts (a la fresh-man year) needed. And I can keep drinking one after the next, like a junky, tossing each can into the trash as it clangs against the one that preceded it. What is wrong here? Is it the obsession? Or the deception?

Advertising and psychology are birds of a deadly feather — they'll sell you on something you really don't want or need. Gauging something is surprisingly easy.

One morning, I slept in and leisurely made a pot of coffee in my pink pajamas. Then I realized, my big box of Equal (the little blue packets of fake sugar) is not Olive Garden's never-ending special — it was bottomed out. It was empty! But I needed my Equal. I remember thinking: how can anyone drink coffee without it?

I emptied out the drawer — really overturned it and two packets fell out! Thank god. It started as a basic search. You know, casually looking under things, in my desk, around the Mr. Coffee, but quickly regressed into a frantic search in pants pockets, all the bags I own (this could have taken days), suitcases, inside/betwixt, and under general heavy furniture, repeating all these places just in case. All for stupid Equal. So I quit ... I quit Equal, I quit Diet Coke, I quit thinking that gilt with purchase was a way for Clinique to warm our hearts for being wonderful people.

Advertising and psychology are birds of a deadly feather — they'll sell you on something you really don't want or need. Gauging something is surprisingly easy; if this ugly ass MasterCard T-shirt were 15 bucks, would I buy it? If the answer's no way, it'll soon serve as a proud window decoration of the Salvation Army on Route 9.

If you drink endless cans of diet soda, ask yourself if you'd drink that much regular, or is it because of that "free" feeling you get? Like you're getting something for nothing?

Quality over quantity as the old cliché goes ... the problems only begin when you try to get something for nothing.

Deborah Geiger is a Collegian columnist.

ADVENTURESABROAD

Head scarf debate in Europe

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

It used to be that the scarf was quite the fashionable female accessory, signifying wealth and high society: a piece of apparel worn by Hollywood stars and first ladies alike, or even just regular ol' people who didn't want their hair to get frizzy when it rained. Actually it still is; it's just that since the middle of the 1980s it has come to be a fashion piece most readily associated, in Europe at least, with the throngs of Muslim immigrants that arrive annually to the continent's urban centers. In fact, many women here in Brussels have decided against adorning themselves with such attire so as to avoid being labeled a "Turk."

It is in this context that on Dec. 17, 2003 French President Jacques Chirac, acting on the advice of a presidential advisory council, recommended to the French Parliament that it enact a ban against outward showings of faith in public schools. The move is necessary, he claims, to maintain the secular tradition that has characterized the republic since its historical revolution of 1789. The move seems to have majority support from France's center-right Parliament.

Predominantly Muslim detractors of the proposal cite freedom of expression and religion as even more indispensable values of the revolution. Some have even gone so far as to accuse Chirac of attempting to undermine the Muslim community altogether by limiting access to religion to those who can afford it — which is not many.

In an effort to be fair, the president's recommendation also extends to Jewish kippah and oversized Christian crosses. In addition to drawing fire from these communities, additional questions have been raised regarding the measure: what exactly constitutes an unacceptable level of religious expression? It has been suggested that facial hair may be deemed a perpetration of the act. Is it possible that Christians would be allowed to keep their beards while Muslims are forced to shave?

These ideas are not entirely novel. Turkey, a secular country with a vastly predominate Islamic population, has for years had a similar ban on both headscarves and beards in public schools. Though there have been incidents of protest, it has not reached the magnitude of the ongoing manifestations in Paris. Countries such as France and Belgium have, in the past few years, also spoken out against what they view as a merging of church and state by Poland's demands for references to god in a controversial European Constitution that was shot down last month. In the wake of a failed referendum last year to make Arabic the fourth official language and devote public money to Islamic monuments, Belgian leaders have picked up on Chirac's cue and began the so-called "headscarf question." Observers expect the situation to prove quite explosive in a country with an increasingly large Muslim population.

The move would seem to be a great gain for the growing sentiment of the urgency of cultural protectionism that festers on the right of the political spectrum across Europe. The 1990s witnessed a significant rise in popularity of extremist conservative parties in almost all western European nations and a refocusing upon the potential cultural and economic woes of the supposed "exodus" westward, primarily from the Middle East and Eastern Europe. Jean-Marie Le Pen's Front National in France and Vlaams Blok in Belgium are among the most notorious and successful of such groups. The irony of this scenario is that most EU nations are actually at a loss for labor, particularly unskilled labor – a gap that is nicely filled by such immigration patterns. Thus, any attempt to force cultural assimilation would certainly be welcomed by European conservatives.

The dispute amongst feminists is even more paradoxical, and has led largely to the abstention of the community from the discussion altogether. One of the justifications for banning the headscarf most commonly cited by the men involved in the debate here in Belgium is that body coverings such as scarves are forced upon women by a patriarchal Islam and a male-dominated family unit. Proponents of this view, in turn, claim that although they would never seek to impose their own morality upon Islamic societies, they will not tolerate such "engrained oppression" and "fundamentalism" within their own borders. Since women are essentially brainwashed into wearing such adornments, it follows, their psychological emancipation hinges upon mandatory removal of the garments altogether.

Yet while many feminists admit that there is a grain of truth to this stance, overall they would beg to differ. Their view is that if the individuals involved in this aspect of policy making were honestly pursuing an end of women's rights, then they would leave women the right to choose their own attire.

The debate is further complicated by the multilevel system of Belgian governance which is comprised of six different governments of equal authority in charge of different competences: the three linguistic Community governments (Flemish, French and German), three regional governments (Flemish, Walloon and Brussels-capital), and the national government; with the Flemish Community and Regional government fused into one. Traditionally, education is a matter of Community competence. This means that the Flemish, Francophone, and German-speaking communities would be in charge of the policies within their respective domains. But a discrepancy of this magnitude has the potential to render some serious political repercussions if one community passes a ban and the others don't.

The situation in Brussels itself is even more complex: French and Flemish schools exist side-by-side and there is an ongoing debate over which aspects of education should be handled at the community level and which should be addressed by the regional government. Overall, the intricacy of the scenario seems to make such a ban much less probable in Belgium than in France.

The popular sentiment within the international scholarly community here in Brussels seems to be that freedom of choice should be the norm. Laissez-faire now transcends the field of economics and applies to the impending political-cultural decisions as well.

It will be interesting to see just how these issues play out under scrutiny of Muslim communities from Detroit to Riyadh and what sort of a political precedent is set for dealing with this novel form of European nationalism.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist who spent time in Brussels, Belgium over winter vacation.

Terrible injustices of Chiapas

Ferron Salnicker

World Perspectives

The state of Chiapas sits on the southern tip of Mexico, pulsating with sounds of the exotic rainforests and the Pacific Ocean waves crashing onto untouched soil. But the state of Chiapas, while home to ancient Mayan ruins and the precious amber stone, separates itself from the rest of the world with an element unrelated to its geography — the passion of its people.

When I arrived in Chiapas I arrived to markets bursting with colorful dresses, sweet smells and shouting vendors. I arrived to women offering me a taste of traditional foods and men chatting in their language that was unrecognizable to my ears. And while I marveled at my new two-week home for the winter break, unfortunately the voice in the back of my mind reminded me that I had arrived to a place plagued by poverty and political turmoil.

Characterized by having one of the highest indigenous populations, the least developed health infrastructure and the lowest levels of income and education in the country, Chiapas is one of the poorest states in Mexico. Piled on top of the bundle of wood or fruit weighing down the farmer's back is an unjust burden of poverty these people are forced to carry. It was not difficult to encounter the poverty that so many people of Chiapas face, no matter the mode of transportation; bus, car or foot, beggars ranging from young children to grandmother-aged women approached me, in many cases aggressively pleading for me to buy fruits, clothes and sometimes only displaying empty hands. This experience is not new to me, and isn't to most travelers but what surprised me was the constant feelings of hope and appreciation the so many of the people of Chiapas have for themselves and for their home. I quickly discovered that this hope, only detectable to the visitor who cares and engages in conversation with the locals, is guided by a stronger movement — the Zapatista Army of National Liberation (EZLN), or the Zapatistas.

While the Mexican government has taken a recent interest in Chiapas, the indigenous struggles do not rate high on its list of priorities. Mineral and petroleum exploration, commercial timber contracts for multinational companies and five-star hotels threaten the Chiapas people and their land. The revolutionary group, the Zapatistas, named after the hero of the Mexican Revolution, Zapata, began in a place that was never deemed newsworthy for the public opinion makers, and brought a worldwide spotlight to Chiapas and a flash of hope to its people. The Zapatistas have been busy building autonomous communities that number in the thousands, while calling for Indigenous rights and democracy. The group has taken the list of indigenous needs, through uprisings and marches, and placed it on the Mexican government's lap.

On Jan. 1, 1994, the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) was signed, allowing a free trade zone between Mexico, the U.S. and Canada and resulting in the privatization of all land, deep cuts in social programs and an emphasis on export production. The agreement, while stripping the indigenous population of their land and labor rights, was signed with no participation from the indigenous population. That day the Zapatistas held eight uprisings scattered throughout Chiapas, one in the small, and now popular town of San Cristobal de las Casas. On Jan. 1, 2004 my sister and I sat in the San Cristobal plaza, where only 10 years earlier the fire crackers had been gunshots and the yells of celebration had been exclamations of revolution. The uprising cost lives and although it did not make enough significant change on the governmental level, the people of Chiapas have evidently remained eternally grateful.

During the day the plaza is filled with vendors selling shirts displaying the face of Zapatista Commander Marcos, Zapatista dolls, recordings from the commanders and literary journals dedicated to the movement. The people themselves light up in conversation about the Zapatistas, never hesitating to share their appreciation and their hopes for peace and civil rights. That night I found that for the people of Chiapas the celebration of the New Year came second to the celebration of a continuing movement.

Before leaving Chiapas, I bought a small Zapatista doll to take home. The doll and all that it symbolizes seems alone here, in a country where passion for social change is devalued by the government and where those living in poverty often go unnoticed by the government and mainstream media.

Spending more time in Chiapas would be ideal, but is currently a challenge. Continuing to be committed to fighting against the suffering and injustice committed against its people is not.

Ferron Salnker is a Collegian columnist who spent time in Chiapas, Mexico over winter vacation.

I didn't know I was a Nazi

Leah Vitale

In fact, my own grandparents were persecuted by the Nazis in Italy only about sixty years ago. One then can imagine that I was less than pleased upon seeing a cartoon of Ariel Sharon sitting on a throne with a Jewish star engraved with a swastika inside it in a recent copy of a local newspaper in Cairo during my travels to the pyramids. Shockingly, the cartoon resembled something one might've seen during pre-Holocaust Europe.

During my travels throughout Jordan and Egypt this winter break, I was careful to avoid religion and politics, but the inevitable doom they carry over all of us didn't seem to elude me. Luckily, their presence in the Islamic Middle East enlightened me somewhat regarding the situation I observe everyday in Israel; however, their affect on the Muslim world unfortunately is paramount and inexorable.

During my travels throughout Jordan and Egypt this winter break, I was careful to avoid religion and politics, but the inevitable doom they carry over all of us wouldn' t seem to elude me.

Most of my experiences with Jordanian and Egyptian Arabs were more than pleasant. As people on the whole, they were unconditionally hospitable and tourist-friendly. Constantly offering my friends and me tea as a sign of their hospitality, they were eager to help us in our travels and seemed glad to see us there. Traveling with Canadians, I couldn't escape the friendly "Canada Dry" shouts everywhere we went. It was clear to me that they too, were normal people simply trying to live their lives in comfort and peace.

It was for this reason that my incessant interaction with the Arab media was all the more bothersome. Everywhere I turned, there was anti-Israel/Jewish diatribe being spewed in my face. In my few related interactions with Arabs, the response was unfavorable, my felucca (Egyptian boat) captain even comparing the Israeli Prime Minister to Osama bin Ladin. I couldn't help but wonder why it was all necessary; to infiltrate hatred upon a people who would otherwise be apathetic.

Egypt made peace with Israel almost thirty years ago — why all the hostility? The Israeli attitude is quite the opposite; in fact, many of my Israeli friends have traveled for their vacation to the formerly Israeli-possessed Sinai Peninsula, where they are distastefully tolerated.

In response to the continuous onslaught of anti-Semitic cartoons in Egypt, the anti-Defamation League issued a poster which read "You have the power, President Mubarak, to stop the anti-Semitic hate in Egypt. Use it." What I gathered through my travels was the sad reality that Arabs in the Middle East are puppets of anti-Semitic propaganda. I made many Arab friends, but I still feared disclosing my religion to them. If all you know is Al-Jazeera and Sawa Radio, without even the ability to gather your information from other sources, why would one think any differently than what he/she is told?

While visiting the brilliant ruins in Petra, my friends and I sought refuge from the pouring rain and cold in a small Bedouin tent. We were warmly welcomed by many men all garbed in red and white kafiyyahs, a campfire, and tea. We sat for a while; I practiced my Arabic, and was even interviewed in Spanish by fellow tourists filming for a television program in Argentina. We must've been staying there for half an hour just laughing and having a good time, when one of the larger men got up from the circle and went to the entrance of the tent with his back facing us. I shuddered when, to my alarm and horror, he screamed to the outdoors "Yahuud," (the word for Jews in Arabic) and all eyes quickly shifted on us. Luckily we managed to woo the crowd back to laughter, but the moment alone provided me with enough angst for the rest of the day.

Director of Television Studies at the American University of Cairo and former NBC bureau chief, Abdullah Schleiffer made reference to the Egyptian attitude in a BBC News interview. "But they know nothing, they don' t understand Israel or the Jews because they don' t read or study, so you get all this ludicrous stuff."

ADL President Abraham Foxman proposed allocating $100 million as US aid to Egypt this year to be put it into an escrow account until a responsible authority in Egypt begins to speak against anti-Semitism in the Egyptian press.

The situation here in the Middle East is sad and unfortunate. I honestly wish I had a solution up my sleeve to circulate throughout the region, but the fact is, the core of the problem is something so deep and resonant that it will take at least generations of re-education, if that, to turn the sentiment around. It is imperative that we, as educated Americans, spread our knowledge of the situation to everyone we know and urge our government leaders to work on the shift in education in the Middle East to a one of a positive and peaceful outlook toward all peoples, regardless of religion, race or creed.

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist that spent time in Jordan and Egypt over winter vacation.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Members of the student body,

As you probably read in yesterday's Daily Collegian, the Student Government Association was recently informed that the constitutional referendum authorizing ALANA Caucus appointed Senate seats, passed by the student body in September, is unconstitutional. The University's General Counsel stated in a memo that these seats violate the United States Constitution and cannot be recognized. In light of this memo, Vice Chancellor Gargano rejected a Senate motion that would have recognized the ALANA Caucus appointed seats for the remainder of the 2003-2004 Senate session.

At the first Senate meeting of the fall semester, I promised to fight for these seats. The student body voted by a 2/3 margin to include the appointed seats in the SGA Constitution, and it is my duty to advocate for students at all times. The SGA Constitution demands that I execute any and all acts of the SGA, and this requirement extends to refrenda. I have fought for these seats in the Senate, I am fighting for these seats today, and I will continue to fight for what students want. This is your university, and it is important and necessary that your voice be heard.

We must also prepare ourselves, however, for the possibility that this fight may be unsuccessful. At the end of the day, we may not be able to regain appointed seats. Regardless of the outcome, it is critical that the Senate remain as representative and diverse a group as possible. I hereby call on all members of the Senate to immediately begin work on incorporating a strong, open, accessible and outreach-oriented elections process into the SGA By-Laws. Our current Senate is strong because of the incredible outreach done this past September by SGA officers and members of various agencies and RSOs. We need to ensure that such outreach becomes part of Senate elections every single year.

Even as I will continue to fight for your appointed seat votes to be heard, I will also be moving forward to address a variety of issues for the remainder of my term. I will continue to address the issues that affect all of us on a daily basis — issues like parking, the meal plan, student businesses, cultural centers and space allocation. I want to continue hearing from you about the issues that concern you; I'm in the office at least once every day, and you can always call me at 413-545-1287. Together, we can carry on the work of making this university the best in the nation. I look forward to hearing from you.

Dave Carr
President
Student Government Association
drcarr@student.umass.edu

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3099

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

New art show meshes fruits

By Deborah Geiger
Collegian Staff

Fruit: it's not just for breakfast anymore.

Sam van Aken's newest exhibit, "Hybrids," located at the Hampden Art Gallery in the Southwest residential area of the University of Massachusetts, is sure to thrill the senses. It's a show that's sure to shock, and make you question what is real, and more importantly, when is snack time?

Enter the gallery and you'll be standing amongst 20 tall wooden stands that look like giant paper towel rolls. Scattered up and down them are small Plexiglas squares each holding a "hybrid," the artist's name for wax fruit melted together.

Sam van Aken
'Hybrids'
Hampden Gallery
UMass
Through Mar. 5

In seeing the exhibit one may be reminded of a colorful DNA helix, the work ultimately makes a statement about modified foods, science, and genetics. Each piece of fruit is carefully thought out, simply and brilliantly into an amalgamation of two, three, four pieces stemming off of, out of, or into one other seamlessly. The Plexiglas squares are clear and allow the viewer to see the underside of each piece of fruit, sometimes the most vital part. The wax fruits look as if they are giving birth to other fruits, making "Hybrids" a metaphorical and symbolic exhibit on many levels — artistically, politically, and sexually.

Each colorful and vivid piece of fruit looks almost good enough to eat; from bright crimson raspberries to the spangled skin of a juicy pear; and even an apple spawning off two new apples. It seems innocent at first: a plum sits simply inside a yellow apple; blueberries are pressed softly into a banana, like birthday candles delicately pressed into fresh frosting. Grapes seem to ooze out of a plum, while a kiwi looks like it is being sucked into a fuzzy peach like a vacuum. Perfect shiny berries sit comfortably scattered in the skin of an orange; all usual, everyday fruits turned into a sensory experience.

It will leave a strange taste in your mouth, but raises an important political and social issue: just how much can we interfere with nature? How much modification can humans ethically do to food? And what will the consequences be?

There's more: beyond the 20 fruit helixes in the back, a pile of wood crates sit on the floor, like a gourmet food store display. Each crate is lined with bright green tissue paper, and upon closer inspection, the fruit has gotten freakier. The artist used even more bizarre and daring hybrids for the crate displays; but the fruits are still so colorful and creepy that one cannot easily turn away and forget them.

Dr. Owen F. Smith of the University of Maine writes, "'Hybrids' is not just an attack on genetic engineering, but a meditation on the human propensity to modify nature."

By taking the everyday comfort of a banana, but adding a bizarre and unnatural twist like a birthing apple on top of it, you might just have to ask yourself, "what are these strange objects? How have the come to be here? Are they real, artificial, or something else?

Many art exhibits make interesting statements, but "Hybrids" is one of the few exhibits whose statement is both a question and an answer. Viewers may think about this exhibit for days afterward.

Aken's works are fusions like this strawberry-birthing apple.

Hybrids will be on display at the Hampden Art Gallery from Jan. 28 through March 5. There will be a gallery talk on March 4 at 4 p.m., and a closing reception on March 5 from 4-6 p.m.

Xtremely Cool Racing

'XIIR' brings motorized ice racing to the Mullins Center

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

The usual audience at the Mullins Center is no stranger to loud and boisterous sounds. At athletic events it's the Public Address announcer, the puck hitting the boards or the rowdy students who yell obnoxious chants. At the concerts that come through the University of Massachusetts campus, the music blaring out of the speakers can at times be rough on the eardrums.

However tonight in the Bill, the decibel level could reach an all-time high when the roar of 500 CC, 4-valve engines zoom around the arena ice.

Xtreme International Ice Racing
Tonight
Mullins Center
Amherst
$8 - $15

Controlling those roars will be the members of "Xtreme International Ice Racing" — a group of professional ice-racing speedway bike and quad-racer riders touring the United States, competing for the ultimate title — a cash prize at the end of the season. The road to the money continues tonight in Amherst, Mass.

"This is as real as it gets, it's not just a show, it's not like the WWF," "XIIR" co-director and three-time Speedway Bike Ice Racing World Champion Anthony "British Bulldog" Barlow said. "We are going to have 12 serious races on the bikes and 12 serious races on the all-fours. It's extremely competitive."

The bikes and four-wheelers being driven in tonight's event are not the average machines you see on the X-Games. The vehicles lack brakes for easy sliding around the rink and have over 500 razor sharp steel studs on each wheel for some traction. The vehicles have incredible speed on the ice as they can go from 0-60 mph in three seconds.

The giant Mullins Center rink that normally holds 12 Herculean hockey players comfortably will suddenly look miniscule when three quads or four bikes are on the ice racing side by side, making extremely tight turns.

"I have driven on both dirt and ice and I have to say the ice is a lot more exciting," three-time quad World Champion and co-director Louis "Taz Man" Smith said. "It's a real challenge having no brakes riding on the ice."

"XIIR" is comprised of 15 riders (four quad and 11 speed bike) coming from all around Europe and America. Some are as young as 19 years old like Joe "Kamikaze Kid" Garrison or as old as 39-year-old Eddie "Ice Man" Kelley.

The tour made its debut last month in Cincinnati, Ohio at the US Bank Arena and has continued along on its eight-stop route.

"The crowds have been great and I think it's a real amazing sight watching these riders do their stuff," Barlow said. "We had about 9,000 fans when we were in Tampa [Fla.] last week."

"This is our only New England stop and I promise people will not be disappointed if they come to check us out," he added.

"XIIR" starts tonight the Mullins Center at 7 p.m. Ticket prices range from $6-$12 and there is a $2 discount for students with proper ID. Tickets can be purchased at the Mullins Center Box Office or by Ticketmaster

Very twisted entertainment at UMass

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

If you are looking for something altogether twisted to do Friday night, something that will not drain your wallet or your brain cells, then the Bowker Auditorium is the place to be. The University of Massachusetts Amherst's Residential Arts program will present the extraordinary contortion artist/performer Maureen Fleming. The show will start at 8 p.m. and tickets will be on sale in advance and at the Bowker auditorium box office on the night of the performance, they are $5 for students and $12 for general admission.

'Decay of the Angel'
Friday, Feb. 6
Bowker
UMass
$5 - $12

Fleming – born in Japan and the daughter of an American Navy Lieutenant – studied under renowned dance instructor Kazuo Ohno. She later went on to perform with Ohno's son Yoshito Ohno. Since the early 1980's Fleming has made a name for herself throughout Western Europe and in the United States with performances that combine traditional and classical concepts with her unique talents. She later went on to become an artist-in-residence at New York's La MaMa ETC in 1984. Since 1994, she has conducted workshops at New York University's Tisch School of the Arts.

Though Friday's is to be a solo performance, Fleming did not perfect this artistic venture alone. To do this she has enlisted the help of dance photographer Lois Greenfield, photographer Tadayuki Naitoh, video artist Jeff Bush, light and visual artist Chris Odo, and ikebana artist and stage art designer Gaho Taniguchi. This team of talented artists has pooled their originality into a performance that – though simple in its physical components – is rich in expression and meaning.

Being able to contort her body is not a gift that Fleming was born with. A childhood car accident left her body's cartilage exceptionally ductile as a result of the tremendous stress and trauma. Even knowing that her body is exceptionally limber, it is hard to believe the shapes that Fleming can mold, stretch, bend, and twist her frame into. The chance to see this extraordinary choreography, which is renowned on five continents, is an opportunity not to be missed.

Friday, Fleming will perform her piece entitled, "Decay of the Angel." Through her unique motions and bodily configurations she will attempt to capture the essence of the transformations in a woman' s life from birth through death and all of the extreme emotions that mark the passage from one stage to the next. This should prove to be a unique experience for both the experienced thespian as well as for those who are neophytes in the world of stage performance.

For more than twenty years Maureen Fleming has taken her talent and unique abilities around the world.

New sci-fi drama flick warrants a double-take

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Kutcher plays Evan Treborn in "The Butterfly Effect."

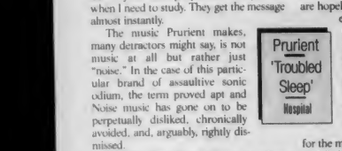
'The Butterfly Effect'
Directed by J. MacKye Gruber, Eric Bress
Starring Ashton Kutcher, Amy Smart
New Line Cinema
Rated R
113 mins
Grade B

Here's what's offered up for entertainment in "The Butterfly Effect:" kiddie porn, a woman and baby blown to bits by dynamite, a dog being burned alive and a child sociopath being stabbed in the back with a shard of metal. It's not exactly the most pleasant way to spend an evening at the movies, but the film has a grim, disorienting power. It's an intense, unnerving mind-trip nightmare in which Ashton Kutcher — he of the omnipresent trucker hats and pretty-boy smirk — gets involved in the ultimate cosmic "punking."

"The Butterfly Effect" will probably be better known as the movie in which Kutcher gets all serious. Can Demi Moore's current boy toy actually act? Let's just say that the actor doesn't embarrass himself. Kutcher, wearing a scruffy goatee as if to signify his serious actor intentions, emotes as Evan Treborn, a brainy college psych major with a family history of insanity. His father was locked away in an asylum for claiming he could fix problems in the past; Evan, meanwhile, has a longtime affliction, which is blocking out painful memories from his past. Trying to dig up memories from his past involving his childhood sweetheart Kayleigh's shady, creepy father, he visits the troubled girl (played, as an adult, by Amy Smart), which leads to her possibly inevitable suicide.

"The Butterfly Effect" stems from that chaos theory concept that states that if a butterfly were to flap its wing in Asia it could cause a hurricane in North America. Evan has kept detailed journals of his life ever since he was seven, when he drew a disturbingly graphic (and strangely artful) picture in class. College-age Evan, meanwhile, discovers that, for reasons left unev-

See BUTTERFLY on page 6



Prominent Noise artist Prurient achieves goal of offending

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

Sometimes I put on Prurient to vent. Sometimes I'll slip a little Prurient into the CD tray to scare people out of my room when I need to study. They get the message almost instantly.

The music Prurient makes, many detractors might say, is not music at all but rather just "noise." In the case of this particular brand of assaultive sonic odium, the term proved apt and Noise music has gone on to be perpetually disliked, chronically avoided, and, arguably, rightly dismissed.

Therein lies the problem of sifting through the torturous gallows of new Noise releases. Only a handful of people even know Noise exists and the amount of that select few that enjoy the music is extremely small. The mid-'90s saw a partial surge in interest as Thurston Moore, John Zorn and Mike Patton (three figures reviled by "real" noise artists) all did their respective dabblings in the genre. However, even for those in Noise's most hardcore contingency, keeping up with trends creates its own hurdles. Noise artists are hopelessly prolific (Japanese Noise legend Merzbow once released a 50 CD "Merzbox" release that bankrupted the company that launched it). Of the endless seven inches that even the most independent of stores will not attempt to sell, 95 percent of it is total dispensable garbage. Here's the thing though: that's the point.

As a performance art that — for the most part — does not disguise itself as folk bands and decimate the eardrums of Starbucks patrons, Noise artists are overall preaching to the perverted, converted minds that will already actively seek this stuff out. The new artistry is in wasting the time of their most beloved fans, assaulting them with tedium and flooding them with an excess of redundant sensory explosions. Whereas other scare-mongering atonal arts have tried before to adequately represent misanthropy via headphones, Noise is the anti-populist artform. It is a space that no one can share. G.G. Allin may have thrown feces at you, but Prurient doesn't think you're worth it.

The most shocking part of "Troubled Sleep," then, is the heart it wears underneath its decadent and tattered exoskeleton. Underneath the feedback and input-output mix-ups, Prurient, from Providence, R.I., recites former-NPR host Jean Feraca's dark but eloquent poems on confronting death over the course of the eight tracks. Though faithfully reprinted in the liner notes, it is hard for an untrained ear to establish a connection between Prurient's demonic vocal dawdlings, howls and tantrums and the verses that run down the CD jacket. Comically, the liner notes insist, "In most cases the lyrics can be followed." Rest assured Noise fans, it would be an arduous and patient process to even attempt to follow the poetic verses as Prurient slobbers them outward.

This does not mean that the lyrics are placed within the pieces arbitrarily. Quite the contrary; it is the words of Feraca's text that physically make the music. In performance, Prurient appears simply by himself with his microphone, amplifiers and effects pedals. There is little reason to suspect that his instrumental lineup has changed on "Troubled Sleep." Each track is therefore entirely made up of the processed sounds of Prurient speaking Feraca's words.

The tender vulnerability of Feraca's lines may be a chore to extract, but there's no denying that they are firmly in place. It's as if the "Troubled Sleep" were an old record found in your crazy great uncle's attic still barely functional after having survived years of wear and tear. And that recording was a second-generation master originally recorded over the radio on a station that didn't come in. And that station was picking up a signal from an alien satellite broadcast.

With Noise being mostly a performative art, it makes more sense for the deconstructionist architects of the genre to make albums like "Troubled Sleep" rather than bore and annoy fans and haters alike with exhausting, self-indulgent migraine-fests or insincere schlock-value horror hoodoo. Most of it cannot light a candle next to Prurient's primordial catharsis and pure vision of artistic integrity. This is not to say that we are witnessing the "emo" of Noise. Naysayers are welcome to invite themselves to hold their Emperor records and closeup glossies of 50 Cent's nine gunshot wounds against the tetanus-inducing aggression exhibited here on "Troubled Sleep" any day.

For an artist whose genre's ultimate goal appears at times to be little more than self-destruction, Prurient has brought some much-needed structure and discipline to the form, even if it is mostly psychic rather than compositionally based. Call it "growing up" if you will.

The only way to cap the perfect season

By Richard C. Lewis
Associated Press

WARWICK, R.I. (AP) — Nick Izzi arrived at a large sporting goods store at 7 a.m. Monday, on the hunt for the prized baseball caps worn by New England Patriots players following the team's 32-29 Super Bowl victory over Carolina.

The 20-year-old looked at the crowd of about 150 people waiting outside and came up with a better idea: Why fight the crowds in the cold when he could wait at a smaller store where it was warm?

Chalk one up for Nick, who spent three hours with a cup of coffee inside the Warwick Mall and had no problem scoring a dozen of the collectible caps.

The hats were a hot commodity as crowds jammed stores throughout New England the day after the Patriots' second Super Bowl title in three years, snapping up the champions' merchandise almost as quickly as the goods hit the shelves.

"I just bought the hats," Izzi said, outfitted in a Patriots jersey with linebacker Tedy Bruschi's No. 54 and wearing one of the $24.99 caps, with the "locker room" hologram still stuck on the bill. "I couldn't afford anything more."

At a Dick's Sporting Goods store in West Springfield, Mass., customers began lining up for Patriots merchandise before daybreak.

A scrum of about 100 people mobbed the store when it opened at 5:30 a.m. Employees handed each customer a ticket, good for two of the locker room hats.

Rick Hooper, an environmental police officer from Granby, Mass., was one of the first through the door. With one hat on his head and another headed for his mantle, the 38-year-old was waiting with other die-hard fans for more hats to arrive.

"I've had such a blast just standing here all morning talking to people about last night's game," he said. "It's just amazing."

At Mirror Image in Pawtucket, owner Rick Roth and his 35 employees watched the Super Bowl on a small television in the company's printing room, anxiously waiting to see whether the Patriots would win, and the presses would start stamping out Super Bowl T-shirts.

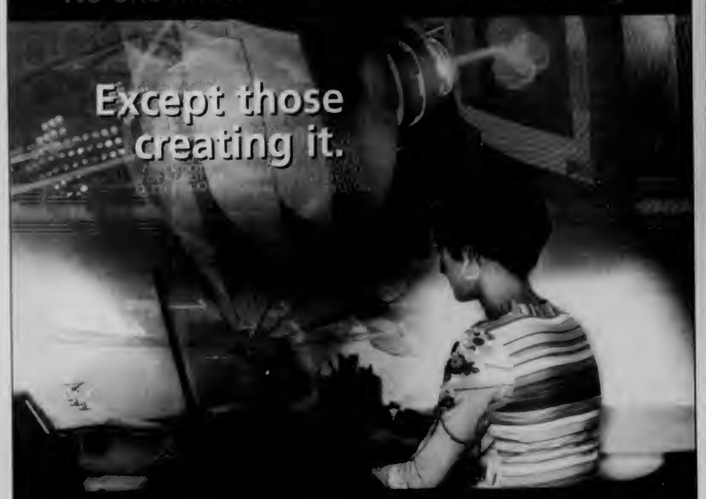
A timeless 'Effect'

BUTTERFLY from page 5

plained, when he reads certain entries from his journals he's catapulted back in time, where he can manipulate events to make things right. As in all such stories, his changes in the past affect lives in the future.

Young Evan tells off Kayleigh's drunken, pedophile father (a chillingly slimy Eric Stoltz) and wakes up as a frat boy, a sweetly smiling Kayleigh on his arm. Unfortunately, the girl's twisted, sociopathic brother is now an ex-asylum inmate and a bat-waving loser and a violent altercation leaves Evan facing Aryan neo-Nazi rapists in jail. So it's back to the future with even worse results.

The rocky road ahead is littered with prison sex, paraplegia, madness and child murderers among other niceties. The writer-directors, J. Mackye Gruber and Eric Bress ("Final Destination 2") revel in the cruelties that befall their characters, but the squirmy unpleasantness keeps "The Butterfly Effect" from descending into silliness. The movie sidesteps exploitation so that the perversities come off as sad and tragic rather than as sick and twisted.



Kutcher admirably gives his all, and he acquits himself well enough; unfortunately, he lacks the presence that would push the movie over the top. Faring better is Smart, who's more often used as blonde window dressing in movies like "Road Trip." Here she's asked to go from sweet, bland sorority girl to scarred, cynical junkie/prostitute. She does so with aplomb.

The movie, as absurd as it often sounds, retains a nervy fascination. Too bad it doesn't exude the power that it could.

Shear Bliss
Fantastic one time student package!
For $60 you receive...
*A Perfect haircut!
*Aveda mini-facial with hot towel!
*10 Face framing foils!
*Complete make over
*$125 value savings of 65$!
First 50 callers!
1st Time customers only!
Ends February 29!
Call Today 253-2322
Across from Morning Dove on Rt. 116

Class Schedule
Monday/Wednesday: 12:30-1:45 pm Yoga Flow I-2; 2:00-3:15 pm Power Yoga 2-3
Tuesday/Thursday: 1:00-2:15 pm Yoga Basics I-2; 2:30-3:45 pm Intermediate 2-3
Experience YOGA
Classes in Boyden 10 (Classes start Feb. 2)
DROP IN to any level-appropriate class Only $10 OR SIGN UP for a Semester Package & $AVE!! 1 class per week/13 weeks $75; 2 classes per week/13 weeks $145
Register through Campus Recreation Boyden 215
413-545-0022 • www.umass.edu/umim

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0753
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

No one knows what the future will bring

Visit our Career Fair Booth on Wednesday, February 11.
Opportunities are available in the following areas:
Computer Science, Computer Engineering, Electrical Engineering
Mechanical Engineering, Math, Physics
Systems Engineering, Aeronautical Engineering, Optics
Check out our website at rayjobs.com/campus for further information, including our Campus Recruiting Events.
Start your job search by clicking Find a Job.
The power of applied intelligence.
rayjobs.com/campus
One of the most admired defense and aerospace systems suppliers through world-class people and technology. Our focus is developing great talent © 2004 Raytheon Company. All rights reserved. Raytheon is an equal opportunity employer and welcomes a wide diversity of qualified applicants. U.S. citizenship and security clearance may be required.
Raytheon
Customer Success Is Our Mission

HIPPODROME
Night Club now hiring
APPLY IN PERSON ONLY MA
www.hdrome.com

RAIN NIGHTCLUB
10 Stearns Square, Springfield MA.
Now accepting applications:
> Bartenders
> Security Staff
> Cocktail Server
www.rainespringfield.com

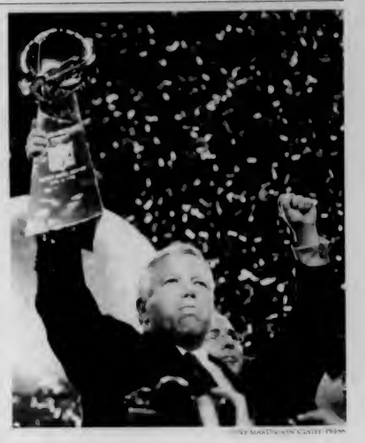
A title for the fans of New England

PAT SULLIVAN/ASSOCIATED PRESS
NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue presents Tom Brady with the Super Bowl MVP Award.

MARZELLI from page 10

You also knew subtle things like the fact that teams never returned kicks on the Pats because they had Larry Whigham, and that Shawn Jefferson only caught bombs.

There was a lot to remember from that era: Timpson in the corner of the end zone to beat the Dolphins in '93, and Turner in the opposite corner to down the Vikings a year later. Dan and Drew in the mud and seven straight to make the playoffs in '94, Curtis Martin bursting onto the scene in '95 and the magical run in '96 when the fog rolled in, the lights went out and when the smoke cleared Kraft had his franchise Super Bowl bound.

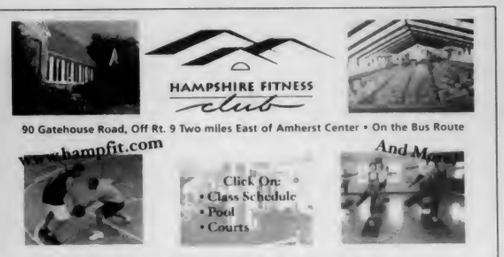


There were also some bumps along the road: falling short at the Dog Pound, watching Mike Vrabel strip Bledsoe in the waning seconds of a 7-6 playoff loss, getting annihilated by Jacksonville behind old buddy Scott Zolak, the hiring of one Pete Carroll and, slightly more obscure, the first time I ever dropped the F-bomb in front of my mom: a rip-your-heart-out-and-stomp-on-it loss to the Steelers at home in which good ol' Drew did some stupid flip of the football late in the fourth quarter that landed right in the hands of some Steeler lineman named Kevin Henry. Remember him? I do.

But alas, here we are in the present, once again champions of the football galaxy. Kraft finally achieved exactly what he had planned on. He constructed from the ground up a sturdy, formidable franchise built around, and with, its fan base in mind. One dedicated to hard work, professionalism and most importantly, winning.

And Tuesday, there they were over a million strong in the heart of Boston. Cheering, chanting, screaming and lusting for their players, their heroes, their team. The fans of New England — partial owners and builders of the greatest franchise in the sporting realm — had their day on Tuesday.

A day we rightfully deserved.



Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com

STEW MILNE/ASSOCIATED PRESS
Patriot's owner Robert Kraft holds the Lombardi Trophy after the Patriots victory in Super Bowl XXVIII.

www.dailycollegian.com (repeated)

voiceglo.
talk, talk, talk, talk, talk... to any phone in the world
The Best Phone Bill Is No Phone Bill.
FREE phone service instantly
www.glominuteman.com

Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
• Full size Indoor Pool • Aqua Aerobics • Cybex Nautilus Circuit • Boxing Studio • Indoor Tennis • Jacuzzi/Saunas • Yoga/Pilates
• Cybex Free Weight • Full Court Basketball • Volleyball
• Aerobics/Step/Bosu • Cardio-Vascular Equiptment
JOIN NOW FOR A SEMESTER SPECIAL OF 15 WEEKS FOR $179* PLUS A FREE TEE-SHIRT
*FOR STUDENTS
Open 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri, 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun
Tel 256-6446

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9
For more information call 253-7571
Full Aerobics Programs Included with membership:
Cardio Kickboxing
Yoga
And Many More
Nutritional Consultation / Tanning / Sauna / Juice Bar & Supplements / Personal Training
Stairmasters / Precor / Treadmills / Lifecycle / Recumbant Bikes / Lifecycle Upright Bikes / Precor / Crosstrainers / Body Masters and Icarian Free Weights / Cybex Circuit / Training Equip.
SEMESTER SPECIAL $160
Now offering aerobics only memberships!
UNLIMITED TANNING! For $39 With Purchase of Semester Special
NO ENROLLMENT FEE!!
Inquire About Pilates

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(34 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2004 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 2 (Mon) •Feb. 3 (Tues) Room 101 for •Feb. 4 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Feb 5th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Masella hired by CCSU

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts now has one less candidate for its head coaching position, which was vacated when former coach Mark Whipple agreed to become the quarterbacks coach for the NFL's Pittsburgh Steelers.

Tom Masella, a former head coach at Boston University who has served as Whipple's defensive coordinator each of the last two seasons, has agreed to become the next head football coach at Central Connecticut State University.

"It became pretty clear over the weekend," Masella was quoted as saying Monday. "I would have loved to have stayed and be the coach at UMass. But I figured if they hadn't named a coach from the current staff by now, they were going in a different direction.

Masella takes over a CCSU program in turmoil following the dismissal of coach Paul Schudel, which included an internal audit requested by president Richard Judd that eventually exonerated Schudel after rumors began circulating that the coach was improperly handling meal money.

Prior to his tenure at UMass, Masella served as the defensive coordinator at Division I Louisiana Tech, where in 2001 his defense ranked 13th in the nation in turnovers forced and 11th in interceptions.

He is also returning to Connecticut, where he previously spent two years under then-coach Skip Holtz as the Huskies assistant head coach and secondary coach.

"The situation at Central was just what I was looking for," Masella said. "It's nice to be wanted."

As for Massachusetts, sources indicate that the University would like to name an athletic director, as well as a new football coach, within the next seven days. However, the University has said it will name a new AD prior to filling any coaching vacancy.

Gerald H. Lingo/Collegian

Ridin' High

Art Bowers and the Minutemen won their fourth consecutive game, 74-61 over Rider Tuesday night in Trenton, N.J.

Tigers ink Rodriguez to four-year contract

By Larry Lage
Associated Press

DETROIT — The Tigers were tired of losing. So they went out and got a World Series winner — who actually wanted to play in Detroit.

Ivan Rodriguez, the MVP of the NL championship series who helped the Florida Marlins win the World Series, finalized a $40 million, four-year deal with the Tigers on Monday.

"We needed to do something," Tigers owner Mike Ilitch said during a Monday news conference. "We think Rodriguez can help us because we think he has a lot of baseball left in him. We really wanted him, and ultimately, he wanted to be here."

Even though the Tigers have been talking with the 10-time All-Star and 10-time Gold Glove winner for weeks and were willing to pay him more than any team, some thought they wouldn't be able to lure him to Detroit.

The Tigers haven't had a winning record since 1993, and lost an American League-record 119 games last season. They were one loss short of baseball's post-1900 record for futility, set by the 1962 New York Mets.

But Rodriguez sounded like the most optimistic fan in Detroit on Monday.

"We're going to see this organization, this Detroit Tigers team, in the playoffs very soon," Rodriguez said.

While some players, such as former Tiger Juan Gonzalez, dislike hitting in spacious Comerica Park, Rodriguez looks forward to it.

"I'm not a power hitter," said Rodriguez, a .304 career hitter with 231 homers and 914 RBIs. "I'm a gap hitter. This field is going to be very nice for me."

There are millions of reasons for Rodriguez to say good things about the lowly Tigers and their ballpark.

He will be paid $7 million this year, $8 million in 2005 and $11 million each in 2006 and 2007, according to contract information obtained by The Associated Press. The Tigers have a $13 million option for 2008 with a $3 million buyout.

Rodriguez would get $50 million over five years if the option is exercised or $40 million over four if it's declined.

Detroit has protection against lower back injuries. If Rodriguez goes on the disabled list for five or more weeks, the Tigers would be able to end the contract after two or three seasons.

"It was a mutual risk," Tigers president and general manager Dave Dombrowski said of the deal.

Rodriguez was on the disabled list from June 6-27, 1992, because of a stress fracture in his back and a fractured thumb. He was on the DL from April 25-June 2, 2002, because of a herniated disk in his lower back, an injury that didn't require surgery.

"My back is in very good shape," Rodriguez said. "Last year, I proved to everybody that I'm healthy."

In 144 games last season, Rodriguez hit .297 with 16 home runs and 84 RBIs.

He played 108, 111 and 91 games from 2000-02 with the Rangers, after playing an average of 144 games the previous five seasons.

"I think I'm going to be fine," Rodriguez said.

Rodriguez had a $10 million, one-year deal with the Marlins last season. He asked for a $40 million, four-year contract from Florida, which broke off talks Dec. 7.

Rodriguez said the reported offer of $24 million over three years from the Marlins was inaccurate. Some of the money in that proposal wasn't guaranteed and much would have been deferred.

"If that offer was true, I would've probably taken that offer, but it was not that offer," he said.

As giddy as the Tigers were about their latest move, no one was ready to project Detroit's record this season.

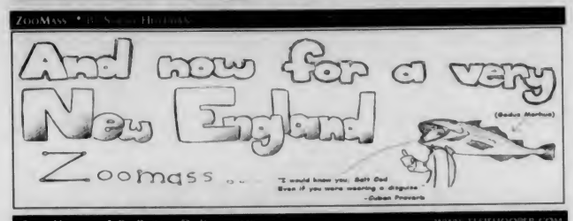
"I'm just a little gun shy, to be honest, in terms of making predictions," manager Alan Trammell said. "But I'm excited, I think you can tell that. When you look at our projected lineup from today and from a year ago, it's night and day. We should be significantly better, but to put a number on it, I can't do that."

The Tigers have been active this offseason, but they hadn't signed an undisputed star such as Rodriguez.

Second baseman Fernando Vina and outfielder Rondell White agreed to $6 million, two-year deals in December, and starting pitcher Jason Johnson agreed to a $7 million, two-year contract later that month. Detroit also traded for Seattle shortstop Carlos Guillen.

If you've got ambition, we've got room.

We set high standards. We want people who share them. People who want to work on some of the most interesting business issues, for some of the most prestigious brands in the world. You'll need to be determined, but you'll never be on your own. Because in our teams, you'll find the right experience, knowledge and support to bring you along. The sky's the limit.



ey.com/us/careers

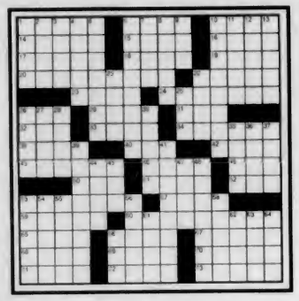
Ernst & Young
Quality In Everything We Do

Interested in writing for sports? Come to our meeting on Sunday @ 4pm in the Campus Center basment

Quote for the Day

"When you control a man's thinking you do not have to worry about his actions."

-Dr. Carter G. Woodson in "Mis-Education of the Negro."



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across

1 Rocking
6 Whisper loudly
10 Floppy contents
14 Shove off
15 Commotions
16 Shelley selections
17 "They Call the Wind"
18 Chestnut or bay
19 An duct
20 Sailor (2 wds.)
22 Soft drink brand
23 Makes clothes
24 Spleen
26 Finality holder
29 Mount
31 — — standstill
32 Clean air org.
33 Stalk
34 Chewing gum base
36 Sports channel
40 Kangaroo pouch
42 Bear's pad
43 Dainty
46 Wisconsin and Fleming
48 Do chores
50 Not hungry
51 Occasion for less
52 Lowest
53 Crew cut kin
57 Pie plans
58 Eagle's nest
60 Crop damager
66 Dept. store inventory
68 Weight in Canada
69 Put up wallpaper
70 Rich region
72 Verve
76 Significant —
77 Parking lot markup
78 Sweet dessert (2 wds.)
79 Fluff, as hair

Down

1 Endangered trees
2 Give a big smile
3 Early seam
4 Tribulations
5 Casino employees
6 Badgers
7 Bird singer Billy
8 Drenches
9 Nine digit ID
10 Agree
11 Skillful
12 Fidgety
13 Building about
21 Give-or-
24 Lose track
25 — Mars
28 Off-road vehicle
27 Church alcove
28 Engrossed
30 Pic message (hyph.)
35 Barrel
36 Care about
37 Gray or Moran
39 Cleverest
41 Worms
44 Chapeau's place
45 Ancient Tokyo
47 Art dead-center
48 Astronomer's sighting
53 Well known
54 Shell
55 Firebug's crime
56 Collins and Silvers
58 Political division
61 Aquarius
62 Dept. of Labor div.
63 Roadmap letters
64 Insignificant
66 Green parrot

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Beans and Rice (vegan)

DINNER
- Turkey Cutlet
- Roast Beef
- Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 41
- Low: 17

THURSDAY
- High: 33
- Low: 15

FRIDAY
- High: 30
- Low: 21

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Dave Pessah/Molly Eggleston/Jennifer DiMeglio

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. · Reggae Night Dance Party
THU. · Special Brew (Rocks the House), no cover
FRI. · Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. · Drilling's 3 no cover
February Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Pick a candidate and support them.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Careful of gremlins breaking and entering.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Why are you such a Jack hole?

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Remove your hoop earrings when combing your hair.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Invest in erasable pens. People make lots of mistakes.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Make your plans more in the future.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're just mad because you don't have a cool hat like mine.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't just get depressed, try to make some one else feel bad for you. Pity is fun.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Ignore the distractions from your work.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Bald men are hot!

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't pull down your leather bustier, thing may pop out. Oops!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You can tell a lot about a person by the type of shoes they wear.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

96 Accord 105K Runs great Reliable Less than book value $4500 256-1505

Sporty! Nissan Pathfinder SE Utility 4door with 4 wheel drive 1995. $4500 1-413-687-7510

Auto for Sale

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power.

Employment

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

Cruise Line Entry Level on board positions available, great benefits. Seasonal or Year round. 941-329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

Northampton Bicycle, Bicycle Sales, assembly, minor repairs. Twenty plus hours, or full-time now. Full-time summer. Experience strongly preferred. Gerry 586-3810 586-4125

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

D.P. Dough Drivers and Kitchen Help Needed Apply at D.P. Dough Downtown Amherst

Employment

CAMP CANADENSIS, A PREMIER RESIDENTIAL SUMMER CAMP, located in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. (2 hours from New York City and Philadelphia). Our counselors teach, supervise, and share in the day-to-day experience of each camper, together forming lasting friendships. Our staff brings enthusiasm and motivation as well as understanding and sensitivity. We are looking for qualified staff to instruct athletics, LEC, WSI, waterskiing, wakeboarding, sailing, jet skiing, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, cooking, arts & crafts, outdoor adventure, including high and low ropes, climbing walls, mountain biking, motor bikes, fishing and much more. Excellent facilities and great salary! ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS, 2/23-2/27. Call 800-832-8228 or apply online www.canadensis.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Employment

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full-Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time paid assistance during the school day for students speaking German, Korean, Russian, Sinhala, Spanish, or Vietnamese Contact: ESL/Bilingual Office 413-362-1857 Amherst-Pelham Schools An Equal Opportunity Affirmative Action Employer

Employment

STAGE HANDS WANTED at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr. Variable Schedule- week day availability preferred 9-noon, 1pm-5 Applications at Production Services RM 146 FAC.

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

For Sale

Refrigerator, 18x18x18 dorm-sized, w/freezer compartment, $40 mheath@ecs.umass.edu

Furniture

Double Bed Set with frames. 2 years old, very comfortable! Call Jimmy @ 603-303-0167

House for Sale

New Silent Single-Family 6 room, 2 bed A-Frame 17 miles from U. MASS. Ideal for college professor. Abutting MDC land with bubbling second floor total 10 acres! Eclectic home designed by the owner as artist's retreat. Surrounded by tall pines, this unique home features open space living with all wood features, in and out. Full basement, high ceilings. $380,000 GilletteRealty.com 781 397-7600

House for Sale

Miscellaneous

Please hang up and try again! voicegloo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk to any phone in the world. www.voicegloo.com

Talk is cheap! voicegloo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk to any phone in the world. www.voicegloo.com

We walk the walk! voicegloo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk to any phone in the world. www.voicegloo.com

Say what! voicegloo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk to any phone in the world. www.voicegloo.com

Services

LEGAL PROBLEMS? Get free advice at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Math/Physics tutor available. $30/hour; $20/hour (travel); call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK SOLUTIONS You pick the destination, we will get you there Group Discounts, Free Trips, we meet or beat any reliable competitors price! Free party package with every trip www.springbreaksolutions.com 1-877-2 THE FUN

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

887-4 CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$ Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Title town

ADAM HUNGER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Super Bowl XXVIII MVP Tom Brady hoists the Vince Lombardi trophy during the team's victory parade through Boston yesterday afternoon. The parade ended with a rally at City Hall where owner Robert Kraft, 2003 NFL Coach of the Year Bill Belichick and 10 Patriot players addressed the crowd of upwards of one million people.

One million strong join Patriots in celebrating team's second title

By Jay Lindsay
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Patriots quarterback Tom Brady and owner Robert Kraft hoisted twin Super Bowl trophies amid a shower of confetti Tuesday as hundreds of thousands of fans celebrated the team's second championship in three years.

"We're baaack!" Brady told a shoulder-to-shoulder crowd in City Hall Plaza, standing with Kraft, Coach Bill Belichick and dozens of teammates at the victory rally.

Kraft and Belichick praised the players' "no-stars" work ethic that led to a season-ending streak of 15 straight wins and Sunday's 32-29 victory over the Carolina Panthers in Houston.

"For a team to accomplish their goals, everybody's got to give up a little of their individual ity, and that's what these players did, and that's why they're champions," Belichick said.

In a repeat performance of the 2002 Super Bowl celebration, Kraft, Brady and Belichick did a victory dance for the crowd, egged on by All-Pro cornerback Ty Law.

No starting quarterback has ever won two Super Bowls faster than Brady, 26, who said he's looking for more.

"One was nice, two's a lot nicer, but I need number three," said Brady, the two-time Super Bowl MVP.

The Patriots seem well-positioned for another title run with seven draft picks in the first four rounds of April's draft, including two first-rounders. The Pats also expect linebacker Rosevelt Colvin to return next season to bolster one of the league's toughest defenses.

Fans weren't shy about predicting more success Tuesday. Chris Cashen, 34, a painter from Rockland, said he's already asked his boss for time off for next year's celebration.

"This team was a joke for so long," he said. "(Now) we're frustrating the rest of the league. I think we'll see another parade next year. That's my plan."

Jason Scheinhart, 34, of Burlington, Vt., said Sunday's win proves the Patriots first title against the St. Louis Rams, in a game in which they were heavy underdogs, "wasn't a fluke.

Now every team in the world that wants to win the Super Bowl has to go through Foxboro, Massachusetts," he said.

The party started early for thousands of revelers, who began streaming into City Hall Plaza before dawn, some wearing face paint, wigs and Revolutionary-era militia outfits. By midday, the plaza was jammed, and the crowd cheered as images from the parade were broadcast on huge screens.

Patriots players waved and videotaped the crowd as they traveled the 1 1/2-mile parade route from Copley Plaza to City Hall in "Duck Boats," Boston's famous amphibious tourist vehicles. Spectators were stacked 10 deep along both sides of Tremont Street by Boston Common. Some fans stood on mailboxes and others leaned out of office windows, holding signs and screaming. The rally even drew Carolina fan Craig Whitney, 19, of Hampton, N.H., who wore his Panthers cap boldly.

"Even though we lost, it was still the greatest football game I've ever seen," he said.

High school students Sheila Gill and Dena Norton of Medfield waited for a glimpse of Brady and receiver Troy Brown.

"We skipped school," Norton said. "But we'll do anything to support the Patriots."

Jenny Callahan, 20, a Wentworth Institute of Technology student from Florida, came with about 10 friends. She had "Go Pats" written in blue on one side of her face, with Brady's No. 12 on the other.

"I love him a lot," she said.

It was about 32 degrees and overcast in Boston on Tuesday, but the goodwill warmed the chill for some. John McCoy, an 18-year-old high school student from North Attleboro, said he arrived at City Hall Plaza on Monday night to wait for the parade to begin.

"I can't even feel the cold," McCoy said. "There's love all around."

This one's for us

Mike Marzelli

I remember the exact moment I became a diehard fan of the New England Patriots.

It was October 10, 1993, two days before my 10th birthday and I was on Cape Cod for the weekend. The Pats were in Arizona for a late afternoon game, and were winless on the season. All I remember is that, trailing 21-6 late in the fourth quarter, the immortal Leonard Russell pulled off some garbage lateral and, after sweating out instant replay, saw his touchdown win the game 23-21.

All in all there were roughly 40 people in the stands and the Pats were as pathetic a franchise as those freakin' Cardinals back then and no one really cared, but I was hooked.

Fast forward a little over eight years, February 3, 2002 and my senior year of high school, and I cried like a little baby when my boys won their first World Championship in 42 years — it was one of the happiest nights of my life.

Now, just two short years later, we have a dynasty on our hands. The Pats have won two of the last three Silver Footballs, and are the preeminent franchise in all of professional sports. Why? Because they do everything right, they beat with one heartbeat and they've bought into the fact that no one individual comes before his team.

So how did this happen? How did it go from Hugh Millen to Drew Baby to the Next Joe Montana? How did the Patriots never become the St. Louis Stallions, or even call Hartford home? How did the Patsies become, well, winners?

Very simply, you and me.

That's right, the Patriots fans. We truly are the reason that our favorite football team is on top of the world right now. Don't believe me? Ask the Patriots themselves. All 10 players who took the mike at City Hall in Boston yesterday cited the fans of New England as the fuel behind their championship drive.

Ten years ago, Robert Kraft and his family saved the Patriots franchise when they purchased the team and its decrepit home — Foxboro Stadium — from James Orthwein in order to keep them from moving to the Midwest. At the time, Kraft's wife Myra reportedly was not in favor of the move, but Bob, a season-ticket holder of over 30 seasons, couldn't bear to see his favorite team leave the area and the deal was made.

In return, Myra made her husband promise that the only brand of players that could be Patriots — New England Patriots — would be those whose character spoke for them. Players so focused, dedicated and passionate about life, football and winning championships that fans like Mr. Kraft himself would be proud to offer them their fiercest loyalties.

With that foundation in place and a true fan running the show, the franchise began its upswing. The lovable losers started winning games, and the fans of what was a dormant franchise came rushing back. The beginning of legendary coach Bill Parcells' tenure in Foxboro brought a little life back to Foxboro, and a young, golden-armed franchise quarterback brought a little charisma. It was finally fun to be a Patriots fan.

Parcells brought the kind of hard-nosed approach that weeded out the jokers on the team's 53-man roster, and every game you saw them getting better. In turn, the fans came back, and came back strong. The old stadium on Route 1 was sold out every Sunday afternoon, and everywhere you went there was Pats pride in the air.

Those Patriots were more lovable than anything, but they were building an identity. Fans knew that when Drew dropped back, he'd pat the ball at least twice. You also knew that if he threw it to Big Ben, he'd catch it, because he caught everything.

See MARZELLI on page 7

The Grammys finally recognize hip-hop artists

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

UMass names permanent athletic director

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 76

Dramatic changes to Office of ALANA Affairs proposed

DAILY COLLEGIAN/ALEMAN

SGA Senator Avisha Cooper speaks at the first SGA meeting of the spring semester.

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Correspondent

Last night the Student Government Association held its first weekly meeting of the semester. With eight motions on the agenda and an ongoing controversy, a long night was in the works.

During the announcement portion of the meeting, the ALANA Caucus appointed seats and the future of the Office of ALANA Affairs were widely discussed.

Russell Plato, the secretary of diversity, announced a new executive cabinet proposal for the Office of ALANA Affairs.

Currently, the office has two permanent staff members and is funded by the SGA. Plato would like to see it increased to three members, including a director, and two specific directors based on multiple levels of diversity. The new office would be called The Office of Community Diversity. While expanding the staff, it would change the focus from African, Latino, Asian/Pacific Islander, and Native American students to a broader range of issues including gender, class, and ethnicity.

"The office has done great things, and this is designed to strengthen it to do greater things," Plato said. "You can't address these issues separately. As it is, we expect this office to address many of these issues anyway."

Several senators debated whether putting all these issues under one office is appropriate. Senator Aishya Cooper spoke on the importance of having a separate ALANA office.

"Diversity is very important, not just on this campus ... it's more than race, than sexuality, than homosexuality," she said. "Every group has its own issues."

The ALANA Caucus seats were also under hot debate. Previously, The ALANA Caucus seats comprised 13 percent of the Senate. In September 2003 the student body voted on a referendum question concerning the appointed ALANA Caucus seats after Speaker Jared Nokes ruled that having appointed seats was unconstitutional. The question was then directed to the student body, and students voted in favor of amending the constitution to allow the seats.

According to a memo released by Nokes on Monday, Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, brought the question concerning the legality of appointed seats to Terrence P. O'Malley, University of Massachusetts General Council and Vice President shortly after the student vote. The memo included the General Council's recommendation that appointed seats were unconstitutional, and also implied that eliminating appointed seats would keep the Senate in line with the U.S. Constitution.

Senator Dan Pozmanter was displeased with the General Counsel's elimination of the seats. "We voted," he said. "We said we wanted the seats back. The General Counsel has thrown this out based on a flimsy legal argument. That's sad."

Senator David Bettencourt asked the Caucus to bring the issue outside of the University and into Massachusetts State Court. He wanted to stop debating at the Senate level, and told them to sue the University, which would leave it up to courts to make the decision.

Nokes said the next level of appeal for the appointed seats is the UMass Board of Trustees.

SGA President David Carr vows to keep fighting based on the students' vote last fall.

An SGA diversity roundtable is planned to discuss the proposed modifications to the Office Of ALANA Affairs next Monday, Feb. 9, at 7 p.m. in 168C in the Campus Center.

•••

The Senate also had eight motions on the agenda

SGA on page 3

Court: Gay couples entitled to marriage

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts high court declared yesterday that gays are entitled to nothing less than marriage and that Vermont-style civil unions will not suffice, setting the stage for the nation's first legally sanctioned same-sex weddings by the spring.

The court issued the advisory opinion at the request of legislators who wanted to know whether civil unions would be enough to satisfy the court after its November ruling that said gay couples are entitled to all the rights of marriage. That decision had been written in such a way that it left open the possibility that civil unions might be allowed.

But yesterday's opinion by the Supreme Judicial Court left no doubt: Only marriage would pass constitutional muster.

"The history of our nation has demonstrated that separate is seldom, if ever, equal," four justices wrote. "For no rational reason the marriage laws of the commonwealth discriminate against a defined class; no amount of tinkering with language will eradicate that stain. The [civil unions] bill would have the effect of maintaining and fostering a stigma of exclusion that the Constitution prohibits."

Paul Martinek, editor of Lawyers Weekly USA, said that the blunt opinion erases any confusion.

"The fat lady has sung and she's singing the wedding march," Martinek said. "It's clear from reading the majority opinion that there's no basis on which the [court] will OK anything other than marriage."

The much-anticipated opinion came a week before next Wednesday's Constitutional Convention, where the Legislature will consider an amendment backed by Republican Gov. Mitt Romney that would define marriage as a union between a man and a woman.

But the soonest a constitutional amendment could end up on the ballot would be 2006, meaning that until then, the high court's decision will be Massachusetts law. Gay couples could get married in Massachusetts as soon as May, the deadline set by the court last fall.

"We're going to have to start looking for a band," said Ed Balmelli, who put down a deposit for a wedding after the opinion.

The case represents a significant milestone in a year that has seen broad new recognitions of gay rights in America, Canada

GAY MARRIAGE on page 3

'Rip-off 101': Rising prices

Reasons for hike detailed in report

By Nathan Chomsky-Higgins
Collegian Staff

As University of Massachusetts students enter spring semester classes, and reading assignments begin piling up, the increasing price of textbooks has sparked conversation around campus and left many students desperate for cash.

On Thursday, Jan. 29, a report detailing the increasing costs of college textbooks and the reasons behind the increases was released to colleges across the country. This report, entitled "Rip-off 101: How the Current Practices of the Publishing Industry Drive up the Cost of College Textbooks" involved a study of textbook costs at ten public colleges and universities in California and Oregon.

The report was headed by the California Student Public Interest Research Group (CALPIRG), the Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group (OSPIRG) and the OSPIRG Foundation. The UMass chapter of MassPIRG held a press conference to inform the public of this new report and its impact on the student body.

The topic of increasing textbook costs is becoming a much more controversial issue, as a weakening economy causes more and more students to have trouble affording tuition and fees.

The report highlights several key factors it attributes to the rising cost of textbooks, and many of the practices that it accuses the textbook publishing industry of using to increase their profits. It also addresses the various ways people are attempting to respond to the increased costs.

One of the main complaints of the report regarding the textbook publishing industry is its tendency to release new editions of its textbooks every 3.8 years, on average, regardless of whether a new edition is called for or not. A University of California (UC) survey of 156 faculty showed that 76 percent said that the new editions were justified half the time or less.

This report, which also surveyed 520 students as to the total cost of their textbooks and their purchasing methods, found that 59 percent could not find even one used book. This is attributed to other students buying them first, and newer editions making the used copies obsolete.

Eight-seven percent of the faculty surveyed supported having the publishing industry release supplements every few years in place of a new textbook to help lower costs to students. The other 13 percent considered it a bad idea mostly because of the logistics of switching between the supplement and the textbook, according to the report.

DAILY COLLEGIAN/ALEMAN

Andrea Asia, an undeclared freshman, pays for books at the Textbook Annex.

DAILY COLLEGIAN/ALEMAN

Students wait in line to pay for books at the Textbook Annex.

According to the survey, the cost of textbooks during the 2003-2004 academic year ranged from a low of $819.31 to a high of $979.20, with the average being $897.88. This compares with another UC study done for the 1996-1997 academic year, which had an average total textbook cost of $642. That's an increase of 24 percent over six years.

The report also found that publishing companies generally charge more for their books when selling to American students as opposed to when selling to Canadian and British students. For example, Thompson Learning publishes "Calculus: Early Transcendentals" and sells it to American students for one hundred $25 dollars. The same book goes to Canadian students for $97 dollars and $65 to British students.

Surveyed professors also generally expressed displeasure over the increasingly common practice of "bundling" textbooks. Bundling is when textbook publishers include supplemental materials, such as CDs and workbooks, shrink-wrapped with the textbook. This can often substantially raise the price of textbooks to students.

Of the professors surveyed for this report, 65 percent said that they "rarely" or "never" use the supplemental materials included with the textbook, with only 24 percent responding that they "usually" or "always" use the included material.

Of all the books surveyed, only one came both bundled and unbundled. This book, "Chemistry: The Central Science", sold for $130 bundled, and $60 unbundled. According to an English professor at UC Davis, "New editions are quite simply produced more often than needed and students actively resent this and tend to see it as profiteering."

The report offers a few ways in which the cost to students could be drastically reduced. Some of the ideas would also allow publishing companies to continue making the same level of profit that they make now.

One idea is the implementation of online textbooks. According to the Association of American Publishers and the National Association of College Stores, 32.3 cents of every dollar spent on textbooks goes into paper, printing and editorial costs. Online textbooks would be able to reduce the cost or do away with the costs altogether. These savings could then be passed on to the students without cutting into publishers' profits.

MassPIRG has also outlined a

TEXTBOOK on page 2

Labor leaders to share experiences from Iraq visit

Labor journalist and Newspaper Guild member David Bacon and San Francisco longshoreman Clarence Thomas will both give a report and show a slideshow of their international labor fact-finding mission in Iraq today at 7 p.m. in room 174 of the Campus Center.

Sponsored by the U.S. Labor Against the War (USLAW)-Western Massachusetts and the United Auto Workers (UAW local 2322), the event will feature Bacon and Thomas in a speak-out against the "war" at home and abroad in defense of labor rights in Iraq and the U.S.

In October, Bacon and Thomas of USLAW traveled to Iraq and discovered a war-torn country with mass unemployment (70 percent), low pay, arrests, the use of Saddam-era laws to suppress the right to organize and strike and little evidence of reconstruction.

Also, Amy Hines of UAW Local 2322 will give a report on the work of Western Massachusetts' USLAW. The event endorsers include the American Friends Service Committee, the Arab Student Club, International Socialist Organization, Military Families Speak Out, UMass Labor Center, United Electrical Workers District 2, UE Local 274, The Valley War Bulletin and The Wally Nelson Chapter of Veterans for Peace.

— Keyana Brown

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living/Living Glen Straub
Associate Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Board Matthew Reed
News Editor Ferron Salzhiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ung
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Campus Affairs Manager Kristen Weiss
Campus Affairs Associate Marty Pappas
Entertainment Manager Mark Lagotis
Health Manager Greg Stamm
Health Reporter Renee Brand
Associate Arts/Living Linda Wallach
Associate Arts/Living David Bor
Business Manager Jadynn Sorenson
Business Development Josh Ruggins
Circulation Manager Richard Pacheco
Associate Photo Editor Lisa Lynch
Assistant Sports Editor Charlie Higgins
Arts/Arts & Living Meghan Heals
Arts/Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Sports Editor Paige Cram
Associate Arts Erika Lovley
Associate Sports Morris Singer
Associate Photo Emilie Duggan
Associate Sports Mike Marzelli
Associate Sports Robert McGovern

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

High-striding Kerry points toward weekend contest

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

John Kerry's chief rivals all but ceded three weekend elections to the high-striding presidential front-runner yesterday, covering their retreat with fresh claims that he is a flip-flopping Washington insider who would lead the party to defeat this fall.

Southern natives John Edwards and Wesley Clark pointed their cash-strapped campaigns to next Tuesday's elections in Tennessee and Virginia, gambling that they can survive to fight Kerry in Wisconsin Feb. 17. A third challenger, Howard Dean, also had his sights set on a Wisconsin showdown.

The odds are stacked against all three. In a war of attrition, Kerry has the most allies, the longest supply lines and weakened adversaries.

"Without money, you can't have the troops. Without troops, you can't compete. How can you compete with a guy who can write himself a check for ads in California?" said Michigan pollster Ed Sarpolus.

Clark, Edwards and Dean hope to rise out of Wisconsin as the only alternative to Kerry when the race turns to contests in California, New York and eight other "Super Tuesday" states March 2.

Two officials close to Clark, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the retired Army general considered dropping out of the race Tuesday night after scoring a single victory, a nail-biter in Oklahoma. They said his wife, Gert, helped talk him into staying in the race against the advice of some backers.

In another sign of trouble, Clark's staff agreed to a pay freeze to pay for television ads.

The hopes of Edwards, Clark and Dean hinged on two matters that were out of their control — Kerry's performance and his past. A plodding and imperfect campaigner, the Massachusetts senator could make a mistake or be scorched under the spotlight cast upon his nearly 20-year record in the Senate.

To that end, the challengers are trumpeting media reports about Kerry's ties to special interests and lobbyists.

"If we're going to have a president who's not a Washington insider, who knows the changes that need to take place in Washington to change America, I need to be the president," Edwards told CNN the day after he won South Carolina to keep his candidacy alive.

Kerry won five states and the lion's share of the delegates Tuesday, taking command of the race. Of the 269 delegates up for grabs, Kerry won 144, Edwards 66, Clark 50, Dean seven and Al Sharpton two.

Dean suggested that "it'll be more of the same" if Kerry replaces Bush in the White House. Clark criticized both Kerry and Edwards, faulting them for complaining about White House policies that they had backed in the Senate.

Emilie Duggan/Collegian

Frosty the Snowman

A snowman mysteriously appeared on the lawn between the Student Union and the Campus Center after Tuesday night's snowfall.

Lindsay Nourse, an undeclared freshman, waits in line at the Textbook Annex.

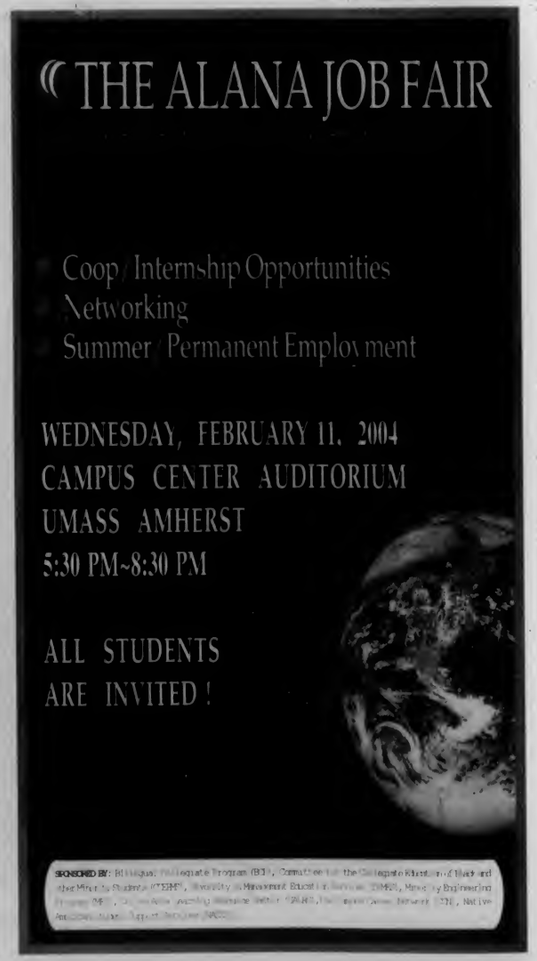
MassPIRG reports

See TEXTBOOKS from page 1

series of policy recommendations to help reduce textbook costs. These include having publishers keep costs down without sacrificing educational quality, selling both bundled and unbundled versions of textbooks, increasing the number of forums students have available to them to buy textbooks, and giving faculty the pricing information they need to choose the most cost-effective textbook available.

In the fall of 2002, MassPIRG opened Books 4 Books in response to the increasing textbook costs. Originally opened as a book exchange, they have shifted focus into a middleman for students, providing a place where students can sell books for more and buy them for less.

"We were founded with the idea that students should be able to afford college," said Michael Sturgeon, a Books 4 Books and MassPIRG volunteer.



At Books 4 Books they recommend that students charge at least 65 percent of what they paid for the book, which is opposed to the Textbook Annex's maximum buyback of 50 percent. Books 4 Books keeps 10 percent of the sale price to cover expenses, and the rest goes to the seller. This generally results in the seller receiving more for the book, and the purchaser getting the book for less than if they did so at the Textbook Annex.

Books 4 Books is currently attempting to turn themselves into a Student-Run business, but according to Sturgeon, "Follett has a contract that gives them a monopoly on campus."

Congressman David Wu and Senator Charles Schumer have both introduced legislation to address the issue, while state and local education boards are introducing their own solutions to the problem.

The full report can be found on www.massPIRG.org/students.

ALANA Caucus seats under debate

See SGA from page 1

last night.

They approved $1,800 for the Center for Student Businesses for computer needs. Currently, the center has one main computer and two laptops that students bring in from home.

After an amendment, the Senate approved a motion congratulating the union for resident assistants at UMass after they recently successfully negotiated a contract for the first undergraduate union in the country.

Secretary of Public Policy and Relations Mina Safain, a residential assistant, complained that he is in fact paid too much at about $10 an hour and did not fully support the motion.

Emilie Duggan/Collegian

SGA President, Dave Carr, answers questions regarding the decision to eliminate ALANA Caucus seats from the SGA Senate.

Senator Olaf Aprans agreed. "I don't think we should be congratulating people on getting a housing fee increase," he said.

Safain said RAs make $5,000 a semester. According to the application for the RA position, the job is valued at $5,530 for the 2003-2004 academic year, with $3,573 of that amount in a room fee waiver, $162 in a waiver of the telecommunications fee assessed by OIT, a membership in the Wellness Centers valued at $85, and a cash stipend totaling $1,710."

The Senate passed the motion after agreeing the union was worth congratulating despite the salary increase for RAs.

The Senate also unanimously approved the Massachusetts State Legislature's recent override of Gov. Mitt Romney for $10 million for UMass.

Senators Ayopunde Onikoro and Damien Weinstein asked the Senate to invite Massachusetts Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry, the latter running for the democratic nomination in the national election, to come to UMass and share their views on higher education. Bettencourt wanted to invite Gov. Mitt Romney as well. The majority of the Senate disagreed, but approved of the invitation to the two senators.

Ways and Means Chair Patrick Higgins focused on the money collected from parking fees.

"All those funds that they collect from your tickets, sit in an account, unsupervised," he said.

Higgins said the money should be used to pay for parking services and renovations to lots. Currently, this is illegal for the five UMass campuses to do.

If they were to repeal this law, it could potentially take away some money the University uses for scholarships.

Some Senators referred to this as a slush fund. Higgins disagreed. He was most concerned about the lack of monitoring for the account. "Do something about it," he said, as if speaking to the State Legislature in Boston.

Pozmanter argued with Higgins. "Write a better motion that doesn't take away scholarships," he said.

The Senate debated for 16 minutes. They voted by hand, and the motion was passed.

At 11:22 p.m., the Senate reached the motion to appoint three new senators. Lindsay Higgins and Deirdra Feeley are from Southwest South, and Mark Lerman is a commuter living in the Hillel House.

This leaves one vacancy in Northeast, one in Central, three in Southwest North, one in Southwest South, and nine Commuter seats.

The last motion set the spring elections, and was passed via a roll call vote without being read or discussed.

Fake birth control appears on-line

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — An overseas Internet site is shipping counterfeit versions of a popular Johnson & Johnson birth control patch, versions that won't provide any protection against pregnancy, federal health officials warned yesterday.

Do not use Ortho Evra patches — or any other drugs — ordered from the Web site www.rxpharmacyws, the Food and Drug Administration warned.

While the contraceptive patch is the only drug so far proved a fake from that site, the FDA said consumers should consider its other products suspect, too. Contact a health provider immediately if you've used them, the FDA advised.

That Web site is the only known source of the counterfeit patches, said the FDA, which is investigating the fraud's source.

The site appeared to have shut down by yesterday, but the FDA couldn't say how long it had been operating or how many U.S. women might have ordered the patches. It has no reports of pregnancies linked to them.

The fake birth control was shipped from India, and the Web site apparently was operated by an entity called American Style Products of New Delhi.

The Web site claimed to be offering J&J's FDA-approved patches, complete with pictures of the real thing, said FDA Associate Commissioner John Taylor.

A customer sparked the FDA's investigation when she complained to J&J that she didn't get what she ordered, Taylor said. Instead of the official patch, with its special sealed packaging and company label, she received a plastic bag full of patches with no label or other identifying information.

Testing showed the patches contained no contraceptive ingredient.

In addition to patches ordered from the one Web site FDA named, the agency urged women not to use Ortho Evra patches from other sites if they seem suspect — for example, lacking a label that bears a lot number and expiration date. The fake patch is brown and made of a woven material.

"It underscores the message that if it looks untoward, that you need to report it," Taylor said.

The real Ortho Evra patch is a thin beige film that comes sealed in a white pouch with a J&J label containing a lot number and expiration date. The pouch is packaged inside a green and white box with usage instructions.

High court rules gay marriage legal and abroad, including a June U.S. Supreme Court decision striking down a Texas ban on gay sex.

See GAY MARRIAGE from page 1

The White House called the Massachusetts ruling "deeply troubling."

"Activist judges continue to seek to redefine marriage by court order without regard for the will of the people," said presidential spokesman Scott McClellan.

The legal battle in Massachusetts began in 2001, when seven gay couples went to their city and town halls to obtain marriage licenses. All were denied, leading them to sue the state.

The Supreme Judicial Court ruled in November that gay couples have a constitutional right to marry, and gave the Legislature six months to change state laws to make it happen.

The state Senate then asked for more guidance from the court.

"The dissimilitude between the terms 'civil marriage' and 'civil union' is not innocuous; it is a considered choice of language that reflects a demonstrable assigning of same-sex, largely homosexual, couples to second-class status," the justices wrote.

At least one aspect of the case may still be subject to debate: Would marriages in Massachusetts have to be recognized in other states?

Conservative leaders said they would redouble their efforts to pass the constitutional ban on same-sex marriages.

"This now puts the pressure back on the Legislature to do their job to protect and defend marriage for the citizens of the state to allow them to vote," said Ron Crews, president of the Massachusetts Family Institute.

Lending a Hand

Nancy deProsse, a representative from the Amherst Family Center, speaks to sophomores Caitlin Leddy and Katie McGill at Wednesday's Community Service Fair in the Student Union Ballroom.

Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian

voiceglo.
talk. talk. talk. talk. talk...
to any phone in the world
The Best Phone Bill
Is No Phone Bill.
FREE phone service instantly
www.glominuteman.com

THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
Every Saturday @ Midnight
Special Valentine's show with giveaways
Featuring our live cast
The Come Again Players
(In)appropriate attire encouraged
Admission $5.75
prop kits $2.00, no outside props
Reservations Recomended
For more info Call (413) 533-FILM
South Hadley's Tower Theaters
The Village Commons
In South Hadley MA.
Call 533-FILM for reservations
Reservations accepted up to 6 days in advance
www.Towertheaters.com
Call 533-FILM to Make Reservations.
Reservations Accepted up to 6 days in advance.

CLUB CASTAWAY
RT. 5 & 10
WHATELY
665-8733
will proudly present another successful
AMATEUR NIGHT
MONDAY, SEPT. 29, 2003 • 7PM-1AM
Ladies Must Be 18 Years Old
Apply In Person
(No Professional Dancers)
1st Prize $300
2nd Prize $200
3rd Prize $100
NFL MONDAY NIGHTS ARE BACK!
10-15 Erotic Dancers
Free Buffet • Free Gifts
No Entertainment Charge
For Students
with College ID & Legal Picture ID
Must Be 21 Years Old

HIPPODROME
Night Club now hiring:
> Bartenders
> Security Staff
> Cocktail Servers
APPLY IN PERSON ONLY
Dates: Thursday Feb 5, 2004
Time: 6:00 pm - 8:00 pm
Place: 1700 Main Street, Springfield, MA
www.hdrome.com

Smooth Skin for Spring Break!
AMHERST LASER & SKIN CARE CENTER
Laser Hair Reduction- with GentleLase™
Utilizing advanced laser technology.
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Laser treatments available for acne, brown spots, and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Students who sign-up before March 1st will receive 50% off package price.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
AMHERSTLASER@VERIZON.NET

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Beer:
Heineken 24 pk btls. $20.99*
Bud & Bud Light 30 pk cans $18.49*
Busch & Busch Light 30 pk cans $13.99*
Keystone 30 pk cans $13.49*
Milwaukee's Best 30 pk cans $10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl $10.99*
Newcastle 12 pk btl $10.99*
Rolling Rock 12 pk btl $8.99*
Molson 12 pk btl $8.99*
Wine:
Black Box Chardonnay, Merlot 3.0 lt box $16.99
Foxhorn Chardonnay or Merlot 6 bot/750 ml $15.00
Canyon Road Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt $10.99
Vendange Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt $10.99
Wyndham Estates Merlot, Cabernet, Shiraz 750 ml $7.99
Jacobs Creek Chardonnay, Cabernet, Shiraz, Merlot 750 ml $6.99
Arbor Mist All Flavors 1.5 lt $4.99
Liquor:
Bushmills 1 lt $22.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey 1 lt $22.99
Pinnacle Vodka 1.75 lt $20.99
Stoli Flavored Vodka 750 ml $16.99
Bacardi Flavored Rum 1 lt $15.99
Admiral Nelson Spiced Rum 1.75 lt $14.99
Canadian Club 750 ml $9.99
Early Times Bourbon 750 ml $8.99
*all beer prices plus deposit
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 2/05 THROUGH 2/11
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Edwards must keep his victory in perspective

Several candidates still remain in the Democratic presidential nomination race. Sen. John Edwards, however, is only focusing on two of them.

Edwards made a statement following his primary victory in his birth state of South Carolina on Tuesday. The North Carolina lawyer-turned-senator received nearly half of the 271,000 votes in the primary, and was forty-two thousand votes higher than his nearest competitor (Kerry), according to CNN.com statistics. Edwards, in an interview with reporters after his victory, said, "the race is down to two men, myself and Sen. Kerry."

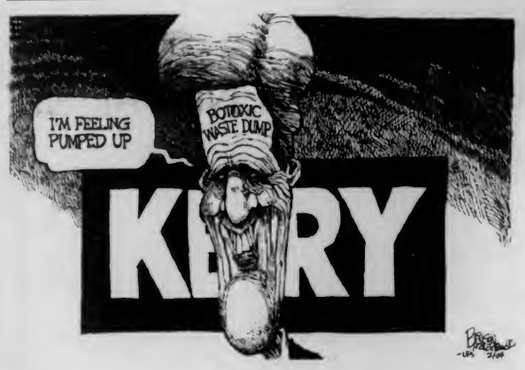
Edwards later added that his rival, Wesley Clark, can argue this statement, but it will not change the fact that Clark is stuck in third place. Edwards made no mention of Howard Dean, the one time front-runner, following Dean's dismal performance in the most recent string of primaries.

The win gave Edwards' campaign a much-needed boost, as it marked the first non-Kerry victory for one of the candidates. Tuesday night also saw Clark win his first state, Oklahoma. The Oklahoma win was underplayed greatly by Edwards, who said the slim margin (twelve hundred votes) would not be enough for Clark to mount a comeback on Kerry.

This newfound confidence of Edwards bears a slight resemblance to Dean's style a month or so ago. Any candidate running for president needs to exude confidence, but Edwards may be crossing the line between confidence and arrogance. He needs to keep in mind that politics is a tricky business, and nothing good ever stays for too long. As Dean showed us all, a lead in the polls one day can quickly turn into nothing more than a recent memory.

A month back, Dean was never shy about announcing his lead to the world. The press didn't help matters either, choosing to cover Dean as if he was the only candidate in the race. Meanwhile, Kerry waited in the shadows and strategically worked his way to the top.

Dean's biggest downfall, or course, was his fist-pumping, screeching outburst in Iowa. Edwards, keeping with his Dean-esque routine, gave a rather animated speech at the Orpheum Theater, in Memphis, Tenn. Tuesday evening. With a giant American flag as a backdrop, Edwards leaped onto a platform, pumped his arms, and gave thumbs up to the crowd.



Edwards has now started to complete the Dean transition by personally attacking President George Bush, a point that Dean's entire campaign was based on. This new approach is a far cry from Edwards' "positive message" campaign that was so prevalent in past weeks.

What Edwards is missing sight of is that he has not won a state outside of his principal demographic. A native of South Carolina and a resident of North Carolina, Edwards knew that victory in the southern states would be crucial to his long-term success. However, to be so confident without any success outside of the south is highly premature.

Once again, the media is partially to blame. Headlines in several newspapers and online news sites cried out that Edwards finally had the big break he was looking for. Now, Edwards apparently has "new life" that will propel him into a showdown with Kerry.

In order to properly gauge this situation, all of the factors must be presented. And the fact is, Edwards may still be alive, but a primary victory in his backyard, regardless of the significant vote differential, is only the first step of many the Senator must take to get back into the race.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

A reformed cynic braces for winter

Paige Cram

It's extremely easy for all of us to let our past experiences affect our attitude toward the future. Too often, we carry around our negative memories and allow them to create fear, which can prevent us from boldly stepping into new situations.

You can all relate, especially at this time of year. We know what New England winters are like; we've been through it before — the biting cold, the extreme wind tunnels on campus, the messy slush on the sidewalks and the ice in the parking lots. We've seen the worst of what winter can do to UMass and its students, and we begin to fear it.

By the time we get back in January, we are prepared to fight it. We come armed with heavy-duty snow scrapers and parkas. We hide from the bitter cold by cuddling under blankets inside our dorms and apartments where we are warm, and more importantly, safe. Going out is a risk. We know what awaits us can be brutal, so why bother?

We can spot the naïve ones, the ones who have yet to experience anything like winter at UMass. Those out-of-state freshmen that come without a scarf, and can only imagine lots of sledding and snow angels in front of their building. They frolic around campus like kids in a candy store because they don't realize that in a couple of weeks they'll get tired of it all. And yet, they also seem to be the only ones actually enjoying themselves at this time of year in the Pioneer Valley. So we look at them and we laugh, and we think to ourselves that it is only a matter of time before they realize that it's not that great. But really, we're jealous of their ability to enjoy something that has been ruined for the rest of us.

The truth is that most of us take this same attitude in life. Life is messy, and along the way, all of us come across our fair share of blizzards and freezing rain. And it is all too easy to use our past nightmares as excuses to simply play it safe. You can never get hurt if you shut yourself inside and keep that thick coat of armor on for protection. Always have doubts, and when you don't, be suspicious. Be cautious, and expect people to let you down.

We know what awaits us can be brutal, so why bother?

That way, you will never be disappointed, right?

Well, as great of a safeguard as that may be against getting hurt, it's also a flawed philosophy. If you never trust that situations or people may really be as good as they seem, if you never truly give things a chance to prove your personal theory wrong, then you may be missing out on those few genuine moments that we are lucky enough to have a chance at during our lifetimes. Maybe those out-of-state froshies have the right idea after all.

Any cynic, however, would argue that nine times out of ten, you wouldn't be missing out on anything at all. And maybe it's better to be protected those nine times than open to suggestions just that once.

For instance, early in December, I myself ventured out into the cold for a bit of an adventure. I was sledding with some friends and having a great time when I toppled off the snow tube and broke my wrist. I had a cast for six weeks, and I have since been scarred, unwilling to attempt another such endeavor. I no longer trust myself. I no longer trust the snow, or blow-up tubes from Wal-Mart for that matter. But is that really how I want to live my life?

This is where I differ from the die-hard cynics, I suppose, because my answer is no. Feeling safe and warm is certainly nice, but nothing would ever happen to anyone if we all just hid out all the time. I think that braving the cold, cruel world is worth it even if just once, it pays off. Even if just once we have an experience that teaches us to trust, teaches us that good things can happen, then it's worth those nine times we get burned. We'll all make mistakes, and we'll all get hurt because that is part of life. But if we don't remain willing to try again, then all we'll be left with is the memory of the stinging cold.

I, for one, cannot live like that. I don't want to be protected. I want to live and have experiences that I will remember forever, and I can't do that by hiding from what I'm afraid of. So, I intend to face this winter head on. I am stepping out, braving the cold, and hoping that all of you can do the same.

Paige Cram is a Collegian columnist.

The price to pay for freedom

Gilad Skolnick

He spent the last three years in a dark, hidden jail cell. He was suffering from skin cancer and diabetes, yet he was denied the medication that his family had sent him. Frequently tortured, he was not allowed to talk with his family or receive letters delivered via the Red Cross. He was kept in complete isolation.

Israel's newspaper, Haaretz, reports that he was kept so isolated that he had no idea of such news events as 9-11, or of the 1,000 Israelis that have been victims of terror over the past three years.

This person is Elhanan Tennenbaum, who while on a trip to Europe several years ago, was kidnapped by the Lebanese terrorist organization Hezbollah. Until recently, no one knew anything of Tennenbaum's whereabouts.

Around the time of his kidnapping, a group of three Israeli soldiers were on a jeep patrolling the Lebanese-Israeli border. A United Nations vehicle approached them, at which point armed terrorists from Hezbollah jumped out of the vehicle and attacked, kidnapped, and later murdered the soldiers. According to the Jerusalem Post, another U.N. vehicle managed to videotape the whole event, but the U.N. refused to hand over a copy of the video, only allowing a select group to watch it, with the faces of the terrorists blurred. The U.N.'s job was to keep peace in the region, not sit in the sidelines and watch, proving to be useless once again.

Until recently, Hezbollah was not willing to reveal any information regarding the fate of any of those kidnapped, leaving everyone else clueless about their current state. With a motto of "no one left behind", Israel released over 400 arrested terrorists last week in return for Tennenbaum, the kidnapped Israeli, and the bodies of the three soldiers. Furthermore, Hezbollah refused in the exchange to release any of the other Israeli soldiers who have been kidnapped over the past decade or give any information about their state, including Ron Arad, who has been missing since 1982.

Sure, one man is freed and three bodies are brought back to help bring closure to their families, but was it worth releasing hundreds of potentially dangerous people in return for so few?

What other country in the world would release hundreds of terrorists in return for three bodies and one civilian? This was so absurd that Victims of Arab Terror International and the Organization of Casualties of Terror Acts in Israel filed petitions with the High Court demanding that the prisoner swap deal be canceled. They asked the court to disqualify the deal, saying that "hundreds of dangerous terrorists, including ones with blood on their hands," must not be released. Nevertheless, last week on the day that a suicide bomber blew himself up in a bus in Jerusalem murdering ten people and badly injuring dozens more, Israel went ahead with the deal.

Sure, one man is freed and three bodies are brought back to help bring closure to their families, but was it worth releasing hundreds of potentially dangerous people in return for so few? Perhaps this will strengthen the moral of a country badly hit by terrorism by letting its citizens know that their country is always there for them. I just wish that Israel wasn't so lenient when it came to fighting terrorism. Perhaps a stronger stance against terror would be deterrence against future terrorist acts. On the other hand if I were Tennenbaum or part of his family, I would want Israel to do whatever it takes to have him released.

Perhaps Israelis compassion for its citizens that are locked away and tortured somewhere, (even if its just one), is so strong that the country is willing to take great risks. In a country that believes that each one of its citizen's lives is priceless, no price is too high to bring them back home.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

The death of an American icon

Ben Feder

The sitcom is dead. This is evident in today's television medium, and at its rapid rate of decline, the TV sitcom does not have much time left.

In an effort for better ratings and more viewership, it seems television media producers are pumping the airwaves with any show that might gain ratings, despite weaknesses in concept, plot, or character design. Whenever new sitcoms premier, the networks relentlessly promote their new brainchild until two weeks later, when it disappears into obscurity. Why are these networks producing shoddy, surface-deep sitcoms, constantly throwing the spaghetti at the wall until something sticks?

The reason for the disintegration of one of America's oldest entertainment icons is the result of the increasing popularity of reality TV. Reality TV evolved in the late 90's; let's pin it at around 1997. At this point the sitcom had reached its peak of success. Shows like "Will and Grace", "Seinfeld", and "Friends" boasted primetime with humor as we enjoyed economic prosperity (somewhat), and smooth relations with our neighbors.

Also, who can forget TGIF? It was a concept keeping us on our couches on Friday nights, watching shows like "Full House," where the most huggable, lovable family would face the trials and tribulations of normal life. Besides the "Creepy Uncle" complex that most young men developed while watching little Michelle grow from infancy to the blossoming twins adorning their apartment walls, the question about how close three men can be living in the same house to raise four girls never occurred. Along with Urkel, Cody, and Balki as our weeknight heroes, our airwaves were safe, primetime was enjoyable, and life was good.

The moment that tipped the scales was the night Regis Philban debuted "Who Wants to be a Millionaire". It was an opportunity to indulge a society hungry for instant gratification. The questions were simple, insulted high schoolers across the nation, and humored over worked/underpaid cubicle dwellers everywhere. The chance to win $1 million finishing Dr. Suess rhymes on national television brought the common citizen the chance for easy fame. Network executives, thirsty for a new gimmick, vampirically set upon this fat new vein of success. Keep in mind, "Millionaire" debuted in 1997, around the same time "Seinfeld" ended, which possibly closed the lid on the TV sitcom's coffin.

Soon after "Millionaire" morphed into shows like "The Chamber", "Fear Factor", and "Dog Eat Dog", combining the question and answer format with stunts and extreme situations. One popular reality show to arrive was "Survivor", which practically is "Millionaire" placed on an island. Reality TV soon after saturated the media, as sitcoms began to fade away.

The quality of the sitcom quickly deteriorated. Reality programs film multiple seasons at once so they're able to pump seasons out quickly, with little space between season finales and season premieres, at a rate the sitcom world had never previously experienced and found difficult to contend with. As a result, sitcom's started developing common themes.

One example is the fat man/skinny woman sitcom. Shows like "According to Jim," "King of Queens," and "Tracey Morgan," the characters represent fat, oafish fathers with skinny, attractive "voice of reason" mothers. The men usually go from a goofy, grown-child mentality to a sensitive mature, deep persona in a matter of minutes. This schizophrenia makes the shows' characters hardly plausible. Also, the show "Hope and Faith" has become the frontrunner of the dumb blond theme, littering their shows with trite jokes in a passé stereotype.

"Will and Grace" combined with "Sex in the City" opened the doors for the metrosexual craze. "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy" took the reigns becoming reality TV's newest craze to replace the trading spaces makeover/renovation genre, making all of us feel bad for owning wire hangars and shaving with disposable razors.

Reality TV has even started to fill the sitcom void by becoming pseudo-sitcoms. "Newlyweds", "The Simple Life", and "Celebrity Mole" are shows where reality television becomes less of where "normal" people get involved in extreme contests and instead, celebrities get involved documenting their lives, day by day, or placing them in some extreme events and obstacles.

But all hope is not lost. Sitcoms that have survived are unique and don't rehash on stereotypes, regurgitating the same trite situations with the same used story lines. "Malcom in the Middle", "Scrubs", and "The OC" are all keeping the sitcom a forceful opponent when "Friends" finally calls it quits. Also the one-hour dramas seem to be holding strong, battling the reality series for better primetime locations, holding fast for the reality television craze to end, and the sitcom to reclaim its place in the media spotlight.

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Resident Assistants are not all bad:

I am a resident assistant in the Northeast residential area here at UMass. After reading Morris Singer's article, I cannot help but feel sorry for his situation with his hypothetical resident assistant. However, it must be noted that it is just that ONE isolated incident that occurred for Morris. This does not mean that all RAs are like "Nashville."

One thing I have learned throughout my experience is that you cannot judge an entire group by one person. Just as you cannot look at one chemistry major working in a lab and assume he is a nerd, you absolutely cannot judge all of Residential Life by one bad experience. To stereotype all of us and to assume that we are all 'out to get you,' means that you are simply misinformed.

It is funny to me that Morris referred to resident assistants as 'full-time babysitters.' At my initial floor meeting in September, the first thing I told my residents was that I am not their babysitter. I will not be sitting at home cuddling them, nor will I be sitting outside their door waiting for them to violate a policy. My job description includes being a community builder, a resource and referral agent, an administrator, and a counselor. Notice again how babysitter is not on that list.

In his article, Morris said, 'I urge everyone to think about what it is these people are really doing on our campus.' OK, so let's do exactly that. Resident assistants work hard to make the residence halls places that students can call home. We put in effort to create bulletin boards to educate, inform, and for student to enjoy. We plan programs that allow interaction between residents so that they can become better friends and have a good time. We answer any questions that may arise, and in fact, may spend time searching for the answers if we are unsure. We wake up to phone calls in the middle of the night to get keys for those residents who have locked themselves out. We hold floor meetings so that residents are aware of residence hall information and policies. We stay up all hours of the night listening to a resident talk about issues that are important to him/her. We stop by our residents' rooms to ask how their days were. This list could go on and on.

Finally, the only way to bring about change is for you to take a stand. Complaining is not the answer. If you really feel that Resident Assistants are doing a poor job and merely seeking out residents to document, then apply yourself. Be part of the applicant pool and increase the chances that only well-qualified UMass students who will do a good job are hired.

Liane Franklin
UMass Student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

At last the Grammys respect hip-hop

Hip-hop finally received proper recognition from the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences when the 46th Annual Grammy Award nominations were announced Dec. 4 — and the genre can expect more love when the awards are handed out Sunday. Three out of the five nominations in the Album of the Year category and four out of the five nominations in the Record of the Year category belong to hip-hop or R&B acts.

Nikolas Markantanatos

Hip-hop and R&B acts also command the most number of nominations. Jay-Z, his girlfriend Beyoncé, Outkast and Pharrell Williams each earned six nominations. The following acts received five nominations: Eminem, 50 Cent, Missy Elliott, Evanescence, Chad Hugo, Justin Timberlake, Luther Vandross, Ricky Skaggs and Warren Zevon.

Eminem's "Lose Yourself" is the first rap song nominated for Song of the Year, an award that goes to the songwriter, in this case, Eminem.

In years past, Jay-Z has been vocal about the Recording Academy's ways.

"I am boycotting the Grammys because too many major rap artists continue to be overlooked," he said in a statement in 1999. "Rappers deserve more attention from the Grammy committee and from the whole world. If it's got a gun, everyone knows about it, but if we go on a world tour, no one knows."

Nope, these aren't your grammy's Grammy awards.

In fact, they're not your mother's either.

As the Grammy nominations have become hipper and more youth-centric, so too have the performances.

Following Janet Jackson's boob blowout at Sunday's Super Bowl, CBS (which broadcast the Super Bowl) is safeguarding itself against any unscripted, er, outbursts. To avoid any booby traps, CBS will use a tape delay, although at press time, the

See GRAMMYS on page 7

And the Nominees Are...

Album of the Year

Under Construction-Missy Elliot
Fallen-Evanescence
Speakerboxxx/The Love Below-OutKast
Justified-Justin Timberlake
Elephant-The White Stripes

Record of the Year

Crazy In Love-Beyoncé Featuring Jay-Z
Where is the Love-The Black Eyed Peas & Justin Timberlake
Clocks-Coldplay
Lose Yourself-Eminem
Hey Ya!-OutKast

Best New Artist

Evanescence
50 Cent
Fountains of Wayne
Heather Headley
Sean Paul

Collegian Picks:

	Glen Straub Arts & Living Editor	Dan Lamothe Managing Editor	Mike Marzelli Assitant Sports Editor	Molly Eggleston Comics Editor	Ferron Saindfer News Editor	Meghan Healy Assistant Arts Editor
Album of the Year	"Justified" Justin Timberlake	"Speakerboxxx/ The Love Below" OutKast	"Speakerboxxx/ The Love Below" OutKast	"Under Construction" Missy Elliot	"Justified" Justin Timberlake	"Speakerboxxx/ The Love Below" OutKast
Record of the Year	"Hey Ya!" OutKast	"Lose Yourself" Eminem	"Hey Ya!" OutKast	"Lose Yourself" Eminem	"Hey Ya!" OutKast	"Clocks" Coldplay
Best New Artist	50 Cent	50 Cent	50 Cent	Sean Paul	Sean Paul	Sean Paul

Ladysmith Black Mambazo arrives in Noho

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

Paul Simon, Stevie Wonder, Dolly Parton, Big Bird.

These entertainers are rarely ever mentioned together in the same sentence, so why in this article? What is the common thread between them?

It's easy — they have all worked with the sensational Ladysmith Black Mambazo. The most famous of these collaborations is Ladysmith's appearance and heavy influence on Paul Simon's 1987 "Graceland" album.

Songs like "Diamonds on the Soles of Her Shoes" and "Homeless" on "Graceland" catapulted the South African group's notoriety onto a worldwide scale, and for a quick second, made room in the crowded pop scene for music and culture from the sub-Saharan region of Africa to be recognized.

However, Ladysmith Black Mambazo's tenure in the music industry far exceeds the 15 minutes of fame the group received following the success of "Graceland." The group has produced 30 albums in 30 years and tonight — over the course of two shows — Ladysmith will perform from their extensive catalogue at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo
Tonight
Iron Horse
Northampton
$35 advance, $38 door

Ladysmith is compiled of 10 South African Zulu-singing men — six of which come from the musically enhanced Shabalala family. Joseph Shabalala, the leader of the group, started the ensemble with his brothers in 1964, after growing up on a farm hearing traditional Zulu singing called "Isiathamiya." "Isia-thamiya" has melody, harmony and rhythm all within an a cappella structure. An orchestra of heavy breaths, puffing, pops, clicks and deep-soothing singing construct one of the most complex and beautiful musical sounds in the world.

And that is why everyone wants a chance to work with Ladysmith. If they don't get a chance to work with South Africa's pride and joy, they want to see the group perform. With the traditional dancing that accompanies the music, Ladysmith is just as much a spectacle as it is smooth on the eardrums.

Over its three-decade history, Ladysmith has been asked to perform in front the Pope, at the 1996 Olympics, the Queen of England and South African freedom fighter and the country's first democratically elected president, Nelson Mandela.

On its Web site (mambazo.com), Ladysmith is described as "a national treasure of the new South Africa in part because they embody the traditions suppressed in the old South Africa."

The worldwide popularity — particularly in western nations that manifested because of "Graceland" — opened people's eyes to the problems associated with the group members' native land and in the process, gave blacks living through the dictating Apartheid regime a sense of pride in their beautiful native culture.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo is more than just a singing group — it is a phenomena.

You can see them tonight at either 6:30 p.m. or 8:30 p.m. at the Iron Horse. Tickets cost $35 in advance and $38 at the door. This show was originally scheduled for the Calvin Theater but all tickets will be accepted.

Courtesy Mambazo.com

Ladysmith Black Mambazo is a world music phenomenon. Tonight it plays two shows at the Iron Horse in Northampton.

Sophomores and Juniors, are you a "Leader in the Making"?

If so, you could receive a $2,000 scholarship...

- Applicants must be full-time sophomore and junior undergraduate students to be eligible.
- Applications may be picked up Monday through Friday at the Alumni Association Office in Memorial Hall from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.
- Applications can be downloaded at www.UMassAlumni.com/students
- Four scholarships will be awarded and each recipient will receive $2,000.
- A complete application must include a resume, an unofficial academic transcript, one letter of reference, a profile of financial need and an essay.

Completed applications must be returned to the Alumni Association Office by February 17th at 5 p.m.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

For more information, please contact Melanie Corbeil at 545-2317 or mcorbeil@admin.umass.edu

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Afro-American Artists Museum guards the past, looks to future of black culture

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Next to the Museum of the National Center of Afro-American Artists, a snow-covered statue watches over Boston's Roxbury neighborhood. Expressionless and ageless, neither male nor female, the huge head could be a black person anywhere, or in any time, a monument to the past and a promise of the future.

The statue, called "Eternal Presence," is a fitting face for the museum and the center, which established itself as a black cultural powerhouse in 1970s Boston, suffered crushing setbacks in the 1980s, and is now poised to begin anew.

"It puts its finger on the most essential observation of our work, which is that our work tries to give a face to black humanity," museum director Barry Gaither, 59, said of the statue. "We see cultural tradition not as a prison, but as a platform from which to launch yourself into the world."

The museum, housed in a massive 19th-century Gothic mansion perched atop a knoll, has for decades been a beloved, if sometimes overlooked, cultural institution in Boston. Its roots date back to the 1950s, before popular conceptions of black culture and art flourished in the 1960s and 1970s.

Dozens of artists owe their places in the galleries to founder Elma Lewis, who launched an arts and performance school for black children in 1950 and who died at 82 on New Year's Day. A huge portrait of Lewis, who never married or had children, hangs in one gallery.

"This work was her child. It was what she gave her whole life to. She was a woman of extraordinary will and vision," Gaither said.

The museum, which served for decades as a school for boys with disciplinary problems, then as an annex to a nearby public school, was just one part of Lewis' vision for bringing arts and performance to Boston's black community.

The National Center of Afro-American Artists, which Lewis launched in 1968, grew to several branches, including the museum, Lewis' school, an annual Christmas performance of Langston Hughes' "Black Nativity," and the Elma Lewis Playhouse in the Park, where Duke Ellington played every year until his death.

The NCAAA's first painting in the collection was a 1968 donation of Charles Wilbert White's "Nat Turner, Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow," a gift of the Boston Black United Front, a political action group from the 1960s.

"It was kind of a consummate act of faith that somehow or another, without an endowment or a guarantor, we would create a place that was the right place for this work to be," Gaither said.

Why are you still Grocery Shopping? Cooking? Cleaning?

YCMP
A WORLD OF CHOICES

Be smart
Get YCMP and concentrate on the real question.

What are you going to do with all that extra money?

...in Franklin.

Dream it. Do it. Disney.®

We're recruiting on campus!

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS-AMHERST
Thursday, February 12, 2004
8:00 am
Isenburg School of Management-Room 137

Mark your calendars — All majors and all college levels invited.
This is your chance to go inside this world-famous resort, build your resume, network with Disney leaders and meet students from around the world.

Check out a Walt Disney World® College Program paid internship. 24-hour secured housing is offered.
College credit opportunities may be available.
Visit our website at wdwcollegeprogram.com
and then come to the presentation.
Attendance is required to interview.

Walt Disney World COLLEGE PROGRAM wdwcollegeprogram.com

EOE • Drawing Creativity from Diversity • ©Disney

Hip-hop will get its props at Grammys

GRAMMYS from page 5

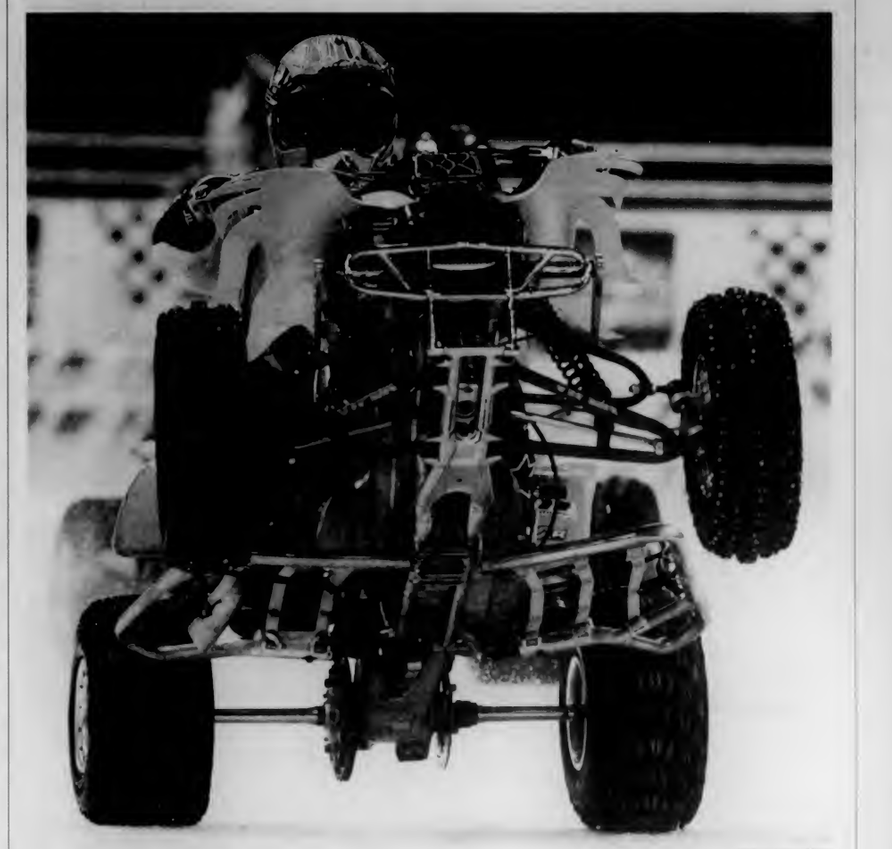
time of that delay had not been determined. The network feels so confident with the tape delay — which has the capability of deleting both audio and footage — it has rated the Grammys TVPG.

Despite previous reports, Janet Jackson and Justin Timberlake (that's Ms. Jackson to you, nasty boy!) are still scheduled to be at the event Feb. 8 at the Staples Center in Los Angeles at 8 p.m. (ET). Although, the New York Post reports that CBS could still forbid the two from the Grammy telecast should the network learn that the boob flashing was not accidental.

Jackson is slated to be a presenter at the show and Timberlake will perform solo.

Perhaps the biggest shock we can get is if nothing at all happens. Yeah, and Madonna's a real blonde.

Other performers, most of who are no strangers to controversy, include Christina Aguilera; Outkast; Celine Dion; Jackson Browne; Prince; Beyoncé; Dwight Yoakam; the White Stripes; 50 Cent; the Black Eyed Peas; Emmylou Harris; Alicia Keys; Richard Marx; the Eagles' Timothy B. Schmit; Billy Bob Thornton; Sean Paul; Martina McBride; Foo Fighters, who are teaming up with jazz legend Chick Corea; Outkast with George Clinton and Parliament Funkadelic; Earth, Wind & Fire; and Robert Randolph & The Family Band.



It's not an all-out kiddie-fest though. Sting, Dave Matthews, Vince Gill and Pharrell Williams will partake in a musical celebration marking the 40th anniversary of the Beatles' appearance on "The Ed Sullivan Show."

Jackson Browne, Emmylou Harris, Dwight Yoakam, Jorge Calderon and the Eagles' Timothy B. Schmit will offer a musical tribute to the late Warren Zevon.

And, finally, to ensure that the once sleep-inducing Grammy Awards are not a bore, celebrity guests will introduce all the performances. Scheduled presenters and spit-swapping friends Madonna and Britney Spears are sure to give the newly designed tape delay system a good workout.

Information from www.grammy.com was used in this column.

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian columnist.

Slip slidin' away

A quad racer pops-a-wheelie, showing more than 500 sharp steel studs on each wheel, after winning a race on the ice during "Xtreme International Ice Racing" held at the Mullins Center last night. The professional ice racing group entertained a crowd of about 1,000 spectators.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Chicago Pizzaria
FREE DELIVERY!
549-6073
160 Fearing St., located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
Welcome back UMass Students!
Friday/Saturday Special:
large cheese pizza $5.00
Open:
Sun.-Wed.: 11AM-1AM
Thurs.-Sat.:11AM-3AM
We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!

FURRY BOOTS
JUST ARRIVED!

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

No one knows what the future will bring.

Except those creating it.

Visit our Career Fair Booth on Wednesday, February 11.

Opportunities are available in the following areas.

Computer Science
Computer Engineering
Electrical Engineering
Mechanical Engineering
Math
Physics
Systems Engineering
Aeronautical Engineering
Optics

Check out our website at rayjobs.com/campus for further information including Campus Recruiting Events.
Start your job search by clicking Find a Job.

The power of applied intelligence.
rayjobs.com/campus

One of the most admired defense and aerospace systems suppliers through world-class people and technology. Our focus is developing great talent.

© 2004 Raytheon Company. All rights reserved. Raytheon is an equal opportunity employer and welcomes a wide diversity of qualified applicants. U.S. citizenship and security clearance may be required.

Raytheon
Customer Success Is Our Mission

McCutcheon named new AD

MCCUTCHEON from page 10

search committee. "John's experience as AD at an academically distinguished Division I-AA university, his extensive Division I intercollegiate athletic experience, his familiarity with intercollegiate athletics in New England and thorough understanding of the issues facing UMass and intercollegiate athletics generally, and his unquestioned integrity make him the ideal candidate to lead our program."

He is taking over a UMass athletic department that has experienced its share of turmoil over the last few years, including the departures of two permanent athletic directors since 2002, the recent loss of head football coach Mark Whipple to the NFL's Pittsburgh Steelers, floundering student support for the University's 23 varsity athletic teams and the recent implementation of massive statewide budget cuts which forced the program to eliminate seven sports in the past two years, as well as drastically reshape the budgets of several others.

"[Members of the athletic department's search committee] were up front with me about everything involving the program during the process," McCutcheon said. "My goal is to be able to stabilize the program and put it in the position to succeed to the point where it remains a source of pride for the University, its students, employees and alumni."

McCutcheon has been given a five-year contract with a base annual salary of $190,000. If he completes annual program performance goals, as well as other incentives, his base salary could increase by as much as $20,000 per year.

Program finds a new identity

MERRITT from page 10

Minutemaniacs had reason to be unsure about the future of the athletic program.

Now, there is a permanent name at the helm — no disrespect intended towards Thorr Bjorn, who has done an admirable job as interim AD since McCaw's departure — and that might just be what the program needs to truly turn things around, and move in the right direction.

"I think this University has the potential and the charge to be a leader in New England and the East," McCutcheon said after yesterday's press conference. "We want to be one of the premier programs, a comprehensive program that represents the university and the state in the right way."

McCutcheon comes to Amherst after 13 years at California Polytechnic in San Luis Obispo, Calif. Among the highlights of his tenure there, is a successful program-wide transition from Division II to Division I, with the football team entering Division I-AA. While that experience could aid the UMass football team's possible future jump to I-A, McCutcheon is more focused on the present for the Minutemen.

"The focus is on I-AA football," he said. "Whether the climate defines itself in three years, or five years, I really can't say right now. But it's true, the interest is out there, and that's a positive thing. I think we need to embrace the fact that there are people out there that look at us, and feel we have that kind of potential and are willing to keep bringing that issue up.

"I'm not going to sweep that issue under the rug, but it needs to be done when our eyes are open and the time is appropriate."

Among McCutcheon's highest priorities is the hiring of a new football head coach, something he'd like to get done before he travels back to California to finalize his departure from Cal Poly.

All this points to better direction for the department, and although he wasn't ready to rule on the possibilities, McCutcheon did have some clear feelings about the proposal to make the athletic department a 501c3 non-profit organization, which would effectively make it a privatized offshoot of the university.

"The thing you have to remember about 501c3 is that it's just a tool," he said. "It doesn't dictate that you can get these types of monies, or you can't get those types of monies, it's really something that we will look at. If it makes sense for us, if it gives us an ability to clarify the budg- eting process, then it might be something that we would pursue. That might be two years from now, that might be three years from now, but it's really a tool that can facilitate our account.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com.

Red Sox bring back former No. 1 pick Burks

BOSTON – The Red Sox have agreed to a one-year deal with 39-year-old Ellis Burks, who played six seasons in Boston after being selected as the team's No. 1 draft pick in 1983.

Burks arrived in Boston on Tuesday for a physical, The Boston Globe reported.

Burks was an All-Star and Gold Glove outfielder with the Sox in 1990, three years after making his big-league debut. He left the team as a free agent after the 1992 season, when the Sox declined to re-sign him because of concerns about his back.

Burks subsequently played with the Chicago White Sox, Colorado Rockies, San Francisco Giants and Cleveland Indians. His season with Cleveland ended in June last year because of a nerve condition in his right elbow that required surgery. He became a free agent after the Indians declined to exercise a $5 million option for the 2004 season.

Burks' agent, Jim Turner, said Burks has completely recovered from surgery.

"He's hitting and has full flexibility," Turner said. "The elbow is not an issue in his mind."

Burks batted .301 with 32 home runs and 91 RBIs in 2002, his last full season. He's expected to compete for the right-handed designated hitter's spot and serve as the top right-handed pinch hitter.

-Associated Press

Pats conquered all in 2003

PATRIOTS from page 10

tackle Ted Washington became such an immovable force that he made everyone around him better. Requiring double teams on every down, Mt. Washington deserves credit for the career years of many, including Harrison, inside linebacker Tedy Bruschi, defensive lineman Richard Seymour and outside linebacker Mike Vrabel.

Tom Brady, who endured ups and downs in his sophomore season of 2002, came into his own. With no running game to speak of, Brady was called on to sling the pigskin all over the place, and sling it he did. Involving as many different receivers as he possibly could, Brady turned Charlie Weis' game-management offense into the next big thing in the NFL.

No longer did team's need to run the football to be successful, as long as they had a quarterback who was accurate, aware and made smart, split-second decisions. The Patriots were the envy of the league. Despite injuries to Brown and David Patten, Brady continued to have success. Thanks large in part to the emergence of David Givens as a bona-fide future Pro Bowl receiver and the consistency of Brown, who continued to catch everything thrown within an arms-length radius, Weis and Brady truly revolutionized the offense game as we know it.

Ty Law, who following his longtime friend and teammates release was targeted for the same fate following the 2003 season, emerged as the NFL's premier shutdown cornerback. His interception return for a touchdown on a badly sprained ankle against Steve McNair and the Titans on Oct. 5 reviewed this, and his three INT performance in the AFC Championship game confirmed it.

So how did it all come together? How did a team that began with such high expectations see everything crumble before they'd even played a meaningful game, and then rebuild it in such a rapid fashion that allowed them to win more consecutive games than any team in history save one?

To be quite honest, who cares?

It's obvious that Bill Belichick and his staff are second to none, and that Scott Pioli is as fine an executive as you'll find in sports. A large part of the credit certainly goes to them, as they were the ones who brought the players in and taught them how to play and succeed the Patriot way. But beyond that, does it really matter why the Lombardi Trophy again resides in Foxboro, as long as it does?

The Pats are World Champions because they were supposed to be. They were supposed to win 15 games in a row, they were supposed to survive all the extreme elements they faced, and Adam Vinatieri was supposed to win the Super Bowl with a 41-yard field goal for no other reason than the players, coaches and fans of New England earned it with a year's worth of blood, sweat and tears.

So when I wrote on September 5, 2003 that if the Patriots were to win the Super Bowl without Lawyer Milloy it just wouldn't be right, I was wrong. I woke up at 5:30 am on Tuesday morning to celebrate with 1.5 million other diehards, and seeing my team hold that trophy is a feeling that has gone unmatched in my life in this, my 20th year.

In retrospect, this team didn't just win without Lawyer Milloy, they won because they didn't have Lawyer Milloy. His dismissal reminded the players that football isn't about individuals; it's about team, and no one player will make or break a team that knows and believes in those words of wisdom.

So did it hurt to not glance up at those Duckboats and not see Lawyer's toothy grin soaking up the moment? Sure it did, he will always be a part of this franchise and a player many of us grew up idolizing. But players are merely part of a whole, and if you ask me, I like my new No. 37 jersey with the name Harrison across the back just fine.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com.

Pats are royal guests in Hawaii

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press

HONOLULU – Willie McGinest stood on the sideline at Aloha Stadium, sweating in the Hawaii sun and gulping air. He put one hand on his knees and raised the other to salute a small group of fans cheering, "Super Bowl! Super Bowl!"

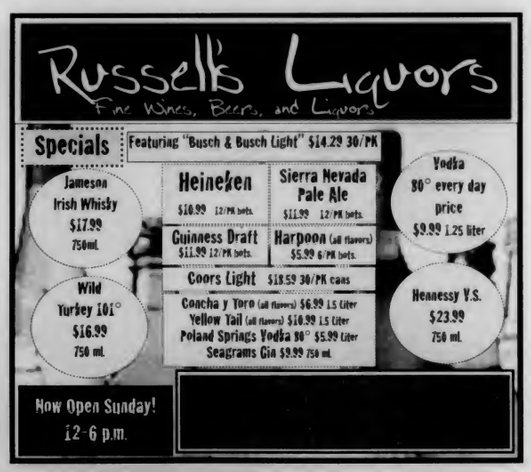
Three days after the New England Patriots won the NFL title, McGinest still hasn't caught his breath. After the celebrations in Houston and the parade in Boston, he joined defensive lineman Richard Seymour and cornerback Ty Law in Honolulu on Wednesday in workouts for the league's all-star game.

"It isn't even close to sinking in, because we haven't had a chance to think about it," said McGinest, a surprise selection to the AFC squad as an injury replacement for Baltimore linebacker Peter Boulware.

"Right now, everybody is still on a high. I'm sore and a little tired, but it feels good to be going here again. I haven't been here in, what, seven years? It was time to come back, and we're coming here in style now."

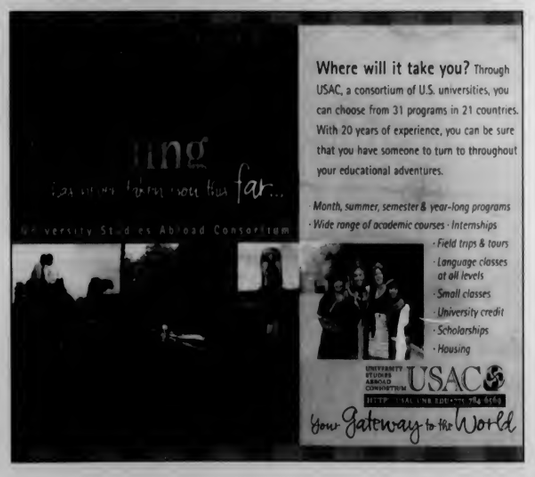
McGinest is making his first Pro Bowl appearance since 1997, while Seymour got his second straight trip to the laid-back anticlimax to the NFL season, now in its 25th year in Hawaii.

Seymour has big plans for a week of relaxation and recuperation, including a snorkeling expedition, beach time and plenty of good meals with friends and teammates.



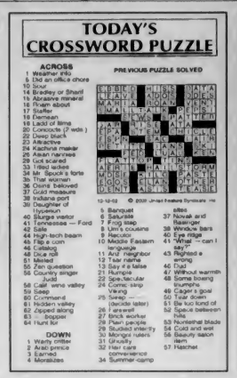
"We've always talked about how it's the best time when you can come over here with a Super Bowl ring," Seymour said.

"Everybody given you a lot of respect. They realize how hard it is to make it through the playoffs and win a Super Bowl, and I think they respect you for giving everything you have."



Law is making his fourth Pro Bowl appearance. His position as one of the NFL's elite cornerbacks is indisputable, and he appreciates the respect shown for New England's dominant defense by Pro Bowl voters who selected him as a starter along with Seymour.

But the three Patriots also wonder why more of their teammates aren't joining them in Hawaii. They have one of the smallest contingents for a Super Bowl winner in recent memory — and even Carolina sent four players to Honolulu.



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Weather info
5 Did an office chore
10 Tiff
14 Bradley or Sharif
15 Abrasive mineral
16 Poem about
17 Staffer
18 Damean
19 Last of films
20 Coincide (2 wds.)
21 Deep dish
22 Snacks
24 Kitchen master
25 Asian narcosis
29 Got scared
31 Wed ashes
34 Mr. Spock's forte
35 Thai women
36 Olivia beloved
37 Cold measure
38 Indiana port
39 Tiny bit
Dyckman
40 Slurpee visitor
41 Tennessee — Ford
42 Safe
44 High-tech beam
46 Flip a coin
48 Collect
50 Sound
51 Mideast
55 Zen question
56 Country singer Judd
58 Calif. wine valley
59 Soap
60 Command
61 Hidden valley
62 Zipped along
63 Lyric
64 Hunt for

DOWN
1 Wanly critter
2 Arab prince
3 Earned
4 Moralizes
5 Banquet
6 Sakartvelo
7 Frog sleep
8 Um's cousins
9 Recruit
10 Middle Eastern
11 Wolf whistle
12 Tear narrow
13 Say it's false
21 Pumpire
22 Spin-fender
24 Comic strip Wong
25 Sweep (decide later)
26 Fans wildly
27 Lens worker
28 Plan people
29 Studied intently
30 Mongrel rulers
31 Ghastly
32 Hair care convenience
34 Summer camp sites
37 Novak and Nakkinger
38 Window bars
40 Eye rings
41 "What — can I do?"
43 Pigment
45 Pigment e- ending
47 Dad
47 Without warmth
48 Some bowling triumphs
49 Cager's goal
50 Tear down
53 Be kind of
54 Space between bars
53 Nonverbal blade
54 Cold and wet
56 Beauty salon item
57 Hatchet

Comics are fun to read. Comics are fun to write. Write comics for The Collegian.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Dining Commons Menu

D/C contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- BBQ Chicken Quarters
- Baked Chicken Quarters
- Grilled Ham Steaks
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 34
- Low: 17

FRIDAY
- High: 33
- Low: 24

SATURDAY
- High: 29
- Low: 15

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan

COPY EDITOR
Erika Loules

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Axelsen, Meghan Heals

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will be asked to join a new society. Say "NO!!!"

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your exasperating personality exhausts others around you.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Fantabulous fortune will come your way.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Sex appeal isn't everything. Don't worry, you have other good features.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Imitate a bobble-head during your friend's wedding.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Forget lemon or strawberry; raspberry is the way to go.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Be blanketed with snow in the park or near the icy pond.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You have been replaced.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
People feel awful for spelling your name wrong.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Confidence is hot; have some.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You work those glasses like no one else can.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
We know. You HATE Hemingway.

Quote for the Day

"We gotta start with the spirit first, y'all. Mind power."

-A Tribe Called Quest

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

96 Accord 105K Runs great Reliable Less than book value $4500 256-1505

Auto for Sale

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Sporty! Nissan Pathfinder SE Utility 4door with 4 wheel drive 1995. $4500 1-413-687-7510

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power

Employment

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

Employment

Northampton Bicycle. Bicycle Sales, assembly, minor repairs. Twenty plus hours, or full-time now. Full-time summer. Experience strongly preferred. Gerry 586-3810 586-4125

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Employment

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

Furniture

Double Bed Set with frames. 2 years old, very comfortable! Call Jimmy @ 603-303-0167

Miscellaneous

Kiss your old phone goodbye! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk… to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Gossip til it hurts! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk… to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Miscellaneous

Cash Grants Never Repay $500.00 to $30,000 1888-397-0366

Talk your freakin' head off! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk… to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Talk til it feels good! voiceglo talk.talk.talk.talk.talk… to any phone in the world. www.voiceglo.com

Services

LEGAL PROBLEMS? Get free advice at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Spring Break 2004 It's here…book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

SPRING BREAK SOLUTIONS You pick the destination, we will get you there Group Discounts, Free Trips, we meet or beat any reliable competitors price! Free party package with every trip www.springbreaksolutions.com 1-877-2-THE-FUN

887 4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida $55 campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass names new AD

Cal Poly's McCutcheon signs five-year contract

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Following an extensive search that spanned nearly five months, University of Massachusetts Amherst Chancellor John V. Lombardi announced yesterday that John F. McCutcheon has been named the school's sixth permanent director of athletics.

McCutcheon, who was formally introduced at a 3:30 p.m. news conference in the Mullins Center Green Room, comes to Amherst from California Polytechnic State University in San Luis Obispo, where he was the director of athletics since 1992.

He will take over a UMass program that has been without a permanent A.D. since Ian McCaw abruptly departed to take the same position at Baylor University in September.

Associate Athletic Director for External Affairs Thorr Bjorn held the position on an interim basis during the search.

"UMass Amherst is delighted to welcome John McCutcheon as permanent director of athletics," Lombardi said. "He brings a solid record of accomplishment, strong managerial and fund-raising skills, and proven ability to steer our program toward greater success."

"John is also familiar with the New England sports environment and has all the talents necessary to meet the high expectations of our athletes and staff, students, faculty, fans, and alumni supporters."

Prior to his tenure at Cal Poly, McCutcheon spent 12 years at Boston College, beginning in 1980 when he was named athletic business manager, and culminating in 1991 when he was named associate athletic director for business and operations, before departing the post for his new position in San Luis Obispo in August of 1992.

Prior to his time at the Heights, McCutcheon was assistant athletic manager at the University of Maine, Orono for three years, beginning in 1977.

He succeeds Curry Starr Hicks (1911-1948), Warren P. McGuirk (1948-1971), Frank McInerney (1972-1992), Robert Marcum (1993-2002), and McCaw (2002-2003) in taking over the athletic department of the state's flagship university.

"I am extremely honored to have been given the opportunity to be the next athletic director at the University of Massachusetts," McCutcheon said. "It is my goal to provide the direction, enthusiasm and leadership to make UMass athletics a program in which our students, alumni and supporters can take great pride."

"I look forward to addressing whatever challenges we may face as we build on the tradition of the University of Massachusetts athletic program."

McCutcheon earned his Bachelor of Science degree in health, physical education and recreation from Indiana University of Pennsylvania in 1975. He then earned his master of education degree from Ohio University in 1978. He has been a member of the National Association of College Directors of Athletics since 1992, and was a 14-year member of the Collegiate Athletic Business Managers Association until 1992.

While at Cal Poly, McCutcheon oversaw the university's athletic department's ascension from Division II to Division I-AA, and also secured membership in the Big West Conference in order to make the move possible.

In addition, he coordinated an athletic facility master plan and began a $20 million capital campaign for improvements of such facilities, which has collected $18 million from private, corporate, state and student sources to date.

"We are delighted that Chancellor Lombardi has appointed John McCutcheon, who won enthusiastic support from the search committee, our coaches, and members of the athletic department staff," said Susan Pearson, associate provost for faculty relations and the budget and co-chair of the

See MCCUTCHEON on page 8

New UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon.

Program finds an identity

Andrew Merritt

At long last, there is finally a permanent face to the UMass Athletic Department. With yesterday's hiring of Athletic Director John McCutcheon, the department has finally regained some of the stability that went out the window when former AD Ian McCaw took off for greener pastures at Baylor University in Waco, Texas.

What McCutcheon's hiring has also brought is something that has been lacking in UMass Athletics for a while — a clearer future. After an ad hoc committee's findings that there wouldn't be sufficient funding for the football team's proposed promotion to Division I-A, as well as former gridiron coach Mark Whipple's decision to leave UMass to become the quarterbacks' coach with the Pittsburgh Steelers, not to mention a fairly bleak showing by UMass' revenue sports over the winter session,

See MERRITT on page 8

Pats were truly Super

Mike Marzelli

Let the sinking-in begin.

It's now been three whole days since the Patriots made all of New England fiercely proud with their second Super Bowl title in three years, and despite talks of dynasty, greatness and individual accomplishments, it's still nearly unfathomable to think that the Pats are not only again champions of the world, but are being considered the dominant franchise of the 21st century.

Nevertheless, they certainly are. The team most of us grew up rooting for religiously every Sunday has conquered the football universe. They have reversed a trend of losing that has festered itself in these parts to the point where no team other than the Silver and Blue have stood triumphantly on Tom Menino's front door since the Celtics celebrated the NBA Title at City Hall Plaza in 1986.

What makes it all the more unbelievable is how it began. Few remember that the Patriots had an undefeated preseason, and despite the fact that their most dominant player in those four games — free agent prize and linebacker extraordinaire Roosevelt Colvin —was hurt at Philadelphia in Week Two and never played again, that scary concept known as optimism was sweeping through the New England states like the August humidity.

Yet despite the NFL's only unblemished summer, things all seemed to blow up in Bill Belichick and Scott Pioli's face when they decided to cut team captain and fan favorite Lawyer Milloy prior to the start of the season.

Widely considered the heart and soul of the franchise, Milloy took his share of parting shots at his former bosses and the anger many people felt about one of their favorite sons being let go so unceremoniously were only magnified when Milloy contributed to a 31-0 trouncing at Buffalo.

I was one of those fans who took exception to letting Lawyer walk. I bought my first royal blue No. 36 jersey in the eighth grade, and I thought it made me that much cooler to frequently imitate the pulling of a truck horn that Milloy made so popular, so I made my feelings crystal clear that day, and in this very paper no less. I wrote that I thought it was a travesty to let one of the franchises greatest player leave like that, and that it just wouldn't be right to see anyone but Lawyer leading my favorite team. I thought Bill Belichick, the smartest man in football, had made a terrible mistake.

It was then, after that painful, embarrassing loss to the Bills, however, that the season truly began. The only setback after that would come at Washington in Week 4, and the team found its new identity behind its star quarterback, a stellar defense and the league's premier draft class.

Despite an injury epidemic the likes of which had never been seen before, the Pats bonded together without the leader many, including myself, thought they desperately needed, and became a runaway train unable to be stopped. There were no easy games, no blowouts, just wins. Wins every week.

Rodney Harrison, an off season acquisition from San Diego, had taken over for Milloy, and instantly became a fan favorite with his fearless play and constant, unbridled intensity. His hit-first, ask-questions-later-before-and-during style won his teammates over to the point where he was elected captain in Milloy's place, and at season's end he'd be named an All-Pro.

The run defense that was so painful to endure in 2003 became impenetrable, as 375-pound nose

See PATRIOTS on page 8

Football announces '04 recruiting class

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Despite being without a head football coach following the departure of Mark Whipple to become the quarterbacks' coach of the NFL's Pittsburgh Steelers, University of Massachusetts football announced its 2004 incoming recruiting class yesterday.

Nine student-athletes have signed National Letters of Intent to come to UMass for the 2004-05 academic year, while two others have enrolled at the University for the Spring 2004 semester and will be eligible to play in the '04-'05 season.

The 11 players included in this year's class are comprised of six offense and five defense. The Maroon and White has added two receivers, two offensive linemen, one tight end and one running back on the offensive side of the ball, while adding two linebackers, one defensive end, one defensive back and one defensive lineman.

Headlining the group will be tailback Bryan Smith, a 6-foot-2 190-pound native of Bayonne, N.J., where he ran for 1,687 yards and 26 touchdowns during his senior season at Bayonne High School.

Smith, whose identical twin Brandon is a freshman on the team, was heavily recruited by Division I programs such as Maryland, but reportedly chose UMass due to the urgings of his family to attend school and play football with his brother.

"Bryan is another outstanding running back from New Jersey, who we feel can make a major impact on our program," UMass running backs coach Mike Cassano said. "He is an outstanding athlete, like Marcel Shipp and R.J. Cobbs, but has more height and speed. Bryan is a very natural runner who sets up his blocks well with patience and outstanding vision."

"He is a home run hitter, who is a legitimate threat to score every time he touches the ball."

Absent from the list was Providence, RI quarterback Liam Coen, who verbally committed to UMass before reconsidering following Whipple's departure.

The La Salle Academy product, who was considering D-I schools Virginia and Penn State before deciding on Whipple and UMass, is reportedly still in limbo about his future plans.

The Minutemen are coming off of one of the most successful season's in program history, one which saw them go 10-3 overall and 8-1 in the Atlantic 10, good enough for a share of their first conference title since 1999. The 10 overall wins and eight conference wins both established school records, while the team's 9-1 start was its best in over 100 years.

With the Atlantic 10 having split into two divisions for the upcoming season due to the addition of Towson University, the Maroon and White's schedule will feature fellow North Division members Hofstra, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Northeastern and Rhode Island, as well as South foes Richmond, James Madison and Delaware.

In addition, non-conference opponents include national runner-up Colgate, as well as Delaware State.

Talks are also reportedly ongoing with Boston College about a potential early-October match up at the Heights.

UMass opens in 2004 campaign on Sept. 11, when it faces Colgate at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The Raiders, who advanced to the 2003 National Championship game before eventually falling to Delaware, knocked the Minutemen out of the playoffs with a 19-7 win in Hamilton, N.Y.

UMASS FOOTBALL

2004 INCOMING RECRUITING CLASS

Name	Yr.	Pos.	Ht.	Wt.	Hometown / Previous School
Wilner Alexis	Fr.	DE	6-3	245	Somerville, Mass. / Somerville H.S.
Sean Calicchio	Fr.	OL	6-5	300	Brooklyn, N.Y. / Xaverian H.S.
Victor Cruz	Fr.	WR	6-0	190	Paterson, N.J. / Paterson-Catholic H.S.
Darnel Delaire	Fr.	LB	6-2	210	Bloomfield, Conn. / Bloomfield H.S.
Jon Hambley	Fr.	DB	6-1	185	S. Hadley, Mass. / St. Thomas More
Brian Haynes	Fr.	WR	5-10	170	Peoria, Ariz. / Centennial H.S.
Chris Hopkins	Fr.	OT	6-3	260	Beltsville, Md. / Saint John's Prep
Ian Jorgensen	Fr.	TE	6-5	215	Wollaston, Mass. / Quincy H.S.
Desmond Lymon	Fr.	DL	6-2	290	West Haven, Conn. / West Haven
Cesar Rosario	Fr.	LB	6-2	220	Paterson, N.J. / Eastside H.S.
Bryan Smith	Fr.	RB	6-2	200	Bayonne, N.J. / Bayonne H.S.

Men's indoor track heads to Rhode Island

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

After a respectable finish last Friday at the Adidas Boston Indoor Games, the Massachusetts men's indoor track squad will be looking to up the ante this weekend in Kingston, R.I., where they will face off with eight other opponents in a preview of the Atlantic 10 Championships.

In Boston, the Minutemen placed eighth out of 16 teams with 37 points, just two points different from sixth and seventh-place finishers Williams and Colgate.

Coach Ken O'Brien was pleased with his team's performance. "We scored in nearly every event. [We] had a few events we didn't cover, but overall I'm pretty pleased with the effort."

Senior Kwesi Frimpong-Boatang was the sole event winner for the Minutemen, placing first in the 55-yd dash with a time of 6.38. "It's not his fastest time in that event, but he's not that far off from it in only his second outing of the year," O'Brien said.

Glenn Opie was also a key contributor in the finish, taking third in the high jump with a jump of 6'4". Dave McMenamy also picked up fourth in the 1000m with 2:32.30. "That is about a second slower than his best, but it's a great early-season time," O'Brien said.

Henry Smith picked up fifth in the triple jump with a jump of 45'5 ?" in the effort. The Minutemen also picked up two places in the 500m dash in James Godinho (sixth) and John O'Neil (eighth) with times of 1:05.91 and 1:06.21.

The road doesn't get any easier from here, as the Minutemen next travel to Kingston, R.I. this weekend, where they will be part of a field of nine competing at the University of Rhode Island in the URI Mega Meet.

Among the stiff competition will be defending A-10 champs Rhode Island, Brown, Bucknell, New Hampshire, Hartford, Quinnipiac, Central Connecticut, and New Haven.

"[URI] is the site of our Atlantic 10 Championship meet, so it gives the kids, especially those involved in technique events, a chance to go down and get used to the facility," O'Brien said. "With technique events, you want to have some familiarity with the facility, so it's good for us to go down and get a chance to see that."

The UNH Wildcats are coming off of a fourth place finish at the Adidas Games, led by performances from junior distance runner Tim Perry and freshman jumper David Ball. Perry placed second in the 5000m with 14:48.30, while Ball took a 6'8" jump to earn second in the high jump.

The Bucknell Bison are looking strong after some stellar individual performances at the Penn State Nation Invitational, in State College, PA, last Saturday. Senior Greg Costello won the 5000m event with 14:28.59.

After a successful performance at the Columbia-Princeton Invitational, the URI Rams will look to carry that momentum through this weekend's homestand. They will be led by senior captain Colin Aina, the defending A-10 champ in the 55m hurdles and long jump. A potential national qualifier for the 60m hurdles and the 110m high hurdles, Aina is coming off of a first-place finish at Columbia-Princeton in the 60m hurdles with 7.92.

Rising singer-songwriter Matt Nathanson to hit NoHo
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

The Massachusetts hockey team set to face stiff competitor UNH
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 77

Iraq fact-finders report on past trip

Iraqis want America out, private companies in, speakers say

By Keyana Brown
Collegian Staff

Approximately 40 people gathered to speak out against what they call labor injustices in Iraq and in the U.S. yesterday evening in the Campus Center.

David Bacon, labor journalist and Newspaper Guild member, and San Francisco longshoreman Clarence Thomas gave a detailed report and showed a slideshow of their international labor fact-finding mission in Iraq, which took place from Oct. 9th through the 14th.

Labor journalist and Newspaper Guild member David Bacon.

The seminar began with a detailed introduction from Mandy Burry of Amherst, who talked about what she perceives are injustices in Iraq.

Burns represented the United Auto Workers (UAW local 2322). Clarence Thomas was later introduced and explained his conception of a link between foreign policy and domestic agenda.

"The war abroad is a part of the war at home," he said.

Thomas then showed a nine-minute videotape, where he had filmed himself about his five-day experience with David Bacon in Iraq.

As he showed his video, Thomas identified what he considered to be evidence of little reconstruction in the country — children on the streets selling motor oil, enraged employees, unemployment, homelessness, begging and arrests.

The use of Baathist laws along with the Bush administration, Thomas said, suppresses the right for the employees to form legal unions and organize strikes.

All of the footage documented the conditions in factories, personal interviews, board meetings and the streets of Iraqi cities.

Many people expressed shock after hearing Thomas say that the average wage is $60 per month, with no overtime provisions. The unemployment rate is 70 percent, he said. Thomas considers the working conditions dangerous because the factory and construction employees are not provided with goggles, hard hats, work boots and gloves. Health benefits are also not offered.

"Most Iraqis did not talk about their religion, but rather about the poor working conditions and low wages," Thomas said.

According to Bacon, privatization of businesses is one of the many steps needed in order to improve and reform working conditions, benefits, treatment and wages. Initially, some workers would be laid off, he said, but he suggested that privatization would be beneficial in the long run.

Thomas and Bacon have been traveling for about 10 days speaking to different interest groups, unions and organizations about their experience in Iraq. They have been to Washington D.C., Baltimore, New York, Connecticut, Michigan, and Massachusetts.

Clarence Thomas reports yesterday little evidence of Iraqi reconstruction.

University students face increase in fees

$467 hike set for next year

By Ferron Saluiker
Collegian Staff

New fee increases will hit the University of Massachusetts students during the 2004-05 session, the Board of Trustees announced Wednesday.

University students are now facing a $26 increase in tuition and student fees, and a $441 increase in room and board per year, the board said.

The 7.7 percent increase in room and board charges will bring the typical housing bill to $6,189 and the full cost for an in-state resident to attend the university to about $15,200.

The 3 percent increase in tuition and fees will supplement the Pioneer Valley Transportation Authority and University Health Services expenses. The room and board increases provide additional funding for residence hall renovations as well as an improvement of services at the Dining Commons.

The 1.6 percent UMass system-wide increase, which was approved at the board's meeting in New Bedford, will raise $5.2 million, granting UMass Amherst a 3.2 percent total increase.

Since the 2000-01 school year, the cost of tuition and mandatory fees at UMass (not including room and board) has increased by more than $3,000.

Hannah S. Fatemi, student trustee, explained that due to the lack of fee increases in the 1990s, students fell victim to the University's budget cuts that began in 2000 and were forced to pay large fees to make up for lost funds.

"In the '90s the cost of education remained steady," Fatemi said. "When UMass began to experience budget cuts we had huge increases in student fees. We had to make up for years past."

Fatemi said that this year's fees were significantly less than recent years, and explained that the fees are necessary to provide the University with funds and are essential to planning the budget for future years.

According to The Republican, in a direct response to an $80 million cut from the state for the University this year, in August trustees raised student fees by an additional $750 beyond the $1,000 increase they approved in March.

According to a memo released by Fatemi, the Board of Trustees did also take into consideration the effects the increase will have on students.

"Financial aid will increase in proportion to the increases in fees," Fatemi said.

According to the Associated Press, students at the Dartmouth campus will pay an extra $372 for room and board for a total of $7,740 in overall costs.

Students at Lowell will pay $6,011 in overall costs, which is $287 more than they are paying now.

For tuition and student fees, Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell students will pay about $170 more.

Haitian opposition seizes city

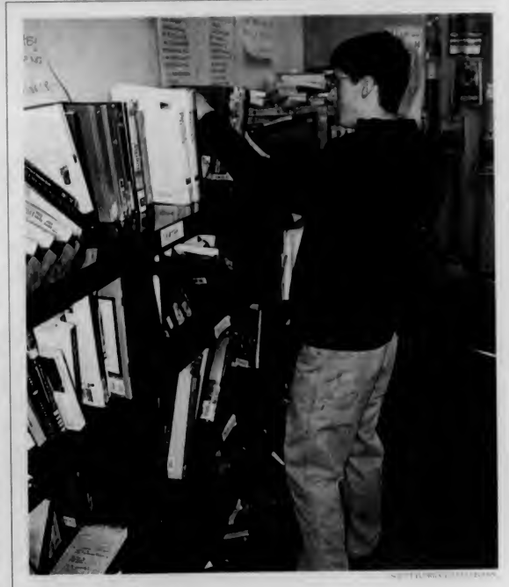
By Michael Norton
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — An armed opposition group seized control of Haiti's fourth-largest city Thursday, burning a police station, freeing prisoners and leaving at least four people reported dead and 20 wounded in clashes with police.

Members of the Gonaives Resistance Front began the assault shortly after noon in Gonaives, setting afire the mayor's home and then dousing the police station with fuel and lighting it while officers fled, Haitian radio reports said.

At least four opponents of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide were killed in gunbattles with police, Gonaives Resistance Front leader Wynter Etienne told Radio Vision 2000. Radio Metropole reported 20 people were wounded and more than 100 inmates were freed from the jail.

"Gonaives is liberated," Etienne told reporters in Gonaives. "Aristide has to go ... We've liberated the police station and freed the population" from Aristide's rule.



Members of the armed group were once allied with Aristide but turned on him last year after their leader, Amiot Metayer, was found murdered Sept. 22. Metayer had long supported Aristide, but many of his followers now accuse the government of involvement in the killing.

Aristide has denied involvement, saying only the opposition stood to gain.

Etienne said the group aims to take control of other towns. Officials in Gonaives couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

Members of the armed group set fire to both the home of Gonaives Mayor Stephan Moise and a gas station he owns, private Radio Kiskeya reported.

The group also set fire to a hotel where police often stay, according to one witness who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Masses for books

MassPirg volunteer Mike Sturgeon arranges the shelves for the "Books 4 Books" textbook program that runs through the end of the add/drop period. Students looking for books can check the MassPirg office in the Student Union and can also trade in textbooks for credit.

Tibetan prisoner slated to speak

By Mike Travis
Collegian Staff

A teenage nun, who became a symbol of Tibetan resistance, will speak about her life as a political prisoner tomorrow at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium.

To the Chinese government, she is a dangerous adversary. But, to the rest of the world she is a Tibetan nun who never gave up on a free Tibet. After years of intense international pressure, Ngawang Sangdrol was released in April 2003 to the United States on medical parole. At age 26, Sangdrol had already served 11 years of a 21-year sentence.

Sangdrol was only 13-years-old when she was first arrested for peaceful demonstrations for a free Tibet. She has received the harshest sentence ever of any female prisoner in Tibet to date.

Sangdrol was arrested in 1992 for staging a peaceful independence demonstration in Tibet's capitol of Lhasa. She was arrested and sentenced to three years in prison. However, over the next several years the Chinese authorities increased her sentence three times for her unwillingness to give up the fight for Tibetan independence, for a total of a 21-year-sentence.

While in prison, Sangdrol was forced to read and memorize Chinese propaganda, was beaten severely, tortured and suffered from massive headaches and kidney problems.

In 1994, Sangdrol and 13 other nuns recorded songs and poems about their love of Tibet while in Drapchi prison. The tape was smuggled out of the prison, and became popular as a symbol of Tibetan freedom.

Sangdrol's release came only after years of campaigning by Tibetan and human rights organizations, including the University of Massachusetts' Students for a Free Tibet.

"This is testimony that people around the world care about social justice .. she is a living example that with determination and willpower you can become an agent of change," said Thondup Tsering, an adviser to Students for a Free Tibet.

Tibet was invaded by China in 1949. The Dalai Lama, Tibet's spiritual leader, fled in 1959 and established the Tibetan Government-in-Exile in Dharamsala, India. Over 120,000 other Tibetans have since followed their leader to the area.

"We helped get petitions signed for Sangdrol's medical release, and for her to have been released and now come and speak to students here on campus, really shows how student effort can make a differ-

See TIBET on page 2

Scientists: Mad Cow Disease may be in donated blood

By Audrey Woods
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — British scientists studying how the human form of mad cow disease is transmitted say some people could be passing the illness through blood donations.

Although it has not been proven that the brain-wasting variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease can be transmitted through transfusion, the scientists did find a case in which a blood donor and the recipient died of it.

In that case, the donor gave blood more than three years before he developed symptoms, the scientists said in their report in Friday's Lancet medical journal.

The researchers, led by Professor Robert Will at the National CJD Surveillance Center in Edinburgh, wrote that "although the epidemic of vCJD presently seems to be in decline, a proportion of the U.K. population could be incubating vCJD and acting as blood donors."

The scientists based their study on records from United Kingdom blood services and the national CJD surveillance unit.

The report said 48 people had been identified as having received blood from 15 donors who later developed the variant disease.

By December 2003, all but 17 of the recipients had died but vCJD was the cause of death in only one case. The disease can only be confirmed during an autopsy by examining brain tissue.

"Our findings raise the possibility that this infection was transfusion transmitted," the report says, adding that infection also "could have been due to past dietary exposure" to BSE.

Scientists already believe people can get variant CJD from eating products from cows infected with a similar illness, bovine spongiform encephalopathy — BSE — or mad cow disease.

Statistical analysis indicated that the odds of the man not being infected by his blood transfusion were between one in 15,000 and one in 30,000.

In an accompanying independent commentary, Dr. Adriano Aguzzi and Dr. Markus Glatzel from the University Hospital of Zurich in Switzerland, said, "the chance that this case is not transfusion-related is very small."

"Shocking as it may be," they wrote, "the finding that vCJD can be transmitted via blood transfusion is not surprising. Stringent studies in sheep show that prion diseases" — such as CJD — "can be transmitted via blood, even if blood is collected in preclinical stages of prion disease."

Besides the transfusions, 20 units of plasma from people who

See MAD COW on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pibl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Saltsker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Logatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Por
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lisa Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORS Paige Crum
Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marinelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME KNOWN LATER AS THE COLLEGE SCIENCE NEWS IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1908, AND THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN RECOGNIZED SINCE 1890 AND 1904. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5 P.M.

Get your latest news on www.dailycollegian.com

voiceglo.
talk. talk. talk. talk. talk...
to any phone in the world
The Best Phone Bill Is No Phone Bill.
FREE phone service instantly
www.glominuteman.com

Tibetan prisoner will speak

TIBET from page 1

ence," said Tenzin Nyesang, president of Students for a Free Tibet.

"Sangdrol is just one of a thousand political prisoners being held by the Chinese government, the Tibetan people are still being ethnically marginalized in their own country," Tsering said. "It is still illegal to carry the Tibetan flag or even a picture of the Dalai Lama."

The one-hour event, sponsored by Students for a Free Tibet, will include Sangdrol's own account of the events of her life as a Tibetan political activist, as well as a question and answer session at the end.

Mad cow in blood

MAD COW from page 1

later developed variant CJD were used to make blood products before 1998, when Britain stopped using British blood, the Lancet report said.

The scientists said that before 1998, "many thousands of individuals may have been exposed" to blood products "derived from pools containing a donation from an individual incubating vCJD."

So far, they said, no case of variant CJD has been identified as connected to exposure to such plasma products. The risks from plasma products are probably less than from transfusion, they added.

All blood products for use in operations in Britain are now based on plasma imported from the United States, where there have been no cases of human mad cow disease blamed on American beef. The human form of mad cow disease so far has claimed 143 victims in Britain and 10 elsewhere.

Campus Perspectives

By Scott Eldridge II

How do you feel about the latest ruling on gay marriage?

senior
Biology major

"All people should have the right to love and marry whoever they want."
Casey Leavitt

senior
Hospitality and Tourism major

"I think people should be able to do what they want, choose what they want and live how they want."
Courtney Marzano

senior
Sports Management

"I believe no matter what your sexual orientation is, as long as you're happy that should be how it is."
David Ladner

senior
Theater major

"I am opposed to the ruling but I know I can't tell someone how to live their life."
Janeen Davis

freshman
Pre-sports Management major

"I agree with it. I believe that it is a personal decision on marriage rather than restricted by legislation or law."
Sean Tierney

freshman
Psychology major

"They should have equal rights, but they shouldn't have more rights than everyone else."
Shankar Smalal

Win an iPod mini!

Take the HSCN Survey!

HSCN

In order to make important programming decisions we need your input. If you want additional channels such as HBO or FX then this is your opportunity to be heard!

All participants are automaticlly entered to win several prizes. The Grand Prize is an iPod mini donated by mtvU!

To enter you must be a student living in on-campus housing.

FOR MORE INFORMATION VISIT:
www.housing.umass.edu/hscn

HSCN

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Abrupt and steep fee increases must stop

In a deplorable course of action, University of Massachusetts trustees voted Wednesday to increase the cost of room and board on three campuses and raise fees and tuition, including the Amherst campus.

The $442 rise in room and board charges at the Amherst campus will bring the housing bill to $6,189. The full cost of attending UMass-Amherst for an in-state resident will be about $15,200. The increase was approved at a trustees meeting in New Bedford.

The increase, which will go into effect next fall for all students who live on campus, came with little warning from University of Massachusetts trustees.

On Jan. 22, the UMass finance committee recommended an increase for state residents of less than $200, in line with the rate of inflation of 2 percent. The increase depended on how much money the University received in the state budget. The trustees obviously underestimated the amount they thought the University would receive.

In-state students who attend the flagship campus will pay $26 more for tuition and fees next year. However, the UMass trustees announced that hike last month.

The senior class this year has seen an endless string of student fee increases. Since the 2000-01 school year, fees on this campus have gone up by more than $3,000. Officials say the increases are necessary due to $100 million in state budget cuts.

But the University is partly to blame for soaring tuition costs. The increases that started a few years ago followed a half-dozen years when tuition and fees were frozen or reduced. Since then, the UMass trustees have not been able to stop the hemorrhaging.

It is important for the University to keep its tuition and other fees as low as possible. UMass trustees cannot forget that prices must stay close to that from competition from other state schools, such as the University of Connecticut and the University of New Hampshire (currently the numbers are fairly close). Failure to do so may result in students who decide against attending UMass.

As the largest public college in Massachusetts, the trustees have an obligation of keeping prices as low as possible. This University should be accessible to everyone who has a willingness to get a higher education.

We at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian urge the trustees to better communicate with the student body about tuition and fee increases. Although the state budget is oftentimes unpredictable until final figures are released, students deserve to know discussions are taking place. Even the news that a 2 percent increase was likely was relatively quiet.

We also urge the student body to stay abreast of any fee increases and to be vocal about hikes. Increases may be unavoidable, but communication from both sides is necessary so cash-strapped students can adequately plan for increases. By doing this, officials at the University will also avoid irate students who were not informed about changes on their bill.

Information from the Associated Press and the Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The new American past time

Adrienne Bossi

There is no other country in the world that loves apple pie and baseball as much as we do. I've discovered a new national past time. It's as much of an American tradition as the Super Bowl and the World Series.

What is it? Complaining.

We have an eternal passion for finding fault and being unhappy. Nothing is ever perfect, and we just love to point that out.

And we have at least 40 different ways we can point that out. In my single thesaurus there are roughly 40 synonyms for complaining, a complaint, and a person who complains.

Recently, I read an article from the Boston Globe citing America's national and international standings on a happiness scale. America, as many of the cynics may have guessed, is not among the top 10 happiest countries in the world.

The Globe got this information from an organization dedicated to studying global happiness trends. The "World Database of Happiness" can be found at www.eur.nl/fsw/research/happiness. The researchers have compiled thousands of surveys completed by 112 different nations covering up to 60 years of happiness trends in select nations. They have taken the results of these surveys and distributed the happiness ratings in time lines and comparison charts. The findings have been divided into various categories. Nations are ranked by their average happiness level, amount of happy life years and other criteria. These different categories are also illustrated throughout time making clear any changes and trends that have occurred.

People have answered the questions in these thousands of surveys with one being the least happy and 10 being the happiest. According to the "World Database of Happiness," Switzerland is the place to be with an average happiness level of 8.1. Denmark is a close second with an 8.0 average level. The remaining top ten countries include (in descending order) Costa Rica, Iceland, Luxemburg, Ghana, Canada, Ireland, Nicaragua, and Sweden. The U.S. is tied with El Salvador and Norway competing for the 13, 14 and 15 slots.

Information has also been compiled from the World Health Organization reports on international levels of mental health, suicide, alcoholism, life expectancy, etc. to explain part of the variance in happiness levels.

Obviously many questions of validity arise when comprising information of this sort. I'd rather not bore you with statistical jargon and talk of standard deviations and scatter plots. If you are really interested in these things, the website explains it thoroughly.

If you try to tell a peson in Ghana how revered Ralph Lauren is, they'll probably look at you blankly.

What I am more concerned about is the fact that, although not ranked overly poorly, it is still surprising to me where the U.S. stands. Countries we dub "Third World" have higher "happiness ratings" than we do. Ghana? Costa Rica? Nicaragua? It appears these "simple" countries with their "backward" ways are doing something right that we have yet to appreciate. The website claims one of its goals is to determine the livability of various countries. So, consequentially, these "Third World" nations ultimately appear to be more inhabitable than the U.S.

Perhaps Ghana's, Costa Rica's, and Nicaragua's "simpler" ways of life results from the void of the fast-paced, stress-filled lifestyle we are wrapped up in. So many people in these nations live in self-sustaining villages. They grow their own food and raise their own cattle. Community is integral, neighbors help neighbors and clothing is for comfort and practicality — not fashion and image. What are they really missing out on? If you try to tell a person in Ghana how revered Ralph Lauren is, they'll probably look at you blankly.

Yet, it would be easy to say that Americans aren't higher on the happiness scale because we have an undying greed for material gratification. It can't be blamed on our passion for modern day conveniences like grocery stores and shopping malls. We can't hold these differences accountable for the differences in our happiness scores because other nations ranked higher than us revere many of the same values — Canada, Ireland, Sweden, for example.

Why are we different? It's a question that I don't think can be fully answered. Life isn't so bad and if you look hard enough, it's actually pretty great. Maybe America just needs to relax before our new national past time really becomes a tradition amongst the ranks of baseball and apple pie. Let's hope the day never comes that our national emblem incorporates a new mascot — one that goes by the name of Oscar and lives in a trash can on Sesame Street.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian columnist.

Halftime show hides nothing

Jen Hodson

There's something that should be said about the priorities in American culture today. This has been lurking in the back of my mind for quite some time now, but I haven't been able to put my finger on it. It seems to me that a majority of America's youth has lost focus. Our attention is being directed toward things that hold little or no importance as opposed to things that should be looked at more respectively.

After watching the halftime show during the Super Bowl, it occurred to me that people all over the world had just fallen victim to another publicity stunt. The stunt was maybe aired for no more than half a second. Even so, it has become the most talked about and sought after topic in the days that followed.

The tasteless performance given by both Janet Jackson and Justin Timberlake, where Jackson's right breast was exposed on national television, was not only classless but disrespectful as well. Some 89 million viewers tuning in to watch a football game were given a whole lot more than they had bargained for.

We, as America's youth, need to focus on what's most important right now: education. We should be educating ourselves to a point where we are more familiar with current and world events than tabloid gossip.

My argument stands as it is. It is obvious that some of the things on TV is not what you would call "ideal" for most young adults, let alone children, but to bring something that is so painfully unnecessary into the spotlight like Jackson did is just plain selfish. To me, it was an obvious attempt to restore her reputation as a popular icon in today's entertainment industry. It brings light to the latest trend, which is any publicity is good publicity.

Which is exactly what Jackson managed to pull off. According to Reuters, online companies say that Janet Jackson's flashing incident has become the most searched image in Internet history.

It is in my opinion that when stunts like these are become more talked about than any of the presidential candidates for the 2004 election (or any other major news story for that matter), then you know there's cause for concern.

America's youth seems to pay the most attention to things that have no real relevance within our society. Recently, I even heard one student argue that the reason people cared more about Jackson's breast is because that sort of thing doesn't happen all the time whereas presidential elections happen every year.

But when you really consider the big picture and try and understand why the public is more responsive to news that involves Jackson as opposed to John Kerry, then the answer is quite simple. It's much easier for people to think about Jackson's breast as opposed to John Kerry's views on restoring jobs and rebuilding our economy in America. There's no real effort or thought to put into it.

Young people today don't always consider the impact that elections can hold over future outcomes. Sometimes politics is not taken as seriously as it should be.

Sadly, the Jackson example is no rarity. Other examples include the Britney and Madonna kiss, the Britney marriage, the Paris Hilton sex tape, and even the amount of press attention received by "Bennifer." Is the relationship on or off? Honestly, who cares?

We, as America's youth, need to focus on what's most important right now: education. We should be educating ourselves to a point where we are more familiar with current and world events than tabloid gossip.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.

Warm-hearted plea for summer

Leah Wyner

I'm cold.

It's not just when I'm outside either, because it's not just any old cold. It's a gnawing pain, a persistent chill that gradually filters through the scarf I spent a week knitting, the pea coat I opted for instead of the North Face jacket I should have gotten, a cross-country hoodie, and at least three long sleeved shirts. Eventually it seeps into my bones and stays, a shiver that continues long after I've gone inside and built an elaborate cocoon of down quilts.

I miss summer so much it hurts.

It usually hits me when I'm running up an icy hill wearing two pairs of spandex and four long-sleeved shirts. It creeps up on you as the days sneakily grow shorter, and at first it's exciting to break out the spandex and slice through the crisp early winter air. But after months of trying to ignore the awful burning sensation in my throat and chest that comes from running in the cold, my mind starts to wander.

The suffocating cold air suddenly becomes extremely hot, and the layers of clothing turn into a tank top and shorts. In a flash I'm running through air so thick I can almost cut it, under a sun beating down so fiercely that I can feel the sports bra tan forming, and the only thing on my mind is the instant feeling I'll get when I swing off the rope and crash into the freezing water at the quarry that's still 2.25 miles away. Then reality strikes and I'm back in the cold, and I want to cry, but I don't, to avoid the tears turning into icicles on my cheeks.

But what is summer exactly? Summer to me is a state of mind, an all-encompassing cloud of heat, salt and sand. It's the beach; the way the sand feels between my toes, and the way the seaweed slips through my fingers. I miss being banned from the house by my mother after a day at the beach until I've hosed all the sand off myself, never getting rid of it all, and never really minding.

Summer is the ocean, from that first eagerly anticipated dive into the icy coldness in late April, to the last nostalgic swim in the cool September water. It's hair sticky with saltwater, grainy with sand, and bleached from the sun. And though I don't like to admit it, summer is the unflattering red lifeguard bathing suit, and the funky tan lines I get on my face from squinting on stand.

Regardless of how much space I'm wasting, every tank top, bikini and pair of sandals stays out 365 days a year. I even have those skirt hangers that allow you to hang six skirts.

Winter, for me, is a time of denial. I absolutely refuse to put away my summer clothes, because to me, that would symbolize defeat, giving in to the cold. So, regardless of how much valuable space I'm wasting, every tank top, bikini and pair of sandals stays out 365 days a year. I even have those skirt hangers that allow you to hang six skirts, and you know exactly what skirts I'm referring to: the teeny denim ones from Abercrombie and Fitch that are eight inches long, frayed at the end, nearly falling apart, but on sale for $40. I miss asking my dad what he thinks of my skirt and being told, "It's very nice Leah, but where's the other half of it?" I figure the only way to survive winter is to never completely let go of summer. Even in the middle of December I cling to the halter tops that give the illusion of cleavage, daydreaming about weather warm enough to warrant the showcasing of cleavage, real or not.

So then why do I miss summer so much? It's difficult to say, because the most important thing about summer isn't anything specific at all. It's everything. It's impulsively pulling over to dance in a field in the middle of the night, always carrying a bathing suit in your bag just in case, and wasting gas driving around listening to AC/DC's "TNT" with the sunroof opened. Summer in its essence is how it affects everyday activities, the new exciting energy it brings to common occurrences.

Granted you can listen to Bruce Springsteen year-round, but there's something about blasting "Thunder Road" with the windows rolled down that makes the song come alive in a way that isn't possible in January. Summer fills the hours with an intensity that only endless days of heat can achieve.

But the most important indicator that summer is on the way is the sound flip flops make in the hallway, music my ears are eagerly waiting to hear. And as soon as I can do so without getting frostbite, I guarantee you I will break out one of my nine pairs, and trust me, I'm always the first person to wear them. In fact, you probably already know me as that girl everyone points at for wearing sandals during the slightly warm day in February, the one who lies out in the sun the first time it's warmer than 50 degrees, and the weirdo that carries the smell of salt and sunscreen everywhere she goes.

Well, it's nice to meet you.

Leah Wyner is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

DRIVERS CAUSIONED TO OBEY RULES OF THE ROAD IN HADLEY

Hadley has the highest accident rate per capita in the state of Massachusetts. The majority of these accidents happen on Route 9, which passes right through the center of town. The Town Hall, the Goodwin Library, the Senior Center, the Farm Museum, Hopkins Academy (Hadley's public high school), and the Pioneer Valley Performing Arts School are all located in this area.

Some drivers routinely speed up and drive aggressively on Route 9 as they commute to and from the University each day. They rush past both high schools, jockeying for position as they focus on the upcoming lane merge. They are heading toward school or work, and they forget that they are driving through the center of a small town.

The Hopkins Academy School Advisory Council, in conjunction with the Hadley Triad/Seniors and Law Enforcement Together Council, asks all drivers to please watch for the flashing yellow light that indicates where the school zone begins. Please slow down and pay attention to speed limit signs as you approach Hadley Center. We don't want to see any more pedestrians injured or killed on Route 9. Local and state police will be out in force, ticketing speeders and unsafe drivers.

There have already been far too many accidents at the intersection of Russell Street (Route 9) and Middle Street (Route 47). Our students use the crosswalk in that location all day long. Please use caution and slow down as you approach and cross this dangerous intersection.

While many people view Route 9 as a highway that connects point A to point B, for Hadley residents, young and old, it's also a road that runs right through the center of our hometown. We're working to keep our community safe, and hope that you will too, by driving safely and courteously as you pass through Hadley on Route 9.

Andrea M. Goguen
Hopkins Academy School Council and Hadley Triad/SALT Council

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Reggae Invades UMass

By Stephanie Fogut
Collegian Correspondent

Reggae music's answer to Outkast, T.O.K. are ready to veer reggae in an entirely different direction. T.O.K., along with Mr Vegas and Tanto Metro and Devonte, will be performing tomorrow night at University Productions and Black Mass Communication project's "Reggae Fest and West Indian Bash" in the Student Union Ballroom.

Over the past five years, reggae music has evolved and expanded in mainstream music dramatically. The ever-increasing popularity of reggae has helped the genre become a cornerstone of popular music but still the sound has seen its share of highs and lows. Reggae's own version of Vanilla Ice, Shaggy brought the sound to one of its all time lows with his infectious, bubble gum, teen pop reggae. The savior from the horrendous musical prostitution that Shaggy pimped — the Jay Z of reggae — Sean Paul showed the world how people in Jamaica and West Indies really got down. Sean Paul's presence set off a reggae explosion which gave underground artists and groups, such as T.O.K., a chance for a piece of the pie.

Reggae Fest and West Indian Bash
Tomorrow
Student Union Ballroom
Amherst
$18 - $20

T.O.K. — which stands for Touch of Klass — blew up out of obscurity with their smash hit and 2001's West Indian Carnival Anthem, "Chi Chi Man." The group has continued to impress the reggae world ever since. With their unique harmonies, hard-hitting deejaying — reggae rapping — and catchy "riddims," Xavier "Flexx" Davidson, Craig "Craigy T" Thompson, Alistaire "Alex" Mc Calla and Roshaun "Bay-C" Clarke have set the bar for reggae groups coming up.

The quartet met while they were in high school in Jamaica.

"Xavier and I loved singing and were good friends," Alex said in a press release from T.O.K's label VP Records. "I went to school with Craig and Roshaun, so we brought them in [the group]."

With the massive popularity of Boyz II Men in the early '90s, T.O.K. quickly found an influence in the vocal group. As they started singing their own material, T.O.K looked to Boyz and began to emulate their sound and harmonies. Soon after the group began merging smooth R&B and hip-hop sounds with the Jamaican hardcore, booty-shaking sounds of dancehall music, they created a whole new odyssey into reggae music.

T.O.K. began performing at high school parties, but as their reputation grew, so did the caliber of gigs they got. Performing at Jamaica's famed North Coast Hotel, their unique sound raised more than a few eyebrows.

"Actually we weren't fully accepted in the hotel circuit," said Roshaun. "We weren't the norm. The other groups sang straight, but we always tried to do something different. We'd do a Bob Marley

See REGGAE on page 5

Avalanche does a 180

Press Start to Play
Reid Davenport

After years of other extreme games coming onto the market, Nintendo has finally remade the groundbreaking snowboarding game "1080°" for the Gamecube. The original was revolutionary thanks to the game's ability to go through analog motions and the 3D environment. Since then, gamers have dived into other "board" games such as the "Tony Hawk's Pro Skateboarding" franchise and "SSX Snowboarding." However, "1080° Avalanche" does not deliver the same hype as the N64 original did.

Don't go expecting a Nintendo-ized version of SSX or Microsoft's "Amped 2." "1080°" is more speed and race based than pulling off physically impossible tricks. The game is very fast, but apparently too fast for the Gamecube to handle. The screen becomes very glitchy at times due to the fast frame rate. It becomes very irritating when you are trying to beat a computer opponent.

'1080° Avalanche'
Gamecube
Publisher Nintendo
Developer Nintendo
Rated E
Grade C

Despite the jumpy graphics, the overall look to the game is very smooth. A split screen game with three friends can lead to fast pace racing that will last for a while. "1080°" manages to wear down a while after because it feels like the same race over and over. Multiplayer modes are decent at best and the "race the avalanche" mode is a nice touch. But it will get old — quickly.

What "1080°" lacks is what makes players buy games like "SSX 3" and "Amped 2" — long-term value. Most players are likely to get their hands on this game because they have been waiting for it to come out since 1998 when the original "1080°" was released. It can keep you busy for about a week; players have to work to unlock the secret boards and slopes. After that, you will need to invite your buddies over to play, but it still loses its value after two weeks or more of game play.

But "1080°" isn't all bad. In fact, some gamers may enjoy the game's easy-to-learn

See AVALANCHE on page 5

Matt Nathanson to rock Iron Horse

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff

Small venues seem to suit Matt Nathanson. The Massachusetts-born, California-bred musician, who played Providence's The Call last week, has the uncanny ability to connect with his audience. He feeds off congenial interactions with the crowd; a true entertainer, Nathanson appears to pride himself on creating a connection with each person standing in the audience. Sunday will bring Nathanson to Northampton and Nathanson himself will bring his unparalleled musical aptitude and oversized stage presence to the quaint stage of Iron Horse Music Hall.

Though Nathanson isn't exactly reinventing the wheel — the angst ridden-guy-with-guitar has been done a million times before — there is a unique energy to the musician. Long hailed by his contemporaries as one of the most talented performers in modern music, Nathanson has somehow managed to remain under the radar.

With the overwhelming success of John Mayer and the like, it was predicted by many that Nathanson would soon inherit the guitar-pop throne. Yet, a musical genius in his own right, a record deal with a big name studio was inevitable for Matt; constant touring and solid songwriting were bound to attract the attention of the higher-ups eventually.

Although his first major label debut, "Beneath These Fireworks," hit shelves in October, the album is increasingly picking up momentum. The name Nathanson, which once seemed to be limited to the lips of a close-knit group of dedicated fans, has been creating a buzz on the mainstream scene in recent months.

Acoustic rocker Matt Nathanson will play the Iron Horse Sunday at 7p.m.

With his premier on Universal Records, Nathanson has maintained his artistic integrity and polished his acoustic-pop sound. "Fireworks" has all the power and class of Matt's previous release with an added maturity in the lyrics and melodies.

Tracks like "Curve of the Earth" and "Suspended" are true to form for Nathanson — catchy guitar work and beautifully cynical lyrics accented by clever musical compositions. When Nathanson performed "Suspended" live in Providence he brought a humorous outlook to his impending fame with the song.

"When I get big and play up in Foxborough I have huge plans for this song. Since it's called 'Suspended' I'd like to be suspended above the stage and lowered down — with smoke machines and lights, it'd be in true arena-rock fashion." The song however doesn't have the generic cheesiness of arena rock plaguing it. A foray into the world of songs inspired not by anger or sadness but rather an unquenchable feeling of happiness, Nathanson described it as "the feeling you get when you're so used to having things blow up in your face and looking at it all in a cynical way, but you see that you may actually enjoy feeling happy."

Matt Nathanson
Sun. Feb. 8
Iron Horse
Northampton
$10, $13

"Fireworks" also features two tracks that have appeared on previous Nathanson albums, "Little Victories" and "Lucky Boy." Set list standards, the tracks seem to have evolved and grown up since their original inceptions. The choice of these particular tracks seems fitting for the confirmed indie-acoustic rocker's venture into the big leagues. "Little Victories" seems to take on an added meaning on "Fireworks."

"If the world decides to catch up with me, it's just a little victory," Nathanson declares on the track. He seems unconcerned with the looming notoriety that is waiting in the horizon and wants more than anything to have those around him understand who he is and what he's really about.

In addition to the new tracks off "Fireworks," Nathanson has built an arsenal of songs in his years as a performer. Fan favorites like "Church Clothes" and "Answering Machine" made appearances at Providence's show and will, if Northampton is lucky, be played this Sunday.

His onstage antics are also staples of the Nathanson experience. Sing-alongs, extended monologues and impressions of '80's metal band Winger's frontman Kip Wingerm, make the show something more than what the average listener will find on the musician's albums.

Opening for Nathanson will be Toby Lightman, a rising acoustic guitar player who has accompanied Nathanson for the majority of this current tour. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door. The show starts at 7 p.m.

OK Go dazzles the Middle East

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — Chicago alterna-pop rockers OK Go came through Massachusetts Tuesday night to play a show at The Middle East in Cambridge as part of their brief winter tour. The band, whose 2002 single "Get Over It" was fairly hard to avoid, is taking a break from work on a new album to hit the road and preview upcoming tracks for their fans, as well as treating them to old favorites.

OK Go
Middle East
Cambridge
Feb. 3

The band took the stage bounding with energy and immediately bounced into the palm mute and harmonic heavy "Don't Ask Me" from the bands self-titled 2002 debut. Their lively rendition of the song helped get the crowd as animated as the band seemed to be.

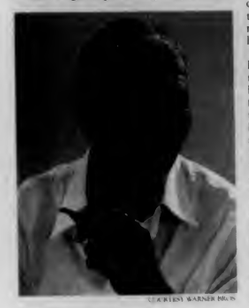
A few songs into the set, frontman Damian Kulash announced the band was going to play a new song, from their sophomore effort. Kulash said he expects the record to be out this summer, much to the crowd's delight. This first new song, the title announced, had more of an '80s feel than the band. The band later played a few other new songs, including one titled "Oh No" which, it would have to be assumed, was the "falsetto soul song" that Kulash described to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian in an interview last week. The song nearly played like something you would slow dance to in middle school but, with the OK Go touch — a mix of pop catchiness and fun and indie-rock sensibilities, along with a lyrical convergence of wit and earnestness. The song was definitely one of the highlights of the night. Mid-way through the set the band busted out "Get Over It" and led the eager crowd in clapping along to the beat. The band plowed through another batch of songs, including a cover of '80s band Toto's hit "Hold The Line," unreleased live favorite "The Unrequited Orchestra Of Locomotion," — probably as close as OK Go will venture into rap/rock territory — and a furiously paced new song, "Disaster."

The band was in a lighthearted mood, fitting for the music, which could be seen as Kulash laughed so hard at the beginning of "The Fix Is In", a song which starts with the line, "When we got to Boston/ We knew we'd missed a turn," that he let the rabid crowd sing the lyric for him.

When the band returned for an encore after the nearly-hour long set, Kulash explained he and the rest of OK Go were not fans of the concept of an encore. He than stated that the musical portion of the show was over and the entertainment segment was about to begin. And with that the four members of the band, Kulash, Nordwind, Andy Duncan and Dan Konopka, performed a choreographed, and outrageously funny dance to Nordwind's song "C-C-C-Cinnamon Lips," playing over the loud speaker. In case anyone still had any doubts, this certainly made

See OK GO on page 5

Freeman's new flick has no 'Bounce'



By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"The Big Bounce" is set on the sandy beaches of Oahu and, like the music on the island it inhabits, it bops along on its own lazy rhythms. It's a heist movie in which the heist is of little importance to the plot; heck, the plot is of little importance to the plot. Everything about the movie — the story, the characters, even the actors — takes its cues from the tropical lilt of the Hawaiian paradise. Forget about relaxing at the movies — the movie itself is positively relaxed.

It's also incredibly slight. As entertaining as it often is, "The Big Bounce" dissipates from memory as it goes along. A good 20 minutes were reportedly trimmed from the final cut prior to release and the result feels like a movie without weight. It glides along easily, it's often funny and quirky and enjoyable, but the movie itself seems like an afterthought.

Sara Foster and Owen Wilson star in this remake of the 1964 classic by the same name.

Even Morgan Freeman can't save this film from its lack of plot.

This despite a cast that includes Owen Wilson, Morgan Freeman, Gary Sinise, Charlie Sheen, Bebe Neuworth and Willie Nelson and a director like George Armitage, who knows a thing or two about this kind of material after having directed "Grosse Pointe Blank."

'The Big Bounce'
Directed by George Armitage
Starring Owen Wilson Morgan Freeman
Warner Bros
Rated PG 13
84 mins
Grade B-

The movie, the second adaptation of Elmore Leonard's very first foray into crime fiction, casts Wilson as Jack Ryan, a layabout and petty thief who's fired from a construction job for nailing the imposing, racist foreman in the head with a baseball bat. The construction business also happened to be receiving its funding from a shady wheeler-dealer (Sinise, who's role amounts to little more than a cameo) with a criminally inclined mistress (model-turned-actress Sara Foster.) Said mistress uses her charms to enlist laidback Jack into a scheme to separate Sinise from $200,000 of mob pay-off money.

What happens in the heist? We're never quite sure. Like Jack, the movie is sometimes too nonchalant for its own good. Why should we care what happens, when the movie obviously doesn't? What's at stake? There are twists and turns and double-crosses, but they land with all the impact of a wiffle ball.

But the enjoyment isn't really to be found in the piffle that "The Big Bounce" calls a plot. It's in savoring the nuances of the dialogue, to revel in the atmosphere of sunny criminal mischief. Like "Get Shorty" and "Out of Sight," the movie presents criminality in the breeziest, most blithe manner possible.

Wilson has a lock on his stoner act, but Foster lacks the vivacity and viciousness to make a compelling femme fatale. She looks great in her bikini, but she's little more than eye candy. The rest of the cast just seems happy about the extended Hawaiian vacation.

There are plenty of laughs to be had in "The Big Bounce" and the movie is engaging enough. But when it does bounce, it bounces right off into the air.

OK Go goes all out

OK GO from page 4

it clear that the band doesn't take itself too seriously.

It is in this way that the band demonstrates how they aim so close to pop music (i.e. The Cars) but at the same time are kids that grew up as punk fans and like to play loud, guitar-oriented rock. By both celebrating and mocking pop music OK Go has defined themselves as a very distinct amalgam. Kulash is very aware of the inherent problems in playing so close to the pop radar and is constantly thinking about his bands situation in the music world. In an interview with the Collegian last week Kulash commented on the matter.

"We precariously tread in places where a lot of people have tread before," Kulash explained. "We're doing pop music. The Cars were a great pop band; in my opinion the Goo Goo Dolls are not a great pop band."

"There's people who do it well and people who do it badly," he went on. "The closer to the center you get, the harder it is to hit it right. Like, The Beatles — unfing believable. But if you pull 5 percent of the Beatles-ness out of The Beatles they would be terrible, probably. Whereas ... pull 5 percent of Atari Teenage Riot out and they still sound like Atari Teenage Riot. We're kind of aiming at something that's accessible and emotional and fun and it's not limited."

Chicago-based alternative rock band OK Go showed Cambridge why they are quickly becoming a household name.

Reggae Fest brings top names to UMass

REGGAE from page 4

song or an Ini Kamoze song like 'Hot Stepper.'"

Their distinctiveness paid off when their new sound caught the attention of music executives. With the backing of a label, T.O.K. released "Shake Yuh Bam Bam," a song glorifying women's posterior. Hitting the airwaves in 2001 the song coasted into the top 10. But it wasn't until the powerhouse known as "Chi Chi Man" was released that T.O.K. was firmly placed on the map of reggae and dancehall music forever.

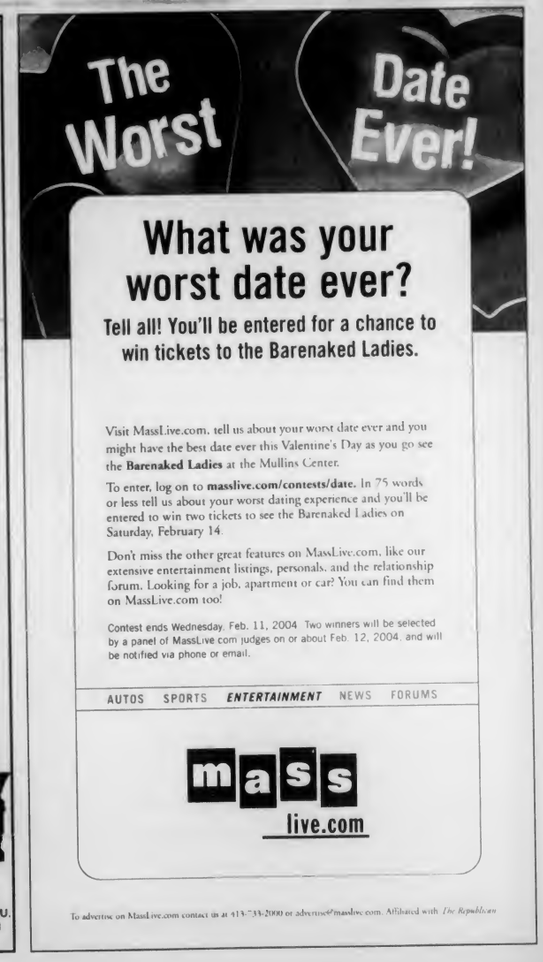
When T.O.K. hits Amherst tomorrow night they will not be alone. Co- headliner Mr. Vegas will also take the stage at the Reggae Fest and West Indian Bash event.

Mr. Vegas, better known as Clifford Smith, broke records on the charts internationally with his monster hit "Heads High." The single landed in the Top 20 in the UK Pop Charts as well as the Top 75 in the Billboard R&B Charts. Mr. Vegas's debut album sold 50,000 albums in the United States with only one single at the time to his mainstream claim to fame. Mr. Vegas, like T.O.K. has made noise on the reggae/dancehall circuit.

Also playing the Student Union Ballroom, Tanto Metro and Devonte who catapulted into worldwide popularity with the hit "Everyone Falls in Love." With tracks such as "Teaser," "The Beat," "Fling It Up," "Suzie" and "Hot Gal Serious" Tanto and Devonte have made a name for themselves in dancehall music. Currently they are blowin' things up again with their number one hit "Give it To Her" and are equally read with Mr. Vegas and T.O.K. to blow it up at Amherst.

Reggae Fest was a work, in itself, to make happen. Having such high-profile reggae artists perform usually would run high but thanks to the amazing connections of Sam Wilson, UMass was able to get T.O.K and Tanto Metro and Devonte for half of what they usually charge. Incredulously Mr. Vegas even consented to join the bill for a staggering fifth of what he usually charges. Attendees will definitely get their money's worth — and then some. In addition to the high-profile reggae artists, Hot 97.7's own Clinton Sparks will blaze up Reggae Fest as well as Hot 93.7s Trevor the "Engineer" mixin' up the West Indian Bash afterward.

'1080°' face plants



AVALANCHE from page 4

trick system. The trick system works on the idea of negative reinforcement by which it can make or break your run if you blow a trick. Eventually it becomes easy to plant some nice looking tricks to boost your meter, go faster and win the race. It is also, as previously noted, a very smooth looking game that plays differently from others in its genre. There is an added touch of realism on "1080°," as the snow can, in areas, cause you to slow down if it happens to be too built up.

Overall "1080°" Avalanche" was very disappointing compared to the other snowboarding games on the market. The replay value barely lasts over a week and the graphics are not enough to suck you into the game. Even with a few indie-rock bands to back up the music selection and a trick system that almost any gamer can master, "1080°" still gets a C- for a lack of effort. If you're looking to still give it a whirl, it's available at your local video game retailer for around $49.99.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

Baker on rebound

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

OLD SAYBROOK, Conn. (AP) — The message was painted on the wall of Vin Baker's high school weight room: DON'T MIX DREAMS WITH REALITY AND NEVER LOSE YOUR DREAMS. V. L. B.

Vincent Lamont Baker realized his dream of playing in the NBA. But somewhere between the dimly lit gym at Old Saybrook High School and the bright lights of the FleetCenter in Boston, reality came crashing down on him.

The respectful, emotional boy who grew up in an affluent shoreline suburb became an alcoholic.

"We can stand here and say, 'Why can't he kick it?' Well, it's a disease and it's a bad thing," said Pat Burke, who coached Baker as a high school freshman in this community about 30 miles east of New Haven. "But he's going to bounce back. There's no doubt in my mind. No doubt."

On Jan. 23, Baker was suspended indefinitely by the Boston Celtics for failing to comply with his aftercare program. It was his third suspension. If it stretches 10 games, until Feb. 12 at Chicago, the team could take steps to get out of a contract that would pay him about $35 million from now through the 2005-06 season.

More than likely, the NBA players union would file a grievance if the team did that. Only the doctor overseeing his care, approved by both the team and Baker, can determine if he's ready to return. The team supports Baker and is awaiting word from the doctor, Celtics owner Wyc Grousbeck said through a spokesman.

Baker's agent, Aaron Goodwin, declined to comment about his client's situation or his whereabouts these days.

Baker's problems shocked those who know the smiling, considerate son of a Baptist minister who lived with his parents at their home during offseasons. They were strict and supportive.

"I've been in college athletics 30 years and he is just the best person," said Pat Meiser-McKnett, the athletic director at the University of Hartford where Baker starred. "He's not a monster."

"Vinny was terrific. He was a pleasure to have around," said Mike Dunleavy, his first pro coach with the Milwaukee Bucks who took him with the eighth pick of the 1993 draft.

"I don't know what went wrong," said Nate McMillan, who coached Baker for two seasons in Seattle. "I thought once he got to Boston, he would play much better basketball."

But the four-time All-Star struggled after being traded on Aug. 22, 2002, to a team that played close enough for family and friends to attend games. Instead of cheers, he heard jeers from the home crowd as he averaged 5.2 points and 18.1 minutes and when he fumbled a ball under the basket or stumbled awkwardly fighting for position. The 6-foot-11 power forward was overweight and overmatched.

Now, at 32, he may not fit the mold for the team's rebuilding program.

"That was probably one of his dreams — to be a Boston Celtic. I'm sure there was tons of pressure on him," Burke said. "He's just a very sensitive kid."

Baker was first suspended Feb. 27, 2003, and didn't play again last season. He received treatment for alcoholism at a rehab facility in New Canaan, Conn. He got into much better physical shape and started strongly this season, scoring in double figures in 21 of his first 35 games.

"He worked so hard to get it back to where it was," Burke said. "So all this just blew our mind."

DERALD FUNG/COLLEGIAN

Young blood

Freshman shooting guard Artie Bowers has averaged 18 points over the last two games. Bowers and the Minutemen are on a four game winning-streak. Their streak is in jeopardy this Sunday when they take on the Dayton Flyers at the Mullins Center at 2 p.m.

LeBron and Carmelo snubbed by coaches doing too much else. McGrady scored nearly 30 points a night in the beginning of the season, but the hapless Magic went for a franchise-worst 19-game losing streak at the beginning season and are still 16 games out of first.

ALLSTAR from page 8

On the other hand, we as fans need our dunks and we need our scoring. What we don't need is a player being played out of position simply because of votes.

This is the case for Jermaine O'Neal, who is listed as a forward/center, but due to fan voting is the starting power forward for the Eastern Conference. I have no quips with Ben Wallace at center and O'Neal at power forward, but by listing O'Neal as strictly a power forward there is the center quota that needs to be filled.

With this, New Orleans center Jamaal Magloire was given one of the final spots on the bench for the Eastern all-stars. Now if O'Neal had been listed as the second center on the team, this would have opened the window to put LeBron on the team.

Don't get me wrong, Magloire is as good as you're going to get for a center in the East, but that's not what the fans are paying for.

The real sports fans want to see "the next one" perform on sports' main stage, against basketball's greatest athletes. If Magloire gets a few rebounds and 10 points, you better believe he won't be making any headlines.

So now LeBron, Dr. "Did you just see that?" will be stuck playing in the rookie game, against peers that aspire to his level of play. He and Carmelo will no doubt bring an all-new energy to the usually boring rookie game.

When the two face off on All-Star weekend, sure it will be overshadowed by the "real" All-Stars that will be facing off later, but I can guarantee that the budding rivalry between King James and 'Melo will be noticed.

But this is why there is always next year in sports, so wrongs can be righted and great players can prove their worthiness to the throne. Needless to say, both of these men won't miss the first All-Star game that they were so wrongly snubbed from, because they will be back for many more.

They may not be All-Stars now, but the NBA is their league, eventually someone will have to move over.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian columnist.

UMass Weekend Schedule

Friday, Feb. 6

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Ice Hockey	vs. New Hampshire	7:00 p.m.
Women's Tennis	vs. Binghamton	7:30 p.m.

Saturday, Feb. 7

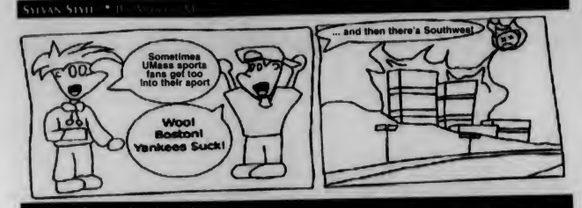
Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Ski	at BC Carnival	9:30 a.m.
Men's Ski	at BC Carnival	9:30 a.m.
Women's Track	at URI	11:00 a.m.
Men's Track	at URI	3:30 p.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	at UNH	7:00 p.m.

Sunday, Nov. 23

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Basketball	vs. Dayton	2:00 p.m.
Women's Basketball	at Duquesne	2:00 p.m.
Women's Ski	at BC Carnival	9:30 a.m.
Men's Ski	at BC Carnival	9:30 a.m.

Panda East 熊貓
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
Sushi bar!
OCMP accepted
Delivery available!
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

CLUB CASTAWAY
RT. 5 & 10 WHATELY 665-8733
Castaway Lounge Proudly Welcomes All Students over 21 (must have proper ID).
We will hire beautiful ladies to participate in the entertainment field & we will train them to make big money.
Call between 11 AM to 1 PM Tuesday thru Saturday
COME AND ENJOY ENTERTAINMENT WITH 50 LOVELY LADIES PER WEEK!
THE VIP ROOM IS FREE FOR PRIVATE PARTIES.



Tired of the Dorms?
IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.

Chicago Pizzaria
FREE DELIVERY!
549-6073
160 Fearing St., located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
Welcome back UMass Students!
Friday/Saturday Special: large cheese pizza $5.00
Open:
Sun.-Wed.: 11AM-1AM
Thurs.-Sat.:11AM-3AM
We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!

Smooth Skin for Spring Break!
AMHERST LASER & SKIN CARE CENTER
Laser Hair Reduction- with GentleLase™
Utilizing advanced laser technology.
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Laser treatments available for acne, brown spots, and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Students who sign-up before March 1st will receive 50% off package price.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
AMHERSTLASER@VERIZON.NET

FREE!
MOVIE OR VIDEO GAME RENTAL
WITH NEW MEMBERSHIP. PHOTO ID & CREDIT/DEBIT CARD REQUIRED.
RENT 1 MOVIE or GAME & GET 2 FREE!
With this coupon. Valid Sunday thru Thursday. Not good with other offers. Membership required. Expires 2/28/04. Good at new downtown store only.
RENT 2 MOVIES or GAMES & GET 2 FREE!
With this coupon. Good any day. Not good with other offers. Membership required. Expires 2/28/04. Good at new downtown store only.
Captain VIDEO
NEW! DOWNTOWN STORE
JUST OFF N. PLEASANT STREET BEHIND BRUEGGER'S BAGELS
Open 10 am to 11pm, 7 days a week. Call 253-0222 for reservations.

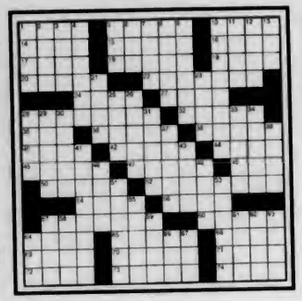
Sylvan Style • By Steven Wright

Damaged Goods • By Steven Wright

Mr. Gnu • By Dennis Ellsworth

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

ZooMass • By Sarah Holmes



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across

1 Like the
5 Reindeer herders
10 "Moonstruck" actress
14 Family member
15 Whitney of TV
16 Robust
17 Muse of history
18 Complain
19 Vacation
20 Ice cream
22 Home answers
24 Shipment
27 Made yarn
28 Think about
32 Vote to accept
35 Forum hello
36 Put the finger on
38 Small fry
39 Wedding speech
40 Clothes horse
44 Freight hauler
45 Shuts noisily
47 "— Mamma"
49 Gorilla
50 Well fed
52 Tyrant
54 — Aviv
56 Metropolitan sight
57 Painters' gear
60 Rubens' subjects
64 Exotic wrap
65 Not an express
66 Wordless actor
69 Country singer Randy
70 Weasel out of
71 Out of speech
72 Dull
73 Name too bright
74 Part of MIT

Down

1 Muscle-car dial
2 — Incop
3 Puritan, e.g.
4 Bar seats
5 Fallen tree
6 Spring mo
7 Goody-goody
8 Some parents
9 Hebrew year
10 Regard
11 Mad Hatter guest
12 Wagtails
13 Lip — graphics
21 Wears a wool
23 Modern-day sin
25 Verde or Ari
26 Test-drive vehicles
29 House pets
29 Running tracks
30 Kalin-andu locales
31 Fixed up
33 Trouser feature
34 Spoken
37 Food shops
39 Wedding-cake groups
41 Reckless
43 Spike the punch
46 Cleary's dinner
48 Deity in Milton
51 — over (tainted)
53 Graduates
55 Blasted
57 Grass
58 Embarrassment
59 Sorrowful
61 "The Wanderer" singer
62 Flightless birds
63 Dispatched
64 "I tell'a ya" message
66 Balloonists
67 Rehnit or Tashiru

Experience YOGA
Classes in Boyden 10
(Classes start Feb. 2)

Class Schedule

Monday/Wednesday	Tuesday/Thursday
12:30-1:45 pm Yoga Flow (Level 1-2)	1:00-2:15 pm Yoga Basics (Level 1-2)
2:00-3:15 pm Power Yoga (Level 2-3)	2:30-3:45 pm Intermeditate (Level 2-3)

DROP IN to any level-appropriate class
Only $10
OR
SIGN UP for a Semester Package & SAVE!!
1 class per week/13 weeks $75
2 classes per week/13 weeks $145
Register through Campus Recreation
Boyden 215
413-545-0022 • www.umass.edu/umim

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Dinner
- Dill Salmon
- Chicken Marsala
- Forrest Ragu (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

Friday
- High: 32
- Low: 28

Saturday
- High: 37
- Low: 13

Sunday
- High: 23
- Low: 8

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Photo Technician
Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor
Sheryl Wolnik
Production Supervisor
Irene Ros
Production Staff
Oliver Chong/ Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Albert is a super name for a turtle.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Careful on the ice; you don't want to slip.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Do you like groundhogs? It's their fault it's so friggin' cold today.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't go on a stampede. This isn't Pamplona.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You're not as hot as Britney, so stop trying.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You rock that "man skirt."

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Put feet in your shoes, a head in your hat and be on your way.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Go on a hottie hunt.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You're a rock star in a college student's body.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Just ask them out.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are well equipped for the long journey that is before you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You act a lot different than normal people. You freak.

Quote for the Day

"I was walking down the street wearing glasses when the prescription ran out."

-Steven Wright

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms: hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

2000 KIA Sportage Must Sell Leaving country. CD, AC, 4WD, Sunroof, Book Price $6000 Asking $5000 413-695-3034

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext 4554

96 Accord 105K Runs great Reliable Less than book value $4500 256-1505

Sporty! Nissan Pathfinder SE Utility 4door with 4 wheel drive 1995. $4500 1-413-687-7510

Auto for Sale

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions 1800-293-3985 ext 516

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Employment

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

Furniture

Double Bed Set with frames. 2 years old, very comfortable! Call Jimmy @ 603-303-0167

Services

LEGAL PROBLEMS? Get free advice at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

SPRING BREAK SOLUTIONS You pick the destination, we will get you there Group Discounts, Free Trips, we meet or beat any reliable competitors price! Free party package with every trip www.springbreaksolutions.com 1-877-2-THE-FUN

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun Negril Acapulco Bahamas Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Place your own classified! Come visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500 today!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass to face UNH

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Business in front, party in back.

Any pseudo-nostalgic college student worth his or her salt knows that the above is the street definition for the mullet, the (in)famous '80s-era hairstyle that is as much a part of hockey's culture as popping the water bottle.

This season, it might also be a good slogan for the Massachusetts hockey team, because the Minutemen (15-5-5, 11-3-2 Hockey East) have certainly taken care of business for much of the season, and wins like last Saturday's 3-1 triumph over Merrimack has given fans a reason to party in the aisles.

This weekend won't be any picnic, though. Tonight, UMass hosts UNH (7:05 p.m., NESN) in the first game of a home-and-home series. The No. 10 Wildcats (13-9-3, 7-5-3 HEA) enter the Mullins Center with plenty to gain. At 17 points, they are fourth in the conference, six points behind Maine with nine games left in the season.

On a two-game losing streak, with losses (5-0, 5-4) in Orono, Maine, the Wildcats are always dangerous, and could be even more so tonight.

"The wounded animal syndrome," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of UNH, "they just fight for survival. They've had a lot of success for us in the recent past. So deep down in their hearts I'm sure they think this isn't a game they can lose."

The Minutemen are in second place, one point ahead of the Black Bears, who play two non-conference games against Alabama-Huntsville this weekend. They're also playing for the postseason, because a win tonight or tomorrow would secure a spot in the Hockey East playoffs, and would put them in a tie for first place with Boston College.

The Eagles have a two-point advantage on the Minutemen, but are idle this weekend in preparation for Monday's Beanpot final against Boston University. It would be the first time UMass held the top spot in the conference this late in the season.

The Minutemen clinched their spot among Hockey East's elite eight right around this time last year. However, in February 2003, it was by the skin of their teeth, a sixth-place finish that led to the March playoff stunner in Orono. This year, it's No. 2 in the conference, and the valuable home-ice advantage that's up for grabs. Not that Cahoon will let on much about that.

"It's been an interesting year from that standpoint. But that's a start, not a finish. I can't get into consuming the whole season and what it represents until the season's over, because for me that's a recipe for failure."

Continuing his mantra of not wanting "historians" on his team, Cahoon also downplayed any lingering effects of the two teams' last meetingon Dec. 11 in Amherst, when junior Preston Callander tied the game for UNH with 1.18 remaining.

"I don't think it's something that we can relate to a whole lot," Cahoon said. "I think it was important at the time, and it certainly was a good effort on our part, maybe one of our best efforts of the year."

Tomorrow night, the two teams will meet up again in Durham, N.H. for UMass' first and only regular season visit to the Whittemore Center. The arena holds 6,100 (2,289 fewer than the Mullins Center), and it's five feet wider (200 X 100) than UMass' home sheet, which makes the transition a little easier for UMass, compared to the rest of the conference.

"Certainly, our rink is the second-largest ice sheet in the rink, so I'd like to think as big as [Whittemore] is, as fast as you can get, we can make the adjustment to that sheet easier than most teams can, because we play on a rink that has big seams, big dead areas, so it's not that big a deal for us.

UMass defenseman Thomas Pock scored a goal in the Minutemen's last meeting with UNH. UMass takes on the Wildcat's tonight at the Mullins Center at 7 p.m.

All-Star game two stars short

Bob McGovern

So much for an "All" Star Game.

In an unprecedented turn of events, two of the best players in the NBA were left off their respective conference All-Star teams this week, namely Carmelo Anthony and LeBron James.

This is not to say that the game will be any less astounding, as we are sure to be blessed with picture perfect passing and dunks that will no doubt be on our dorm room walls one day. But where is the reward for these young phenoms that are turning the league upside down?

I am astonished that the fans didn't select them with all of the hype from the media they have received over the last year. But when the coaches decided to snub them from even a bench role, you have to wonder what league these guys are actually watching.

Carmelo is averaging 19 points per game and is grabbing six rebounds, for a Nugget team that year-in and year-out was the laughing stock of the NBA. Now, in the powerful Western Conference, the Nuggets are not only above .500, but they are one of the top 10 teams in the conference.

If you look at his supporting cast, there isn't much as far as star power is concerned. Aside from Andre Miller, this team is built of an array of role players diligently following a rookie not even two years out of high school.

So who then is he to replace in the talent-clad Western Conference? There is no doubt a player like Sam Cassell (who should be starting in my mind), or Peja Stojakovic should get the nod, but there are other alterations that could have been made.

What about a player like Ray Allen, who for most of the season has been nursing an injury? Sure, when he plays he's one of the most explosive guards in the game, but while he was missing, his offensive load was picked up by Shaw College product Ronald Murray.

Even with Allen back in the mix of things, the Sonics still haven't put together the season that the Nuggets have. Any other year there would be a case for Allen to be put in over Anthony, but this year it seems to be a matter of politics.

As a stretch, Sacramento Kings center Brad Miller could also be exchanged for Anthony. The West already has its quota at center filled with Shaquille O'Neal and Yao Ming.

In the East the story is a little bit more complex.

With fans voting for the starting five, high-flyers like Vince Carter and Tracy McGrady have been placed on the team, but neither of these players are having a true all-star season.

Sure, the cousins are picking up the scoring load for their respective teams, but they aren't really

See ALLSTAR on page 5

Men's hoops come home

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team is looking for its fifth consecutive win as it tips off against undefeated conference foe Dayton, Sunday at the Mullins Center. A win would give Coach Steve Lappas his longest winning streak since coming to UMass three years ago.

The Minutemen (9-11, 3-5 Atlantic 10) have been playing solid basketball over the past few games, but it will take more than good ball movement to stay ahead of a much bigger Dayton team. The Flyers (18-3, 8-0 A-10) lead the series with UMass 5-4, and has won the last three contests.

"It'll be an interesting game," Lappas said. "They're really going to test us size-wise because they're huge and they're the 12th leading rebounding team in the country. That's going to be a real challenge for us especially the way we are now, but I know we'll fight hard."

The Minutemen's line-up is significantly smaller now that center Gabe Lee is out for the season. With at least three guards on the court at all times, everyone will have to play big and box out. Rebounding will be a major factor in continuing the streak.

"If we rebound well we will contain them," Lappas said. "That's the whole key, if you rebound they're not able to get out and transition as much as they normally do, so rebounding helps stop a couple of things.

"Rebounding has been something we've spent most of our practices on all year, but especially since Gabe's been hurt," he said.

For the Minutemen, playing smaller means playing a slightly different game. More focus is now being put on ball movement and shooting because there are fewer options and opportunities underneath.

"It's definitely helped us," Lappas said of the teams' ball movement. "We were doing it some in the beginning, we played Jeff [Viggiano] at the four spot significant minutes this year, but now we don't have the option of going the other way. I think it's helped our younger guys ... I think they feel like they have more space to make a drive."

The confidence of the younger players has improved drastically over the past few games. With less seniority to rely on and holes needing to be filled, they have stepped up in every way their coach has asked them to.

"I expected a lot from them from day one," Lappas said. "I think now their experience has helped them, now they have the confidence to go out there and do things in the clutch when we need it.

"We're a better team because we have more of a comfort level with more guys."

The Flyers, on an eight game winning streak, haven't lost a decision since their January third match at Wyoming. They are also currently leading the A-10 west. The Minutemen are tied for second with Rhode Island in the A-10 east behind No. 3 St. Joe's.

Freshman guard Art Bowers was named A-10 Rookie of the Week as he averaged 18 points, 6 assists and 4.5 rebounds in UMass' triumphs over Fordham and Rhode Island. Bowers joins sophomore Rashaun Freeman and freshman Maurice Maxwell in receiving the honor.

Sophomore Rashaun Freeman leads the Minutemen in points and rebounds this season. UMass plays Dayton at home this Sunday at 2 p.m.

Minutewomen face Lady Dukes

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team is literally limping into its weekends contest against Atlantic 10 rival Duquesne.

With nearly half of the team sidelined with injuries, the Minutewomen have had to switch focus at practice recently. Instead of preparing a game plan for the Lady Dukes, UMass has to worry about bringing a healthy starting five down to Pittsburgh.

"It has been a challenge at best in practice so what we're trying to do is do a little more conditioning, a little more skill instruction, and a lot more conditioning," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "You play the hand your dealt and I never know what hand I'm going to be dealt day-to-day."

Junior Candace Futrelle has been pacing the Lady Duke offense with 21.7 points per game. She is also dangerous below the basket, grabbing over six rebounds per contest.

Futrelle has been one of the more dominant players in the A-10 this year, leading the conference in scoring and is in the top 20 for both rebounds per game and three-point percentage.

"She's an unbelievable player in the league, she moves without the ball, she shoots extremely well, she's a competitor," Dacko said. "She's in incredible shape, she is somebody that certainly we have to stop, we've got to really work on her and take away some of her strengths."

Duquesne has been particularly good at home this year, going 6-1 at the A.J. Palumbo Center. UMass, who has gone 0-9 on the road this season, is looking to snap a five game losing streak against A-10 opponents.

"Until we win, I don't know if they believe they can win," Dacko said. "We believe they can win as a coaching staff, but until you win you're not going to get the monkey off your back for awhile."

The Minutewomen have changed their game plan with regards to their slim bench. Coach Dacko believes that her team must force the Lady Dukes into mistakes rather than wait for opportunity.

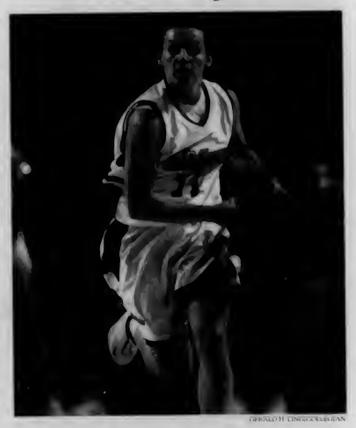
One of the major downfalls for team in scoring before the break, has fallen behind junior Edris Bailey, who is the only player scoring double digits for the Minutewomen.

Bailey is one of several walking injured for UMass and is questionable for Saturday's game. During the final seconds of the first half against Fordham, Bailey took a desperate three-pointer from well beyond the arc. When she landed she appeared to have aggravated her knee.

Bailey did not practice yesterday.

On top of the recent array of injuries for the Minutewomen, there has been a definitive lack of leadership on the court. With only two seniors in the starting lineup, UMass has shown a lack of confidence when it comes to finishing down the stretch.

"We don't have a great deal of senior leadership, so I think that takes its toll on our belief in ourselves," Dacko said. "The disbelief sets in when we don't win."



Duquesne has been their turnovers when under pressure. Dacko will be switching up her defensive strategy to throw a wrench into the Lady Dukes offensive performance.

"When you don't have bodies we have to play to our strengths and we're probably going to play a zone, we don't have great depth on the bench so we're going to mix it up between man and zone," Dacko said. "They rush when they are under pressure which is our game, so I think we're going to have to keep them under pressure."

Part of UMass' success relies on senior guard Judit Zsedenyi finding her shot again. Over the last three games, Zsedenyi has scored only 12 points on 4-25 from the field.

"You just want to let her play through it and I think that she'll play through it and fortunately for us we only have one game this week so she can get a little rest," Dacko said.

The senior, who was leading the Senior guard Judit Zsedenyi has averaged 9.8 points per game this season. The Minutewomen take on Duquesne this Saturday.

THE SCORE new face

Do you know THE SCORE?
Look for it at these locations starting today
Athena's Pizza • Amherst Regional High • Berkshire Dining Common • Big Y • Boyden Gym • Bruegger's Bagel Bakery • Campus Center concourse • Daisy's Restaurant • Franklin Dining Common • Four Seasons Wine and Liquors • Liquors 44 • Hampshire Dining Common • The Hangar • Hopkins Academy • Mullins Center Ice Rink • Rafters • Student Union • Totman Gym • Ultimate Fitness • Worcester Dining Common

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 78

Tiffany Muller, right, and Erin Norris hold their wedding album at home in Topeka, Kan., Friday. The idea that Muller and Norris, or other same-sex couples could marry legally someday has legislators considering a proposed constitutional amendment to reinforce Kansas' long-standing policy against recognizing such unions.

Hundreds of homosexual marriage opponents stage large rally in Boston

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Hundreds of opponents of same-sex marriage gathered Sunday on Boston Common to show support for a proposed constitutional amendment that would define marriage as the union of one man and one woman.

People held banners that read "Let the people vote," "Marriage, ancient, sacred," and "Homosexuality is not normal" as they were entertained by live music.

Speakers lined up for the rally included some of the state's most high-profile gay marriage opponents, including Archbishop Sean P. O'Malley of the Roman Catholic Boston Archdiocese, and state House Speaker Thomas Finneran.

Ed Zicko, 69, attended the rally with his friend, Maureen Cavanaugh, 39, both members of St. Patrick's Catholic church in Natick. He said he came to the rally because marriage is a tradition going back thousands of years and "I think people should have the opportunity to vote on it."

A smaller group of counter-protesters, some holding a banner that said "Shame on you Sean," in reference to O'Malley, stood behind the main stage.

Massachusetts' highest court, the Supreme Judicial Court, ruled 4-3 in November that same-sex couples had a right under the state constitution to the benefits of marriage, and this past week it ruled by the same ratio that only marriage — not civil union — would satisfy its initial decision.

On Saturday, leaders of churches, synagogues and mosques around Massachusetts condemned the high court's ruling in a joint statement and urged a constitutional ban on such unions.

"All eyes are on Massachusetts; may they see our courage and resolve to safeguard the fundamental institution of marriage," the statement concluded.

Signers included O'Malley; the Rev. David M. Midwood, president of Vision New England, an organization of evangelical churches; the Islamic Council of New England, which has about 25 centers and mosques; the 80-church Black Ministerial Alliance; 100 Christian Orthodox churches; and two Jewish leaders.

A poll released Sunday by Merrimack College's Center for Public Opinion Research suggested that support for gay marriage may be slipping, and support for legalizing civil unions growing.

Of 501 adults interviewed by phone in late January and early February, 33 percent said the state should recognize gay marriages, compared to 37 percent in November. In the latest poll, 43 percent said the state should recognize civil unions, compared to 38 percent in November. The margin of error was 4.5 percentage points.

The full Massachusetts House and Senate will meet Wednesday for a joint constitutional convention to consider a proposed constitutional amendment banning gay marriage in Massachusetts.

If a majority of lawmakers vote in favor of the amendment twice, it would be put to the voters as a ballot referendum in 2006.

UMass student found unconscious

Cops unsure if early morning accident was a hit-and-run

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts male student was found early Friday morning lying unconscious in the road, apparently either hit by or having fallen from a moving vehicle.

Petrit Vasi, 22, of Dorchester, Mass. was found by the Amherst Police Department at 12:20 a.m. at the intersection of Triangle and Mattoon Streets in Amherst. Police described his injuries as consistent with being struck by or falling from a motor vehicle. Vasi sustained serious head injuries, the Amherst Police said.

According to police, Vasi was transferred by an Amherst Fire Department ambulance to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield, and was initially classified as being in critical condition. His status was recently upgraded to serious condition, a spokesman for the hospital said yesterday.

APD has not identified the operator of any vehicle involved in the incident, nor have they obtained a description of the vehicles. Investigators are asking those with information call the APD Detective Bureau at (413)256-4015.

Vasi is a junior economics student at the University.

A number of other students have been struck on campus by vehicles in the past few years, including four students who were struck in separate incidents while crossing streets in the fall of 2002.

In November 2002, Jared R. Cariddi was struck by a car on East Pleasant Street. In October 2002, a female was struck in a crosswalk near the Mullins Center. In September 2002, Shandralee Lerro was hit by a car in a crosswalk near the horseshoe in the Southwest Residential Area. Jessica Moody was hit while crossing University Drive in September of that year.

The increase in accidents caused the University to install a new traffic control device on University Drive before the start of the fall semester. These large yellow bumps in the pavement, or bulds, were put in to prevent cars from passing one another in close proximity to pedestrian crossings. The bulds extend outward into the street as they approach the crosswalk, in a triangular shape.

The University also installed lit signs at the crossings, in order to alert drivers of potential foot traffic on what is considered to be a largely pedestrian campus.

Prisoner praises the power of protest

By Erin Whittey
Collegian Correspondent

Student protests and demonstrations have real effects on Chinese policies and treatment of prisoners in Tibet, according to former political prisoner Ngawang Sangdrol, guest speaker at the annual Students for a Free Tibet conference on Saturday.

The 26-year-old Sangdrol credited organizations like Students for a Free Tibet for helping bring about her own release from the Drapchi prison in Lhasa, where she was imprisoned and tortured for 11 years until her parole in 2002.

Saturday evening's presentation opened with a short video detailing the occupation of Tibet by Chinese forces and the work done by international groups to help achieve Tibetan independence.

Sangdrol was arrested when she was 15 for participating in a demonstration for Tibetan independence, along with a group of other Buddhist nuns and monks. Her original sentence was for three years of imprisonment, but her term was extended three separate times to a total of 23 years, the longest sentence of any female political prisoner in Tibet.

Speaking through a translator, Sangdrol described her almost constant beatings by Chinese prison guards. The guards would hit prisoners with batons that sent an electric shock through the body, or various sticks, pipes, and iron rods.

The day Sangdrol was first captured, "from 10 a.m. to midnight, they hit me, and since then, they hit me every day, day and night."

Sangdrol spoke of the drilling exercises that the guards put the prisoners through. Prisoners had to hold newspapers under their arms and between their legs, and were beaten for dropping them, she said.

"They always give the training when it is very, very, hot," Sangdrol said. Prisoners would sometimes get dizzy and fall from the combination of the heat and ill health. Anyone who helped them was beaten.

After years of drilling exercises, Sangdrol said, "one time I just couldn't bear any more and I shouted." This earned her six months in solitary confinement, in a tiny dark room full of rats and insects.

In 1993, Sangdrol and several friends secretly recorded an audiocassette of poems and songs about prison life and Tibetan freedom. The cassette was smuggled out of prison and has been distributed internationally as a CD entitled "Seeing Nothing but Sky."

According to Sangdrol, the true conditions in Drapchi were hidden from reporters and other visitors. When any visitors were due, prisoners had to clean bloodstains off the floor, burn incense to cover the smell, and buy new linens with their own money, she said.

Even after Sangdrol was released from Drapchi in October 2002, there were very few freedoms in her life. Former prisoners are not allowed to work, practice their religion, or speak out for Tibetan independence.

"It's just in name they have released you," she said.

Released prisoners are re-educated in Chinese schools, Sangdrol said. Everyone must pass a political science test that requires the Tibetans to denounce the name of the Dalai Lama and agree that Tibet is part of China.

Sangdrol was released to the United States in March of 2002 for medical treatment of chronic headaches and stomach problems. She now lives in Washington D.C. with various host families.

Sangdrol says that she is very grateful for all the work of groups like Students for a Free Tibet. She feels that the work done outside of Tibet in countries with free speech has a real effect on Chinese policies.

While prisoners never hear about the protests asking for their release, protests can make a difference in their lives. According to Sangdrol, asking for specific prisoners can get that person special treatment, such as access to medication from the Chinese.

Sangdrol is still a very determined woman. Everything she has been through, she says, was "for the love of my country, for the love of my leader, and for the freedom of Tibet."

First female to lead the Black Panthers party visits UMass

By Casey Novak
Collegian Correspondent

Elaine Brown, writer, activist and the only woman to lead the Black Panther Party, will speak at the University of Massachusetts today on "New Age Racism" at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Brown's lecture will involve the vision of an inclusive egalitarian society, focusing on resolving problems of race, gender oppression and class disparity in the United States.

"Although the Black Panthers had a reputation of being violent and inflammatory, if you look at the things that were really most important to them, it had to do with freedom and equality," said Ellen Miller-Mack, a nurse practitioner at Brightwood Health Center, who is also intensely involved with social justice issues.

COURTESY OF THE UMASS STUDENT ACTIVITIES CENTER

Elaine Brown, the first woman leader of the Black Panthers, will speak in the Student Union Ballroom today.

In 1974, Brown became the first and only woman to lead the Black Panther Party. Today, she upholds the original vision of the Panthers and the survival programs they developed, such as the Free Breakfast Program for Children, Sickle Cell Anemia Testing, free health clinics, and Senior Services, among others.

In her autobiography, "A Taste of Power: A Black Woman's Story", Brown recounts her life from the ghettos of North Philadelphia to leadership in one of the most important and militant civil rights groups in U.S. history.

Brown's latest book, "New Age Racism and the Condemnation of 'Little B'" (Beacon Press, 2002), is the story of a 14-year-old boy sentenced to life in prison for a Georgia murder that Brown says he did not commit.

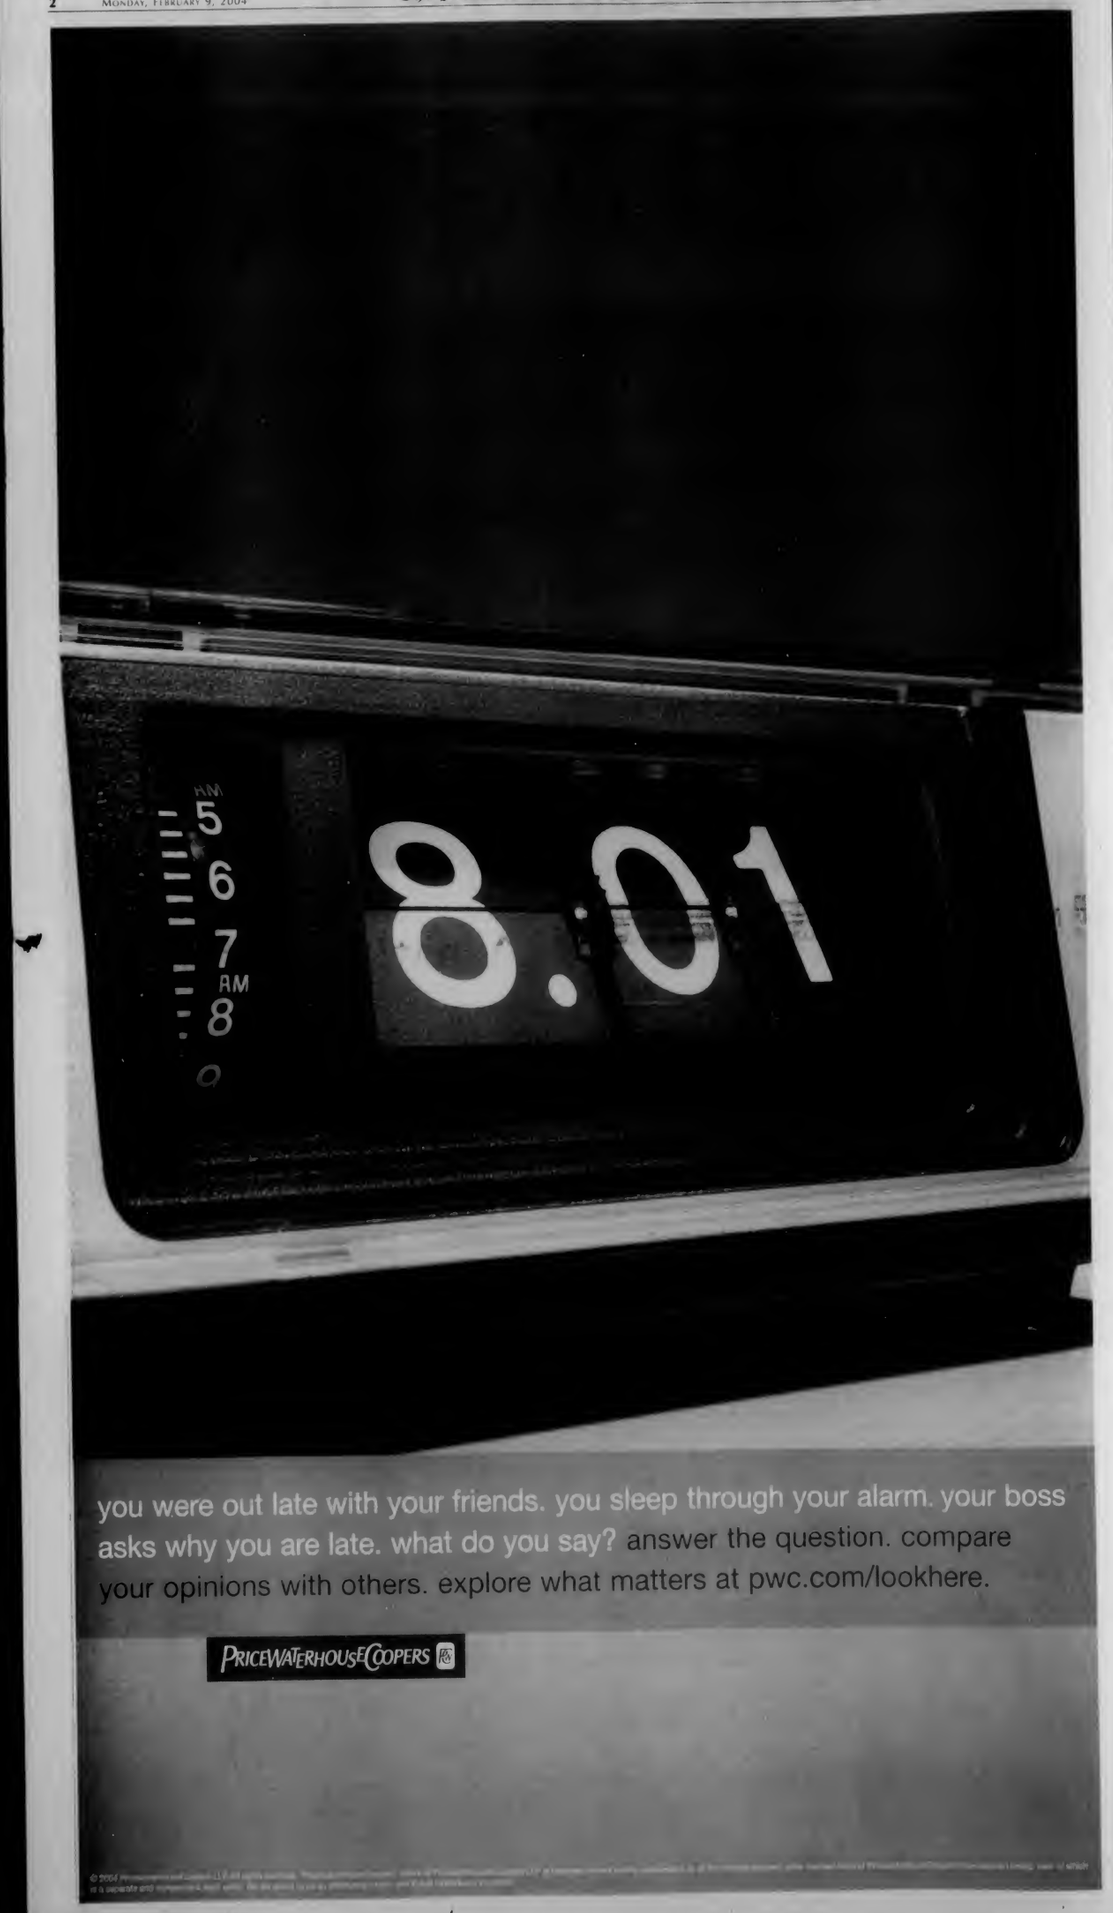
Brown is also the president of the nonprofit educational corporation Fields of Flowers, the mission of which is to build a model education center for blacks and other poor children. She is Director of Political Affairs for the National Alliance for Radical Prison Reform, a board member of Mothers Advocating Juvenile Justice, and Vice-President of The Dr. Huey P. Newton Foundation.

"Brown is an incredible speaker, both powerful and direct," Miller-Mack said. "Somebody with those credentials, having been a Black Panther leader, could rest on that, but she doesn't. She is really active, busy and committed."

Brown's speech is sponsored by the Black Student Union at UMass, the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program at Hampshire College, the Distinguished Visitors Program at UMass, Enrollment Services at UMass, Five Colleges, Inc., the Mount Holyoke College Anthropology Department, the UMass Radical Student Union, Student Activities Center, and Women of Color Leadership Network at the Everywoman's Center, as well as WMUA-FM.

There will be a reception and book signing following Brown's talk. The speech and reception are free and open to the public.

Riots rage against President



ST. MARC, Haiti (AP) — Hundreds of Haitians looted TV sets, mattresses and sacks of flour Sunday in this coastal town, one of several communities seized by armed rebels in a bloody uprising against President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

Using felled trees, flaming tires and car chassis, residents blocked the streets into St. Marc, a day after rebels drove out police in gun battles that killed two people. Many residents in the area have formed neighborhood groups to back insurgents in their push to expel the president.

"After Aristide leaves, the country will return to normal," said Axel Philippe, 34, among dozens massed on the highway leading to St. Marc, a city of 100,000 some 45 miles northwest of the capital, Port-au-Prince.

At least 18 people have been killed since armed rebels began their assault four days ago, setting police stations on fire and driving officers from the key city of Gonaives along the Caribbean Sea and several smaller nearby towns. Anger has been brewing in Haiti since Aristide's party won flawed legislative elections in 2000. The opposition refuses to join in any new vote unless the president resigns; he insists on serving out his term, ending in 2006.

-Associated Press

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New plan for ALANA may be detrimental

When key members of the University of Massachusetts campus meet tonight for an informational session, their discussion could mean much more than the standard rhetoric that revolves around diversity. The session could shed light on what the possible future is for one of the university's most vocal organizations — the Office of ALANA Affairs.

The informational session tonight follows a proposal made at last week's Student Government Association Senate meeting by Russell Plato, the SGA secretary of diversity. Plato released a proposal Wednesday night that, if passed, would turn the Office into a broad-based center for all diversity issues, rather than the main voice for advocacy on African, Latino, Asian and Native American issues that it always has been.

The Office of ALANA Affairs, according to its Web site, was first developed in 1976 when ALANA students asked for professional advocates to voice their concerns. Since that time, the group has remained actively involved on campus, advocating for ALANA issues, hosting cultural events and fostering a sense of community for many students on campus.

Above all, it is that sense of community that needs to be protected. Numerous Collegian staff members who have interacted with ALANA this year have noticed its office to be a support center and home away from home for many of the students who frequent the office. In the larger, broader Office of Community Diversity that is proposed, The Collegian can't help but feel that much of the strength and unity that ALANA students draw from the office as it is would get lost in the shuffle.

Much has been made this year over the ALANA caucus's appointed seats on the SGA Senate — an issue that still isn't fully resolved, as the SGA continues to try and find a balance between maintaining diversity and maintaining constitutionality. While the argument over the future of the caucus's seats is far from over and will continue to come up for debate in the in the next few weeks, The Collegian wishes to differentiate the two issues, so as not to blur them. Frankly, while the debate over appointed seats is important to address, a dramatic alteration to the Office of ALANA Affairs is a much more important issue, and likely to be detrimental to the ALANA community and university student body at large.

The Collegian has not always agreed with ALANA's viewpoints, mindset or actions. At times, the relationship between our publication and the ALANA community has been tense, to say the least — particularly during a 1992 takeover of our office by ALANA students following the Rodney King beating in Los Angeles, and during the fall controversy surrounding the caucus's appointed seats.

The Collegian, however, believes in the purpose, mission and importance of the Office of ALANA Affairs. We believe it offers an important safeguard as campus policies are formulated by keeping an active watch to make sure the ALANA point of view is remembered in influential debates upon our campus. Lumping the office in with other groups that keep unrelated diversity issues, such as gender or sexual orientation, in mind seems misguided.

Even if dramatically altering the Office of ALANA Affairs is an honest effort to improve diversity on campus, we believe there has to be a better way. The Collegian encourages members of University administration, the SGA, and ALANA to discuss these issues actively, and will be happy to facilitate positive dialogue in any way possible. The Collegian believes the issues at hand are too important to handle in any other way.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

False independence

Allison Edles

With the amount of students choosing to attend colleges across the nation, the option of choosing living arrangements has become as large a factor in the college selection process as the tuition itself. For an undergraduate student at the University of Massachusetts, room and board alone can cost $5,748 a year, and that will provide a student with one room shared with a roommate.

Given this scenario, it has become more and more popular for parents of students to buy or rent property for their sons and daughters. Property does not come cheap, with some parents buying entire three-bedroom houses in the vicinity of the school costing well over $200,000 for their child to live during their tenure at school. Many parents feel that doing this provides their child with a sense of responsibility that should come with being introduced into the real world. However, buying entire properties for their children hardly teaches them about responsibility, but more about dependency on their parents.

Being in college imposes many new responsibilities on students, with a major one being the importance of independence. Buying property for their children while they are at college rather than having them live in the dormitories offered by the school is detrimental to the students' ability to mature and only further demonstrates how much of a spoiled society we live in.

Dormitories are not the most desirable living conditions; oftentimes, the rooms are small and cannot comfortably fit two, or in some cases, three people. On top of that, there is the whole sharing aspect that many students, especially those who have never lived with anyone before, feel to be somewhat of a burden when they have to wait for a shower or a sink when they want to get ready in the morning. However, with the large influx of students attending colleges and universities today, condensed housing is one solution that has been accommodating student living for decades on account of its affordability. Public state schools, which routinely have 25,000 undergraduate students at least, let alone graduate students, need to offer housing accommodations for all the students that require it. If every student had to find off-campus housing and still attend all their classes, there would be a lot fewer students pursuing higher education and still graduating in the recommended four years. Providing on-campus housing for students through dormitories is cost-effective and allows students who are not from around the area to attend schools in different locations.

By having the parents purchase a house for their son or daughter while he or she is away at school, they are only further encouraging their child to depend on them rather than working to establish a sense of independence for their child. The students, for the most part, are not paying rent because their parents paid for the property. So, the onus is on the student to maintain the property in livable conditions and to be responsible. However, given the capacity that 18 to 21-year-olds have with regards to weekend parties involving alcohol and drug use, the expensive houses and apartments bought for single sons and daughters may very well turn into intense party grounds with no proper authorities to enforce rules and regulations. While many students do have off-campus housing, they themselves are responsible for the payments and, therefore, are more careful about the conditions of the property and take such things into consideration when hosting parties and other events.

Even if the living arrangement works out for the student, they will eventually graduate and the property will have to be sold. Understandably so, many families look into the option of turning in the property purchased for their son or daughter into a vacation home for certain seasons. However, some families may find that, while a certain location may be perfect for their son or daughter to live in while they're at school, it may not be an ideal location for them. More often than not, college towns usually appeal to college students and not necessarily adults who don't want to put up with all-night parties. Given these circumstances, the parents would have to learn to cope and co-exist with excessive amounts of students long after their children graduate. Plus, with the real estate market being as uncertain as it has been, there is no guarantee that what a piece of property was bought for is what it will be able to be sold for again.

Being a college student brings certain obligations. Among those are the ability to weigh decisions, how much to spend on what without compromising finances and how long to spend doing what without compromising academics. College, in a sense, serves as the transition from childhood to adulthood. Having parents pay for their children to live off-campus in expensive housing is not easing this transition, but only setting it back.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

A halftime to forget

Mark Ostroff

Man, oh man, what a halftime show! So, let me guess: is next year's show going to be a thematic tribute to Jerry Springer, or how about Anna Nicole Smith? After that train wreck of a halftime show, it's hopeful, at least, that the NFL just might smarten up. For starters, NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue has already issued a public apology stating, "We were extremely disappointed by the MTV-produced halftime show … the show was offensive, inappropriate and embarrassing to us and our fans." I couldn't put it any more bluntly than that.

First of all, notice how he said "show," and not "wardrobe malfunction," "incident," or any other term to imply that not every part of that show was bad? Like prime time TV, even the Super Bowl halftime shows have cheapened up and it's about time that the NFL has acknowledged it. There's no longer any imagination out there — just a bunch of tight bodies and tabloid faces dancing around on stage. And it's certainly nothing to be proud of.

Americans seem to have run their standards so far into the ground that these companies have come to expect us not only to find such trash acceptable, but to embrace it.

When I was a kid, things were totally different. Before I even knew a lot about football, it was exciting for me to watch the Super Bowl halftime show. Not because I wanted to see a bunch of nobodies dancing around, but more because of the creativity and imagination that it took to produce a very fun show, which gave not only tribute to America's true national pastime, but to things that make Americans proud.

I'm sure a lot of us can remember Super Bowl XXVIII, when Michael Jackson came out on the field and sang "Heal the World" with 3,500 children. During Super Bowl XI, Disney put on the memorably-themed show "It's a Small World." Time and time again, the Super Bowl has been used to celebrate not only points of pride, like the history of Film and Rock & Roll, but to remember tragedies like Sept. 11.

With the exception of a very timely pre-game show, this year's show had none of that. Just like last year's Super Bowl, this show was one of the least memorable and most idiotic halftime shows in the history of the NFL.

Within three years, we went from a solemn 9-11 remembrance, to a bunch of people humping and grabbing crotches in front of a pyrotechnics backdrop. Americans had nothing to be proud of here — it was merely a sleazy tribute to boisterous American trash-culture.

Coming out in a haze of smoke and pyrotechnics, Kid Rock runs around on the stage, hammering out an already-expired song, with an American flag for a smock. You see, it's fashionably cool to wrap yourself in the American flag. In fact, you don't even have to be a responsible citizen. Just wear your loyalty on your shirt or on your arm like a medieval serf. Civic responsibility is so 1960s, dude. Be trendy and wear a made-in-China piece of red, white, and blue cloth around your neck just in case you forget your nationality in the next 20 minutes.

And then there's that whole Janet Jackson fiasco. Although this didn't particularly offend me, it's not impossible to see why some people would be offended. A lot of churches around the country were hosting the Super Bowl as a community event. And, just like me 15 years ago, kids and families were watching. In fact, the Super Bowl had an estimated audience of a billion people. There have to be a few little kids in there somewhere.

Now, can we totally blame Viacom and MTV for this ugly halftime show? Absolutely not! The other major contributor to the problem of television-gone-tasteless is the American viewer.

Americans seem to have run their standards so far into the ground, that these companies have come to expect us not only to find such trash acceptable, but to embrace it. Was America really expecting a clean, wholesome, and even meaningful Halftime Show, when we accept such masterpieces as "Jerry Springer" and "The Simple Life" as part of our TV lineup?

We find nothing wrong with letting an amateur porn star have her own TV show about how cool it is to be completely stupid and codependent. And when movies like "Saving Private Lynch," and "The Elizabath Smart Story" – stories of young, violated girls – captivate audiences during a sweeps week, what do you expect these media companies to think of us as consumers?

As you read this, a storm is gathering over Jackson's "malfunction." Even Justin Timberlake has headed for the moral high ground by whining, "I was completely shocked and appalled, and all I could say was 'oh my God, oh my God.'"

Little does Timberlake know that he, himself, was an integral part in making the halftime show a failure. A red bra, a breast, what's the difference? If anything, that single exposure by Jackson was a summation of what to expect if the NFL decides to let McDonald-style profit schemes take over a wholesome tradition like the Super Bowl halftime show.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

A nation in terror

Jeffrey Napolitano

We are a terrified nation. We have been terrified, as a people, long before we were told Saddam Hussein could kill us all within 45 minutes. We have been terrified long before any planes crashed into the World Trade Center. We have been terrified long before we were convinced by a senile President that Grenada (the "Nutmeg Capital of the World") was the latest flashpoint in the war against Communism. We have been terrified long before McCarthy's Communist inquisition, terrified before both world wars. Before that, we were terrified that our Black slaves would get out of control, or that our conquered Native Indians might want their land back. Three hundred years ago, before the nation formally existed, we were afraid of each other, afraid that one of us was literally a witch. And even though most of us are not of ancestry from that far back, we have certainly inherited that mindset.

And nearly every single President we have had, since the creation of our country, has preyed upon our fears — through racism, through classism, through nationalism. Our current president, in particular, happens to be very good at preying upon our fears. We have, in the past, invaded other countries in the name of Christianity, decency, and democracy, and we continue to do so even today. Our patriotism has been one of the leading causes of genocide in the past few centuries. We have learned that restraint from violence, from bombing, from mass murder, is a threat to our "national security." Anyone who tells you differently is certainly un-American, and probably could use a little violence himself.

Our politicians and institutions are so corrupt that it's hard to keep up. We spend so much time quibbling over which party is more corrupt that we are blind to see that they are shadows of the same thing. Whether we prefer our president to wear a cowboy hat or play the saxophone, our quality of life still declines. Our money goes less into affecting our own lives, and more into the pockets of those who have the most money. We can't afford firefighters and teachers, food for the poor, or health care for tens of millions, but somehow we can talk about going to Mars without breaking down into laughter.

Many of us can ignore what our government is doing on our behalf, and how it spends our money. Now, more than ever, in all of history, people are bombarded with the message to buy something, anything, any sort of distraction that pumps money into the "economy." Chuck Palahniuk observed, quite succinctly, "Advertising has us chasing cars and clothes, working jobs we hate, so we can buy shit we don't need." We get such impulses every day, when we sit down in front of the tube, to watch shows about people whose lives you know more about than you do your own.

It's very hard to have hope.

But hope is not going to come from these monsters, these politicians. Nothing good will ever be initiated by those cowards, whose only language is perpetual compromise and who thrive upon the labor of the people they are supposed to serve. It is more than insulting to our intelligence to see that habitual bureaucrat, John Kerry, ride a motorcycle on stage on TV, a charlatan pretending to be a normal human being. Even more outrageous is his incessant references to his tour of duty in Vietnam, a kind of sick insistence that he is fit to be president, because he, too, can commit atrocities against humanity.

Bush, of course, is no better, and likely worse. He enjoyed dressing up in military gear, preceded by the execution of thousands of the very people he claimed to be empowering, proving that clearly he has what it takes to keep America safe. He and his cronies should have been thrown out of office, if only for his constant exploitation of the tragedy of 9-11, what Arundhati Roy properly calls, "the pillaging of even the most private human feelings for political purpose…It is," she said, "a terrible, violent thing for a State to do to its people." This fall, at the Republican National Convention, Bush will be at Ground Zero in New York City, to play to our fears, anger, and patriotism, as he and his party stand upon the graves of those who have died and pervert their suffering for political gain.

"Politics" can no longer be some abstract, academic process, undertaken by the middle class and debated by obdurate pundits; we cannot let it be. "Politics" is not going to a booth and pulling a lever once every four years. "Politics" has to be the act of us, the people of this country, taking control of our lives. Politicians will never utilize the resources of the country for the benefit of the people. At some point, we have to take what we want for ourselves, by ourselves.

We cannot be a nation forever living in fear.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Fountas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrea Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagnic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

World famous performer amazes small Bowker crowd

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Last Friday, the Bowker Auditorium hosted a stellar performance of contortion artist Maureen Fleming's seven act "Decay of the Angel." Though the cold and ice had locked much of the University of Massachusetts indoors, more than half of the Bowker auditorium was filled with individuals willing to brave the elements in the name of art.

Maureen Fleming
Decay of the Angel
Bowker, UMass
Feb. 6

In the void-like darkness that fell upon the crowd Fleming first immerged. She descended from the ceiling, a seemingly glowing human form in the omnipresent darkness. Right from the first act, "Sea of the Moon," Fleming commanded the attention of the crowd with her highly polished and extraordinarily choreographed contortions. Every one of her movements was intentional and timed to the music, in fact at first it took an effort in patience to focus on her ever so slow motions, but after a moment or two the sense of outer world time seemed to melt away and there was only the vague form of a woman telling a story.

The magic of the performance however was marred by technical difficulties with the lighting and sound equipment. Producer Bob Antil said, "We evidently had a short that we were unaware of but the staff here took care of it quickly."

Each of the first four acts was partitioned off from each other by the sound of breaking surf and a return to complete darkness. At the start of Act 2, "Womb Mandala," Fleming had deployed a translucent screen, which had a sort of cloud-like border that encapsulated her while she performed.

This was the first act where the audience was shown just how completely Fleming could alter the human body. At times it was difficult to distinguish body parts, and the diffused light and her elevated mountain platform made it hard to fully understand what Fleming's exact movements were. Here it became clear that this was not simply the dissection of individual motions, but a continuous story told through forms and sound.

One particularly emotionally-charged act, "To Tear Away the Robe of Flesh," utilized steady red lighting, and a strong fan that was blowing directly upon Fleming's cloth-draped face. The wind caused the sheet to billow and lash about where it was loose and mold to Fleming's body where it touched her. The effect of this was oddly fitting for the name, as the sheet appeared to be a flapping extension of Fleming's own flesh, as she danced with her face frozen in an Edvard Munch-like scream.

For each of the seven acts, Fleming would appear out of the empty black of the stage and proceed to stun the crowd with her grace and fluidity. Though in the entire performance she was the only performer seen, there was an entire team responsible for the unbelievable beauty of the performance.

Pianist Peter Phillips could be seen as a sort of ethereal musician during "Drift Wood." His melodic tone melded perfectly with Fleming's movements and positions, which mimicked the structure of a large hunk of actual driftwood that shared the stage with her.

Though he was not seen during the performance, Gaho Taniguchi, an Ikebana artist, made his presence felt. On the stage, huge translucent screens showed projections of kaleidoscopic floral images while Fleming performed. These images, though not easily identifiable, seemed to amplify the emotional significance of Fleming's motions.

Along with a list of other individuals, this performance was a wonderful melting pot of creative energy. During the final two acts, Fleming's image was projected on the screen in front of her. This projection made for an eerie affect that seemed not only to dwarf Fleming but to completely obliterate the darkness of the stage.

Shows of this quality are few and far between and much like all great things are unfortunately limited engagements. After her performance, Fleming departed for Boston and then to other, farther-reaching venues along her tour route. "Decay of the Angel" transcended its mere description as a contortionist performance, it was a haunting, exciting, and emotionally straining experience.

CAITLIN M. OTTO/COLLEGIAN

Moreen Fleming performed this particular one of her seven acts while standing on her head fpr the duration of it.

Honoring music's finest

46th Grammys sizzle despite censorship

By Nekesa Mumbi Moody
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Beyonce captured a record-tying five Grammys on Sunday for her solo debut album "Dangerously in Love," while Justin Timberlake had two and apologized for his role in Janet Jackson's Super Bowl flash.

Jackson's breast-baring at the hands of dance partner Timberlake remained the major subplot. CBS and Jackson offered conflicting reports about why she was not at the show, and CBS — which also televised the Super Bowl — instituted a five-minute delay on the "live" Grammy broadcast to avoid any more scandal.

"I know it's been a rough week on everybody," said Timberlake, stifling a self-deprecating laugh while accepting the best male pop vocal performance award for "Cry Me A River." He brought his mother as his date.

"What occurred was unintentional, completely regrettable, and I apologize if you guys are offended," he said.

The 46th annual awards show began at 4:55 p.m. with Prince — a former raunch king in his '80s heyday — performing "Purple Rain," marking the 20th year of the groundbreaking song and movie.

Beyonce, wearing a tight dress with a feather skirt that fleetingly revealed her pink panties, joined Prince on his hits and then sang her own "Crazy in Love," which won two trophies — for best R&B song and best rap/sung collaboration. Her boyfriend, Jay-Z, won two awards for collaborating on that hit.

Beyonce also won best female R&B performance for "Dangerously in Love," best contemporary R&B album for "Dangerously in Love" and best R&B performance by a duo or group with vocals for "The Closer I Get To You," a remake she did with Luther Vandross.

Her five trophies tied a record set by Alicia Keys, Norah Jones and Lauryn Hill for the most Grammys won by a female artist. "This is unbelievable. Performing was enough for me," an excited Beyonce said.

OutKast, nominated for a leading six Grammys, had won two awards an hour into the broadcast: best urban/alternative performance for "Hey Ya!" and best rap album for "Speakerboxxx-The Love Below."

Other multiple winners included Jack White of The White Stripes and Eminem, with two each, and bluegrass singer Alison Krauss, who had three.

The year's best-selling artist, rapper 50 Cent, was shut out despite five nominations. But the bullet-scarred rapper made sure he got onstage anyway, walking up with Evanescence when they beat him out for best new artist.

"Thank you, 50," said Evanescence's Amy Lee as the rap star smiled for the camera.

It was a rare moment of surprise for a tightly scripted show devoid of outrageousness or wildness — unlike today's pop scene.

COURTESY OF LAFACE RECORDS.COM

Outkast was nominated for six Grammys and managed to go home with two of them, including best urban/alternative performance

Timberlake was all over the awards, performing on several songs and winning two trophies. CBS said in a statement that it had reservations about allowing him and Jackson to appear as planned, but ultimately "respected the Recording Academy's wishes to produce the program they originally intended."

CBS said it agreed to allow Timberlake and Jackson as long as they apologized on the air for their Super Bowl stunt.

But a statement from Jackson's camp said CBS and the Grammys first asked her not to attend, then reversed themselves and re-invited her, but she chose not to attend.

"She was never uninvited," said Jason Padgitt of the publicity firm Rogers & Cowan, which represents the Recording Academy. "She was always invited to be here and she chose not to be."

The incident bubbled below the surface all night. "I don't want to have the same thing happen that Janet had done," Christina Aguilera said while accepting the award for best female pop vocal performance in a dress cut so low CBS briefly imposed a graphic across her chest. "But, uh, if I can keep it together ..."

Vandross, who suffered a debilitating stroke last year, also won two other awards: best male R&B vocal performance for "Dance With My Father," and best R&B album for "Dance With My Father." Vandross is still recovering and was not well enough to attend.

However, he did address the crowd via videotape after a tribute featuring Alicia Keys, Celine Dion and Richard Marx, who co-wrote "Dance With My Father" with Vandross. In his first public appearance since his stroke, a weak-looking Vandross said slowly: "I wish I could be with you there tonight. I want to thank everyone for your love and support.

"And remember, when I say goodbye it's never for long, because" — and he sang — "I believe in the power of love!"

Pharrell Williams, who along with Jay-Z and OutKast also had six nominations, won his first Grammy during the pre-telecast ceremony for his production work with Chad Hugo as white-hot hitmakers The Neptunes. They have produced songs for artists ranging from Justin Timberlake to Jay-Z in 2003 alone.

The Neptunes weren't even nominated last year, because the record companies they produced hits for forgot to put them on the ballot.

"I was a little upset last year," Pharrell acknowledged during his acceptance speech. He also used the opportunity to stand up for friends Jackson and Timberlake. "What happened at the Super Bowl was a bit much, but I happen to know both of those people ... and they've done great things to support people around the world."

COURTESY OF LAFACE RECORDS.COM

The duo of Andre "Ice Cold" 3000 and Big Boi (Outkast) managed to push the limits of the hip-hop genre with their work in 2003.

'Barbershop 2' bald in depth but is still a comedic cut up

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

Perhaps one of the most difficult kinds of movie reviews to write is for a sequel (or as of late the third part of a trilogy). One must simultaneously take into account the preceding film and decide whether the sequel fits the mold set by its predecessor and yet the sequel in many ways should be able to stand on its own. "Barbershop 2: Back in Business," the sequel to "Barbershop" (2002), was overall a pretty good sequel and movie in general.

Barbershop 2
Directed by Kevin Rodney Sullivan
Starring Ice Cube, Cedric the Entertainer
MGM Studios
Rated PG-13
115 mins.
Grade B

Sequels that harbor a different cast and crew than the first make it difficult to compare the acting, directing and sometimes writing to the first release. In the movie world of heightened reality, it is risky to ask the audience to extend their normative range of believability past breaking point.

Luckily, this was not the case with "Barbershop 2." Here we have virtually the same cast, playing the same roles. Ice Cube is Calvin, the owner of Calvin Jr's Barbershop. Cedric the Entertainer is Eddie the politically incorrect ex-fugitive who doesn't cut hair but enjoys his "free chair." Eve plays the smack talking "barberess" Terri Jones.

Tom Story, the director of "Barbershop," was an unknown at the time and has since established his directorial prowess so to speak. With fairly well-known director Kevin Rodney Sullivan ("How Stella Got her Groove Back") taking the reigns for the sequel, the overall look and feel remained pretty much in tact. If the same director for the first cannot direct the second, it is at least a good idea to have a professional take over. In retrospect, it is almost always a mistake to allow a novice to try his hand where a professional has left off. Sequels are typically "hard sells" in the first place, so one must ensure the audience that they will remain in good hands.

The main difficulty that arises with "Barbershop 2" is that while intelligently maintaining the same cast of characters, the story doesn't change all that much. A sequel is a continuation of the proceeding film, not a restructuring or rehashing of the same plot. Although it is a good idea to keep some of the themes from the first film intact and explore them further, the writer of a sequel must remember where the characters left off and from that starting point, rebuild for them an entirely new character arch.

At the end of "Barbershop" Calvin had learned that his inherited opportunity to own and operate his father's barbershop was priceless and this instilled in him the notion that the shop (and its quirky occupants) was worth more than it's weight in gold. In "Barbershop 2," Calvin's integrity is put to the test when the glamorous franchise Nappy Cutz is built across the street from his own humble shop.

The main conflict that is built upon in "Barbershop 2" is whether Calvin will sell out to the restructuring committee that is offering him a large sum of money to rebuild on his father's property. Well, according to Calvin's lesson garnered from the first movie, one can probably guess that Calvin will not sell out. Thus, there isn't enough tension in the sequel due to the fact that the audience is already familiar with Calvin's response to similar situations and the outcome of this response.

A problem that resounds in both of the "Barbershop" films is an overabundance of stereotypes. Ricky (Michael Ealy) is the quintessential thug trying to better himself. Terri (Eve) is the hardheaded female who is overcoming her experiences with abusive, deadbeat boyfriends. Gina (Queen Latifah) is the bent-necked busybody from next door who can dish out insults at the snap of her fingers. Even Eddie (Cedric) is supposedly an ex-con. Then there is Isaac "Slim Fadey" (Troy Garity), the white guy who is "rollin' up" on everyone's customers and claiming to be the best stylist there. It seems like we've seen all these characters before in different locations and different situations.

To conclude, "Barbershop" and "Barbershop 2" are indeed full of laughs. "Barbershop 2" in particular opens with a wonderful montage of black and white photos of our favorite African American icons donning different hair styles over the forever-changing decades. The key here is these opening visuals gave way to a mundane plot, featuring somewhat unchanging characters. Although poignant sociological commentary (many African Americans do indeed feel stuck in their situations), a movie is best when characters are forced to make change.

COURTESY SHOP

Ice Cube plays Calvin Jr., the proprietpr of the family barbershop and the host, of people it has attracted.

COURTESY MGM

Cedric the Entertainer plays the veteran Eddie who flaunts his pasionate views on everything.

the source
(the sorce) n; key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondayFebruary9

BOOKS

Poet Elizabeth Alexander, author of "The Venus Hottentot," will read from and discuss "The Black Interior," a collection of essays exploring black culture. The readings will highlight the uniqueness of African art in all its forms from literature to painting and into modern media. She will also look at individuals such as painter Jean-Michel Basquiat and actor Denzel Washington as a black male icon in a post-affirmative action era. The event will be held at The Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley and will begin at 7 p.m.

TuesdayFebruary10

BOOKS

British biographer Jane Dunn, author of "A Very Close Conspiracy: Vanessa Bell and Virginia Woolf and Antonia White," will be at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley to discuss, "Elizabeth and Mary: Cousins, Rivals, Queens." The discussion will take place at 7 p.m. In her work Dunn examines the private and personal history that existed between these two queens, Elizabeth I, the Queen of England, and Mary Queen of Scots. Victims of their time as women of similar station, these two women are often portrayed as being very similar but Dunn strives to point out exactly how different and unique they both were, in a world where a woman's character was so easily overlooked.

ART

The Augusta Savage Gallery based in the New Africa House on the UMass Amherst campus will open its new exhibit "A Moment in Tamulte." The exhibit will include photographs of family, friends, and local scenes from a workshop done with a group of Mayan teens in Tabasco, Mexico. The opening reception will run from 5-7 p.m. and the work will be on display until March 12.

ThursdayFebruary12

OPEN HOUSE

The Student Activities Center will hold its "Student Union Open House." The event is free and open to the entire university community. The event will begin at 11 a.m. and end at approximately 3 p.m. The purpose of the open house is to familiarize students with their own campus center and student union and get them in touch with the wealth of activities conducted within. Events will include a Bounce House in the Student Union Ballroom, one free game of pool at Student Union Billiards, and much, much more. Refreshments will be offered by student-run businesses.

MUSIC

American Country Music Entertainer of the Year Toby Keith is coming to the Mullins Center. The singer/songwriter is currently on tour in support of his "Shock'N Yall" album. Opening the show will be special guest Blake Shelton. Tickets are on sale now at the Mullins Center Box Office, all Ticketmaster locations, charge-by-phone (413) 733-2500 and online at ticketmaster.com for $50.75 and $40.75.

PERFORMING ARTS

Amherst College will host, "Zora's Barbeque." A fictional tale that the Valley Advocate describes thusly: "Zora [is] a sex-crazed therapist who holds an indoor barbeque with the most unusual guests, including her teenage daughter's principal and his girlfriend, several of her patients and a homeless man. The afternoon leads to sex, twister and death." Written by Julia Brownell and directed by Sheila Siragusa, the play will be held in the Kirby Theater and is free to the public. Shows will play through Feb. 14 once a night at 8 p.m.

FridayFebruary13

MUSIC

The Pacifica Quartet will perform at the Bowker Auditorium in a show entitled, "Welcome to the String Quartet." This energetic ensemble introduces the music of three composers and invites the audience to participate in a quiz show and in a performance with the Quartet of Haydn's "Toy Symphony." The quartet will perform Beethoven's Quartet in E-flat major, Op. 74, "Harp" and Quartet in C-sharp minor, Op. 131. This quartet won the 1996 Coleman Chamber Music Competition, the 1997 Concert Artists Guild Competition and the 1998 Naumburg Chamber Music Award. The show begins at 10 a.m. and admission is $5 for students and $8 for adults

SaturdayFebruary14

MUSIC

University of Massachusetts Professor Eduardo Leandro and his Percussion Ensemble will the highlight of "Middle and Far East Musical Influences: Percussion Day Concert and Workshop. The event will be held at 7 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center. Works to be featured will include "Marimba Spiritual" by composer Minoru Miki and Ioshisisha Taira's work "Hierophonie VI," which is written for six players and includes over 60 instruments. Tickets are on sale for $5 for students and $10 for general admission and can be purchased through the FAC box office at 413-545-2511.

MUSIC

On Saturday, February 14, 2004 at 7:30 p.m. The Barenaked Ladies will be celebrating Valentine's Day by returning to the Mullins Center as part of their Peep Show Tour promoting their new CD "Everything to Everyone." Opening the show will be Gavin Degraw and Butterfly Boucher. Tickets are on sale now at the Mullins Center Box Office and at ticketmaster.com for $45 and $35.

PERFORMING ARTS

The Smith College Department of Dance presents, "Four," a show composed of the work of graduate student choreographers Sam Kenney, Jacqueline Kinsman, Cathy Nicoli and Thomas Vacanti. Each of the choreographers has studied in different areas of dance, making "Four" an eclectic dance performance. The show will be held at Smith College's Auditorium 14 and it begins at 8 p.m. Admission is $8 for general and $5 for students, to make reservations call 413-585-ARTS.

PERFORMANCE

The Black Sheep Café in downtown Amherst at 79 Main Street will host its monthly "Song and Story Swap," from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. On the second Friday of every month, the Black Sheep Café opens its stage to story-tellers and singers of all types. Everyone is welcome and the event is free. This month special musical guests The Boys of the Landfill will be present. The Shutesbury-based band consists of Geof Rogers on guitar and mandolin, Rob Hayes on fiddle, and Michael Pattavina on banjo and bass guitar. For more information go to the co-sponsor the Pioneer Valley Folklore Society's website at fiibert.com/pvfs.

SundayFebruary15

BOOKS

The Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley continues its "Sundays with Shakespeare," a third-Sunday-of-the-month discussion focusing on the works of Shakespeare. The discussions are led by University of Massachusetts Professor of English Arthur F. Kinney. This month's discussion will be on Macbeth and starts at 11 a.m.

weeklypinup

'SHOCKI'N' UMASS

2003 American Country Music Entertainer of the Year, Toby Keith will be coming to the Mullins Center on Thursday, Feb. 12. The singer/songwriter is currently on tour in support of "Shocki'N Y'All" which was released early last November on Dreamworks Records. Appearing with Keith will be special guest Blake Shelton. Tickets are on sale through the Mullins Center box office for $40.75 - $50.75.

Why are you still Grocery Shopping? Cooking? Cleaning?

YCMP
A WORLD OF CHOICES
- DINING SERVICES

Be smart
Get YCMP and concentrate on the real question.

What are you going to do with all that extra money?

...ive anytime at
...Meal Plan Office in Franklin.
...through Friday.

Win an iPod mini!

Take the HSCN Survey!

HSCN

In order to make important programming decisions we need your input. If you want additional channels such as HBO or FX then this is your opportunity to be heard!

All participants are automaticlly entered to win several prizes. The Grand Prize is an iPod mini donated by mtvU!

To enter you must be a student living in on-campus housing.

FOR MORE INFORMATION VISIT:
www.housing.umass.edu/hscn

HBO Cartoon Network tbs abc tnt MTV CNN The WB upn FOX Discovery Channel SHOWTIME Comedy Central H2 NBC ESPN

HSCN

UMass out-Duked

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Junior forward Edris Bailey led the Massachusetts women's basketball team on both ends of the court Sunday with 16 points and a career-high 18 rebounds. The problem was that no one followed her lead offensively in the Minutewomen's 46-42 loss to Duquesne at the A.J. Palumbo Center.

Bailey's double-double was the only offensive upside for the Minute-women

UMass	42 (5-16,
Duquesne	46 1-9 Atlantic 10),

as the rest of team struggled from the field. She was also aggressive defensively with three steals in the contest.

The junior college transfer has put up consistent numbers this season in the scoring and rebounding columns, averaging 11.3 points and 7.4 rebounds against A-10 opponents.

Senior Judit Zsedenyi, the second leading scorer on team behind Bailey, struck a cold streak going 4-of-15 from the field including a dismal 1-for-10 performance behind the arc. Zsedenyi still finished with nine points, close to her season average of 9.8 points per game. Her scoring average has dipped below double figures after being held to under 10 points in her last four games.

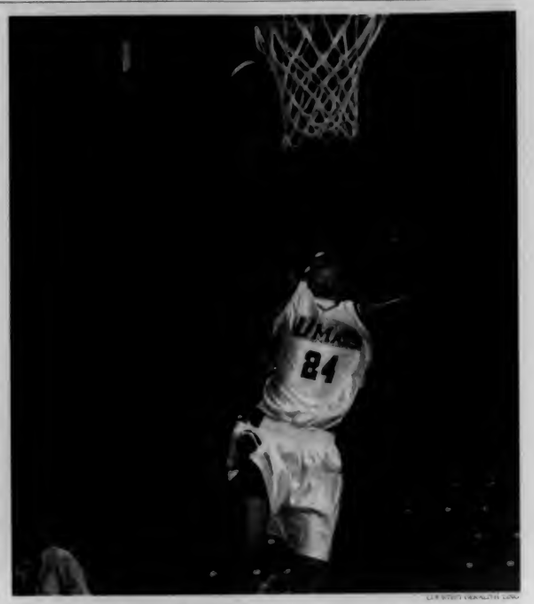
"Edris had a great game," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "She pulled down 18 rebounds after being out all this week. She came right out of the gate and played well. We have to start getting more people involved though."

UMass has been working through scoring woes all season. However, they are still one of the best defensive teams in the Atlantic 10, holding the Dukes (12-10, 7-4 A-10) scoreless over 6:07 in the first half, but the Minutewomen were only able to score two points during the stretch while leading 13-8.

Freshman Joyce Massey and senior captain Cleo Foster had stellar defensive performances. Massey came up with five points and two steals. Foster, who was selected a captain due to her defensive leadership, remained consistent with a two-steal and two-block effort to go along with her four points.

The Minutewomen are ranked second in the A-10, with 59.9 ppg allowed, behind Xavier's 58.5.

"We tried to mix things up quite a bit," said Dacko, "We used two different zones, a man-to-man and a trap throughout the game. We managed to hold them to only 23 points at half, but we only managed 17 points ourselves. I contribute it to a lack of focus since we had a chance in the final two minutes and that's the frustrating part."



For the 12th time this season, the Minutewomen out rebounded their opponent, yet their record in those games is 2-10. All seven UMass players that played recorded at least two rebounds apiece.

The game was full of bodies hitting the floor for loose balls and poor shooting displays. Both teams shot poorly, with Duquesne finishing at 32 percent (17-of-54) and UMass at 30 percent (20-of-66).

Aiga Bautre finished with a game-high 18 points, going 7-of-10 including 4-of-7 from the 3-point line. Candace Futrell, the A-10's leading scorer at 21.4 ppg, contributed 14 points along with eight rebounds on 4-of-16 field goal attempts. Sophomore Nicole Sinclair chipped in with seven points and a career-high nine rebounds. That trio was the difference on the scoreboard, combining for 85 percent of their team's scoring.

"When you look at this game, it was a great defensive effort," said Dacko, who is still looking for her 100th win. "The problem was the lack of scoring. We had 17 offensive rebounds and only got two second chance points. We also missed a lot of seven to eight-foot jump shots. We've just got to work on putting the ball in the basket."

As the scoring woes continue, so do the struggles away from the Mullins Center. The Maroon and White extended its road losing streak to 19 games.

Edris Bailey scored 16 points and pulled down a career-high 18 rebounds against Duquesne yesterday. The Minutewomen lost the game 46-42, continuing their six-game losing streak.

UMass splits weekend

HOCKEY from page 8

"We didn't play well in front of him [last weekend]," Umile said in defense of his senior netminder. "I told him before the game, 'Michael, just continue to carry us.'"

Ayers acquitted himself well in Durham, stopping 25 of 27 shots.

The Minutemen ensured a split with a well-played 4-1 win over New Hampshire Friday night in front of 6,613 at the Mullins Center — the third-largest hockey crowd in the building's history.

Winer made 18 saves, and the Minutemen received goals from four different players to earn their first win over the Wildcats in 10 tries.

Though the Wildcats only took 19 shots on Winer, many were hard or from in close, requiring the Stoughton native to play well enough to earn first-star honors. Winer was nearly perfect, but for an Aikins goal with 1:11 to play.

"I thought the difference was the goaltending tonight," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "[Winer] can play goal. He has a good sense for the position, he can read plays well, and he's not a kid who's stopping the puck by a stroke of luck. The kid just loves stopping the puck."

On offense, UMass was just as solid, putting constant pressure on the Wildcat defense and Pietrasiak. Nick Kuiper and James Solon scored in the first period, and Garrett Summerfield and Josh Hanson added to the total in the second.

"It's a statement," Solon said. "It says we can beat anybody if we just play hard."

Eastern stars win

By Alan Robinson
Associated Press

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — In a relatively low-scoring NHL All-Star game befitting what is jokingly called hockey's dead-puck era, 43-year-old Mark Messier turned back the clock to a different time.

Messier, who was winning Stanley Cups before some of the other All-Stars were born, had a goal and an assist and Daniel Alfredsson had two goals to lead the Eastern Conference past the Western Conference 6-4 Sunday.

East	6
West	4

All-Star MVP Joe Sakic of Colorado had a hat trick for the West, but the three goals weren't enough to prevent the East's fifth victory in the last six All-Star games played with an East vs. West format. The 54 All-Star Games have been playing under varying formats.

If it was his last All-Star Game — and, perhaps the NHL's last for a while as it prepares for what could be months of divisive labor talks — at least Messier left behind a lasting memory with his sixth multiple-point game in 15 All-Star appearances.

They like to call Minnesota the State of Hockey and, fittingly, the NHL's All-Star Game there reflected the state of its hockey, too. It was only the second All-Star Game with fewer than 10 goals in the last 19 seasons; there were nine goals scored in 1996.

Messier set up the game's first goal, Adrian Aucoin's shot that eluded goalie Marty Turco's glove as he swiped at it in the first period, to set an All-Star game record with his 14th assist, one more than Ray Bourque had in 19 games.

Messier, who was already a Stanley Cup winner with Edmonton when 19-year-old Columbus All-Star Rick Nash was born, later tied it at 3 with the first of three consecutive East goals in the final 6:12 of the second period against Nashville goalie Tomas Vokoun. Vokoun let in four of the 12 shots he faced in his All-Star debut.

Messier's goal, his sixth in an All-Star game and his first since 1998, gave him 20 career points — breaking a tie with Gordie Howe for third place in All-Star history.

Gary Roberts, who retired for the 1996-97 season because of a neck injury but came back a year later, put the East ahead by slamming Alfredsson's long rebound past Vokoun less than a minute after Messier's goal. Alfredsson, the Ottawa star who played most of the game on a line with rival Mats Sundin of Toronto, made it 5-3 late in the second by swiping in a Sundin shot that lay in the crease between Vokoun's pads.

Despite the big games by players who are 22 years apart, and a goal and an assist by Roberts in his first All-Star appearance in 11 years, the game reflected how defense now rules the NHL.

There were only two goals scored in the first period against goalies Martin Brodeur of the East and Turco, and only two in the third as goalies Jose Theodore of the East and Dwayne Roloson of the West — and All-Star host Minnesota — made a series of exceptional saves.

The only goal against Brodeur was by Sakic, who tied it at 1 with his first of his consecutive goals for the West. Sakic's three goals equaled his total in his first eight All-Star games.

Though the final score would be a shootout by today's standards in a sport where goal-scoring had dropped by 2.5 goals per game to an average of five in the last 15 years, it was far below that of the 16-goal average of the last 14 games. Only three years ago, North America beat the World All-Stars by the football-like score of 14-12 in Denver, a game derided by hockey purists.

Sunday's game actually had some contact and some checking, a rarity in a mostly hitting-free game in which the last thing any player wants to do is get hurt.

After the East's Jeremy Roenick delivered a hard check on the West's Keith Tkachuk during the first period, Tkachuk responded by slamming Roenick into the boards, drawing one of the few big ovations from the sellout crowd.

The crowd gave Messier a standing ovation before the game, and cheered his goal, even though it came for the opposing East.

THE HARDEST DECISION YOU'LL EVER HAVE TO MAKE IN COLLEGE.

TUITION FOR A YEAR?

THE ULTIMATE DORM ROOM? (complete with flat screen TV, surround sound, laptop and more)

A NEW CAR?

ENTER: YOU WANT IT? YOU GOT IT! THE CONTEST WHERE YOU CHOOSE THE PRIZE!

LOG ON: mtvU.com

WATCH mtvU at UMASS on channel 62

mtvU THE CHANNEL JUST FOR YOU. NOW ON YOUR CAMPUS.

No Purchase necessary. Contest open to legal residents of the U.S. at least 18 years old and currently enrolled at a college or university that is a current carrier of the programming service mtvU. Entries must be received by Feb. 10, 2004 at 10:00 AM (EST). Void where prohibited or restricted by law. Contest subject to the Official Rules. Visit mtvU.com for more details.

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience

Spring Break Last-Minute Specials from $199*

For More Info Call 1-888-SPRING BREAK (1-888-777-4642)

WWW.STUDENTCITY.COM

*Based on quad occupancy. Valid only at select destinations. Call or visit our website for a complete list of specials.

This is Stacy's Mom.

Stacy is her first child to leave the nest. Help her, help her daughter to find out if the University of Massachusetts is right for her. Give them a tour. Give Stacy an informal interview. Answer questions, provide guidance, make a difference.

Apply to be a Student Admissions Representative!

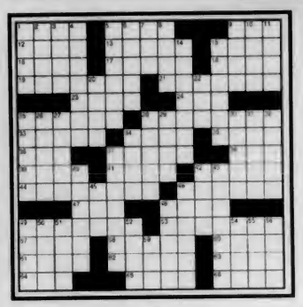
Applications are available at the Visitor's Center, the Undergraduate Admissions Office, or you can visit us at our table on the Campus Center Concourse between February 9th and 13th from 9:00 a.m. until 3:00 p.m. If you have any questions, please e-mail us at reps@admissions.umass.edu.

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across

1 House component
5 Hypothesize
9 Montreal's prov.
12 Gluck of opera
13 Mr. Spock's forte
15 — lu
16 Repeat
17 Something else
18 Part letters
19 Carry a canoe
21 Formal wear
23 Quiz
25 "I've been robbed!"
26 Derision
28 Vatican sight
33 Oodles
34 Mocking comment
35 London district
36 Timberwolves' org.
37 Rosts up
38 Deckhand
39 Ricky Ricardo
41 Lawyer, briefly
42 Stop, to Pierre
44 Warm
45 Swamp gases
47 Outscore
48 Import vehicle
49 Devotion
53 Weed
57 Pay only one's money
58 Finish astronaut
60 Thersites
61 Jiffies
62 Fixed the pilot
63 Epic
64 Gluck of disapproval
65 Shriveled from heat
66 Recipe amt

Down



1 Stair alternative
2 Butter substitute
3 Gen. Bradley's

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-9-03 © 2003 Universal Feature Syndicate, Inc.

name
4 "The — Falcon"
6 Motto
8 Family tree to some
7 "Ivan"
8 Food plan
9 Campus area
10 Cuban Hula
11 They're easily bruised
14 Sea voyages
15 Uses a prayer rug
20 Figure-skating jump
22 Sailor's tie
25 Deer or Hunt
26 Pie —
27 Muscular connection
29 Origin
30 Skillfully
30 Beelzebub
31 Deep fissure
32 Major artery
34 Cicero's 6th
37 Dimmer
40 Hawkeyes
42 Verdi homes
43 Lewis rumble
45 Wasn't at all
46 Change gender/ality
48 In a torment
49 Keep on going
50 Gaiters and bauble
51 Exclamation of disgust
52 St. Laurent
54 Seafood entree
55 Quiche ingredients
56 Laundry need
59 Percent ending

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meatball Sub
- Chicken Fajita Chili Nachos
- Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)
- Gardenburger Chick'n Grill (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Parmesan
- Savory Baked Chicken
- Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan)
- Southern 7 Bean Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 27

TUESDAY
- High: 45
- Low: 20

WEDNESDAY
- High: 38
- Low: 18

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrews Merritt

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Caitlin Ott

COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Katie Dwan

PRODUCTION STAFF
Russell Silva, Diana Mogilevskis

Horoscopes

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Just forget you're unhappy and have fun.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Stop being such a jerk.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Having nowhere to go is better than having no food to eat.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't let people get your morale down.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Put your best foot forward. If you put it back you'll just end up one step farther away.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Crawl under your desk and hide.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Stop pigging out in the DC. The waffle machine is for everyone.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't pass out in others' beds.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Beware of green French fries.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's difficult to resist temptation when it's in front of you.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Wear some UMass apparel. Have team spirit.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Why is that James kid so darn attractive?

Quote for the Day

"Eleven seconds, you got ten seconds, the countdown going on right now. Five seconds left in the game, four seconds, do you believe in miracles? Yes!"

-Al Michaels

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartment for Rent

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspensquare.com

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

2000 KIA Sportage Must Sell Leaving country. CD, AC, 4WD, Sunroof, Book Price $6000 Asking $5000 413-695-3034

Auto for Sale

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Sporty! Nissan Pathfinder SE Utility 4door with 4 wheel drive 1995. $4500 1-413-687-7510

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Employment

CAMP CANADENSIS, A PREMIER RESIDENTIAL SUMMER CAMP, located in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. (2 hours from New York City and Philadelphia). Our counselors teach, supervise, and share in the day-to-day experience of each camper, together forming lasting friendships. Our staff brings enthusiasm and motivation as well as understanding and sensitivity. We are looking for qualified staff to instruct athletics, LFG, WSI, waterskiing, wakeboarding, sailing, jet skiing, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, cooking, arts & crafts, outdoor adventure; including high and low ropes, climbing walls, mountain biking, motor bikes, fishing and much more. Excellent facilities and great salary! ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS, 2/23-2/27. Call 800-832-8228 or apply online, www.canadensis.com

Employment

Start your career now! Upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland. Customer service, wait staff, or retail experience ideal. This is a part-time position during the school semesters, and full time in the summer. The experience is a great introduction to a career track in business or marketing. Must be able to work Saturdays. Please call Amy at (413)781-0734 ext.732.

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Employment

$250 to $500 a week Will train to work at home Helping the U.S. Government file HUD/FHA mortgage refunds No experience necessary Call Toll Free 1-866-537-2907

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater. Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

Furniture

Double Bed Set with frames: 2 years old, very comfortable! Call Jimmy @ 603-303-0167

Travel

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Spring Break 2004 It's here...book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipmunn.com 877-4-cancun.

Place your own classified ad in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace! Call 545-3500 or visit us in the Campus Center Basement today!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hockey splits weekend with UNH

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Sophomore Gabe Winer turned aside 18 shots on Friday to lead the Minutemen to a 4-1 victory over UNH. UMass lost on Saturday 3-2 in OT against the Wildcats in Durham, N.H. Winer made 23 saves in Game 2.

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — Saturday night, the Massachusetts hockey team was a wrist shot away from first place in Hockey East.

That wrist shot, however, belonged to New Hampshire's Justin Aikins.

Aikins buried a rebound with 40 seconds to go in overtime, giving the Wildcats (16-10-3, 8-6-3 Hockey East) a 3-2 win over the Minute-men (16-6-5, 12-4-2 HEA) at the Whittemore Center, just one night after UMass thoroughly beat UNH in Amherst.

UNH	1
UMass	4
UMass	2
UNH	3

With the loss, the Minutemen remain one point out of first place, behind Boston College. They will also have to wait to clinch home-ice advantage in the conference playoffs, which they would have locked up with a combination of a weekend sweep and UMass Lowell's 4-2 loss to Providence yesterday.

UMass coach Don Cahoon, as usual, summed the night up very simply after the game.

"Another tough night at the Whitt," Cahoon said.

After the hosts controlled much of the game, the Minutemen struck late to tie it at 2, but a too many men on the ice penalty at the end of regulation made the first few minutes of overtime a little more difficult for the visitors.

While the UMass penalty kill kept the Wildcats at bay for the 1:52 of five-on-four play in overtime, the infraction put a damper on the Minutemen's surge, which was punctuated by Nick Kuiper's tying goal with 1:37 left in regulation.

The Wildcats took a lead in the third that nearly reached the end of the game. Preston Callander, the hero of the Wildcats' last meeting with UMass on December 11, positioned himself in front of goaltender Gabe Winer's net, and when Daniel Winnik's shot was stopped, Callander ripped it into the far side of the net, giving UNH a 2-1 lead with 13:51 to go.

For just over 12 minutes, it looked like the score would stay that way, until a scramble in front of UNH goaltender Mike Ayers' net produced a loose puck at Kuiper's feet. The senior from Beaconsfield, Quebec knocked it home to send the game into overtime, tied 2-2.

Both teams scored their first goal in the second period. The Wildcats got things started when Daniel Winnik wristed a shot at Winer (23 saves), who made the initial save but allowed a rebound that popped up in the air. Winnik then did his best Ted Williams impression, batting the waist-high changeup past Winer to make it 1-0 UNH 9:12 into the middle frame.

The Minutemen struggled to counter, although they played a well-organized power play when Andrew Leach went into the box for hitting from behind with 2:38 to go. Just four seconds after Leach's penalty expired, Tim Vitek tipped a Greg Mauldin slap shot past Ayers, knotting the game at one heading into the third period.

While Friday night's first period was all UMass, Saturday night the Wildcats showed up early and often. The two teams traded jabs, with a number of quality scoring chances for each, and by the end of the opening frame, both goaltenders had made 10 saves.

UMass did lose one of its keystones for half of the first period. Kuiper was sent off at 7:22 for interference, and earned another 10 minutes for unsportsmanlike conduct, likely the result of some extracurricular discussion with referee Tim Benedetto. The Minutemen didn't end up taking any damage, but playing without the services of their best defensive blueliner changed the team's strategy some.

Umile gave Ayers the start, one night after sophomore Jeff Pietrasiak gave up four goals to the Minutemen. Ayers allowed 10 combined goals to Maine in the Black Bears' two-game sweep of UNH on Jan. 30 and 31.

See HOCKEY on page 6

Minutemen grounded by Flyers

Lasme's defense shines against bigger opponent

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts freshman center Stephane Lasme is playing his first season of organized basketball in the United States, but don't tell that to Dayton's Keith Waleskowski.

A pre-season First Team All-Atlantic 10 selection, the 6-foot-10 Waleskowski surely expected to have a field day Sunday afternoon at the Mullins Center against what amounts to the smallest team in the conference.

Since losing starting center Gabe Lee to a season-ending ankle injury at St. Bonaventure, the Minutemen start only one player taller than 6-foot-6 and boast only two such players on the active roster.

However in a game that had "trap" written all over it for the Flyers, it was the 6-foot-8 native of Gabon, Africa who did yeoman's work in keeping UD's inside game contained for much of the first half, and finding his offensive touch in the second half to allow the Maroon and White to make a spirited charge at handing the Flyers their first conference setback of the season.

"I thought Stephane played very well today," Massachusetts coach Steve Lappas said. "He was a solid presence on both ends of the floor."

"He was very active on both ends and changed a lot of what we were trying to do down low, especially involving Keith [Waleskowski]," Dayton coach Brian Gregory added. "We knew he blocked shots, but I thought he did a nice job on Keith [Waleskowski] down low — his athleticism really caused problems."

Coming in among the top 10 in the nation in blocks per game, Lasme capitalized on early foul trouble for Waleskowski and frontcourt mate Rashaun Freeman by making the most of his nine minutes of playing time in the first half, scoring five points and grabbing four rebounds.

However Lasme's best was yet to come, as his second half of play was arguably his best as a collegiate athlete. Faced with the return of Waleskowski upon the start of the second frame, Lasme was immediately forced into action when Freeman picked up his third foul just 3:02 into the half.

With Dayton ahead by eight after a 3-pointer by Mark Jones at the 15:14 mark, Lasme then went to work on both Waleskowski and seven-foot center Sean Finn. The only true big man in the game for UMass, Lasme was relentless on the offensive glass and saw it pay off as part of eight straight points for the freshman — notable in the fact that it helped him accumulate a team-high 13 points on the game, a new career-best for the former Gabon National Team member.

"We know Stephane's going to get his blocks and rebounds," Junior captain Anthony Anderson said. "But what he did on offense today was really big for us. It helped keep us in the game down the stretch."

Coupled with seven rebounds, including six offensive boards and multiple times keeping loose balls alive, Lasme's 13 points and six blocks — including a monster swat of a Waleskowski offering down the stretch in the second half — certainly accentuated what was a breakthrough performance for a player who is very much a part of rebuilding the Minuteman program to national prominence.

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team dropped a disappointing 66-59 decision to Dayton yesterday before 4,076 at the Mullins Center.

UMass junior Anthony Anderson hit a 3-pointer to tie the game at 54, but Flyers senior forward Keith Waleskowski responded with a quick bucket to give his team a two-point lead. After a scoreless minute and a half, Waleskowski upped his team's lead to four with another bucket.

Dayton	66
UMass	59

Two Ramod Marshall foul shots gave Dayton a six-point lead with just over a minute and a half remaining.

A Rashaun Freeman foul shot at the 1:19 mark cut the Flyers' lead to five, but Marshall's jumper with 49 seconds remaining pushed the lead back up to seven. Ten seconds later, UMass junior Chris Chadwick quickly responded with a layup and Dayton's lead was back to five.

The Flyers pushed their lead back up to eight with a bucket and free throw, putting the game out of UMass' reach. A Chadwick lay-up with 11 seconds remaining was too little, too late.

"I thought our guys gave an unbelievable effort in that game," UMass head coach Steve Lappas said. "They played as hard and as hungry as they possibly could and it came down to us missing some shots. I told them from the first day of practice if we lose a game because we missed good shots, then that's basketball. We played hard, we played defense, we rebounded, we fought that team every inch of the way."

In recent games, freshmen Art Bowers and Maurice Maxwell have stepped up in clutch situations for UMass. In yesterday's game, neither player was able to find their rhythm giving Chadwick, a junior transfer, more court time. Chadwick scored a career-high 12 points in 28 minutes.

"Maurice and Artie were struggling a little bit tonight so obviously that opens up some minutes for someone else and Chris stepped up," Lappas said. "Chris gives us a great option. He's a little bit older, even though he's a new kid he's really starting to find his way too."

Freshman Stephane Lasme has been a key player for the Minutemen since junior center Gabe Lee went down with an ankle injury last month, and yesterday Lasme scored a career-high 13 points and six blocks in the loss. He also grabbed seven rebounds.

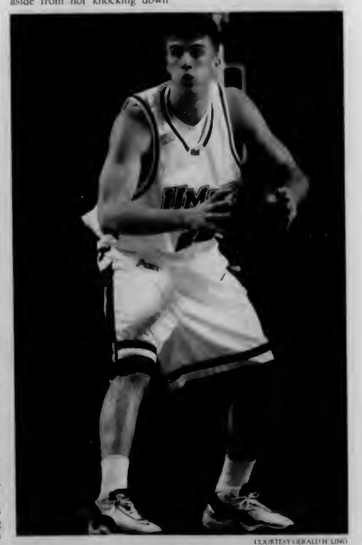
Chadwick and Lasme were just two of the four Minutemen in double figures as Anderson and sophomore Jeff Viggiano each had 11. Viggiano registered his third double-double of the season, adding a career-high 13 rebounds.

Due to the overwhelming presence of Freeman, Lasme and Viggiano underneath, Dayton was unable to get the ball into its big men in the first half. The Flyers were denied opportunities inside and were forced to take outside shots. The Flyers shot 5-for-13 from downtown and were outrebounded on their end of the floor 13-9.

As for Marshall, he shot 1-for-11 from the floor, a stat Lappas attributed to Anderson's defensive presence.

"Anthony Anderson is just a tremendous defender," Lappas said. "He has not been hurt by anybody bigger than him or smaller than him. He's just a great defender he did another great job tonight."

Dayton coach Brian Gregory knew that this game against UMass wasn't going to be an easy one.



"Obviously going into this game, I felt UMass was playing probably their best basketball this season," he said. "I knew they would cause match up problems with Freeman inside being very, very good and Bowers was their leading scorer three out of five games.

"We prepared for this game like it was the most important game of the year and for us it really was. It's one of those games you feel good and fortunate to get out of here with a win."

Lappas was very proud of his team's effort and thought that aside from not knocking down shots, the loss boiled down to a lack of experience.

"I just told our guys that the difference in this game was that it was strictly experience versus inexperience," he said.

"I think our young kids are coming along. They're playing hard and getting better. We know we can beat this team ... we need to be proud of the effort we gave, we fought as hard as we could."

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Jeff Viggiano scored 11 points and grabbed 13 rebounds for the Minutemen yesterday against Dayton.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo show Noho the spirit of South Africa
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

UMass football hires former NU head coach as new chief
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 79

Proposal to reconstruct Office of ALANA Affairs cancelled

SGA executive board makes decision following last night's heated debate

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

A heated discussion occurred in a meeting between members of the African, Latino, Asian and Native American student organization and the Student Government Association last night, resulting in the elimination of the SGA's new proposal for the reconstruction of the Office of ALANA Affairs.

The SGA executive board retracted the proposal approximately 45 minutes after the meeting ended.

In the proposal made by Russell Plato, SGA Secretary of Diversity, the OAA would become the Office of Community Diversity Affairs, or CDA, an office that would eliminate the OAA. The mission of the new CDA office would address the racial diversity issues Office of ALANA Affairs usually addresses, as well as class, culture, religion, sexuality, age and gender.

"The executive board is withdrawing the entire proposal," Plato said. "It was a decision made by the entire board."

"Hallelujah!" said OAA member Eduardo Bustamante, upon hearing the proposal recall. "This is wonderful news [for ALANA]. We have been under constant attacks."

Many members of ALANA originally feared that Plato's proposal would not only eliminate the ALANA organization, but would also lose sight of racial issues as the office was combined with missions other student outreach programs, such as Everywoman's Center and the Stonewall Center.

"ALANA is there to ensure that students have a voice," said ALANA member Jannielle Ramkissoon. "You can do that without getting rid of ALANA. If we [student outreach programs] work together within the [current] system, we could be even better."

Dan Pomeroy, an officer of the Pride of Lions organization and member of the Stonewall Center, was one of the few audience members who supported the proposal.

"ALANA should represent all types of diversity. I've never seen them involved in our community and this would be a good way to bring all diversity together," he said.

Now that the proposal is eliminated, the OAA plans to address the issue of filling its assistant director position, which has remained empty for the past 18 months.

According to Nelson Acosta, director of the OAA and the office's only professional staff member, OAA is already understaffed and lacking funds. The office is running on a budget of approximately $170,000. The process to appoint an interim assistant director has been underway after the search for a full-time candidate was put on hold due to the lack of applicable candidates.

The situation is further compacted by Acosta's need to take a four month medical leave due to personal illness. His absence will leave the OAA without any professional staff, which is a concern for staff and students alike.

"I intend to have an interim so the students will not suffer," said Acosta. "I want to appoint someone who knows the office and what the students want."

Until last night, the possible reconstruction of the office was another added pressure on the understaffed office.

"The CDA [would] not give the attention and respect to the unique and different students' needs on campus. Combining programs would make things much, much worse and overly stressed," said Acosta.

In an interview with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Plato offered the services of the SGA and Secretary of Diversity to the ALANA office members.

"I'd like to extend my help to ALANA to possibly work to strengthen the current office," he said.

Rene Gonzalez, a graduate student and ALANA staff member was not surprised by the proposal's post-meeting withdrawal.

"Plato was pretty defiant until the end," he said. For Gonzalez, one of the main issues of the meeting was that the proposal had been written without ALANA's input.

"You did not consult the community," said Gonzalez told Plato during a question and answer session. "As Secretary of Diversity, I believe it is your job not to lead students of color toward your own visions."

Gonzalez says that ALANA is willing to work with the SGA but "any future proposals will have to be consulted with the OAA and the ALANA caucus to be credible."

Issues that will possibly be addressed in the future include space, funding and staffing issues.

"We need to get our assistant director position filled," said Gonzalez. "The appointment of more staff directors would help divide up the [current] office workload."

The SGA's original proposal would have included three professional staff members, including an executive director and two other directors, as well as a student internship program and an advisors board comprised of members of Administrative affairs, undergraduates, UMass staff and faculty and the CDA executive director.

"When we address race and ethnicity, sometimes you deal with other issues like gender, class, and background. It made sense to broaden the range of issues the office would address," Plato said.

After another battle won, the struggle for the ALANA office isn't over yet. "I don't know what's going to happen to the office [when Acosta leaves]," said Bustamante.

ANDREW TAKLIONIS/COLLEGIAN

(Top) Jannielle Ramkissoon, a member of ALANA, confronts SGA last night.

(Right) Rene Gonzalez, an ALANA advocate, addresses members of the University community at last night's SGA diversity roundtable in the campus center.

Black Panther advocates for prison reform

Elaine Brown, the only woman to lead the Black Panther Party, addresses social change last night.

By Casey Novak
Collegian Correspondent

"We must live to fight another day," former Black Panther leader Elaine Brown said to a crowd of about 200 people yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

Brown, the only female to lead the Black Panther movement, emphasized in her speech the need for change and rebirth of all Americans as well as prison reform and the idea of free education in America.

"We've gone so many steps backward that we've practically forgotten what forward was," Brown said.

Although the Black Panther Party was labeled by some as a terrorists' organization, Brown said their main focus was on human equality. She said that all of us are tied together whether we want to be or not, and quoted Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. as saying, "The destiny of black people is tied to the destiny of white people."

Brown's latest book, "New Age Racism and the Condemnation of 'Little B,'" focuses on the story of a 14-year-old boy who is being tried as an adult for a Georgia murder. Michael "Little B" Lewis at age 15, was charged with murder in the January 1997 shooting death of Darrell Woods, a 25-year-old man who had stopped with his wife and two sons at a convenience store in the Bluff, Ga.

Prosecutors maintained that Lewis, dealing drugs outside the store that night, had told Woods to dim his headlights. When Woods refused, Lewis — reportedly egged on by older drug dealers — retrieved a rifle from an alley and shot Woods. A jury deliberated for 90 minutes before convicting Lewis. He became the youngest person in Georgia sent to an adult prison for murder. After "Little B" was arrested, Brown said he was isolated in papers as the problem of black America.

"After all these years, we are assuming this boy

See BROWN on page 2

Fourth annual Life Sciences and Environmental Career Fair tomorrow

By Sean Benson
Collegian Correspondent

Tomorrow undergraduate and graduate students will have the opportunity to meet potential employers at the fourth annual Life Sciences and Environmental Careers Fair.

The fair will be held on the lower level of the Campus Center Auditorium from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Representatives from 11 organizations are scheduled to speak with and interview candidates for internships and co-ops, as well as full time positions.

Although students from the College of Natural Resources and the Environment and the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics are targeted for attendance, the fair is open to everyone.

Employers from Harvard Medical School, University of Massachusetts Medical School, Natural College of Naturopathic Medicine and Massachusetts General Hospital are scheduled to appear.

In addition, representatives from Resource Options, Inc., Stiefel Laboratories, Triumvirate Environmental, Inc., U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Charles River Laboratories, Kforce Professional Staffing and Wyeth are scheduled to attend.

Representatives will be looking to recruit students from several major fields, including Engineering, Natural Sciences and Math (plus Computer Science), Natural Resources and the Environment, Education, Management, Nursing & Public Health, as well as Social and Behavioral Sciences (as well as Communications and Economics).

Tina Acker, associate director and career fair coordinator for Career Services, addressed the range of opportunities available to students this year.

"It's important for students to keep an open mind and consider all the possibilities when attending any of these events. Employers are often willing to train the right person regardless of college major," Acker said. "Since many employers can attend only one of these events, students should plan on stopping by as many events as they can, so they can meet as many representatives as possible."

Students can find more information on upcoming career fairs by calling Career Services at 413-545-2224 or go to www.umass.edu/careers.

Career Services hosts job fair for the University community

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Correspondent

Career Services plays host tomorrow to over 60 major employers, each prepared to meet University of Massachusetts students and offer future career opportunities at the annual Campus-Wide Career Fair.

Representatives will have tables set up from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium; students can speak with employers from companies of their particular interest and set up potential job interviews.

The employers scheduled to attend the annual Campus-Wide Career Fair will be representing all areas of business and have employment opportunities for students in every major.

Some of the employers students can be expecting to see at the fair are Abercrombie and Fitch, American Express Financial Advisors Inc., John Hancock/Boston Partners, Kinko's, Microsoft Corporation, Pepsi Bottling Group, W.B. Mason and the U.S. Peace Corps.

Tina Acker, associate director and Career Fair coordinator for Career Services, said students should not feel intimidated when attending these types of events.

"It's very social. These employers like to talk to students and make students feel comfortable," Acker said. "It's pretty rare that a student can't find something for them at the fair."

Acker mentioned that it is important for students attending this type of event to first "walk around and browse" each employer's table before lining up to meet with an individual employer.

According to Acker, one of the most popular tables that normally has a long line is Microsoft.

On average, a student should spend about five to 10 minutes with every employer of his or her interest, advised Acker.

"A lot of employers can't stay past 3 p.m. We recommend coming earlier and not last minute," she said.

Any student attending the event should also bring a number of copies of their resume to hand into the employers of their specific interest.

Acker says regardless of any inclement weather, the fair will go on.

To view the full list of employers attending the annual Campus-Wide Career Fair as well as descriptions about additional fairs to be held, go to www.ecn.acad.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Claris Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Ferron Salzsieder
Photo Editor Scott Eldredge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lugnitz
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kuguss
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. In 1906 the College Signal was born. The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1947, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Kerry ignores rivals; bashes Bush

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

President Bush and Democratic front-runner John Kerry sparred on yesterday over the president's economic leadership, while Kerry's rivals sought to slow his bid toward the Democratic nomination in three states with upcoming primaries.

John Edwards and Wesley Clark searched for upset wins in two Southern states and Howard Dean beseeched Wisconsin voters "to keep this debate alive."

But Dean said that, despite earlier statements that he viewed the Feb. 17 primary as a do-or-die contest, he would stay in the race regardless of the outcome. "I've just changed my mind," he said.

As Edwards and Clark concentrated on Virginia and Tennessee, which hold primaries today, Kerry ignored his rivals and criticized Bush's stewardship of the economy.

Kerry accused Bush of having the worst jobs record of the past 11 presidents. Bush defended his economic priorities, especially his tax cuts, in a campaign-style speech in Missouri, expected to be a key battleground in November.

The president denounced efforts by "some in Washington" against making his tax cuts permanent. "When you hear people say, 'We're not going to make this permanent,' that means tax increase," Bush said at a factory in Springfield, Mo.

"They're going to raise the taxes and increase the size of the federal government, which would be bad for the United States economy," Bush said, his voice rising to a shout.

Speaking six days after Kerry won the Missouri primary, Bush appeared more engaged in his own re-election campaign than in past public appearances, directly responding to criticism by Kerry and other Democratic candidates.

The Democrats running for president say they would repeal all or portions of Bush's tax cuts. Stephanie Cutter, a spokeswoman for Kerry, said he would make permanent tax cuts for the middle class, including the child tax credit and the repeal of the marriage penalty.

Before an audience in Roanoke, Va., Kerry scorned a White House economic report released earlier in the day that predicted the economy would grow by four percent and create 2.6 million new jobs this year.

"I've got a feeling this report was prepared by the same people who brought us the intelligence on Iraq," Kerry said, citing job losses of more than two million since Bush took office. The Massachusetts senator also faulted Bush for policy failures on North Korea, AIDS, global warming and the Middle East peace process.

Steve Helber/Associated Press

Democratic Presidential hopeful U.S. Senator John Kerry gestures as he answers a reporter's question in front of the governor's mansion at the capitol in Richmond, VA,. this Sunday.

Edwards and Clark hoped strong showings in Tennessee and Virginia would eliminate the other and turn the race into a two-man contest with Kerry, but polls showed Kerry well ahead in both states.

Dean, the former Vermont governor and one-time Democratic front-runner, urged Wisconsin voters to prove the polls and the media wrong and use their "power to choose the strongest candidate to beat George W. Bush."

"The media claims this contest is over. They say your voice and your vote don't count. They expect you to rubber stamp the choice of others. But you don't have to listen to them," Dean told about 300 people at a downtown Madison hotel.

Dean began a two-day tour and an aggressive advertising campaign in Wisconsin, a state he told supporters last week he must win to keep his candidacy alive. But on Monday, he said his backers had persuaded him to stay in the race regardless of the results. He dismissed his own "obvious contradiction."

Dean also began airing a 60-second biographical spot in some Wisconsin markets, his first advertising buy in the state in months.

Former Black Panther Party member addresses inequality is guilty when he has not even been tried yet," Brown said.

BROWN from page 1

Brown said that America believes that black boys like him are the problem, and that if we simply get rid of him then we will get rid of the problem. Their solution, Brown said, was to not let "Little B" see the light of day again.

"There are millions of little kids like 'Little B' in this country. Is there something wrong with all of these boys? Or is there something wrong with this country? We need to work toward building a world where there is no need for prisons," she said.

Brown said she would like to see everyone given an equal opportunity to be educated, since she believes that education is incredibly important. "School should be free — everyone should be educated for free," Brown said.

Brown also said that she wants to register prisoners to vote, stating that 2 million Americans are currently in jail.

"That's a revolutionary act, even though it's a tiny act at the end of the day," she said.

Brown's speech also highlighted significant impacts in black history. Brown said that although a lot of people don't want to talk about black history, it's important to discuss not only the positive changes since they are the exception, but to talk about the majority of events that occurred.

"We have to look at how we got here and where we are. In order to turn the page, we must write the page," she said.

Brown spoke at length about President Thomas Jefferson's use of the "three-fifth rule" in order to win presidency, and how he justified slavery by alleging that blacks were not whole human beings.

Also discussed by Brown was Lincoln's rise to presidency and the Emancipation Proclamation. While Lincoln tried to free slaves, Brown said that he was still in favor of having a superior position as a white man.

"When people praise Jefferson and Lincoln I feel personally offended as well as insulted," Brown said.

After Brown's speech, the floor was open to questions. One young woman in the audience asked Brown what she would do in order to enforce change in "our generation."

"It's not just action, but the ideology behind it," Brown said. "Make demands about changes, go after newspapers, get involved in the community — things you can do now in order to make a difference. Talk about what you want to do and where it is going."

Brown also highlighted the work of Dr. King, specifically his non-violent approach to social change.

"Violent activity is not necessarily revolutionary. Being a tough guy doesn't necessarily mean you're a revolutionary."

In closing, Brown thanked the audience, specifically the young students for their energy.

"It's like the sun at eight or nine in the morning, my hope rests in you."

After her speech, Brown signed copies of her books, including "New Age Racism and the Condemnation of 'Little B.'" as well as her memoir "A Taste of Power: A Black Woman's Story."

February Career Fairs

Stockbridge School Job Fair
Tuesday, February 10
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am - 2 pm

Campus-Wide Career Fair
Wednesday, February 11
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am – 3 pm

Life Sciences and Environmental Careers Fair
Wednesday, February 11
Campus Center, Room 162
10 am – 3 pm

ALANA Job Fair
Wednesday, February 11
Campus Center Auditorium
5:30 pm – 8:30 pm

Co-op and Summer Job Fair
Thursday, February 12
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am – 3 pm

Summer Camp Employment Day
Thursday, February 12
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am – 3 pm

are HERE!

www.umass.edu/careers
CareerServices

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, February 10, 2004 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

State police can learn from UMass' 'zero tolerance'

It's been more than a week since Super Bowl celebrations and the thought of those festivities has become just a memory for most. But for some in Massachusetts, those "celebrations" live on.

The mother of 21-year-old James Grabowski will probably never be able to forget the night of the Super Bowl. James died after a Toyota Land Cruiser drove into a crowd of revelers on Symphony Road in Boston.

Patricia Grabowski is angry with the mayor and the police department for failing to safeguard the streets of Boston.

"Law enforcement in Boston did not do their jobs in the hours leading up to and following the Super Bowl," Grabowski told the Boston Globe.

Patricia has reason to be angry. The police department knew about the possibility for trouble during a night where the New England Patriots could be cause for parties and celebrations across the state. A sufficient amount of police officers should have been on duty that night to prevent injuries or even deaths like James'.

Enough with the excuses from Boston mayor Thomas M. Menino, who at first blamed liquor sales the day of the game and University administrators for the unruly crowds. The Super Bowl, and other activities like the Red Sox's winning streak last October, is reason for concern among state officials — and ample action must be taken to ensure the safety of citizens.

The celebrations that went awry in the streets of Boston are similar to those that sometimes break out on the University of Massachusetts, Amherst campus. Administration at UMass was successful in curtailing rowdy behavior from students by enforcing a zero-tolerance policy and implementing alternative activities for students to engage during the Super Bowl.

Boston officials should also have done a better job of enforcing a similar "zero-tolerance" policy, warning those who engaged in post-game riots that they could face criminal charges.

And that is ultimately the best way to solve problems like these. Arrests send out the most resounding message to citizens and are most effective in eliminating such tasteless activities.

Despite limiting the destruction on campus, the administration at UMass still has a long way to go in eliminating these post-game activities and completely cleansing this type of boorish behavior from the UMass culture.

It may be more difficult for Boston officials to eliminate this type of behavior since it has less control over its citizens than say its "students," but arrests will quickly make that message crystal clear. Information from The Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Exposing the multicultural façade

"We are living in dangerous times."
Nelson Acosta, director of the Office of African, Latino, Asian and Native American Affairs

This is especially true for students of color at the University of Massachusetts — from top to bottom:

President George W. Bush:

Around the nation, most noticeably in Florida, ALANA people were denied a vote during the last presidential election (Check Michael Moore's book "Stupid White Men").

A massive amount of money was spent to fight the War on Terror. This expenditure has successfully accomplished what conservatives call "starving the beast" — keeping money from much needed social programs.

Eduardo Bustamante and Krystal Tucker

As a result of the Patriot and Homeland Security acts, international students attending the University now have to pay an additional $65 per semester to pay for their own federal surveillance through the Student Exchange Visitor Information System.

Over the summer, the Amherst Bulletin reported that a UMass professor of color's house was visited by CIA agents because they got a tip that he was a terrorist. The scary part? If his white wife hadn't been there, he could have been detained in Guantanamo first, and asked questions later.

Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney and the Massachusetts State Legislature:

Gov. Romney's proposal to add 15,000 students to the University was centered on making UMass as prestigious as possible at the expense of the lower and middle-class members of the Commonwealth. He emphasized a desire to make UMass a "world class institution," while at the same time stressing a "Vocational Curriculum" for state Community Colleges.

It appears the Governor and state legislature want to give UMASS a credible face to show the nation, but don't want to invest the resources to improve the school.

Two worlds are being created at UMASS. The first, the face shown to the nation: the Commonwealth College, where students receive an excellent education and live in Orchard Hill. The second: where the rest of us go, lecture halls filled with 301 people (one of whom one is the teacher), filling out bubbles and rioting in Southwest.

The Board of Trustees, Chancellor, President and administration:

Just Governors tend to be rich white conservative males, the Board of Trustees (appointed by the Governor) follows suit. Because UMass is funded 50th out of 50 state schools, The Board of Trustees has raised student fees and tuition. This hike disproportionately affects ALANA students, because they are statistically less wealthy than white counterparts.

As the UMass administration follows the lead of state officials, and shoots to become "The Berkeley of the East," the school is raising acceptance standards for GPA and SAT scores. Both of these measurements have been proven to be bias against students of color.

Removal of the academic advising component from the ALANA academic support programs along with cutting the English as a Second Language program have done irreparable damage to the UMass ALANA community.

The Student Government Association is supposed to protect ALANA students when times are tough and the national climate is not receptive to them. However, the SGA's young, conservative, white male leadership have not only refused to help ALANA students, they have attacked them.

They've been talking out of both sides of their mouth since the Speaker barred ALANA senators from participating in Senate over summer. The SGA then illegally appointed Republican Club leaders in their place, and passed legislation serving their own interests.

From the illegal barring of the appointed seats despite referenda, to the slander of the NCORE conference, to the harassment and slander of the Director of the Office of ALANA Affairs as well as leaders of the ALANA caucus, the goal of the conservative SGA leadership has been clear: to take decision making power away from ALANA students.

Nelson Acosta has himself encountered the danger he speaks of. He needs to take a medical leave, and in his absence, every person in the SGA who seeks power is trying to take advantage.

So far, here's what they've done:

Speaker Jared Nokes, through the Coordinating Council, requested the University General Counsel to address the ALANA Caucus appointed seats. The General Counsel, Terrence P. O'Malley is not an impartial lawyer.

O'Malley is the lawyer that negotiated and approved the Peoplesoft contract. He fought students seeking information, saying that the University wasn't covered by the freedom of information act, and lost. He argued that Graduate Employee Organization wasn't a union in 1997-1998 and lost again when the Mass labor board overruled him. Nevertheless, Jared consulted the anti-student O'Malley, deliberately opposing his job as advocate for the senate and students to the administration.

Vice chancellor of student affairs Michael Gargano has denied Director Acosta's right to appoint an interim assistant-director in his absence, even though this is standard University procedure. Why?

In order to have the conservative SGA leaders and Charles DiMare more involved in any decisions. The result of this denial is that the OAA, which is vital to ALANA students, will not have a single full-time staff person. Thus it will be closed and all the programs and events it is sponsoring this semester cancelled.

A legitimate proposal was submitted by the Office of ALANA Affairs to Gargano regarding what improvements could be made to the office and to student affairs in general for ALANA students.

In response, Russell Plato, the SGA's secretary of diversity who speaks in the name of David Carr, is not an ALANA student, does not attend the OAA's events and has no idea how the OAA operates, had submitted a sloppily written proposal to restructure the office in a manner which de-emphasized race by making the OAA an "everything" office.

And up until about 9:45 p.m. yesterday, that proposal was the SGA's front-running recommendation. Only after a two hour debate last night did the SGA Executive Board rule to withdraw it.

That it was a proposal at all, however, merits concern for the University community.

Plato did not consult anyone from the OAA, or the ALANA community. This means the proposal dealt with all aspects of diversity: "Let it spread so far that it carves in on itself." It would be equivalent to changing the Every Woman's Center or the Stonewall Center into "Everything Centers." The proposal would have ceased decision-making power away from ALANA students and given it to those who would destroy it.

Moreover, it would have changed the focus of the office. As opposed to being an office dedicated to helping ALANA students, it would become an office whose job is to give the SGA a public face regarding diversity issues. The director of the Office of ALANA Affairs has two masters' degrees and more than 20 years of experience in the office. For his report, he took input from ALANA students.

Yet, Secretary Plato, who has no experience in the office, didn't take input from ALANA students for his denied proposal. Regardless of the intentions of its author, the proposal would have harmed ALANA students. The OAA is the only office on campus dedicated to helping ALANA students, and Russell Plato did not realize the impact that scrapping will have on them and the campus as a whole.

Last night, the Executive Board may have withdrawn this proposal because of the overwhelming disapproval from the campus community. Yet, the OAA's charter is currently under review by the Administrative Affairs Committee, which is made up entirely of young white-males. And it is the educated guess of the ALANA Caucus that Secretary Plato will be at these meetings advocating that decision-making power in the office be taken away from ALANA students.

The ALANA caucus vehemently opposes the harmful actions, paternalistic attitudes and presumptuousness of the Speaker Jared Nokes, Secretary Plato and the executive branch members that supported the restructuring of the Office of ALANA Affairs without the input of ALANA students.

We do not believe these people have any legitimacy or credibility to make decisions that primarily impact ALANA students without involving ALANA students. The ALANA Caucus urges the administration to keep a responsibility as pivotal as the decision making power for the Office of ALANA Affairs out of the hands of 18-year-old conservative, white, males who do not see a need for an office whose primary focus is helping students of color. They are threatened by it and want to see it dismantled. The OAA must stay in the hands of the ALANA Caucus or the administraton if it is to succeed in advocating for ALANA students.

A second, more informed opinion needs to be given regarding the constitutionality of the ALANA Caucus appointed seats, and finally, a full-time staff person must be placed in the Office of ALANA Affairs on an interim basis immediately, so that the office is not closed for any period of time.

Eduardo Bustamante is an ALANA Caucus senator, and Krystal Tucker is the ALANA Caucus press secretary.

When a hijab becomes a Jihad

Yousef Munayyer

Recent controversy brewing in France has spilled over into much of the rest of the world after the French government proclamation to enact legislation banning the "hijab," a traditional Muslim headscarf, from being worn in public schools.

The hijab, which is not worn by all Muslim women, is a religious symbol hardly new to such controversy. Many religious scholars argue that the hijab must be worn as part of practicing the religion and others argue otherwise.

It has also been a political symbol through recent history, seen as anti-western, anti-modernization and anti-secularist. Governments of Islamic nations, like Turkey, Egypt and Iran, have banned and argued about banning the hijab. In Turkey this lasted for a short time. In Iran, however, the ban came under the regime of the pro-western Shah and was greatly criticized. After the Islamic theocratic revolution, many women took to the streets wearing the hijab. It is undoubtedly a sign of more than religion; it carries a political message and a powerful one at that.

The hijab has also been controversial because some argue it is repressive toward women. This argument, which is generally made by westerners who know little about the Muslim religion and do not care much to understand it, is widely disagreed with. I have talked to many women who wear the hijab, and they wear it because they want to. Some of the most liberal, powerful and politically active women wear the hijab, and this shouldn't come as a surprise.

Today, the French parliament is set to conclude a week-long debates series regarding religious symbolism in public arenas. However, there are other recent events that led up to this.

Last July, French President Jacques Chirac formed a commission to make recommendations to promote secularism in France. What came from this commission, in a report a few months later, were recommendations to ban religious symbols in all public schools. It also recommended adding Jewish and Muslim religious holidays to the national calendar. Still, the issue of the hijab caused the most controversy. In September, two girls were expelled from school because they were wearing the hijab.

This complicates France's relationship with the rest of the Muslim world. From Napoleon's invasion of Egypt in 1798 to the recent anti-war stance France took in the invasion of Iraq. French relations with the Muslim world have been complicated and delicate. This recent debate puts a strain on these relations because Muslims, which number nearly 4 million in France, are the largest minority in the nation. Also, nearly 50,000 French men and women convert to Islam every year.

This legislation is a step backward. At the most crucial time in the history of the world for the understanding of other religions, this legislation would set the progression of tolerance back years.

It is particularly troubling because of the strong, xenophobic, nationalist movement, which has grown in France. This movement, organized in a party called the National Front, is led by Jean-Marie Le Pen. He, to the horror of many multiculturalists, made it to the second round of run off elections against Chirac where he lost despite gaining nearly 20 percent of the popular vote. Majoritarian movements, such as the National Front, believe that France is for the French. This however is not compatible with the modern world we live in which teaches tolerance, acceptance and multiculturalism.

We cannot allow this to be misunderstood as secularism. In fact this, not the hijab, will repress Muslim women. Have we in the so-called "western world" come so far in regard to personal freedoms only to take this step backward?

What would the leaders of the French revolution, which brought us the slogan "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," think about such a violation on personal rights?

There should most certainly be a separation between church and state. However, it is more important to have freedom of religion. The first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, part of the Bill of Rights, guarantees certain freedoms and inalienable rights to people and protects the right to freedom of religion. Search the entire Constitution for "separation for church and state," but you will not find it.

France has to understand the presence of a significant minority. It has to learn about Islam, as the entire world should to be educated about other people. Our lack of knowledge about other people is what makes us categorize them as others.

I only hope that parliament makes the right decision in France today. I hope they recognize that banning the hijab is not a step toward secularism, but a step toward separation. I hope the French Parliament realizes there is a fundamental difference between freedom of religion and freedom from religion.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Now, I'm a little bit country

Molly Eggleston

I never thought anything positive could come out of being stuck in a van for eight hours with a bunch of country music fans. After numerous bathroom breaks, driver changes and state borders though, I had gained a new appreciation for country music.

Country music is not Beef Jerky and beat up pick-up trucks, like many people think. It can be patriotic, religious, motivational, soulful, funny, satirical, depressing or even a love song. It can bring you to your feet and get you dancing, make you think or pump you up.

I'll admit it took quite a few of those eight hours to get me hooked, but now I love it. Country music seems to have a song for every occasion. Whether you are down in the dumps or on top of the world, someone wrote a country song about it. The music is so real. It has such honest lyrics that I couldn't help but to relate. It has the ability to bring me to tears, like Gary Allen's song for his daughter "Tough Little Boys." Or the ability to bring a smile to my face, like Kenny Chesney's "No Shirt, No Shoes, No Problems."

Country music has become available to places other than Nashville. Names like the Dixie Chicks and Garth Brookes are household names all over the country and even internationally. Fans no longer have to go down south to hear their favorite musicians live. Brookes and Dunn, Tim McGraw and Kenny Chesney, among others have all headlined tours that have visited New England. Toby Keith is scheduled to appear at the Mullins Center this week, and the summer is sure to bring plenty more country concerts to the region.

We northerners think of country as "hick" music. In its modern music scene though, you won't be finding any mullets or trailer parks. Current country stars like Martina McBride or Leanne Rimes own million dollar homes and luxury cars galore. Look at Shania Twain and Faith Hill; they have as much bling-bling as Ludacris or JayZ. Like any other form of music, the big names of country pay for the most expensive stylists just to look their best.

This isn't the same music your parents' generation. Country music is edgy and sexy. Who wouldn't want to get crazy to "Loving all Night" by Patty Loveless or "Hot Mama" by Trace Adkins. Forget the conservative days of early country music, current artists are hot, and they know it. They use everything they have to entertain a crowd, including showing off well-tuned bodies in tiny little tank tops or jeans that look painted on. Keith Urban with that smooth Australian accent is hot. Tim McGraw in those tight jeans is all this suburban cowgirl needs for entertainment. And as country music gets bigger, the women's outfits are getting smaller. Shania Twain has even become an international sex symbol from her "Man, I feel like a woman" video.

Country Music is growing in popularity faster than any other genre. It has evolved from what many people believed to be annoying and lower class to music for whatever you're feeling. It's great to party and drink to. With songs like "Beer for my Horses" by Toby Keith and music legend Willie Nelson or the duet of Alan Jackson and Jimmy Buffet "It's five o'clock somewhere," people can't help but party to it.

Country music has had to overcome a stigma more than any other type of music. It has overcome bad reputations of being overly patriotic, of lacking musical integrity and of being only for "rednecks." There is a reason it has grown in popularity. Country music artists are just as talented as those of any other genre and deserve the new-found national popularity. Millions of people all over the world are giving country a chance and liking it. Maybe you will too.

I never wanted to give country a chance but being stuck as the only freshman in a van full of honky-tonk loving upper classmen, I wasn't given the choice, but I'm glad I got to know Garth, Kenny, Faith, Tim, Martina, and the rest of the country music crew.

Molly Eggleston is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Incubus return to their roots

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

When Incubus was curiously flung onto top 40 radio and MTV in 1999 with hits like "Pardon Mem" "Stellar" and the inescapable "Drive" off of their third LP "Make Yourself," fans were naturally a bit lukewarm.

The band's previous album, 1997's "S.C.I.E.N.C.E." had been a moderate success, earning the band a small cult following. To many, their sound, a mixture of funk, rock, rap, punk and jazz, was an indication that Incubus had the potential to become the next Faith No More. The comparison was even heightened by charismatic frontman Brandon Boyd's vocal similarities to Mike Patton, Faith No More's innovative singer.

When the band broke into the mainstream scene in 1999, fans found themselves fearing that the group's music would go mainstream as well. After all, "Make Yourself" was, while still infinitely more complex and pioneering than discs that were coming out by peers like Limp Bizkit and Korn, a step into a more simplified, easier to consume sound.

"Morning View," Incubus's 2001 follow-up, found the band dabbling even more into the world of easily consumed pop rock, much to the dismay of many of the band's early fans. While the album contained many great tracks, it also had too many made-for-radio songs. The sounds of "Wish You Were Here" and "Warning" left fans wondering if the band was falling into a spiral of commercialism. "Morning View" lacked much of the funk and abstract elements that had helped to define Incubus earlier. Even Boyd's voice had turned more into a soft croon, losing the Patton-esque edginess.

In fact, the Faith No More comparisons had stopped altogether. While a band escaping the shadow of a previous generation is normally a good thing, for Incubus it seemed to indicate Boyd and his band mates had abandoned their will to be as innovative as Faith No More.

Incubus
'A Crow Left of The Murder' Epic/Immortal

Despite their momentary departure, Incubus has returned, both with a new bassist — Ben Kenney, of The Roots — and a new album: "A Crow Left of the Murder." With these additions, Incubus is launching itself back into the right direction.

"A Crow Left of the Murder" is not "S.C.I.E.N.C.E." It's doubtful that the band will ever return to the crunching riffs, semi-rapping, prominent turntable scratching and overall trippiness and innovation that presided over that album and won the band a hardcore cult.

However, that's not a bad thing. A good band matures. And while maturing is a term, or excuse, that a great majority of bands use for mainstreaming their music to make it more acceptable for the masses, Incubus has proven that it knows how to grow gracefully.

"Make Yourself" was a step of maturity in the right direction, and "A Crow..." finds the band becoming comfortable with a sound that is slightly more relaxed, yet retains the experimental elements and exciting grooves that first garnered notoriety for the band.

While "A Crow" doesn't near the excessively fast-pace of most of the "S.C.I.E.N.C.E." tracks, it is more upbeat than the numbingly moderately paced "Morning View."

The first track, and lead single, "Megalomaniac" is a perfect indicator of the album's sound. It leads with a good 30 seconds or so of guitar sensation Mike Einziger calling up effects and feedback. (In fact, throughout the entire album, Einziger makes use of his seemingly boundless guitar talent and predilection for combining effects pedals in a way that he hasn't since "S.C.I.E.N.C.E.") The track then settles into a more chilled-out verse. The song's lyrics reflect a thinly veiled metaphor for President Bush, and the sound soon explodes, along with Boyd, into a furious chorus. Boyd knocks his subject down, telling him "You're no Jesus / Yeah, you're no fing Elvis" before demanding that he "step down."

Much of "A Crow" seems to be packed with anti-Bush lyrics. "Talk Show On Mute" could more easily be

See INCUBUS on page 5

Northampton welcomes Nathanson

Performer lends humor, sincerity to Iron Horse

By Meghan M. Healy
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — "Hi Northampton. I am Matt, and it's great to be here," said acoustic guitarist Matt Nathanson, modestly as he took the stage of the Iron Horse Sunday night. "I hope you're ready for some rock 'n roll magic."

Opening with a beautiful rendition of Bruce Springsteen's "Thunder Road," it might have seemed to those that had never seen Nathanson live that they were in for a tranquil evening of guitar ballads. The guitarist was quick to dispell that misconception though. "Is tonight feeling like a mellow night? F no!"

Joined on stage by longtime friend and fellow musician Matt Fish on the cello, the Matts proceeded to rock the Iron Horse for two straight hours. Among the songs that made an appearance on the set were quite a few tracks off Nathanson's new album "Beneath These Fireworks." The prevalence of new tunes is a testament to the quality of the new material, as the musician relied heavily on crowd requests throughout the show. "I Saw," "Pretty the World" and "Weight of it All" were among the new songs in high demand.

Matt Nathanson
Iron Horse
Northampton
Feb. 8

"Bent," slated to be Nathanson's first radio single was toned down a bit for the live stage and was complimented by an outro of Counting Crow's ethereal classic "Ana Begins."

Part of the Matt Nathanson experience is the performer's complete disregard for formality. Throughout the show he showed no restraint; if he thought it, he said it. His immediate comfort with the crowd made the show a sort of personalized experience. Essentially it brought Nathanson off the stage and made it feel like a group of friends hanging out.

Nathanson's self-deprecating introductions to songs were humorous and well recieved. Of longtime fan favorite "All Been Said Before" he said, "This is a song about when you think you're a genius as a song writer and then you get into the car and turn on the radio and realize [what you just wrote] is the chorus to a Kansas song. You're not a genius — you're coupled with Kansas." That band seemed to be on Nathanson's mind Sunday night, as he also spoofed their best known song, "Dust in the Wind," earlier in the set.

Throughout the show Nathanson made many references to Jesus. "It's a Sunday," he proclaimed. "It's his day." Though his Christ references were well received by the audience, the somewhat off-color remarks prompted Nathanson to give a disclaimer: "I hope you're not offended — and if you are — get a fing sense of humor."

Not limiting his onstage banter to talk of religion, Nathanson also announced his intention of releasing a "spoken word album."

"Matt Fish and I are thinking of putting together a spoken word, heavy metal, '80s album," Nathanson said, unable to suppress his amusement at the thought of Winger's "Seventeen" performed in that manner. With Fish laying down a jazzy beat, Nathanson theatrically acted out what the audience could only imagine was in his head.

Though Nathanson's performance was nothing short of phenomenal, the true star of the show was cellist Matt Fish. A quiet counterpart to the sporadic energy that is Nathanson, Fish brought his own sort of humor to the show. His unspoken connection to the audience had almost a stronger affect than Nathanson's vocalizations. At one point, when Fish was leaving the stage to let Nathanson play a few solo tunes, the reserved cello player was invited to hang out with an enthusiastic group of audience members in the balcony.

Fish's musical talent serves as a perfect compliment to Nathanson's witty lyrics and catchy guitar riffs. The cello added texture and weight to the songs that would have been greatly missed had they been performed solely on guitar.

Opener Toby Lightman put forth an impressive performance herself. The petite blond guitarist has a powerful voice that begs comparison to Sheryl Crow, though her songs sound a little more like Jewel. Lightman's performance of her radio track "Devils and Angels" was exciting but it was her cover of Mary J. Blige's classic "Real Love" that won the audience over.

COURTESY MONSTER/ATLANTIC

Vocalists bring South Africa to Pioneer Valley

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — An empty stage with no guitar, bass or drum set — at this musical event these implements were just unnecessary.

All that was necessary on the Iron Horse stage in Northampton Thursday night were 10 microphones. The raw and beautiful talent of Ladysmith Black Mambazo counteracts the idea that complex musical instrumentation needs the use of actual manufactured instruments.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo
Iron Horse
Northampton
Feb. 5

For nearly 30 years, Ladysmith Black Mambazo has been proving to the entire world that the most organic instrument, the human voice, can create one of the most soothing musical experiences.

Thursday night, Ladysmith proved it once again — two times over.

In front of two table-seating crowds at the small, intimate two-level Iron Horse Music Hall, Joseph Shabalala and Ladysmith clicked, puffed, popped and sang in Zulu language all the way through two glorious shows.

A spotlight was on the native South Africans, but it was unnecessary. The glow from the smiles of the members of the group followed by the smiles in the audience was enough to shine light on the a cappella ensemble that gained American notoriety with its appearance on Paul Simon's 1987 album "Graceland."

Whether it was a six year old clapping and dancing on the stairs to the rhythms or the elderly folk sipping their coffee — listening to the traditional sounds of rural Zululand called "Isicathamiya" – it was hard to find a disappointed face in the audience.

There really wasn't a need to be disappointed. Ladysmith Black Mamabazo is just too good.

There was a powerful energy vocalized in the songs and visualized in the forceful yet graceful dancing. The components made a stamp on the eyes and the ears. The group's maestro, Shabalala, is by far the oldest of the bunch, 65, but he provides the biggest spark. His kicks in the dancing are higher than anyone else's' in the group (not too many 60-year-olds get can their leg over their head) and his distinctive vocal range show that age is not a factor in traditional African music and dance.

Ladysmith played about an 85-minute set with songs spanning their entire career. It debuted a few from their new album, "Raise Your Spirit Higher" but, the crowd-favorite was "Homeless," which was made famous on "Graceland."

But Ladysmith's work on "Graceland" does not do the group justice. Paul Simon put the group on the map, but it is the live performance that has kept the men from the Motherland traveling around it. At the Iron Horse, Ladysmith may have opened some people's eyes to the greater world of the group. It is a world of spirit, soul and passion. This world, formed out of Shabalala's thoughts and dreams, came alive for one night on that empty stage — making it full of life.

COURTESY JOSS STEFFEN

Joseph Shabalala is the creator of Ladysmith Black Mambazo. The group performed two shows at the Iron Horse on Thursday night.

Disney's 'Miracle' scores with hockey fans but lacks substance

By Ryan Aubert
Collegian Correspondent

The 1980 U.S. hockey team went to the winter Olympics with one goal in mind: to triumph over the Soviets. And they did just that, uniting a nation along the way.

Walt Disney's "Miracle" tells the story of the U.S. team's tough road and, ultimately, their unexpected victory. Though the film's triumph over adversity sports storyline is reminiscent of other feel-good flicks like "Cool Runnings" or even "The Mighty Ducks" series, "Miracle" is much more dramatic, harsh and in-your-face.

'Miracle'
Directed by Gavin O'Connor
Starring Kurt Russell Noah Emmerich
Walt Disney
Rated PG
136 mins.
Grade B

COURTESY CHRIS LARGENT/DISNEY

Kurt Russell, left, delivers an impressive performance as U.S. Olympic Hockey coach Herb Brooks.

Kurt Russell plays Herb Brooks, the determined coach who leads the team through its hockey trials and tribulations. Russell plays the part extremely well and his relentless pushing on his team is convincing to say the least. For the part, Russell gained weight, learned Brooks' mannerisms and spoke in a midwestern accent. Reportedly, people who knew the real Herb Brooks personally are haunted by Russell's portrayal. Unfortunately, Brooks passed away soon after principal photography ended, making "Miracle" a lasting tribute to his achievement.

Russell's performance is highlighted and greatly augmented by a supporting cast with talent both on and off the ice. In hopes of creating a realistic portrayal of the 1980 Olympic team, director Gavin O'Connor wanted real hockey players for his movie, not just pretty boys from Hollywood. As a result, almost all of the players in the movie are real amateur hockey players, who can also act. And act they do. From disputes with the coaches, to injuries — all of the actors embody the players.

"Miracle" presents some up-close and personal hockey action seldom seen on film. The games are intense. You feel like you are on the ice, suited up in a jersey with a stick and ready for some combat. You can almost feel the pain when the players get checked. The camera is always in the midst of the action.

This realistic approach may be overwhelming for some folks who know nothing about hockey. Hockey fans will be very pleased though. During each of the games, movie theater crowds cheered and clapped as if at the Mullins Center watching the Minutemen.

Despite the action, the movie falls short on substance. Director O'Connor set out to make a hockey movie — a goal he achieved. Yes, Russell's portrayal is amazing. But beyond the ultimate miracle, character development of is somewhat lacking. The players on Team USA are never really fleshed out and the viewer is left wanting more. What about their girlfriends? Or families? Less footage of the hockey games and more in-depth exploration of the player's would have been beneficial to the film. It's difficult to root for heroes to which you have no attachment.

Going into the theater, viewers know there isn't going to be a surprise ending — the title, "Miracle," practically gives it away. This is a Disney film, and there are points in the film that seem somewhat sappy and played up. Contrast this to the realistic hockey action, and the movie seems real and fake at the same time, a contradiction that can essentially describe every Disney movie to date.

Despite its faults, the "Miracle" of the U.S. hockey team touched the hearts of the country, a moment in time where the United States could unite. The film seeks to do the same, and scores.

"Miracle," starring Eddie Cahill (left) and Jim Craig, features impressive game sequences but leaves the audience wanting more plot development.

With 'A Crow Left of the Murder,' Incubus stray from mainstream

INCUBUS from page 4

applied to a State of the Union address than "The Tonight Show." Boyd sings of a world something like a "Brave New World" in the pre-chorus. "Still and transfixed / The electric sheep are dreaming of your face / Enjoy you from / The chemical / comfort of America" Boyd croons, before referencing the Orwellian society of post 9/11 America — "Come one / Come all / Into 1984." The bass-driven song and its pseudo-lounge chorus are among the album's highlights, even upon first listen.

"Priceless," with its hyper pace, recalls "S.C.I.E.N.C.E." more than anything other track on "A Crow" — even Boyd's vocal delivery harkens back to 1997. The song is also notable for its curiously mixed-to-the-front snare drum that, while not quite as annoying as it sounds on paper, is a bit of a puzzling decision.

"Southern Girl" is a breezy track that sounds like a soundtrack to an island vacation. The song, at times, has the feel of a hit single, yet retains the natural feel of a song written by people who don't care about pop charts.

"Here In My Room" sounds more like a dirge than a ballad, a testament to the band members' decision to think for themselves and write the music they want to write.

One of the most positive and noticeable growths on "A Crow" is the way that the band has been able to mix trippy arrangements and pop melodies, especially sing-along choruses. One of the best examples is "Sick, Sad, Little World," featuring a Primus-y riff in the verses, underneath a stunning vocal performance by Boyd. He sings falsetto, before settling down into a funereal pace with a piano line underneath his cautious vocals, and then jumps into a bass-driven and highly memorable chorus. Finally, the song leaps into an extended and amazing solo by Einziger. Someone could listen only to these two or three minutes of his playing and realize the great talent the band has in their hands.

Incubus have more than redeemed themselves for past indiscretions with "A Crow." If anything, they've raised the bar to heights nearly impossible to top. "A Crow" is a likely candidate as the first great album of 2004. Of course the reason that, after all these years, Incubus still has a hardcore fan base is because they are able to better themselves.

While the album does have a pop element, the band seems to identify themselves as the crow in the album's title. They are, no doubt, far to the left of the pack of mainstream acts whose pre-packaged and heartless music that leaves listeners desperately praying for a band like Incubus. They are actual artists, floating in what often seems to be an artless mob. The band's experimentation and out-there effects on "A Crow" should ease fan's worries and reinstate excitement over the band that may have been lost thanks to "Morning View."

While "S.C.I.E.N.C.E." may have been one of the best albums of the past 10 years, this is no longer the same Incubus of 1997. This is the Incubus of 2004, and that is a damn good thing.

Incubus show growth with their latest album, "A Crow Left of the Murder."

www.dailycollegian.com

This is Jane's Dad.

Jane is his first child to leave the nest. Help him, help his daughter to find out if the University of Massachusetts is right for her. Give them a tour. Give Jane an informal interview. Answer questions, provide guidance, make a difference.
Apply to be a Student Admissions Representative!
Applications are available at the Visitor's Center, the Undergraduate Admissions Office, or you can visit us at our table on the Campus Center Concourse between February 9th and 13th from 9:00 a.m. until 3:00 p.m.
If you have any questions, please e-mail us at reps@admissions.umass.edu.

Smooth Skin for Spring Break!

AMHERST LASER & SKIN CARE CENTER

Laser Hair Reduction- with GentleLase™
Utilizing advanced laser technology.
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Laser treatments available for acne, brown spots, and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Students who sign-up before March 1st will receive 50% off package price.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
AMHERSTLASER@VERIZON.NET

Disney Career Opportunity!

Are you ready to start building your résumé and preparing for your future career? The Walt Disney World® College Program gives you the opportunity to take college-level courses for credit, network with Disney leaders and enhance your marketability in today's job market.

As a participant, you'll enjoy a social, multicultural environment with 24-hour secured housing and admission to all four Walt Disney World Theme Parks. Plus, you'll learn about next-step opportunities with The Walt Disney Company. This paid program is open to all majors and college levels. Find out more and apply online at wdwcollegeprogram.com.
Presentation attendance is required.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS - AMHERST
Thursday, February 12, 2004; 7 p.m.
Isenburg School of Management, Room 137

Walt Disney World COLLEGE PROGRAM
Dream it. Do it. Disney.

EOE • Drawing Creativity from Diversity • © Disney

Brown takes the defensive

DEFENSE from page 8

2003, where the Huskies garnered the top spot in many preseason national syndications and established NU as a physical, punishing team that no one wanted to play — the kind of team he hopes to field at McGuirk Alumni Stadium in the coming future.

"I need guys that go 100 miles an hour and believe in intensity all the time, but do it with integrity," Brown said. "We need good football players who are quality individuals, because we'll be a team that has great effort … and tremendous chemistry.

"It's easy to stick together when times are going good, the challenge that I look forward to is when we have to face adversity. Our football team will stick together and we'll get through those moments."

Now, arguably, comes Brown's greatest challenge to date. Presented with what he described as a "pretty damn good football team," he must change philosophies on the fly.

For six years under Whipple, the Minutemen were an offensive machine, slinging the ball all over the place in a cerebral system only a coach cut out of NFL material could implement, and now that will change. Not because Don Brown isn't as smart as Whipple, but because his football mentality differs from the man who first hired him as his defensive coordinator over eight years ago, and because, for Don Brown, there is only one way to play the game.

"Mark Whipple was a great football coach — I don't plan on replacing Mark Whipple, nobody will," Brown said. "He had his great run here, my name is Don Brown and I have a particular way of doing things.

"I can tell you off the bat that this team will be one that will not sacrifice speed for size at any position. I look for guys that can run, because the game's about playing fast and that's the motto that I have.

"I guaranteed you that when people watch us play, the one thing they'll say is 'those guys play hard, and they play fast'."

BC takes Beanpot in overtime

BOSTON (AP) — Ryan Murphy slapped a backhander past tournament MVP Sean Fields at the 6:07 mark of overtime on Monday night to give Boston College a 2-1 victory over Boston University in the Beanpot championship game.

Murphy also assisted on the game-tying goal with 3:50 left in regulation to send the game into overtime. It was BC's first Beanpot title since 2001 and just the second time in 11 years that BU failed to win the tournament that matches the area's four hockey powers every February for the bragging rights of Boston.

Fields stopped 50 shots in the title game and was recognized for the effort with the Most Valuable Player award. He becomes just the second player to earn MVP honors in consecutive years. The other was BC's John Cunniff, who did so in 1964-65.

Boston College is the No. 1 team in the country with a 21-3-4 record that includes victories in three regular season games against BU (8-12-6). But national rankings have meant little for the first two Mondays of February: Even when BU has struggled it seems to forget its problems for the Beanpot, winning the tournament 25 times in 52 years, including nine of the previous 10.

The Terriers seemed ready to add to their stash when Kenny Roche wristed the puck over Mattl Kaltiainen's glove to give BU a 1-0 lead just 3:50 into the game. The goal snapped an 11-game scoreless streak for Roche, and with Fields in net it looked like BU wouldn't need any more.

With 3:30 left in regulation, though, Murphy took a bouncing puck across the crease. When Fields tried to poke it away it went to Hennes, and he slapped it into the net to make it 1-1.

Ryan Shannon had an empty net to shoot in 2:30 into overtime, but he missed. At the 4:36 mark of overtime, Tony Voce was taken down by Tom Morrow, giving BC the man-advantage it needed.

There were 29 seconds left in the power play when Murphy got a rebound in the slot and swiped at it, beating Fields and sending the BC players over the boards onto the ice to celebrate.

-Associated Press

Don Brown

- 27-20 in four years at Northeastern (2000-03)
- Led Northeastern to first-ever NCAA playoff appearance (2002)
- Achieved highest national ranking in Northeastern history (No. 11 in 2002)
- 2002 Atlantic 10 Conference Coach of the Year
- 2002 New England Football Writers Coach of the Year
- 2002 American Football Coaches Association Region I Coach of the Year
- Defensive coordinator at UMass 1998-99
- Defensive coordinator at Brown 1996-97
- Plymouth State Head Coach 1993-95 (25-6)
- Freedom Conference Coach of the Year 1993,1994, 1995
- 1977 graduate of Norwich University
- Master's Degree from Plymouth State (1996)
- Native of Spencer

NU's Brown is new UMass head coach

FOOTBALL from page 8

During his tenure at Northeastern, which began in 2000, Brown administered a total overhaul of the Huskies' program. After a 2-9 record in 1999 with just two winning seasons in the 12 years prior to his arrival, Brown led NU to a 27-20 overall record over four seasons, capping his tenure with two consecutive winning seasons that produced an 18-7 overall mark and the program's first ever NCAA playoff appearance in 2002.

Last season, Brown led Northeastern to an 8-4 overall record and a third-place finish in the Atlantic 10 with a 6-3 conference record. He also had the Huskies ranked at or near the top of the A-10 in several statistical categories, including total offense (first/431.8 yards per game), scoring offense (second/34.5 points per game), scoring defense (third/18.2 points per game) and total defense (fourth/338.2 yards per game).

NU finished the season ranked No. 20 in the nation, and was the only squad to beat national champion Delaware. The Huskies downed the Blue Hens 24-14 on Nov. 8 at Parsons Field in Brookline.

In 2002 Brown led Northeastern to its best season in school history. With a 10-3 overall record and a 7-1 mark in A-10 contests, the Huskies set a single-season school record for overall victories and captured a share of the A-10 title for the first time in program history.

For his efforts, Brown was selected as the 2002 A-10 Conference Coach of the Year, the 2002 New England Football Writers Coach of the Year, and the 2002 American Football Coaches Association Region I Coach of the Year.

Prior to his time in Brookline, Brown's two years at UMass produced two of the best seasons in school history, including a 12-3 record and a national title In 1998 and a 9-4 record and a share of the A-10 crown in 1999. The Minutemen's 21 victories during Brown's two seasons as Whipple's defensive coordinator also established a school record for most wins during any two-year span.

"I spent two great years here, culminating in a national championship and an Atlantic 10 championship, and it was just a great experience to be part of 21 wins in two years here," Brown said. "I was thrilled about that challenge and obviously I'm more thrilled to come back here as head coach in 2004.

Brown began his time under Whipple as defensive coordinator for the 1996 and '97 seasons at Brown University, during which the Bears posted a 7-3 overall record in '97 to match the program's best overall record in 20 years. Brown's defense also led the nation with a school-record 28 interceptions that same year, while ranking second nationally in takeaways with 36.

Brown's head coaching career began at Plymouth (N.H.) State College from 1993-95, where he led the Panthers to a pair of Freedom Conference titles in 1994 and '95. Brown was tabbed Freedom Conference Coach of the Year during each of his three seasons, in which Plymouth State posted an overall record of 25-6 and made two Division III playoff appearances, and was also honored as the American Football Coaches Association District 1 Coach of the Year in 1994.

A Spencer native, Brown began his collegiate coaching career as an assistant at Dartmouth in 1982, a year in which he helped the Big Green win the Ivy League title.

Brown, 48, is a 1977 graduate of Norwich University, where he was a running back for the Cadets. He earned his master's degree from Plymouth State in 1996.

He and his wife Deborah have four children, including Rana, 21, who is currently a senior nursing student at UMass.

Pitt. star in Draft

FITZGERALD from page 8

laws. The ruling overturned the league's rule barring players from being eligible for the draft before they were out of high school for three years.

The 20-year-old Fitzgerald was dominating last season. He finished a close second to Oklahoma quarterback Jason White in voting for the Heisman Trophy, nearly becoming the first sophomore to win the award.

He was the most proficient receiver in Pittsburgh history and set three NCAA records, including most consecutive games with a touchdown catch (18), most touchdown catches for a freshman-sophomore (34) and most yards receiving by a sophomore (1,672), besting Randy Moss' 1997 sophomore year. He tied the record for most games catching a touchdown pass in a season (12).

In 2003, Fitzgerald caught 87 passes and led all NCAA receivers with 1,595 yards in 12 regular-season games. He had 22 touchdown catches, at least one in each of Pitt's regular-season games. He had five catches for 77 yards in Pitt's loss to Virginia in the Continental Tire Bowl.

He played in all 13 games as a freshman and became a starter in his third game. In 2002, he had 69 receptions for 1,005 yards, easily surpassing Antonio Bryant, who caught a then-record 51 passes for 844 yards as a freshman in 1999.

Fourth is fine for men's track jump for the Minutemen with a jump of 13.60 meters, good enough for second place in the event.

TRACK from page 8

"That's a good performance for a nine-team field, but he didn't jump as well as he has," O'Brien said. "But he has now familiarized himself with the facility, which is a plus. You have good days and bad days … he competed hard, but his absolute performance wasn't the best."

Senior John O'Neil was another top-three finisher for UMass, taking third in the 500 with 1:06.63. Also taking third place was the Minutemen's 1,600-meter relay team, with 3:26.57.

The Minutemen had a score of performers finish in fourth, fifth and sixth place. Junior Jon Korhonen (8:40.22) took a fourth-place finish in the 3000, and junior Dave McMenamy (1:58.32) went fourth in the 800. Glenn Opie and James Godinho tied for fifth in the high jump, with jumps of 1.86 meters. Godinho also took home fifth place in the long jump with a 6.58-meter leap. Right behind Godinho for sixth in that event was Joseph McCormack, with his jump of 6.38 meters.

COME CHANGE YOUR LUCK ON...
FRIDAY THE 13TH
STARS Winter Semiformal
Where: The Monkey Bar (in the new addition)
When: Friday, February 13
Time: 9:00 p.m. - 1:00 a.m.
Cost: $10
Deejay
Cash Bar
Tickets can be purchased at the STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse from Feb. 2 - Feb. 12 or call 577-1390 for more details.

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

WORKOUT ON CAMPUS!!
4 GYMS TO CHOOSE FROM FOR ONE LOW PRICE
Bring in this ad and save $5.00!!
(offer good until 2/13/04)
Housing Services Residential Wellness Centers
- Washington 19th floor
- JQA 19th floor (Now Expanded!!)
- Lewis basement
- Webster 1st floor
- Wall Mounted Televisions
AVAILABLE FOR ALL STUDENTS!!
Membership fee: $45/semester
$85/year
*Cash cannot be accepted. Pay with your UCARD or with a check or money order payable to UMASS Housing
CALL 577-WELL

Share the love.
Teleflora's Crystal Spiral Bouquet
Teleflora's Roses and Chocolate Bouquet
Teleflora's Precious Hearts Bouquet
Valentine's Week: Feb.9-Feb.14
Knowles Flower Shop
172 N. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-3805
Daily Delivery
FREE mylar balloon with a $15 purchase!!!
Teleflora

Interested In A Career In Business Management Or Outside Professional Sales?
SHERWIN Williams
The Sherwin Williams Company is a $5 billion, Fortune 400 leader!
MANAGEMENT TRAINEES NEEDED THROUGHOUT NEW ENGLAND
Our Management Training Program is designed to provide you with all the skills necessary for a successful career in management and/or outside professional sales. The Program includes self-study modules, structured on-the-job training, classroom instruction at our regional training facilities, and job certification, as well as ongoing education throughout your career. Training topics include: credit management, human resources management, professional sales, profit and loss, merchandising, inventory management, and customer service. Internships also available.
Send your resume to Michelle Fischman, Recruiter, 226 Talmadge Road, Edison,NJ, 08817, Fax: 732-248-9730, E-mail: michelle.fischman@sherwin.com
VISIT US AT THE CAREER FAIR 2/11 or SOM LOBBY FOR BREAKFAST 2/12
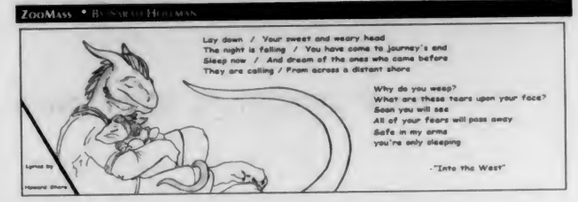
www.sherwin-williams.com
EOE

Damaged Goods • By [illegible]

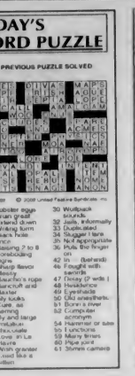
Get Fuzzy • By [illegible]



Mr. Gnu • By [illegible]

1 in 40 Billion • By Matthew Rossi

ZooMass • By Sharee Holtman



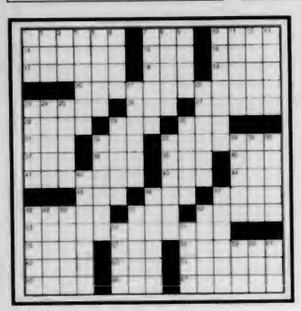
Quote for the Day

"I want to write music. I want to sit down right now at my piano and write a song that people will listen to and remember, and do the same thing every morning for the rest of my life."

-Jonathan, the main character of Jonathan Larson's 'tick, tick … BOOM!'

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Previous puzzle solved



Across
1 Forms a gully
7 Narrow band
10 Europe-Asia range
14 Woodland
15 Thurman of films
16 WXY, on a phone
17 Arabs's land
19 "— 4- U"
20 Batman creator
21 Coin toss (2 wds.)
23 Opening
24 Get an office
27 Gather together
28 "Iso be it!"
29 Car stall
30 High neighbor
31 Reagan nickname
32 Guido
33 Hold
37 Yes, in Montreal
38 Have bills to pay
39 Great hunger
40 Hot spot
41 Wave
43 Tissue layer
44 Floor-sand
45 Crayola choice
46 Bad mouth, slangily
47 Leo or Pisa
48 Actor — Brooks
50 Mother, in Metz
53 Invertebrates (3 wds.)
56 Job-safety org.
57 Grease
58 Flames off
62 Go gutter
63 1300 hours
64 Pass lower
65 Bobthes up
66 Pulverized
67 Kitchen gadget

Down
1 Supermarket
2 Lobster eggs
3 Brain grust
4 Extend down
5 Writing form
6 Black hole once
7 Raising 2 to 8
8 Foreboding sign
9 Gossip flavor
10 Messy
11 Gauchet's rope
12 Bancroft and Baxter
13 Sly looks
21 Cure, as herring
22 Fly and large
23 Imitates chickcuckoo
24 Hawaiian Le Havre
25 Wish granter
29 Used like a lobby

30 Wolfpack sounds
32 Jails, informally
33 Dueling-last
34 Slugger Hank
35 Not appropriate
36 Puts the finger on
42 Behindish
46 Fought with words
47 Timmy (7 wds.)
48 Headphone
49 Eyeshields
50 Old anesthetic
51 Bonn's river
52 Computer acronym
54 Hammer or saw
58 Mary Tyler —
59 Mary Jones
60 Pipe joint
61 Stones cement

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
February Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- BBQ Pulled Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Nut Pasta
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Pot Pie
- Blackened Catfish
- Harvest Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 43
- Low: 23

WEDNESDAY
- High: 35
- Low: 18

THURSDAY
- High: 35
- Low: 16

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Fashwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub, Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
It's not your fault you're crazy. I blame genetics.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
I wouldn't put your finger there if I were you.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Some people can totally rock velvet. You cannot.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
That's an unusual way of putting it.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
React to hurtful words in a non-aggressive manner.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Wear your hat today. Your hair is not behaving.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Forget classes. Take a road trip to New Jersey.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Find out how many licks it takes to get to the center of a Tootsie Pop.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Go find your Valentine in NYC.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are a big loser today. Go back to sleep.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Attempt to compete in a rodeo. It suits you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't let your head get too big. You won't fit through the door.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspensquare.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Sporty! Nissan Pathfinder SE Utility 4door with 4 wheel drive 1995. $4500 1-413-687-7510

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power

2000 KIA Sportage Must Sell Leaving country. CD, AC,

AUTO FOR SALE

4WD, Sunroof, Book Price $6000 Asking $5000 413-695-3034

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

$250 to $500 a week Will train to work at home Helping the U.S. Government file HUD/FHA mortgage refunds No experience necessary Call Toll Free 1-866-537-2907

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Brown takes the helm

Former NU coach is new UMass chief

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Don Brown, a former defensive coordinator for the Massachusetts football team, has returned to UMass as the team's head coach, in a move that has brought criticism and possible legal action from his former employer, Northeastern University.

Brown, who served as the Minutemen's defensive coordinator during the 1998 and '99 seasons, has spent the last four seasons as the head coach at Northeastern. He replaces Mark Whipple, who resigned in January to become the quarterbacks coach for the National Football League's Pittsburgh Steelers.

"Through my own interaction with him and the feedback I have received throughout the last several days, it became very clear to me that Don Brown was the perfect fit for the head coaching position at UMass," UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon said. "He has won wherever he has been and was a major reason why we have a national championship trophy in the trophy case."

"I spent two of the best years of my life here as the defensive coordinator, and I am really looking forward to coming back as head coach," Brown said. "This is an outstanding opportunity for me and my family. We could not be more thrilled to be returning to Amherst.

"We helped build a championship program there and we expect it to continue to be a championship program."

Late last evening, Northeastern Athletics Director Dave O'Brien issued a statement regarding Brown's resignation from the school, and subsequent hiring at UMass. In the statement, O'Brien objected to the decision, and alleged that UMass "intentionally spoke with Coach Brown in direct contravention of our employment contract. We intend to review our legal options in addressing the ethical and legal concerns stemming from UMass' actions."

According to the statement, which appeared on the Northeastern Athletics Web site last night, the NU Athletic Department did not grant UMass permission to speak with Brown, due to the fact that it had just extended Brown's contract and increased compensation, which O'Brien wrote had been explained to UMass.

Former UMass Athletic Director Thorr Bjorn told The Associated Press yesterday that he was never denied permission to speak to Brown.

See FOOTBALL on page 6

New UMass head football coach Don Brown speaks to reporters and players yesterday at the Mullins Center. Brown, a former UMass defensive coordinator, comes back to Amherst after four successful years at Northeastern.

Defense is hot topic for new coach

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts freshman safety James Ihedigbo does not pretend to be a reporter, nor is he a journalism major planning to enter the media. Nonetheless, the Amherst Regional product who enjoyed a stellar rookie campaign in 2003 felt compelled to raise his hand and ask a question of his new football coach before the introductory press conference announcing his arrival had concluded.

"What kind of defense are we going to run?" Ihedigbo asked with his hand sheepishly in the air.

"I can guarantee you this," Don Brown, UMass' new gridiron guru responded. "We'll base out of a four-man front, we'll move into a three-man front and all quarterbacks better get ready, because that's our goal. We've got to get after the decision-maker.

"I'm a believer in no risk, no reward. I don't think you can upset people and win big games unless you're willing to take chances. I believe in aggression and aggressiveness, not four-man rushes, getting after the quarterback. People are going to know UMass is here to play, no question about it."

And with that, the Don Brown era at the University of Massachusetts has begun — Atlantic 10 offenses beware.

"Oh yeah, we're excited about him," Ihedigbo said. "We know he's an aggressive coach. We've talked with players in the past who've played for him, and they say he's a defensive genius. The way he comes up with plays and schemes, it's like he's thinking defense in his sleep."

With four years at Northeastern under his belt, the former UMass defensive coordinator who helped bring the national crown to the Pioneer Valley under Mark Whipple in 1998 has established himself as a premier coach at the Division I-AA level.

While at NU, he was the mastermind of one of the greatest turnarounds in recent memory at the Division I-AA level, turning a perennial A-10 laughing stock into a national title contender in a little over two years and guiding the Huskies to the first conference title in school history.

Riding the strength of a smash-mouth rushing attack and a punishing defense, Brown turned the Huskies into a ferocious group that took the conference by storm in 2002 and advanced to the NCAA playoffs for the first time in school history.

Brown then carried over his success into

See DEFENSE on page 6

Men's track grabs 4th

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's indoor track team showed several strong performances to add up to a fourth-place result at the URI Mega Meet Saturday in Kingston, R.I.

The Minutemen tallied 65 points to finish fourth out of nine teams. Rounding out the top three were Rhode Island (230 points), Bucknell (138) and Brown (101).

"We had some good individual performances," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "But I still feel as though we're a bit rusty ... not near our potential yet. Obviously with 19 best performances of the year [at the meet] we are improving, [but] I thought we might show a little better."

Senior Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng's effort at the Mega Meet earned him the Atlantic 10 Male Track and Field Performer of the Week award. Frimpong-Boateng set a new school record and an A-10 season-best time in the 55-meter dash, clocking in at 6.33 seconds, and extending his streak of first-place 55-meter finishes to three. Frimpong-Boateng also took home fourth in the 200-meter at 22.48. In just his third meet of the year, the senior has already qualified for the New England Championships.

"He's now in the gap in terms of readiness," O'Brien said. "It's a tough event to run, especially with the length of his stride and all, and he came through well."

The Rhode Island Rams had the strongest performance of day, outscoring their nearest competitor by nearly 100 points. Senior Colin Aina led the Rams with a first place finish in the 55-meter hurdles (7.37), and a second-place finish in the long jump with a distance of 23-2 1/2. The trio of Eric Grace (21.95), Ashbad Agyapong (22.22) and Rob Johnson (22.43) swept the 200-meter dash. The Rams also got a 1-2-3 sweep in the weight throw from Sean Bramely, Dan Godin, and Andre Reid.

Bucknell was another strong performer at the meet, taking home first place in four different events. Dan Costello won the mile with 4:17.47, Jeff Arck won the pole vault with a personal-best 15 feet, three inches, and Noel Powell won the long jump with 23-4 1/2 in the effort for the Bison.

Junior Henry Smith came up strong in the triple

See TRACK on page 6

Franke gets nod

Senior makes watch list for P.O.Y. award

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Senior outfielder Aisha Franke, a 2003 All-Conference and All-Regional selection, has been named to the initial watch list for the 2004 USA Softball Collegiate Player of the Year. She is one of 40 contenders for the year-end award, the only honor of its kind in college softball.

Franke, who saw limited action but played in 48 games as a freshman, started 64 of 65 games as a sophomore, and became a key member of the Massachusetts softball team as a junior last season. Now, Franke finally has the chance to gain some of the spotlight after displaying all the tools of a complete centerfielder.

"It's nice to see people notice all the hard work you put into it," Franke said. "My teammates have been helping me out and coach [Elaine Sortino] has been really working with me a lot such as being consistent.

"Now, I'm swinging more than I have before and I'm really excited. It's makes me more ready to go out and prove people right, like, 'watch out [for me]'."

Along with senior catcher Jaime Cahalan, Franke has emerged as one of the leaders on a young Minutewoman team. Sortino credits the centerfielder's easygoing personality and strong desire to improve herself.

"I think she does an outstanding job leading the outfield, setting the tone and raising the bar on work ethic," Sortino said. "There are goals I think this year offensively for her, because she can really hit the ball. She opens up a lot of different possibilities that will force [the other team] to make decisions, because she could exploit a defense."

Franke has steadily improved since her arrival at UMass. As a freshman, she struggled at the plate going only 8-for-42 (.190) and stole a mere six bases in limited action. She broke out in her sophomore year, when she batted .340 on the year, scored 26 times and stole 16 bases.

The Philadelphia native has gained a reputation as one of the best outfielders in the Atlantic 10. Franke finished last season with a .403 batting average, tops in the A-10 and 40th in the nation. She possesses tremendous speed, with 18 stolen bases in 20 attempts last season, the seventh most steals in UMass history.

"It's definitely a goal of mine to beat last year's batting average," said Franke, whose .347 career avg. ranks fifth all-time at UMass. "I continue to just go game by game. I used to say I want one or two hits every game, but now I want to push myself more and maybe get two or three hits."

Adding to her consistent swing and speed on the basepaths, Sortino has changed her centerfielder's swing to add power. Franke has never hit a home run in her collegiate career and is not known as a slugger. But she has worked on improving her power to combine with her speed to pull more extra base hits.

"She's among the best contact hitters especially from the left side," Sortino said. "A player she should pursue is [former Minutewoman] Mandy Galas, Atlantic 10 Player of the Year in 1999. The difference between Franke and Galas is Aisha has more explosive power than Galas does."

The boost of power has raised 5-foot-6 senior's confidence to new heights. Franke was the team's bunt artist last season, often legging out an infield single to get a rally started. Defenses would shift their infield and outfield in. By adding power to her swing, the entire defense is now vulnerable to a multi-dimensional hitter.

"Coach Sortino has changed my swing a lot to add some power and I've been working on it a lot," said Franke, who credits her coach for much of her success. "I feel like I can really put the ball somewhere and get those extra bases. I can't wait until she gives me the swing away."

The initial list of 40 players will be reduced to 25 finalists on April 6, followed by a second list of 10 finalists. The final three candidates will be determined on May 11, and the winner will be announced at the 2004 Women's College World Series in Oklahoma City.

Fitzgerald will enter NFL Draft

By Charles Sheehan
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Larry Fitzgerald finally made the decision everyone expected: to enter the NFL draft.

The Heisman Trophy runner-up said yesterday that he would forgo his collegiate career at Pittsburgh to turn professional. His announcement came four days after he was declared eligible for the draft.

Fitzgerald, who will turn 21 in August, is projected to go early in the draft. Though the receiver played just two seasons with the Panthers, that was enough time for him to break several school and NCAA records.

"The main reason people come to college is to better your chances of making a living, and I think that my two years that I've had here, I've given myself a good opportunity to make a good living ... for myself and to support my family," Fitzgerald said.

He petitioned the NFL to allow him to enter the draft despite two seasons of play. Fitzgerald left the Academy of Holy Angels in Richfield, Minn., midway through his senior year in 2001 and transferred to Valley Forge (Pa.) Military Academy to boost his grades for college.

The NFL cleared the way for Fitzgerald to enter the April draft because he is three years past his senior year of high school.

"I'm very confident in my ability," he said. "I know there's going to be skeptics and there's going to be people out there criticizing this and criticizing that, but all-in-all I know I can play the game of football."

The league's decision on Fitzgerald came on the same day a federal judge ruled running back Maurice Clarett could also turn pro despite playing only one season at Ohio State.

In that ruling Thursday, the judge said NFL rules regarding its draft violate federal antitrust

See FITZGERALD on page 6

Toby Keith, country music's king of controversy, takes Mullins
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

The Don Brown era begins for UMass football.
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 80

AMELIA F. GINEVAN/COLLEGIAN

A WHOLE NEW WORLD

Kelly O'Brien, an on-campus Peace Corps recruiter talks to two students yesterday at the Career Fair in the basement of the Campus Center. The students, from left to right are Kate Hibschman and Loretta Scapin, who are both senior Landscape Architecture majors. The Peace Corps recruitment office is at 41 Hills South for all those who might be interested.

Students lobby against international fee

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — University of Massachusetts students gathered at North Village apartments last night, asking for signatures on a petition soliciting Chancellor John Lombardi to repeal the New International Student Fee. The fee requires international students to pay an additional $65 on their tuition bills, starting this spring semester.

The fee helps fund the government Student and Exchange Visitor Information System. SEVIS, as its known, requires all international students to register personal information into a database directly connected to the Department of Homeland Security. This allows the government to monitor the activities of any international student in the nation; it can pinpoint facts on a person, ranging from his or her major to academic status.

The International Programs Office devised the new fee to fund this system, and in turn, the $65, payments due March 11, has drawn the attention of hundreds in opposition.

The SEVIS program has been drawn from the USA Patriot Act, which passed in legislation after the events of Sept. 11, 2001. The goal of the Patriot Act is to protect U.S. citizens from potential terrorists. Several of the airline hijackers on Sept. 11 acquired their pilot licenses from student visas.

Ibrahim Dahlstron-Hakki, who works for the UMass Graduate Employee Office, is outraged at the fee.

"We're not going to pay it," he said. "If the University insists on implementing the fee, we will organize our members and refuse to pay."

If the fee is not paid, late fees can be added. Eventually international students and faculty could face possible repercussions like expulsion from UMass, or even U.S. deportation.

"I am worried to some extent, but if we get enough people to refuse to pay, then I think that the University has to recognize that," Ibrahim said.

Chris Vials, GEO president feels the University is isolating international students and faculty, and recommends another course of action that would also comply with national regulations.

"We would prefer if the cost was shared by all students," he said. "Then it would be around $4 per student."

GEO is currently organizing a campaign against the fee, including the aforementioned petition. A rally is slated for Feb. 19 outside the Student Union at noon to further awareness.

"We do understand that there is a budget crisis, but I think [the $65 fee] is discriminatory," Ibrahim said. "I feel singled out by the administration; it has not been supportive [of international students and faculty]."

Ibrahim and several others in opposition of the fee have already collected over 1,000 signatures on the petition thus far, and plan to account for hundreds more after tallying last night's petitioning. Tomorrow, signature collections will focus on Lincoln Apartments.

GEO meets today with Chancellor Lombardi with hopes that he will understand the anger and outrage from the faculty and students, and eventually eliminate the fee.

"We need a lot of support from everyone on campus," Ibrahim said of this goal's likelihood.

Ibrahim maintained that individuals calling and e-mailing the chancellor with concerns was yet another way to get this message heard.

Supreme Court Justice Scalia 'quacks' over interpretation

By Yousef Munayyer
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia spoke on "Constitutional Interpretation" last night before a packed Johnson Chapel at Amherst College.

Although some of the attendees were opposed to Scalia's stance, audience members were overall respectful.

Recently, Justice Scalia's credibility as a judge has been in question. Earlier this year, Scalia went on a duck-hunting trip with his long time friend, U.S. Vice President Richard Cheney. The trip came only weeks after the Supreme Court decided to accept a case in which Vice President Cheney is a defendant.

Critics have been in an uproar over the unethical nature and timing of this trip, openly calling for Scalia to remove himself from the impending trial. Senators Joe Lieberman and Patrick Leahey have openly asked the court about procedures for removing Scalia due to conflict of interest.

Despite the controversy surrounding his position, Scalia's lecture focused on his views on constitutional interpretation.

Labeling himself an "originalist," a person who believes in interpreting the Constitution for it original meaning, Scalia criticized any other way of interpreting the Constitution.

He believes that he, along with Justice Clarence Thomas, are the only two "originalists" left on the court.

"Over the last 30 years, we have embraced, 'God, I hate the phrase] the 'living Constitution'," Scalia said.

"Don't call me a 'strict constructionalist.' I don't mind 'quack, quack, quack'," he said, poking fun at the hunting controversy. "But I'm not a strict constructionalist."

Scalia also expressed his sorrow at that way the judicial system has been heading.

"At the end of the road, the 'living constitution' will lead to the destruction of the Constitution," Scalia said. "My principle is to take the words and what they meant when they were adopted."

Scalia was very clear on what he believes the roll that the Supreme Court should play. Marbury v. Madison, the landmark Supreme Court case that gave courts the power to declare Justices interpreters of the law. Scalia believes the ruling gave the court overly extensive powers.

Nearly 600 people attended the event. Among them were protesters of Justice Scalia's strong conservative stance.

The first three rows of the room were filled with spectators wearing black armbands, symbolizing their dissent.

The silent protest was organized by a coalition of student groups as part of a "Right to Know" campaign.

"We want to be respectful enough to get moderates to agree with us," said Emily Silberstein of the Amherst Feminists Alliance.

Silberstein said Scalia's decisions "speak for themselves." Silberstein, along with other groups in the coalition handed out literature during the lecture, which highlighted Scalia's very conservative stances on issues such as capital punishment and civil liberties.

Justice Antonin Scalia was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Ronald Reagan in 1986 and was affirmed by the U.S. Senate by a vote of 98-0. President George W. Bush has said in the past that he would like to appoint more justices in the future like Scalia.

After his speech, Justice Scalia held a brief question and answer session in which he entertained questions from the crowd.

One attendee asked the Justice a question regarding his legitimacy and partiality regarding the duck hunting controversy.

Justice Scalia simply replied, "This is not the place to get into that Quack Quack".

Job fairs provide student employment opportunities

The African, Latino, Asian and Native American Job Fair begins today, from 5:30-8:30 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium. Also, from 10 a.m. till 3 p.m., over 60 employers from different areas of business will be at the Career Services annual Campus-Wide Career Fair, Co-Op and Summer Job Fair and the Life Sciences and Environmental Career Fair. Employers will gather in the Campus Center auditorium to meet with University of Massachusetts students.

The goal for today's fairs is to provide a look into employment opportunities for students of all majors, providing students with a chance to explore various career options and gather further information on professional connections and training.

Organizations from all over the United States will be offering positions in varying fields: education, communication, health care, sales and marketing, software, environment, non-profit and social services, research and development, biotechnology, manufacturing, financial services and more. During the ALANA Job Fair, employers will focus on the diversity of their workforce.

Associate Director and Career Fair Coordinator for Career Services Tina Acker feels it is "important for students to keep an open mind and consider all the possibilities when attending any of these events."

"Employers are often willing to train the right person, regardless of college major," she said.

The ALANA Job Fair is co-sponsored by the Bilingual Collegiate Program, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students, Diversity in Management Education Services, the Minority Engineering Program, the United Asia Learning Resource Center and Career Services.

The Co-Op and Summer Job Fair will be held tomorrow from 10 a.m. till 3 p.m. also in the Campus Center Auditorium. This event will showcase pre-professional opportunities that are becoming a pre-requisite for college graduates who want to qualify for good jobs upon graduation.

This year, 30 employers will come to the fair in search of candidates for paid semester-long and summer co-ops and credit internships.

A Summer Camp Employment Day, also scheduled tomorrow, invites students to explore job opportunities available at both overnight and day camps around New England and across the country.

-Keyana Brown

Boston man pleads innocent to post-Super Bowl accident charges

BOSTON (AP) — The lawyer for a man accused of killing a person while driving drunk through a post-Super Bowl melee said his client was fleeing a violent mob when the incident occurred.

Stanley Filoma, 24, of the city's Mattapan section, is charged with motor vehicle homicide after he allegedly killed 21-year-old James Grabowski and injured four others when he drove his sport utility vehicle into a crowd of Patriots fans near Northeastern University after the Feb. 1 game.

Filoma, who previously posted $10,000 bail, pleaded innocent yesterday to new charges, three counts of leaving the scene of an accident that caused bodily injury. Judge Milton Wright declined to increase bail as prosecutors asked, but he did order Filoma to surrender his passport, said David Procopio, spokesman for the Suffolk district attorney's office.

Filoma's lawyer, Bruce L. Namenson, said his client was trying to escape from a situation "that was pretty tantamount to a riot after the game. He was caught in the middle of it. Objects were thrown at his car. He was nervous. His windshield was smashed. He was trying to get out of there any way he could. He was in fear of his own life and safety at the time."

Filoma allegedly struck five pedestrians with his Toyota Land Cruiser, killing Grabowski, the son of a state police captain. Jason Stackiewicz, 21, and Joshua Bersey, 21, were injured in the head. Thomas Pasquale, 19, suffered a leg injury. Lucas Barosky was also injured, Procopio said.

Three hours after the incident, Filoma allegedly registered a blood alcohol level of 0.09, higher than the legal limit of 0.08. He was charged last week with motor vehicle homicide while operating under the influence of alcohol.

-Associated Press

Govenor ready to unveil budget to fix MA state roads and bridges

THERESA MCCONNELL ASSOCIATED PRESS

Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney addresses a news conference yesterday in Boston, talking about plans for the state to continue to spend $400 million a year until 2012 to upgrade crumbling roads and bridges.

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Mitt Romney filed a $1.15 billion transportation bond bill yesterday that guarantees $400 million annually to repair local roads and bridges that have long been overshadowed by Boston's Big Dig.

The funding would continue until 2012, extending a federal requirement passed in 2001 that the state spend at least $400 million annually on repairs other than the Big Dig. That agreement was set to expire next year, but Romney said communities outside Boston deserve the help.

"There's been a big sucking sound," Romney said, referring to Big Dig spending. "The state has heard it loud and clear."

The $14.6 billion Big Dig buried Interstate 93 beneath Boston. It's several years late and several billion dollars over budget.

Romney's proposal calls for $34 million to promote development near commuter rail

See ROMNEY on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

February 11 - February 17 2004

Today

Amherst College — Richard D. Kahlenberg, one of the nation's leading writers on education, equal opportunity and civil rights, will give a lecture entitled, "A Call for Socioeconomic Desegregation of U.S. Public Schools" at 4 p.m. in Porter Lounge of Converse Hall.

University of Massachusetts — Dr. James Farrow, gastroenterologist from California, will give a presentation on "Sudarshan Kriya" at 4 p.m., 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. in Campus Center room 917. Farrow will tell how "Sudarshan Kriya" is a special breathing technique that is known to reduce the level of stress hormones in the brain and has beneficial effects for multiple illnesses.

Mount Holyoke College — Professor Tony Smith, Tufts University, will present a lecture entitled, "Can America Democratize Iraq?" at 7:30 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium.

Tomorrow

Mount Holyoke College — Katharine Park, member of the Department of the History of Science at Harvard University, will speak on "Wonders of Art and Nature: Cultures of Collecting in Early Modern Europe" at 7 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium.

Amherst College — "The Vagina Monologues" will be performed by 35 Amherst College students at 7 p.m. in Cole Assembly Room of Converse Hall. Tickets cost $3 for students, $5 for Amherst Faculty, staff and the general public. Tickets should be purchased in advance at Keefe Campus Center or in Valentine Hall during the week of the performance.

Amherst College — At 8 p.m., "Zora's Barbeque" a new play by Julia Brownell (AC '04) will play in Kirby Theater. "Zora's Barbeque" tells the story of Zora, a sex-crazed therapist, who holds an indoor barbeque at her house at which sex, "Twister" and death ensue. Tickets are free but reservations are recommended. The play will also be performed at 8 p.m. on both Friday and Saturday. The play will run through Feb 14.

Friday 13

Smith College — At 3 p.m., Onawumi Jean Moss will present "Talk that Talk" a presentation of folkloric stories from around the world in the Helens Hills Chapel.

Smith College — At 8 p.m., there will be "Musical Tribute to Elsie Irwin Sweeney", featuring the Elsie Irwin Sweeney Chair in Music Monica Jakuc and friends at the Sweeney Concert Hall in Sage.

Saturaay 14

UMass — From 9:30 a.m to 5 p.m., Eduardo Leandro and Thomas Hannum will lead "Percussion Day" in room 36 of the Fine Arts Center. The clinic is free and open to all.

UMass — The Barenaked Ladies will perform live in concert at the Mullins Center. Tickets cost $35 and $45. To purchase the tickets and for more information, contact the Mullins Center at 545-0505.

Sunday 15

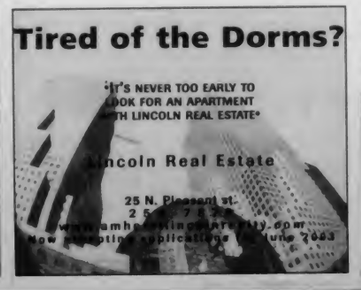
Mount Holyoke College — Weil Davis, Five College Women's Studies Research Associate at Long Island University-CW Post, will present a talk entitled "A Scurrilous, Vicious and Libelous Book": Suppressing a Tell-All in 1933." at 4:30 p.m. at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center.

Monday 16

Smith College — At 4:30 p.m., Michael R. Dietrich, from the Department of Biological Sciences of Dartmouth College, will give a lecture entitled, "Keeping Time: The Molecular Clock as Boundary Concept" in McConnell B05.

Hampshire College — Ekwueme Michael Thelwell, Professor of Literature and Writing in the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies at UMass, will speak on "James Baldwin, American prophet: 'We have Seen His Righteous Witness'" at 6:30 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall. He will share his personal opinions about the political and social effects of the work of James Baldwin, a great American author and moral witness.

Tuesday 17



Hampshire College — At 6 p.m., Hampshire will be showing the film "James Baldwin: The Price of a Ticket." in West Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall. The film is being shown in honor of Black History Month.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

For the Record

Correction: Dan Pomeroy was incorrectly identified as an officer in the Pride of Lions organization in a Page One article yesterday. Pomeroy is an officer in the Pride Alliance organization.

Summer Employment
Glacier National Park
Montana
Apply Today!
The Resort at Glacier, St. Mary Lodge
For information call:
1-800-368-3689
Apply Online @ www.glacierparkjobs.com

Tired of the Dorms?

ALL STAFF MEETING
Feb. 18 at 7 p.m. in the newsroom. New writers are encouraged.

THE ALANA JOB FAIR
- Coop/Internship Opportunities
- Networking
- Summer/Permanent Employment

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2004
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM
UMASS AMHERST
5:30 PM~8:30 PM

ALL STUDENTS ARE INVITED !

SPONSORED BY: Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Diversity in Management Education Services (DIMES), Minority Engineering Program (MEP), United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC), the Campus Career Network (CCN), Native American Student Support Services (NASSS)

Suicide bombing outside Iraqi police station kills dozens; crowd blames U.S.

By Mariam Fam
Associated Press

Brennan Linsley/Associated Press

U.S. troops arrive at the scene of an explosion at a police station in Iskandariyah, south of Baghdad, yesterday. A truck bomb exploded outside the police station as dozens of would-be police recruits lined up to apply for jobs.

ISKANDARIYAH, Iraq (AP) — A suicide bomber blew up a truckload of explosives yesterday outside a police station south of Baghdad, killing up to 53 people and wounding scores — including would-be Iraqi recruits lined up to apply for jobs.

The blast in this predominantly Shiite Muslim city followed the disclosure Monday of a letter from an anti-American operative to al-Qaida's leadership asking for help in launching attacks against the Shiites to undermine the U.S.-run coalition and the future Iraqi government.

Many angry townspeople blamed the Americans for the blast, and Iraqi police had to fire weapons in the air to disperse dozens of Iraqis who stormed the shattered remains of the station hours after the explosion.

"This missile was fired from a U.S. aircraft," said Hadi Mohy Ali, 60. "The Americans want to tear our unity apart."

No U.S. or other coalition forces were hurt, said Lt. Col. Dan Williams, a military spokesman in Baghdad.

It was at least the eighth vehicle bombing in Iraq this year and followed warnings from occupation officials that insurgents would step up attacks against Iraqis who work with the U.S.-led coalition, especially ahead of the planned June 30 transfer of sovereignty to a provisional Iraqi government.

The Iraqi Interior Ministry and the local police chief said the bombing was carried out by a suicide driver who detonated a red pickup truck at razor wire and sandbagged security barricades in front of the station.

NEWS MEETINGS 6 P.M. MONDAYS

Road repairs ahead

ROMNEY from page 1

stops, in line with Romney's "transit-oriented development" program unveiled in November. The program aims to ease traffic congestion by improving public transportation and bringing development into towns and cities, rather than expanding highways and creating sprawl.

"We don't want to just see strip mall after strip mall," Romney said. "We instead want to see lovely town centers and villages."

The bill also includes $425 million in borrowing for federally assisted major road and bridge projects; $210 million for road projects that are not federally assisted, and $102 million for regional transit authorities and freight rail rights-of-way purchases.

The plan follows Romney's "fix it first" initiative, which emphasizes repairing existing infrastructure before starting new projects, state Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas said at a news conference Tuesday.

"This bond bill is about keeping promises," Grabauskas said.

He added the bill would move the state closer to creating a single agency in charge of roads and bridges. The state currently has a Turnpike Authority, a highway department and the Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority.

The Massachusetts Sierra Club issued a statement Tuesday saying Romney's plan maintained the status quo while doing little to lessen pollution or gridlock.

Ann Nelson, chair of the state's Sierra Club, said the administration's talk of merging state departments to improve efficiency was meaningless.

"The governor is trying to create a smokescreen through the merger so people won't notice that he has no real plan," she said.

THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
Every Saturday @ Midnight
Special Valentine's show with giveaways
Featuring our live cast
The Come Again Players
(In)appropriate attire encouraged
Admission $5.75
prop kits $2.00, no outside props
Reservations Recomended
For more info Call (413) 539-FILM
South Hadley's Tower Theaters
The Village Commons
in South Hadley MA.
Call 539-FILM for reservations
Reservations accepted up to 6 days in advance
www.Towertheaters.com
CALL 539-FILM TO MAKE RESERVATIONS.
RESERVATIONS ACCEPTED UP TO 6 DAYS IN ADVANCE.

MAYO CLINIC
Nursing Graduates

Mayo Clinic Nursing in Rochester, Minnesota invites new graduates to Embark on an Adventure and discover unparalleled opportunities for career mobility and growth. Our hospitals are world-renowned acute care teaching facilities where quality nursing is our tradition and mission. For the new graduate we offer clinical and classroom based orientation to ensure a successful transition from student to professional. A primary preceptor provides ongoing direction and evaluation to foster professional growth and development. Once orientation is completed, the commitment to excellence in nursing through quality education is continued with an extensive and comprehensive staff development program. To learn more about nursing opportunities for new graduates at Mayo Clinic, please visit www.mayoclinic.org
Mayo Clinic
Rochester, MN
Phone: 800-562-7984
Fax: 507-266-3168
e-mail: careers@mayo.edu
Refer to job posting #04-15-U
Mayo Clinic is an affirmative action and equal opportunity educator and employer

Lori Granat-Dupell '81
Attorney
Montague & Desautels
Attorneys at Law
Worcester MA

Find Common Ground
With a law degree from Western New England College School of Law Lori Granat-Dupell is prepared to help clients find equitable resolutions in family law disputes.
Whether you intend to take your place in the courtroom or the boardroom, our outstanding legal faculty will prepare you to practice what we teach. From research and writing to law clinics, national competitions to externships, our collegial learning environment offers hands-on experience for success in many fields.
OPEN HOUSE
Full- and Part-time
Saturday
Feb. 21, 2004
12:30-3:30 p.m.
S. Prestley Blake
Law Center
1215 W. Boylston Road
Springfield, MA
Call 800-782-6665
or 413-782-1406
to RSVP
www.law.wnec.edu
WESTERN NEW ENGLAND COLLEGE
SCHOOL OF LAW
Practice What We Teach.

Save $5 from FTD.COM this Valentine's Day!

The FTD® Sweethearts® Bouquet #A9-V2
Romance Candle Kit #2571
Fresh Cuts! Red and White Tulips #F079
1 Dozen Medium Stem Red Roses Boxed #FX01
Save $5
Don't forget - Valentine's Day is Saturday, February 14th!
Shop online at www.ftd.com/dailycollegian or Call 1-800-SEND-FTD and give promo code 9182
FTD.COM
clip and save
Limit one coupon per purchase. Coupons cannot be combined. No cash value and not valid with any other offer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

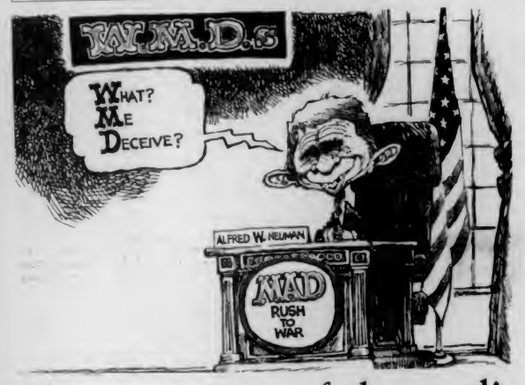
The unfortunate violent streak in sports continues

57-year-old Ronald Bell, a high school basketball referee, was sent to the hospital Friday night after a violent attack by a parent. During the game, RaeLynn Dukovich, a woman in the audience, was questioning Bell's calls in a harassing manner. He asked security to remove the woman from the Pittsburg high school gymnasium in order to keep things under control.

Unfortunately for Bell, his plan backfired. The woman's husband, Peter Dukovich, came down from the stands and onto the court. He approached the referee and threw him to the floor. Bell suffered a concussion, and Dukovich is being charged with disorderly conduct, assault on a sports official and simple assault. His wife, RaeLynn, is also being charged with disorderly conduct.

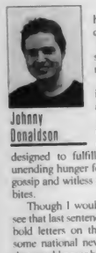
This incident is only the most recent of a growing trend of violence in modern sports. This type of behavior has become characteristic of sporting events in today's world.

Just a few years ago, in July 2000, a father was killed by another parent at a hockey practice right here in Massachusetts. It's hard to believe that the brutal beating of Michael Costin was not enough to raise awareness about this disturbing pattern that is establishing itself across the country. Incidents just like it are becoming more and more common.



One can't help but wonder where the violence began. It has been tolerated at the professional level for years. Players fight each other on the field; fans fight each other in the stadium. And it was nationally televised when during the Red Sox-Yankees ALCS, former Yankees bench coach, Don Zimmer, clearly an old man, rushed at Pedro Martinez and was forcefully thrown to the ground. With examples such as these, how can we expect that thin violent behavior will not trickle down to the college and even "Pee-wee" levels of sports?

It's true that at the youngsters sporting events, the culprits are often overly-aggressive parents. But what message does that send to those children who will mostly likely continue to be involved in athletics. One day, those children will be cheering for kids of their own and thinking that it is okay to attack another parent.



It is an extremely dangerous trend that we, as Americans, have fallen into. It's pathetic that we simply accept that citizens may attack each other at events that are supposed to be recreational. We, at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, would like to see a reversal of this streak of violent behavior among people who are supposed to have good sportsmanship. We all need to take responsibility for ourselves when we are in public, for the sake of the safety of others. When it comes down to it, we have to remember that although competition may be stiff, it is still just a game.

Information from cnn.com and the Wakefield Daily Item was used for this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Short comings of the media

Johnny Donaldson

Ben and Jen have finally called it quits. Paris Hilton stars in a home-made sex tape. Howard Dean is a screeching, angry maniac. Journalism is now just a quaint idea designed to fulfill our ravenous, unending hunger for cheap tabloid gossip and witless soft news sound bites.

Though I would have loved to see that last sentence printed in big, bold letters on the front page of some national newspaper, I knew that would never happen. But if you scanned any newspaper in the past few months then you probably have noticed that some variant on the first three sentences were probably formed into some big, shocking headline.

Fed from the celebrity grinding-mill, modern journalism has grown weary and bloated and is far too enthralled with its own importance. Long gone is the sense of duty to the community, the passion for telling the truth, no matter what cost. What we have instead is a trite, trivial program designed to rehash the same limp, pointless stories over and over again without imparting anything new or useful in the American continuum.

Gone are the days when Woodward and Bernstein used their journalistic instincts to uncover the truth about Watergate, or the days when Veronica Guerin risked her life to let the world know about the culprits behind Ireland's inner city drug trade.

Who are today's crusading journalists? The guys who brought to attention Hilton's foray into amateur porn? Gossip, rumor-mongering and public humiliation of public celebrities is the name of the game, at least when the media isn't buying into the government's dogma hook, line and sinker. The depth of most modern media involves repeating the same calculated quotes that the same old press secretaries and publicists dump out into the open. Are there any journalists out there – and I'm talking about the mainstream, big-press media, not the extreme liberal/conservative fringe dwellers out there – concerned with delving into the truth behind the current government's many shady policies (including an increasingly more corrupt, damaging and useless war) and willing to push forward in an attempt to reveal the God's honest truth, whether it's hurtful or helpful to our current Commander-in-Chief?

I don't see anyone volunteering. All I see are the same stories, repeatedly endlessly, using the same hackneyed information emanating from the same, safe source. No one challenges the pro forma attitude of modern politics; instead, they routinely repeat whatever closed-off political rhetoric they are told to "report."

Of course, it may just be that the media is too lazy and/or indulgent to actually bother on reporting real hot-button issues. Why concern yourself with issues that seemingly appeal to only so few NPR-listening eggheads, when you can concentrate on the world of celebrity?

Of course, it may just be that the media is too lazy and/or indulgent to actually bother on reporting real hot-button issues. Why concern yourself with issues that seemingly eggheads, when you can concentrate on the world of celebrity? Celebrity-worship has gotten to such a point that there is even a mental "disease" used to describe our fascination with the famous. To me, it sounds like a pop-psych acronym used to de-villify stalking, but now I'm just starting to get off track.

It's big business these days in the media to revel in the embarrassments of our supposedly beloved famous people. The relationship between Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck was endlessly dissected and discussed in the news, to the captivation of no one. Yet magazine after magazine, headline after headline trumpeted the final, permanent break-up of the couple. That is, when they weren't bleating about Hilton's unwanted exposure or Dean's strangulated vocal mannerisms (Dean's alien approximation of jubilance was a bigger news story than the Democratic candidate's actual stance on issues, a truly sad state of affairs.) Currently, Janet Jackson is making headlines thanks to her breast-flashing Superbowl stunt. This isn't news. It's a joke.

Affleck and Lopez have the right to break up in piece, and Hilton – a girl who hasn't even done anything to deserve celebrity-dom beyond being a tabloid darling – has the right to tape herself having sex if that gets her juices flowing. Everyone goes through break-ups; I'm sure a decent number of people have taped themselves having sex.

Things like that aren't newsworthy. They are personal choices, and it has no bearing on life as it is lived by everyone else. As for Jackson, her action was nothing more than a stupid, shameless stunt enacted by a barely talented pop tart desperate to keep her name alive in a clogged marketplace likely to forget her. It does not deserve comment on the front page of newspaper, nor does it deserve the scandal that it spurred. It just does not deserve the hype.

With more important stories needing to be told, how come we are just given the same old rehashed horse and pony show? I don't want to turn onto the news and see real life as it happens, not pre-fab political soundbites and cheap celebrity gossip.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

An inglorius path

Yesterday morning as I drove to school I heard a preview piece on National Public Radio about "Nat Turner: a Troublesome Property." This documentary was highlighted last night on the PBS program "Independent Lens" and is a look at a controversial 1967 novel that supposed Turner as more than just a bloody slave-revolter.

Scott Eldridge II

Later during the day I received a newsletter from the journalism research organization Poynter in which Kevin Woods reminds journalists of the 50th anniversary of the Brown v. Topeka Board of Education decision this month.

"It's an issue that doesn't really need a 50th anniversary to render it relevant," writes Woods. But it is a topic that demands our attention.

"Nat Turner: a Troublesome Property" makes an attempt at re-examining the character of Turner, a slave who led a revolt in Southampton, Va. in 1831 that ended in the death of white slave owners and their families and the eventual execution and dismemberment of Turner.

As a documentary, "Turner" is another in a list of looks at Turner's role in history. Certainly his part in shaping the image of slaves in the culture, but filmmaker Charles Burnett examines something that is fairly new to film, Nat Turner as a person. The documentary springs off of William Styron's 1967 Pulitzer Prize winning novel "The Confessions of Nat Turner," which sparked Turner debates when it was published and came to be one of the more controversial works on the subject.

But shouldn't Turner's character be viewed in new lights every so often? The heroes of our history have long been found to be marauding explorers, unholy spiritual leaders, corrupt rulers and tyrannical despots. Why should it be any different that Nat Turner be taken out of the blood-soaked light he has been bathed in and shone in a new one?

The Wood piece examines the lingering effect that Brown v. Board of Ed. has had, particularly whether we are desegregated, Integrated or simply reverting back to segregation in schools "Look at the language. Segregation. Integration. Desegregation. Diversity. Re-segregation. There are no synonyms there. Behind each word is an era of our times gone by, each distinct from the others, each capable of radically reframing the way we understand the story of public education," Woods adds.

Since Brown v. Board of Ed. we have seen virtual segregation, as close as Boston, as far as the South and West. Whether it has been intentional school districting to keep white schools white, or the shuffling of school moneys so that improvements miss lower-class neighborhoods. It is no longer legal on paper, but de facto segregation has permeated a post-Brown United States.

Looking at the past 50 years to tell the story of schooi equality, looking at the past 170 and beyond to understand Nat Turner, is not only an exercise in understanding time and place, but also a hard look at the paths we took to get to these solutions.

Looking at the past 50 years to tell the story of school equality, looking at the past 170 and beyond to understa Nat Turner, is not only an exercise in understanding time and place, but also a hard look at the paths we took to get to these solutions. Furthermore, is an opportunity to realize that we are not there yet.

Despite perhaps the best intentions, we are still living in a world where education isn't equal, work environments are hostile, a class structure exists that only gets an occasional mainstream whisper, but it is only in looking back that we even recognize that there were problems, nevermind examining if there has been change since.

It would be immature to say that the world has not changed, and changed for the better, because of U.S. Supreme Court decisions. It would be equally blind to say that we have accomplished all the goals that were set out by that decision.

In Massachusetts we see a new inequality, or newly acknowledged inequality, that has invoked the separate as unequal mantra. This is a mark of the importance and weight that the Brown decision has on the road to equal treatment for all. Again, we have to consider the importance of our historic perspective. Are we reexamining the issue of gay marriage through a new lens?

Perhaps in pockets of states, but not nationally and not even across Massachusetts (or Vermont as our Northern neighbor who brought this forward first) there are efforts for making equality real. But still, for the discussion to even surface there must be clearer glass to see through, or blinders removed.

We have to take a look back more often. As Woods says, we shouldn't need to celebrate the anniversary of Brown v. Board of Ed., there should be daily reminders and they aren't always there.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian columnist.

Letter to Mr. Gargano

It's not often I witness a murder. You see, I'm now the acting witness to a murder — not of an individual — but of a group of nineteen amazing University of Massachusetts employees, 27 irreplaceable community leaders, and roughly 500 students who consistently both challenge and reward. I am a witness to the murder of a very large, very strange, and ultimately very functional, family. Michael Gargano's plans for a first-year student program are bringing about an end to this family.

Jason Rowe

Let me give you a little bit of background information so that I don't totally seem like an over-the-top self-absorbed melodramatic fool, or at least like a kind of cool one.

Recently (read: Thursday), I was informed that residents of Pierpont Moore (a cluster of approximately 500 residents in what is referred to as Southwest South) would not be able to return to their rooms next year. Instead, Pierpont Moore is to become home to EPOCH, an all first-year student program (FYP for short).

The principal problem with FYP is that it is all first-year students. What I mean is that removing upper classmen from a residence hall results in the elimination of the moderating effect upper classmen have on first-year behavior. Cornell University, which recently invested significant money in the creation of a first-year program, is a good example. Almost every measure of negative/destructive student behavior is off the charts in the Cornell First Year area. The three FYPs (Residential Academic Program, Talent Advancement Program, and Commonwealth College) that UMass has had success with have upperclassmen in the same building.

I would love to believe that students look to their Resident Assistant or Peer Mentor in EPOCH as role models, but honestly, these are not the people the typical student role models themselves after. Instead, they emulate the senior down the hall who is doing well in school and still has the spare time to go out with friends. The same senior who will come knock on their door and inform them that as long as they're working on their thesis it is not OK for you to play Kelis loud enough to be heard in Belchertown—quiet hours or not.

EPOCH has another fundamental design flaw — location. Southwest presents challenges for this kind of program that other areas do not.

Southwest is currently the home of many strongly academic-focused FYPs that each have had a varied amount of success. The most successful of these, in terms of increasing retention rates and improving academic performance while keeping behavior problems low, are the TAP programs. No student with a high academic focus is going to pay to live in EPOCH when they can live, for free, on a TAP and be surrounded by people in their major (with a "z room" no less).

EPOCH may be designed for undeclared first year students. A first year program for undeclared majors? That sounds familiar. Oh, right, that's what Patterson was. Only Patterson was dismantled because the rates of negative behaviors far exceeded any academic benefits. Mr. Gargano might argue that this time around there will be more programming. Programming funded by a lovely $75 additional housing fee. Forgive me, but I do not believe that the failure of Patterson was due solely to a lack of money for additional programming.

Everyone, especially incoming first years, knows the reputation (not that reality matches this) of Southwest. I have to wonder what type of student will want to live in a non-academic FYP with Southwest housing guaranteed.

Everyone, especially incoming first years, knows the reputation (not that reality matches this) of Southwest. I have to wonder what type of student will want to live in a non-academic FYP with Southwest housing guaranteed. It seems to me that the student who will be "attracted" to this program is one seeking all the negative behaviors Southwest is unfairly known for and is willing to shell out a little extra for the guarantee of living there. Live on a not rigidly academic program? Even better.

The nominal, and I do mean nominal, gains that EPOCH may create in increased first-year retention rates and academic performance is dwarfed by the problems it creates. Not only will it create a maelstrom of negative student behaviors the likes of which have not been seen since Patterson, but it will intentionally destroy a community that is already in place.

I have spent the past year and a half charged with the development of community in the Pierpont/Moore cluster, so please forgive me if watching the destruction of that same community doesn't sit well. Forgive me, if I perhaps have some qualms about displacing 500 students already here for an ill-advised and not-yet-ready-for-primetime program for 500 future students. All that being said, I truly (and I mean that) do wish EPOCH all the success in the world and hope I am never in the position to say "I told you so.

Jason Rowe is a UMass student.

All Collegian staff meeting Weds. Feb. 18 at 7 p.m.
Anyone interested in writing is welcome to attend.

Love is in the air?

The soldiers of Saint Valentine

S.J. Port

Once upon a time, in a land far away in date and time, young men could not marry. In this land and time, Valentine's Day had yet to emerge, and was centuries from superficial commercialization and international societal attention (not to mention pressure). Not only were young men forbidden to marry their sweethearts, they had no holiday on which to celebrate the love their society would not recognize. It was a sad time for the rights of men, as well as romance.

Single men, according to third century Roman Emperor Claudius II, made for better soldiers than men with wives and children. Thus, the Emperor callously outlawed marriage for young men — his potential crop of soldiers.

Legend holds that, lovers, in desperation, turned to a priest named Valentine who, realizing the injustice of the Emperor's decree, performed secret marriages for young lovers.

For these actions, Valentine was sentenced to death. Before his execution on Feb. 14, 269 A.D. the lovelorn priest scribed a letter to his beloved, a young woman he'd fallen in love with while jailed. The letter was signed, "From your Valentine." With this last testament to love, the legend of Valentine's work to unite lovers began.

Not as distant as Claudius' decree are the memories of laws banning interracial marriage. Even more recent than illegal inter-racial marriages are the still practiced social prejudices against inter-faith or inter-ethnic marriages.

And today, in our present time and country remains, undeniably, both laws and social construction forbidding the marriage of same-sex couples. St. Valentine worked to maintain the civil rights of young men to love and marry and was martyred by the Catholic Church.

Today the Catholic Church, and our federal government, betrays the legend of St. Valentine, and acts as Emperor Claudius II did. They deny people the right to celebrate their love in the sanctity and security of marriage. The Justices of the Massachusetts Supreme Court who voted that our state Constitution cannot deny homosexual couples the right to marry are doing St. Valentine's work in our modern day.

Other stories suggest that Valentine was put to death for refusing to forsake his Christian faith in Pagan Rome, and for attempting to help Christians escape harsh Roman prisons, where they were often tortured for their religious beliefs.

Historians concede that Pope Gelasius, in 496 A.D., martyred Valentine, setting aside his day of death as a commemoration of his work as a Christian, as well as a day to celebrate true love. Gelasius hoped that the day would remind people to emulate the lives of saints. However, the Pope also had ulterior motives: mid-February was traditionally the time of the Lupercian festival, which is a celebration of sensual pleasure and an ode to the pagan god of fertility, Lepercus.

In honoring Valentine, Gelasius outlawed the pagan festival, replacing it with a more appropriate moral (and Christian) celebration, switching Lepercus with Valentine. Gelasius' denouncement of the pagan holiday conflicted with the Edict of Milan (313) under which Emperor Constantine granted universal religious tolerance to the Roman Empire. The Pope's condemnation, although only relevant to Catholics, was pushed upon all peoples of Rome through the Church's immense power over the political state.

Unfortunately, the true meaning of Valentine's Day has been lost to many in our modern age. It is not merely a shallow, consumerist holiday filled with chocolate, societal pressures, cards and expensive dates.

The barring of Lepercian was a condemnation of paganism, and the right to practice one's religion of choice without persecution within a free state. Pope Gelasius did to pagans as Claudius did to Christians: He denied them the fundamental right (admittedly, an unrecognized one at the time) to religious freedom without persecution.

Luckily, remnants of the pagan festival survived and even sexually repressed Catholics latched onto the romantic aspects of St. Valentine's religious life.

Unfortunately, the true meaning of Valentine's Day has been lost to many in our modern age. It is not merely a shallow, consumerist holiday filled with chocolate, societal pressures, cards and expensive dates. Whichever murky St. Valentine legend you accept, clearly he was a man of the undercurrent, working for freedoms, a civil rights leader as well as a sympathetic romantic hero.

The day on which we honor eros and philia, we also honor the right to pursue happiness (whether in terms of religion or personal commitments), love freely and marry openly.

This column is for AID, who wanted to know why Valentine's Day was so important to me: It is one day on which to love freely — representative of all the days in which we should love openly. Valentine's Day honors my right to love you.

Information from the History Channel online was used in this column.

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

Valentine's Day: the stiff truth

Matt Elder

Feb. 14 is just around the corner, and you know what that means. Wherever you look, there will be a disgusting amount of red and pink, while all the girls go "ga ga." That's right. Because some buffoon over in Hallmark decided that halfway through this month there should be a holiday, I have no choice but to pretend I enjoy the date.

Or do I have a choice? I'm not pretending anymore!

Ladies, listen up. No guy (ok, I won't say none, so I'll go with 95 percent) likes Valentine's Day. You think the roses, chocolates and romantic dinner for two is because we want to show you extra love on this gloriously ridiculous day? Not quite. Like most times in life, our motivation is our penis.

News flash: to a guy, a better date equals better horizontal mambo later in the night. It's sad, but it's the truth and I'm not afraid to admit it. Very few guys will go all out because they really want to. So, the future of our penis is relying heavily on the evening of Feb. 14.

Our penis is our motivation about 95 percent of the time, so that means Feb. 14 will be no different. You can't blame us though. We've been like this for generations and generations. We're forced to act based on the part of our body where the most blood rushes to. I think it has something to do with the survival of the stiffest. I remember a science teacher said something about that years ago, but I wasn't paying attention.

What may shock you is that to this point, I do have a girlfriend. We've been going out for two and a half years, so this isn't my first V-Day with her.

However, she is going to read this article and I can't comment on how long we'll be together "post V-Day bashing."

So she said that dinner doesn't have to be expensive or extravagant, but we all know that's a lie. Where do I want to go on Valentine's Day? Only to my favorite restaurant, Friendly's! Unfortunately, I don't think I'll be able to get away with a meal that requires less than two forks and three courses.

Where do I want to go on Valentine's Day? Only to my favorite restaurant, Friendly's! Unfortunately, i don't think I'll be able to get away with a meai that requires less than two forks and three courses. Damn, i really wanted a Cyclone and a Fribble"

Damn, I really wanted a Cyclone and a Fribble.

OK, I know that, "it's the thought that counts."

However, I am painfully aware that the only thought that will enter my head will be the thought of self-gratification if this date isn't up to par. Wow, sex never cost so much.

I'm about as romantic as Michael Jackson dislikes little boys. As we all know, that is not much at all. So why must I be forced to pretend to be romantic because a card company told me so? Because, as I am painfully aware, if I am not romantic on this night, the most action I will be seeing is on Kazaa and there's only so many times I can watch Janet Jackson's halftime performance.

Don't get me wrong, I don't mind the occasional good deed for my girlfriend (and by good deed, I mean more than the outfit from Victoria's Secret.) I've cooked nice dinners before, we've done the whole dinner date thing, but I can't stand being forced to do anything on Valentine's Day. To me, it's just Feb. 14.

OK, maybe I'm not all that romantic. My idea of romance is Sportscenter and a six pack. Her idea of romance is a dinner for two and renting a movie while cuddling on the couch. The jury is still out as to who is right.

Maybe I should protest the entire holiday, and wherever we go, I'll wear my "I am the man from Nantucket" shirt.

Matt Elder is a Collegian columnist.

A most unlikely love

Stacy Kasdin

The following is an account of a somewhat sick obsession. Over the past few months I'd been hearing about people playing a game on the computer or Nintendo called "The Sims." Now I'd never played the game myself, but I just couldn't imagine how it could be so amazing that it kept people completely glued to their screens, unable to go out on Saturday nights, get their homework done, or even grab a bite to eat. I was just completely dumbfounded, until I got back to school after winter break and was sitting around in a friend's room one night. He suggested I make a character on "The Sims," on his computer, and for lack of anything better to do, I set to work.

Before I knew it, Jada Blume was born. I bought her a nice little house with a swimming pool in the backyard. It was quaint, with a kitchen and dinette, a spacious living room, a bedroom, a bathroom, even a basketball court. Shortly after moving in she got hired as a political intern, with a starting salary of $220 a day. Soon I was spending day and night in my friend's room, trying to keep Jada's stats up, get her promoted and help her make new friends. I wasn't getting any sleep, and my schoolwork and social life were spiraling down the tubes. I had to quit, cold turkey, just to prove to myself I could live without her, even if only for a few days. Now I wish I hadn't.

It was 2:37 p.m. when I got the call. Having just gotten of a sociology lecture, I was sitting in a corner of the Blue Wall with a hot cup of their finest French vanilla coffee. Music videos were on one flat screen TV, ESPN was on the other, and I had an hour and a half until my next class. Life was good, or so I thought. My cell phone was sitting on the table, as I was expecting a call from my friend to let me know when and where he'd be meeting me for our 4:00 class. When it began to vibrate it's way across the table I picked it up casually. Had I known what I was about to hear, I may have let it cross the table and fall to the ground. We said our hellos and made a bit of small talk, and then, with a deep breath, he told me. She was gone.

I'd only known her for about a week, but it seemed as though we'd been together our whole lives. I remember the first day we met, helping her pick out her outfit, her face, her name.

I remember the look of excitement on her face the day she brought home her first paycheck and was able to buy the bathtub with a level-8 comfort rating and a level-6 hygiene rating. It was the best, and she deserved it.

I remember the first time she flushed the toilet without me telling her to, and the first time she woke up without throwing a temper tantrum.

I remember the first time she kissed a boy, the first time she kissed a girl, and the first time she got shoved away from both of them for being a little too forward.

Yes, Jada and I had been through a lot of good times and bad times. Sometimes I would spend all night with her. At 4:00 a.m., when everyone has gone to sleep, we'd be up taking out the trash, recycling the newspapers, and making sure to keep her fun level up, despite the fact that she didn't have quite enough money to buy a pool table.

Yes, Jada and i had been through a lot of good times and bad times. Sometimes i would spend all night with her. At 4:00 a.m. when everyone has gone to sleep, we'd be up taking out the trash, recycling the newspapers, and making sure to keep her fun ievel up, despite the fact that she didn't have quite enough money to buy a pooi tabie.

Sure, she only had an average job, and a couple of family friends, but things were looking up. She had just gotten a promotion at work, and a nice silver car was coming to pick her up in the morning instead of the rusty old blue one. The neighborhood was really picking up too. A nice new family had moved in down the street with two kids, a few other singles, like herself, and a family with a young son.

Sure, she sometimes got a little cranky when I made her stay up entertaining guests past 1:00 a.m. with little food and no bathroom break. The fingers that showed up in the mashed potatoes at dinner due to her lack of skill points in cooking were fairly easy to overlook.

Despite her faults, Jada was trooper. She did what had to be done for the good of the people... err... pixels, and for this, I think her life, though short, was one which should be celebrated.

During the reformatting she felt little pain. It was all over very quickly, before she knew what had hit her. It was a massacre, really.

The whole town was wiped out. I, however, have joined the many volunteers who have set to work on reviving this town. Though it will never be what it was, I feel that happiness will soon roam these streets once more, and the memory of Jada will live on in my index finger, for every time I click "use the toilet," I'll be thinking only of her. Jada Blume, friends and neighbors, you will all be greatly missed. I only hope our characters to come amount to be one quarter as fulfilling, and half as much fun.

Stacy Kasdin is a Collegian columnist.

Holiday gone wrong

Elizabeth Carter

It seems like Valentine's Day has lost its meaning, and its noble roots. What once was a holiday that was celebrated in the name of St. Valentine and the sanctity of matrimony, V-day, along with most other Christian-rooted holidays, seems to have gone the sad sorry route of over-commercialization. For it now serves only as a reason to buy things that are pink and red as well as a crude reminder to so many singles that they are, in fact, alone. Although being single is quite a fun thing most of the time, on Feb. 14 everyone who lacks a better half gets to be reminded of it – over and over again. Yet in spite of my cynicism for the first Valentine's day ever I have someone great to spend it with, and its wonderful, but it was yesterday and the day before; and therein lies that which we so often forget amidst the Pinkish-red hyped up craze that has become Valentines day.

Just because a person has someone to spend Valentine's Day with doesn't mean that the relationship is happy healthy or worthwhile, and believe me, its better to be aione than to be in a miserable reiationship.

Last Valentine's Day was a lonely one; it occurred in the wake of a crumbled relationship that I simply couldn't seem to revive. In spite of the fact that my friends and I had a great girls' night out, we went to dinner and came back and made margaritas. I couldn't shake the hypothetical dark cloud that rested softly but surely over my head. Even though I had already moved on from the bad relationship, it seemed that for that one day the wound was reopened, and I was reminded how I had previously failed, and how I was once again alone.

Looking back it seems awful that one day was able to make me feel like that, and it occurred to me now, that there's really no point in letting everyone else's celebration get you down. It's silly at this age, to wallow over loneliness. We're all young and we have so much more time to go, simply because we're solo for now doesn't mean we're going to be forever. And also just because a person has someone to spend Valentine's Day with doesn't mean that the relationship is happy, healthy or worthwhile, and believe me, its better to be alone than to be in a miserable relationship. And as much as I hate to sound like an optimist, I feel as if Valentine's Day shouldn't serve as a reminder of solitude, but rather as a reminder that when we're ready, the right one will come along.

This year being in a relationship has made me look at the whole meaning of Valentine's Day in a very different light. One that paints Valentine's Day as something Hallmark has made us take for granted, yet no worse than Christmas, whose name I believe should be changed to "Giftmas". While jewelry, chocolates and things with hearts all over them are nice they cannot substitute for substance in a relationship. It seems sometimes our society forgets – not all things can be paid for. Maybe its time for all of us to step back and look not just at Valentines day, but all holidays, and contemplate their deeper meaning rather than just going out to buy, buy, buy to celebrate them. While I'm not expecting anyone to have a religious revelation about Valentine's day, I hope that at least a few people step back and realize that being in a relationship means many things, both good and bad, and most importantly that none of those things can be bought.

So this year lets all try to enjoy our Feb. 14, singles and couples alike. Valentine's Day is just one day a year, but whether you're in a relationship or not, enjoy it we've all got many more years and Valentine's Days to go, both alone and with someone else, so you might as well have fun on them all!

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The 'Unsung' hits from classic rockers

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Just about every hard rock band on the radio today owes a tremendous debt to hard-rockers Helmet who, in the first few years of their career, set new standards and broke barriers for bands that weren't exactly metal and weren't exactly punk, but rather found themselves somewhere in the middle. With their trademark start and stop riffs and non-traditional timings, along with guitarist/vocalist Page Hamilton's distinct vocals – often more yelling than singing, recalling earlier punk heroes such as Bob Mould in his fiercest Husker Du days – Helmet created a niche. While never as popular as contemporaries like Nirvana and Soundgarden, their sound greatly impacted both the commercial and underground hard-rock scene.

The timing of the greatest hits direction is curious – although rumors of a Helmet reunion came to fruition just before the disc was released – it was put together with care. The disc is more than just the greatest hits because, truth be told, the band only had a handful of radio singles and even smaller number of those could really be considered 'hits'. The disc, at 21 tracks and over 70 minutes, covers the bands career, from their first, independently released album, 1989's "Strap It On", up through their final and arguably best album, 1997's "Aftertaste," allowing the listener to trace the band's evolution from its earlier, more hard-core sound, to their latter days when Hamilton experimented more and injected more melody into his vocals and his song-writing.

However the inherent problem with this disc – and nearly all greatest hits discs – is that it doesn't serve much of a purpose. Helmet fans no doubt already have most, if not all, of the band's releases and there doesn't seem to be that large of a market for newcomers that might want the disc. Surely anyone that has heard the band's more successful songs, "Unsung," "Exactly What You Wanted," or their collaboration with House Of Pain, "Just Another Victim," has already decided if they like the band or not. And while Helmet left quite the legacy in such a short time period it would make more sense for a new fan to seek out full albums, such as 1992's breakthrough, "Meantime" or "Aftertaste" which should satisfy their craving for the band's original hard-rock much more.

Helmet
'Unsung: The Very Best Of Helmet (1989-1997)'
Interscope / Universal

While the band's biggest fans might enjoy having the disc just to get "Just Another Victim" and "Disagreeable" – two songs that never appeared on any of the band's albums – it wouldn't make much sense to recommend this sampler over the real deal. The record label added a CD-ROM bonus track, "Smart" which is a new track and, while only mediocre, does give the promise of a new Helmet album and tour in the near future, but still does not quite justify the purchase of "Unsung..." over any of the band's watershed alt/punk /metal LPs.

From left John Stanier, Page Hamilton, Henry Bogdan, and Chris Traynor are the members of Helmet.

Good ol' country music at the Mullins

By Molly Eggleston
Collegian Staff

Country music's "king of controversy," Toby Keith, takes on the Mullins Center in his first appearance at the University of Massachusetts tomorrow night. Keith has been touring the United States promoting his most recent album, "Shock'n Y'all," which dropped last November.

Accompanied by Oklahoma native Blake Shelton, the "Shock'n Y'all" tour promises to be an experience for any country music fan. Big name country music has made a home in the Mullins before and again in the future.

Within recent years country music has grown greatly in popularity, especially in typically "non-country" environments like Massachusetts. Keith is largely to thank for this growing audience because of all the publicity he has brought to the genre.

Toby Keith
'Shock 'N Y'all Tour'
Mullins Center
UMass
$40.75- $58.75
Tomorrow

Last year, Keith was crowned as Entertainer of the Year by the Academy of Country Music. He has four platinum albums and is the winner of numerous other awards.

Keith drew headlines for his post-9/11 song "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (the Angry American)," which has been called a theme song for the grief and shock of the American people after the attacks in 2001. Many critics, fans and fellow artists, however, felt the song went over the line and presented the American public as vengeful, gun-toting war hawks.

Keith gained further publicity for the controversial track "The Taliban Song," from "Shock 'N Y'all." The record is a comedic spoof on life in Afghanistan under Taliban rule.

Keith has never claimed to be soft-spoken in anything, especially in his political views. Staunchly pro-soldier and a Bush supporter, Keith has been very vocal on many national issues.

Standing up for his beliefs has gotten Keith into a few squabbles. His most public dispute is with Natalie Maines from the Dixie Chicks. After Maines called "Angry American" "ignorant," a feud was born. It fully matured with Maines' anti-Bush statements — saying she was embarrassed to be from the same state as the president. After that, Keith was no longer willing to keep his mouth shut on her criticism of his music.

"I'm a songwriter. She's not. She can say my song is ignorant, then it's ignorant for her to say that because she's not a songwriter," he said in an interview with cmt.com.

The debate has been ongoing although Maines has issued an apology for her anti-Bush statement.

For many fans, though, the controversy takes a backseat to the music.

An accomplished songwriter and performer, Keith promises not to disappoint tomorrow. The concert should feature many tracks from "Shock'n Y'all" including the hit singles, "I Love this Bar" and his duet with country music legend Willie Nelson, "Beer for My Horses" along with classic favorites from previous albums like "How Do You Like Me Now?"

The show will highlight Keith's unique mixture of classic honky-tonk, high-energy country rock, and light-hearted humor.

Information from tobykeith.com and cmt.com were used in the article.

A fresh face in the pop scene

New songstress not exceptionally noteworthy

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Sarah Rabdau trip-hops her way through "Benevolent Apollo," the Boston-based singer's self-released debut album. Meshing her sultry voice with crisp, soulful electronica (an oxymoron I know, but a most welcome one,) Rabdau pushes and prods traditional pop music into not new realms exactly, but at least out of the cornball lethargy it often grounds itself in.

Sarah Rabdau
'Benevolent Apollo'
Self-released

There are hints that Rabdau leans toward the Nelly Furtado end of the pop spectrum: there's that hippy-dippy moniker and the long, and somewhat random, list of instruments that she employs (cello, conga, baritone sax along side the usual guitars, bass and drums.) But Rabdau, who more often resembles largely unknown pop songstress Rosey, is less influenced by world music then she is by down-tempo electronic sounds, spiking her pop with chilled-out atmospheres and dreamy, synthetic soundscapes that invite the listener to drift into her seductive spell.

COURTESY CAPITOLRECORDS.COM

Sarah Rabdau has potential to make it in the pop world.

Which is to say that Rabdau never actually escapes the trip-hop cell she put herself in. It's all well and good – Rabdau approaches the top echelon of such underground divas – but it just sounds a bit old hat, in this late day. There have been so many sensual-sounding, breathy-voiced singers, soulfully cooing over moody techno, coming out of the woodwork over the years that it is very hard to get excited over a new one.

And so it's hard to work up much enthusiasm for "Benevolent Apollo." It's a striking debut, and the fact that it's independently produced (with Eric Ialbert) yet retains such a polished, sleek veneer, makes it sound much more entrancing than it should have any right to be. But the feeling of been there, done that, permeates every pore of the album. It is lovely, it has a girl with a sexy voice at its center, and it is a joy to listen to. It is also an album that can be shuffled off and forgot if you get sick of listening to unoriginal trip-hop divas in the future.

Veteran German industrial musicians still at it

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

The German veterans of experimental music are at it again, Einsturzende Neubauten has released their third official disk entitled, "Perpetuum Mobile." For those who think Rammstein is the be all, end all of the German music scene, there is a lot to be learned from Neubauten.

Einsturzende Neubauten
'Perpetuum Mobile'
Mute Corporation

The album itself is focused around one large theme, motion, which is indicated in its title "Perpetuum Mobile" meaning perpetual motion machine. Neubauten takes this theme and runs as far as possible with it singing about escaping everyday life "Ich gehe jetzt" (I am going now) and "Ein seltener Vogel,"(A rare bird) or the run around that one goes through while in love "Ein leichtes leises Sausein" (A whisper light and low) and "Youme & Meyou."

Though all of the tracks save one are sung entirely in German there is no reason to shy away from this album; one all of the German is fairly elementary and could be translated easily by a motivated listener or for those who value the easier route one could just read the booklet that comes with the disk containing both the German and English translation of the lyrics.

Known to be reclusive in their recording style Neubauten took a very unexpected step in

See NEUBAUTEN on page 7

COURTESY THOMAS RAISCHMUTE

After eight years and four major releases, the membership of Einsturzende Neubauten remain unchanged. They are Blixa Bargeld, Alexander Hacke, N.U. Unruh, Jochen Arbeit, and Rudi Moser.

Some brand new sound bytes

Kylie Minogue, "Body Language" (Capitol)

The cover of Kylie Minogue's "Body Language" sums up the album before the listener hits the play button. Clad in a bare-all half-shirt, skintight spandex and pursing her lips into a lustful pout, she's about one thing: s-e-x.

More notable than the album's content, though, is the Australian dance floor diva's departure from the pulsating club beats of her last U.S. release in favor of a sound that's more booty-shakin' than glow stick wavin'.

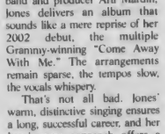
However, few of the tracks are innovative, and much of the album sounds like American pop. It isn't until "Cruise Control" – a feel-good bonus track at the end about sex (what else?) – that Minogue might have a single.

Songs such as "Obsession," "Chocolate" and "Promises" come across more like a teen pop queen just turned 20 and discovering the wonders of her own sexuality than a 35-year-old woman already acquainted with it.

Even in "Red Blooded Woman," Minogue sounds like she is single-handedly tackling the content of a Christina/Britney duet.

The album isn't a complete miss, but don't read too much into Minogue's own body language. At least on this album, she has a tendency to be a tease.

-Ryan Lenz, Associated Press



Norah Jones, "Feels Like Home" (Blue Note)

Here's a record to pacify a pop culture audience fretting that the Super Bowl halftime show reflects a hopeless trend toward trash. Norah Jones' much-anticipated second release, "Feels Like Home," is tasteful, tranquil, temperate and sure to sell millions.

Alas, it's also a tad dull. Teaming again with her touring band and producer Arif Mardin, Jones delivers an album that sounds like a mere reprise of her 2002 debut, the multiple Grammy-winning "Come Away With Me." The arrangements remain sparse, the tempos slow, the vocals whispery.

That's not all bad. Jones' warm, distinctive singing ensures a long, successful career, and her less-is-more approach offers a refreshing alternative to the noisy junk dominating the charts.

But the songs on "Feels Like Home," most written by Jones and her bandmates, are less substantial than the material on her debut. Best are "Carnival Town," with a ticktock rhythm that sets it apart from the sleepier ballads, and the closing "Don't Miss You at All," a lovely Jones concert staple based on Duke Ellington's "Melancholia."

Prosaic coffeehouse lyrics reference the sun, moon and blue sea – and that's just in the first three songs. They contribute to a mood so wistful and laid-back that the up-tempo "Creepin' In," a duet with Dolly Parton, becomes a jarring contrast. Another guest, the Band's Garth Hudson, plays accordion on one cut but is buried in the mix.

"Feels Like Home" lacks flair. Even Jones' piano playing is restrained on an album all about texture. It's pleasant enough, but she can do better and undoubtedly will.

-Steven Wine, Associated Press

Kanye West, "College Dropout" (Roc-A-Fella)

There have been few hip-hop debuts as mature and polished as producer-rapper Kanye West's "College Dropout."

As a lyricist, he has the courage to reach beyond mainstream rap's dominant themes – besides women and partying. West discusses religion, social change and the importance of family. As a beat-maker, he finds ways to continually reinvent his much-copied trademark production style (looping sped-up old soul samples).

But it is West's focus on melody that sets "Dropout" apart. On songs such as "Jesus Walks" and "Family Business," he rips down the barrier separating gospel and popular R&B from hip-hop, instead building his own style from scratch by rapping over a combination of samples, choirs and other subtle background vocals.

The result is incredibly catchy, accessible and melodic hip-hop, delivered by an artist whose acknowledged arrogance is matched by the talent of his guest list, including fellow Chicagoan Common and Talib Kweli on the excellent, straightforward "Get em High." Twista and Jamie Foxx star on a slightly revamped version of the radio hit "Slow Jamz." Also appearing are Mos Def, Ludacris and Jay-Z, who seems to abandon retirement plans on "Never Let Me Down" by rapping: "Number one albums, what I got like four of them? More of them on the way."

West himself lacks the vocal presence of his guests and sometimes stumbles over awkward rhymes, but makes up for it with expansive subject matter and a stylized, singsong delivery that he carefully matches to the beats, especially on the dancy "The New Workout Plan" and hit true-life car-crash survivor tale "Through the Wire."

Skits mar the album. Though several poking fun at the economics of higher learning are hilarious, they disrupt the continuity and show the dark side of West's arrogance.

However, the 26-year-old delivers musical talent and a sense of maturity that mainstream hip-hop has lacked recently, and this outstanding debut must not be missed.

-Ryan Pearson, Associated Press

Indigo Girls, "All That We Let In" (Epic)

The simple art of the Indigo Girls' music becomes clear on a breakdown right after the chorus of the song "Something Real." A slight piano trickle comes in, the Indigo Girls start singing a soft melody of "Oohhs" and you realize that with this duo, it's all about harmony.

Equal parts love and politics, folk and rock 'n' roll, Amy Ray's smoky Southern drawl and Emily Saliers soft everywoman voice create beautiful balances on the Indigo Girls' ninth studio album, "All That We Let In."

From the singsong optimism of "Perfect World" to the somber piano-and-vocal reminiscence of "Cordova," there isn't a bad track on the album. The duo manage to capture a distinct sound with each song. "Heartache for Everyone" has a fun, ska rhythm and "Free in You" is a sweet, soft (and, yes, harmonic) love song.

But one of the best tracks is "Dairy Queen," with its plucking acoustic rhythm and a melody that sticks in your head like peanut butter to the roof of your mouth. And when Ray sings, "The love you gave was not for free, but the price was truly fair. I've never felt so glad to be so well-spent, so beyond repair." it's enough to make a person want to get dumped just to sing along in earnest.

"All That We Let In" is classic Indigo Girls – it's like an old friend you're always happy to hear from.

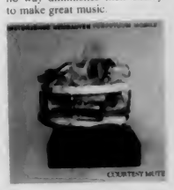
-Angela Watercutter, Associated Press.

Real world music

Musicians explore motion

NEUBAUTEN from page 6

recording their new album. While recording, the band had every session broadcast live via web cam on their website. Fans paid a one-time fee to not only watch, but also to play a part in the creative process of creating the album.



"The feedback they offered and the attention they gave us were rather substantial. We announced from the start that we'd welcome interference," said vocalist Blixa Bargeld in a press statement. "But I did not know which form this would take. I treated the supporters like an extended circle of friends, like people whom you would play a rough mix to."

This direct collaboration of fans and artists made for an album that lyrically, though abstract at times, is sound and meaningful on every line. Musically Neubauten utilized a number of odd instruments including: clavichords, Hammond organs, plastic tubes, air compressors, and "turntable-powered wind-instruments." This eclectic mix added to the sound of the album in a way that puts it above the level of other Industrial works.

Even if one does not wish to read along with the lyrics, this album has a very mellow vibe that lends itself well to either being a low background sound or to being cranked up to absurd volume levels. Bargeld's throaty, bass-rich vocals seem to swim out of the speakers with a gentle force that demands your ear.

Though the majority of the album is dominated by serious matters of mind-expanding notions of motion Neubauten found room for more than just a little levity. In the title track "Perpetuum Mobile" for example Bargeld drones out, "Yes, the case was sometimes left unsupervised. Yes, others had access to it. Yes, I was asked to carry presents. Yes, there are electronic appliances in the case. Yes, many batteries. No, not everything belongs to me (translated lyrics.)" This satirical attack on the Federal Aviation Administration's security crackdown is delivered with any prompting, but fits in with the vibe of the song perfectly.

For fans of Neubauten's old records the sound on "Perpetuum Mobile" may be a bit of a shock, seeing as it is a blatant departure from their earlier heavily Industrial endeavors. However the softer sound in no way diminishes their ability to make great music.

COURTESY MUTE

Spring Break Student Special
Havana, Cuba

Participate in a restoration project at Iglesia Baptista (church) in Havana
March 13-20, 2004

Trip Includes:
- Seven nights dormitory accommodations at the church
- All meals, transportation, and daily schedule
- License and visa for legal travel to Cuba
- Round trip air fare from New York City to Havana

Cost: $1695.00

For more Information or to Register
413.637.3512

DORM DIRECTOR:

Person in the dorm who always has a good downloaded movie handy.

THE NEWEST WAY TO GET HIT MOVIES: DOWNLOAD THEM.
STUDENTS GET 25% OFF* ALL MOVIES AT COLLEGE.MOVIELINK.COM

Movielink™ movies on demand

*Some restrictions apply. See website for details.

It's CAREER FAIR time!

TODAY!

Campus-Wide Career Fair
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am – 3 pm

Life Sciences and Environmental Careers Fair
Campus Center, Room 162
10 am – 3 pm

ALANA Job Fair
Campus Center Auditorium
5:30 pm – 8:30 pm

and TOMORROW!

Co-op and Summer Job Fair
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am – 3 pm

Summer Camp Employment Day
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am – 3 pm

CareerServices
www.umass.edu/careers

Hasek out for season

By Larry Lage
Associated Press

DETROIT – Dominik Hasek's season is over because of a groin injury. He's determined not to let it end his career.

"I'll be back next season," Hasek said yesterday.

The 39-year-old Hasek ended his retirement after one year to return to Detroit this season, but he played in just 14 games before Tuesday's announcement. He was 8-3-2 for the Central Division-leading Red Wings.

Hasek said he doesn't regret coming back.

"No, I never made a mistake," he said. "Unfortunately my groin wasn't strong enough."

One of the NHL's all-time great goaltenders, Hasek won two MVP awards and six Vezina Trophies, given to the league's top goalie, during a nine-year stint in Buffalo. He also led the Czech Republic to a gold medal in the 1998 Nagano Olympics.

He joined the Red Wings before the 2001-02 season, winning his first Stanley Cup that season.

Hasek skated with his teammates Tuesday, then made his surprising announcement.

"It's very sad, but that's the way it is," he said. "I hoped for two months it would get better every day. But it didn't get better, it got even worse last week."

Rich Winter, Hasek's agent, said the goaltender's desire to win another championship will have him back on the ice next season.

"He came back to Detroit to win a Stanley Cup and I think he wants to come back again to be a part of another run for the Cup," Winter said. "This was not the storybook ending we were all hoping for for Dom, in the final chapter of his career."

Red Wings general manager Ken Holland said Hasek wants an extended period of time to give his groin a chance to heal.

"I think in the summertime he's going to decide whether he wants to officially retire," Holland said from a meeting of GMs in Henderson, Nev.

The Red Wings are left with the same goalies – Curtis Joseph and Manny Legace – they had last year. Detroit had one of the best records in the league last season, but lost to Anaheim in the first round of the playoffs.

"Curtis and Manny can concentrate on playing," Red Wings captain Steve Yzerman said. "We have no distractions."

The season started with a big distraction.

When Hasek retired in 2002, Detroit lured Joseph away from Toronto with a $24 million, three-year deal to replace Hasek. When Hasek returned and agreed to make $6 million this season, the Red Wings desperately tried to trade Joseph.

But no one wanted to take Joseph because of the two years and $16 million left on his contract.

"We're very, very lucky that he's been a real pro through this," Holland said. "And luckily for us that nobody claimed him."

Joseph is 13-9-2 with a 2.48 goals-against average this season. He has kept his family in the Toronto area because he didn't know where he would end up playing this year.

"I don't think there's been a player in the league who's gone through more adversity individually this season," Detroit coach Dave Lewis said. "And I think he's become a stronger person and player because of it."

"Sometimes the (trades) you don't make are the best ones."

Joseph did not make himself available to reporters after practice yesterday.

Ford to replace fired Ayers in Philly

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA - Randy Ayers lost his job after less than a season as the Philadelphia 76ers' coach. If the team doesn't turn things around, others might be on their way out, too.

And star guard Allen Iverson would like to have some input.

The 76ers fired Ayers on Tuesday with the team 21-31 and 1 1/2 games behind the Boston Celtics for the Eastern Conference's final playoff berth. Assistant Chris Ford takes over on an interim basis.

"Some things I was looking at, I just was not comfortable with," general manager Billy King said. "We're going to be aggressive and see if we can do something to change the roster. We still expect every player to play hard, be professional and play the right way."

He said he is willing to make trades that could help the 76ers make the playoffs. The deadline for deals is Feb. 19.

King thinks some players have not put forth a full effort every game — something Iverson said aloud recently.

Iverson was surprised and upset by Ayers' firing. He said he would have liked to have heard the news from King first. Now the NBA's leading scorer (27.5-point average) wants to have a say in whatever changes might come next.

"Just being called the franchise player, for being here as long as I've been here, I definitely feel like someone should have said something," said the league's MVP in the 2000-01 season. "I feel like I'm supposed to be involved with a lot of stuff. ... I've earned the right to know some of the things that are going on."

Iverson, in his eighth season, agreed with King that a shakeup could be needed, but he says he wants to finish his career with the team he led to the 2001 NBA Finals with coach Larry Brown.

Ayers became the Sixers' head coach when Brown resigned after last season. Brown is now coaching the Detroit Pistons.

All but one of the Eastern Conference's 15 teams (Atlanta, with Terry Stotts) changed coaches since the end of last season.

Now the 76ers have done it twice in that span, asking Ford to reach the postseason.

"It's not going to be easy. With everyone doing their job, hopefully we'll have a chance," he said.

Ford already put his stamp on the team by admonishing forward Glenn Robinson over complaints about playing time — something Ayers never publicly did.

"What Glenn did was not the right way of doing things," said Ford, whose first game in charge will be at home Wednesday against the Washington Wizards. He joined the 76ers' staff last summer after two seasons as the coach at Brandeis. Ford led the Boston Celtics to division titles in 1991 and 1992, and he also coached the Bucks and Clippers, going 311-358 in a total of nine seasons.

His best season was his first, when the Celtics went 56-26 and reached the second round of the playoffs. Ford won NBA championships with the Celtics as a player (1981) and an assistant coach (1984, 1986).

The 76ers' troubles in the weak East could be attributed at least in part to injuries. Iverson missed 14 games, Robinson 18, and Derrick Coleman 22.

"I hate to use excuses, but we haven't really played together a lot," said Robinson, who doesn't want to be traded.

Blazers deal Wallace to Atlanta on draft day. Ratliff is averaging 8.3 points and 7.2 rebounds, and Dickau is averaging 2.1 points.

WALLACE from page 10

Abdur-Rahim is owed $28.1 million, and Ratliff gets $21 million over the next two seasons.

"I can't explain enough how tough a trade it was for me personally, because of Shareef," Knight said. "He's a class guy and the consummate professional.

"It's just unfortunate that he's got the highest salary on this team and he's the best player on the team. In order to do anything, he's the first guy everybody talked about."

The contracts for Wallace and Person end after this season, clearing up salary cap room for the Hawks. They are right at the luxury tax threshold. Person makes $7.7 million in the final year of his contract.

Person, a guard, averages 6.1 points and 1.9 rebounds. The Blazers acquired him and a conditional 2004 draft pick from the Memphis Grizzlies in exchange for guard Bonzi Wells earlier this season.

Patterson called Monday a "watershed day for the Trail Blazers, because for the last eight years, this team has been associated basically with Rasheed and Bonzi as the face of the franchise, and it indicates we are moving into a new era."

The Blazers have won seven of their last eight games and are tied for ninth in the Western Conference with Utah, four games behind Denver for the final playoff spot.

Brown ready to begin

BROWN from page 10

of time.

The fact that the Minutemen once again return a plethora of talent on both sides of the ball – all of which are players who are holdovers from one of the more organized regimes in the A-10 – makes this task easier for Brown, as does his familiarity with the area, facilities and the UMass program. However the timing of the move – smack dab in the middle of recruiting season and winter workouts – prods Brown to move swiftly and do his best to ignore what potentially could go on around him.

"Obviously I've got to get things done on short notice," Brown said. "I've got to meet with the players that are here to let them know that we have direction, and that we have focus.

"[Also] I've got to get a staff in place, and that needs to be done as soon as possible. I need to surround myself with people that are going to do it my way."

As far as his new players are concerned, the mere number of them who were present at his press conference and nodded their heads in simultaneous approval each time he discussed his future plans for them provides an early glimpse at what McCutcheon and those around UMass football hope will be a perfect match.

If that is indeed so, all that will be left will be for Brown to put what he has in mind for this team into action on the field.

"That's the thing that I'm most excited about…working with the guys and getting my philosophy in place," he said. "I'm excited about coaching these guys, and nice thing is that I know what its all about here; there's not going to be a period of strangeness.

"It's really just getting my schemes in on both sides of the ball, and getting the guys comfortable with the verbiage that's most important."

In regards to his coaching staff, things may begin to get trickier. Brown obviously has a staff he knows and trusts from his time at Northeastern, and that will surely mean that many if not all of those coaches currently on staff that were hired by Whipple could possibly be let go.

"[The coaching staff situation] is an evaluation process that I'm going through right now," Brown said. "I'm going to chat with everyone on staff here [on Tuesday] that's interested in chatting with me, and obviously I have a staff in place as well so I need to sit down and evaluate that over the next 48 to 72 hours."

Another area of concern are incoming freshmen recruited by Whipple, such as heralded La Salle (R.I.) quarterback Liam Coen, who verbally committed to UMass and decided against signing their official Letter of Intent until a new coach was named.

Brown, however, is not concerned.

"[The recruiting situation] is something that's going to be addressed [right away]," he said. "A lot of that can be helped by just sharing my philosophy and getting to know those guys and getting them on campus to let them know that UMass football is going to be strong and that we have direction."

All in all, Brown is now officially entrenched in the tumultuous world of UMass athletics. Much of what he will choose to do and not do over the next few weeks and months will go along way in determining his success in Amherst, but for the veteran coach, the goal remains the same as it's always been.

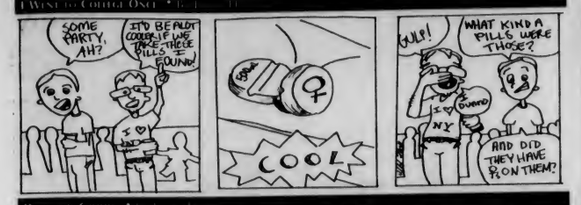
"For any I-AA program in the country, the goal is to make the national playoffs, win a conference championship and get back to Chattanooga," he said. "I'm driven in that area, I know how to get there, I was part of five playoff wins here and obviously I've taken a lot of the lessons [coach Whipple] and I went through in that run of two years and hopefully I'll be able to use that in my experience here."

win a trip to europe! contiki.com/campus
get into a real greek week!

>we've got the ultimate toga party
>new! mykonos resort 7 nights from $599
>aegean classic cruise 7 days from $579
>greek island hopping 14 days from $1289
>london to athens 23 days from $1799
prices are per person, land only, subject to availability
>packages include accommodations, transportation, many meals and as much fun as you can handle! call now or go online to book the vacation of a lifetime
contiki VACATIONS for 18-35s
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com
CST# 1017378-20
europe australia new zealand canada

Free & Open to all students
ATLANTIC 10 Shootout
2-Person Shooting Competition
Win Airline Tickets!!
Win Basketball Shoes!!
Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed
$10,000
Register at www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS
QUALIFYING ROUND
Thursday, February 26
7 PM - Curry Hicks Cage
GMAC
Fruit Breezers
new balance
Pontiac
Caribbean Cruiseline
XBOX
Free Samples From Arrid, Coast, Nestle Crunch, TicTac and UltraMax

COME CHANGE YOUR LUCK ON...
FRIDAY THE 13TH
STARS Winter Semiformal
Where: The Monkey Bar (in the new addition)
When: Friday, February 13
Time: 9:00 p.m. - 1:00 a.m.
Cost: $10
Deejay
Cash Bar
Tickets can be purchased at the STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse from Feb. 2 - Feb. 12 or call 577-1390 for more details.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

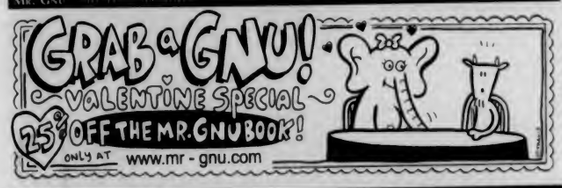


HIPPODROME
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
How far will you go?

The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
18+ College Night

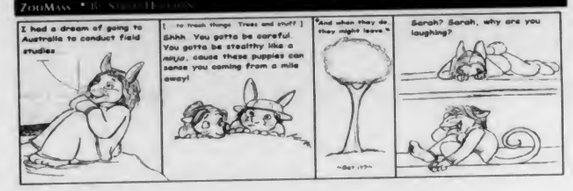
CLUB CASTAWAY
RT. 5 & 10 WHATELY 665-8733
Castaway Lounge Proudly Welcomes All Students over 21 (must have proper ID).
We will hire beautiful ladies to participate in the entertainment field & we will train them to make big money.
Call between 11 AM to 1 PM Tuesday thru Saturday

COME AND ENJOY ENTERTAINMENT WITH 50 LOVELY LADIES PER WEEK!
THE VIP ROOM IS FREE FOR PRIVATE PARTIES.



I Went to College Once

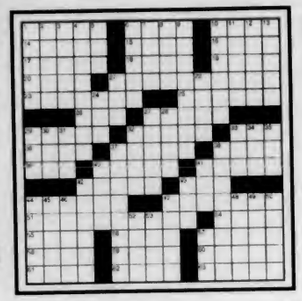
Damaged Goods



Mr. Gnu

Get Fuzzy

ZooMass



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 From Nazare
6 Optimum
10 All aegis
14 Trouser feature
15 Popular cookie
16 Tedious
17 On one's own
18 Chicken, as in bonds
19 Harasses
20 Watermelon part
21 Quit done (2 wds.)
23 Place to eavesdrop
25 Word go
26 Collision cargo
27 Stops
29 Young horses
33 Rally starters
37 Bunk
38 Dock
39 Chili ingredients
39 Magazine part
39 Football valee
40 Oil city
41 Bang to the moon
42 Assent to vassals
43 Assent, as vows
44 Pulp opens, as shark's gaping
47 Reopened
51 Cooper drive one (2 wds.)
54 Maui dance
55 Time in office
56 Vacation station
57 Severity
58 Writer — Ferber
59 Computer error
60 All thumbs
61 Whiskey grains
62 Trappers about
63 Fairly late heavies

DOWN
1 Kind of drug
2 Stan's comic foil
3 Snuggy Bowie
4 Qing
5 Fr. Italy women
6 Hunting knife
7 Golden locale
8 Truck stop sight
9 Listens
10 Convoys
11 Lines on a map
12 Follow upon
13 Ancient site
21 Andy Capp's wife
22 Shades
24 Hissy features
27 Seeming
28 Forsaint bone
29 Winter wool
30 Boat implement
31 Cinderella — Cendrillon
32 Hit hard
33 Vers. in newspaper
34 Birthday figure
35 Actor — Beatty
36 Groping
38 Drying out
40 Swimming-pool bomb
41 Poker stake
42 Punctuation marks
43 Corn serving
44 Unsupported
45 Leaping
46 Jolly, of "Laugh-In"
47 Remorse, uncivilized
48 More gigantic
49 Marry in haste
50 I-Ma about
52 Lincoln assortment
53 Cinderon unit
57 Big carnival locale

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. · Reggae Night dance party
THU. · SPECIAL BREW house rockers
FRI. · Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. · THE EQUALITES non stop roots groove
February Special! Molson: $2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meat Lasagna
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (some vegan and some vegetarian)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Fried Scallops
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 34
- Low: 12

THURSDAY
- High: 34
- Low: 18

FRIDAY
- High: 38
- Low: 20

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF Molly Eggleston/ Jen DeMeglio/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your soul mate has been sitting next to you and you haven't even realized it.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't forget to hang up your phone; it is always busy.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Speak softly and get a lot of work done.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Your senses are stronger than ever before, the world will appear more vibrant.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Careful of your color combinations, they may convey the wrong image.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Be patient, people are new to your system.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't you hate when you screw up. You must hate yourself a lot.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Always be on the look out for hotties. You don't have to pick just one.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will have a visitor from your past.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Unexpected surprises are the best kind.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't over do it on the Wendy's tonight.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You'll have to go alone tomorrow.

Quote for the Day

"The only change I can really see is that I don't have to shop for pants in stores anymore. I can just call up and they'll bring the pants right over to my house. That's no small thing. Trying on pants is one of the most humiliating things a man can suffer that doesn't involve a woman."

-Larry David, on how success has affected his life.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspen-square.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Ciera, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

1992 Silver Ford Taurus. Excellent condition. $1600 118K. Call 549-3930 210-9691 All power

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP CANADENSIS, A PREMIER RESIDENTIAL SUMMER CAMP, located in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. (2 hours from New York City and Philadelphia). Our counselors teach, supervise, and share in the day-to-day experience of each camper, together forming lasting friendships. Our staff brings enthusiasm and motivation as well as understanding and sensitivity. We are looking for qualified staff to instruct athletics, LFG, WSI, waterskiing, wakeboarding, sailing, jet skiing, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, cooking, arts & crafts, outdoor adventure; including high and low ropes, climbing walls, mountain biking, motor bikes, fishing and much more. Excellent facilities and great salary! ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS, 2/23-2/27. Call 800-832-8228 or apply online, www.canadensis.com

EMPLOYMENT

Start your career now! Upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland. Customer service, wait staff, or retail experience ideal. This is a part-time position during the school semesters, and full time in the summer. The experience is a great introduction to a career track in business or marketing. Must be able to work Saturdays. Please call Amy at (413)781-0734 ext.732.

Cruise Line Entry Level on board positions available, great benefits. Seasonal or Year Round. 941-329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

EMPLOYMENT

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

$250 to $500 a week Will train to work at home Helping the U.S. Government file HUD/FHA mortgage refunds No experience necessary Call Toll Free 1-866-537-2907

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

ROOMMATE WANTED

Great House! Minutes from Campus Need responsible roommates Singles/groups welcome $325/month + 4 rooms open 12 months Starts June 1 Call or IM Lisa a.s.a.p.: (860) 227-4502, LMP3383

SERVICES

Math/Physics tutor available; $30/hr. $20/hr (travel); Call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

TRAVEL

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

VALENTINES SPECIAL

Save $5 from FTD.com this Valentine's Day! Shop online at www.ftd.com/dailycollegian or call 1-800-send-FTD and give promo code 9182 See our display ad in today's issue.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace: 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Brown era set to begin

New coach takes over despite allegations of breach of contract

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Now that the smoke has cleared and the dust has settled, it's time for new Massachusetts head football coach Don Brown to get down to the business of getting the program he inherited from longtime friend, boss and rival Mark Whipple in order.

However if intra-state rival Northeastern University, Brown's former employer, has anything to say about it, the 2002 Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year will not get the chance to make the defending A-10 champion Minutemen his own anytime soon.

Reports out of Boston has NU athletic director Dave O'Brien claiming that UMass asked for, and was denied, permission to speak with Brown about its vacant head coaching position. If this is indeed true, both the University and Brown would be in the red for a various array of violations, including breach of contract in the coach's case.

It was Northeastern's understanding, according to O'Brien, that contract extensions and pay raises awarded to Brown and his staff signified that the fourth-year Husky coach and his assistants would remain in Brookline and not seek employment elsewhere.

"We certainly feel as though we had a valid contract with Don Brown and he breached the contract," O'Brien was quoted as saying. "UMass intentionally interfered with our contractual obligation with Don Brown."

New UMass athletic director John McCutcheon, who was appointed just last week, said that negotiations with Brown began before his tenure in Amherst officially started, and that, "Northeastern has a right to do what they want, but we did this because this is in the best interests of our football program."

So what does this mean for UMass football both in the short term and over the long run? For one, it likely does not mean that Brown will be returning to NU, as the coach's resignation clearly indicates his desire to coach in Amherst, but rather that O'Brien will seek some sort of restitution from UMass, be it financial or otherwise.

"We intend to review our legal options in addressing the ethical and legal concerns stemming from UMass' actions," O'Brien added.

The particulars involved in this situation are sure to be ironed out in the coming days, and the answer will lie somewhere in the gray area between the contract Brown signed that NU claims forbid him from vacating his position, and whether or not UMass needed permission to speak to its former employee in regards to its football coaching position.

Regardless, few at this time are familiar with, or willing to speak about, these particulars. Brown, for one, was not interested in discussing the situation following his introductory press conference.

"I'm leaving behind some players and I'll miss our relationship, but obviously I'm excited about this challenge [at UMass]," he said. "I appreciate all that Northeastern gave me, but I'm not going to comment on the particulars of a contract that should remain confidential."

In the meantime, Brown must begin the uphill battle of assembling a staff, speaking with concerned potential recruits and otherwise managing to maintain the upkeep of a program that has been without a coach for a month, and do so within a very small window

COURTESY NORTHEASTERN MEDIA RELATIONS

New Massachusetts football coach Don Brown arrives after four successful years at Northeastern.

HE playoff picture unclear

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

There are three weeks left in the Hockey East regular season, and beyond the top three teams, the playoff picture is still a muddled composition.

Boston College (12-1-3 HEA, 21-3-4 overall) and Massachusetts (12-4-2 HEA, 16-6-5) have clinched playoff spots and Maine (11-4-1 HEA, 20-6-2) is a combined win and a Northeastern (2-10-4 HEA, 8-13-5) loss or tie away from securing its spot in the postseason. After that, though, no team is safe.

New Hampshire (8-6-3 HEA, 16-10-3) is within striking distance, but needs to string a few wins together to reach the plateau. The Wildcats split their home-and-home weekender with UMass, but with seven games to go, could use some help.

Providence (5-8-5 HEA, 13-9-6) is also nearing the clincher, and with 15 points (fifth place) and two games in hand on last-place Northeastern (eight points), is almost a shoo-in to get to the postseason. UMass Lowell (5-9-2 HEA, 8-18-4) is still haunted by the three conference wins (over UMass and Merrimack) that it forfeited for playing with an ineligible player. With those wins, the River Hawks would be three points up on Providence, and in the hunt for home-ice advantage.

As it is, with 12 points, sixth-place Lowell will need to finish strong to earn a decent playoff seed. The River Hawks are tied with Merrimack (4-11-4 HEA, 9-16-4), two points ahead of eighth-place Boston University (4-10-2 HEA, 8-12-6), and just four points up on the Huskies. Lowell has enjoyed the success of junior Chris Davidson, whose talented netminding has been a driving force behind the River Hawk's surprising success this season. Davidson is fourth in the league with a 2.15 goals against average, and his .927 save percentage puts him third, behind Maine's Jim Howard and Providence's David Cacciola.

Hurtin' Dogs

If you told someone at the beginning of the season that Jack Parker's Boston University Terriers would be fighting to hold on to eighth place come February, you'd be committed to an institution that specializes in extra-long sleeves.

However, the Terriers have struggled for much of the season, and with only four wins in conference play (and two ties), they have a slim two-point lead on Northeastern. They also just took two significant hits in the last five days, getting shut out by the fine work of Providence's sophomore sensation, goaltender Bobby Goepfert, and then losing a heartbreaking 3-2 decision to BC in the Beanpot final Monday night.

Terrier goaltender Sean Fields made 50 saves to earn 'Pot MVP honors, but Ryan Murphy's wrister at 6:07 of the overtime period beat him, giving the Eagles their first Beanpot trophy since 2001. Fields did make some history, becoming the first player from the losing squad in the championship game to earn the tournament MVP award.

York makes his mark

With BC's Beanpot win, coach Jerry York took the all-time wins lead over Parker, and the two coaches are now one-two on the list of winningest active coaches. The score between the two beantown bench bosses now stands 689-688 in favor of York, the BC grad and Watertown native.

Even more importantly, the win came the same day the Eagles were tabbed as the unanimous No. 1 team in the nation, on both the U.S. College Hockey Online poll and the USA Today/American Hockey Magazine poll.

Loss of Fitzgerald to hurt Pittsburgh

By Charles Sheehan
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH - While Larry Fitzgerald is playing in the NFL next season; the team he left behind will be adjusting to life in the reconfigured Big East by rebuilding its offense.

Even though it was expected, Fitzgerald's decision Monday to enter the NFL draft makes those adjustments much more difficult for the University of Pittsburgh.

Coach Walt Harris had a few days to prepare for the loss of the Heisman Trophy runner-up as a sophomore.

Fitzgerald told Harris that he was going pro last Thursday, when the NFL ruled him eligible for the Draft.

"We have been blessed to be around such a special person and outstanding athlete in Larry Fitzgerald," Harris said. "Not only was he an unbelievable receiver, but he also set a great example of how players should respect the game."

Fitzgerald was the most proficient receiver in Pittsburgh history and set three NCAA records: most consecutive games with a touchdown catch (18); most touchdown catches for a freshman-sophomore (34); and most yards receiving by a sophomore (1,672), besting Randy Moss' 1997 season.

He also tied the record for most games catching a touchdown pass in a season (12).

Fitzgerald, who will turn 21 in August, is projected to go early in the draft, possibly number one overall.

"I'm very confident in my ability," he said. "I know there's going to be skeptics and there's going to be people out there criticizing this and criticizing that, but all-in-all I know I can play the game of football."

Though he played just two seasons with the Panthers, that was enough time to break several school and NCAA records and make a run at the Heisman Trophy.

"The main reason people come to college is to better your chances of making a living, and I think that my two years that I've had here, I've given myself a good opportunity to make a good living ... for myself and to support my family," Fitzgerald said.

He petitioned the NFL to allow him to enter the draft despite two seasons of college play. Fitzgerald left the Academy of Holy Angels in Richfield, Minn., midway through his senior year in 2001 and transferred to Valley Forge (Pa.) Military Academy to boost his grades prior to entering his freshman year of college.

Fitzgerald is three years past his senior year of high school, the minimum required by the NFL, and was ruled eligible for the draft.

The league's decision on Fitzgerald came the same day a federal judge ruled running back Maurice Clarett could also turn pro despite playing only one season at Ohio State.

The judge said NFL draft eligibility rules violate federal antitrust laws.

Fitzgerald, 20, finished a close second to Oklahoma quarterback Jason White in voting for the 2003 Heisman Trophy, nearly becoming the first sophomore to win the award.

In 2003, Fitzgerald caught 87 passes and led all NCAA receivers with 1,595 yards in 12 regular-season games. He had 22 touchdown catches, at least one in each of the Panthers regular-season games.

He had five catches for 77 yards in Pitt's loss to Virginia in the Continental Tire Bowl.

He played in all 13 games as a freshman and became a starter in his third game. In 2002, he had 69 receptions for 1,005 yards, easily surpassing current Dallas Cowboy Antonio Bryant, who caught a then-record 51 passes for 844 yards as a freshman in 1999 before eventually moving on to the NFL.

Fitzgerald won the Biletnikoff Trophy as college football's top receiver last season and the Walter Camp Award as the nation's best player.

Blazers deal troubled Wallace to Hawks

By Keith Parsons
Associated Press

ATLANTA - The Portland Trail Blazers' problems off the court are well documented, and no one symbolized what was wrong with the franchise more than bad boy Rasheed Wallace.

So the Trail Blazers finally did something about it.

Portland sent the volatile forward and reserve Wesley Person to the Atlanta Hawks late Monday night for Shareef Abdur-Rahim and two other players.

"This trade helps the franchise in many ways," Trail Blazers president Steve Patterson said. "We get a younger core of players and can remain competitive in both the Western Conference the league.

"Another factor in the deal is that we are also acquiring three players of good character."

The same probably can't be said of Wallace. He drew the ire of NBA commissioner David Stern this season when he told The Oregonian newspaper that the league's white establishment is exploiting young black athletes to enrich itself. Wallace later issued an apology.

Last season, he was suspended by the league for seven games for threatening an official on the loading dock at the Rose Garden Arena after a game. It was the longest suspension ever handed down by the NBA that did not involve physical contact or substance abuse.

In the 2000-01 season, Wallace set the NBA record with 41 technical fouls. He is set to earn $17 million in the final year of his contract, and already indicated that he did not want to re-sign with Portland.

"What you do in this situation is very clear, you start with a clean slate," Hawks general manager Billy Knight said. "You judge people on the way they are with you. I'm not going to go on what someone else said."

The announcement of the trade came about 90 minutes after the Hawks beat the Dallas Mavericks 102-96. Abdur-Rahim had 27 points and 10 rebounds in the victory, and is averaging 20.7 points and 8.4 rebounds this season.

Stephen Jackson had 11 of his career-high 30 points during an early fourth-quarter rally for the Hawks, who improved to 8-7 over their past 15 games. They've won three of four, including a victory over the Minnesota Timberwolves, another top team from the Western Conference.

But Knight still wasn't convinced the team was headed in the right direction.

"I didn't think we could continue to do that for the rest of this year," Knight said. "What this does is accelerate the process of rebuilding. This was a deal that gets us financially healthy and makes us a player in the free-agent market."

Abdur-Rahim goes to the Trail Blazers along with center Theo Ratliff and little-used point guard Dan Dickau, a first-round pick of the Sacramento Kings in 2002, who was traded to the Hawks

See WALLACE on page 8

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

In the Eagle's eye

Gabe Winer and UMass will face Boston College this weekend in a crucial home-and-home series that could decide first place in Hockey East. The teams faceoff Friday night at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center for "White Out Night."

Collegian editors weigh in on magazines
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Minutewomen hit the road to face Fordham
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 81

UMass plans to build new residence halls

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

This week the University of Massachusetts board of trustees announced that they would lend $85 million to UMass Amherst to build apartment-style residence halls for upperclassmen.

There are now 11,100 of the University's 24,000 students living in the 41 residence halls on campus. A study conducted during the past two years shows there are as many as 1,500 students who would remain on campus after their sophomore year if there were more private accommodations.

In order to meet the demand, housing officials say they're planning to build apartment-style residence halls that could house up to 1,500 students. Each unit would be divided into four one-person bedrooms and have a shared kitchen and two shared bathrooms.

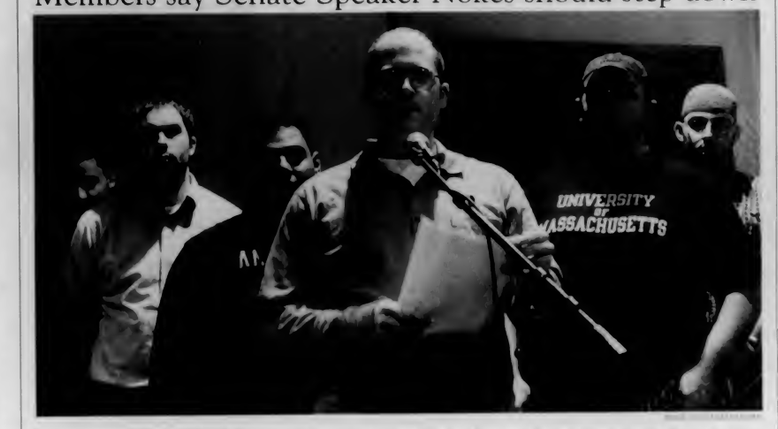
"We want to accommodate upper-class students who don't want to live in a traditional double-style room," said Michael Gilbert, director of housing services. "And we want to open for the school year without having students living in temporary quarters."

The recent housing crunch forced the University to find temporary housing for students in hotels and dormitory lounges at the start of the school year. Also, the university has had to deny on-campus housing to juniors and seniors who are transferring to the school. And if a sophomore decides to leave campus during his or her junior year, the school will not guarantee housing for them in their senior year if they want to return to a residence hall.

The lack of privacy has traditionally pushed students to move off campus. But now, with the comforts of a 60-channel cable TV lineup and easy Internet access, more students are willing to trade their privacy for convenience.

"The cable access is pretty nice, but the bathrooms get filled too quickly," said Rebecca Flohr, a senior from Kittery, Maine, who lives on campus. "After a few years, you start wanting more privacy." Gilbert said he isn't sure how many residence halls will be built, but he said construction may begin this summer and students will be able to begin moving in next year.

The school's housing department — including all new residence hall construction — is funded by student housing fees.



"Money for the new building will come from either the project itself or from the housing department," Gilbert said. "There will be no state funding or any funding coming from the university's general budget."

Gilbert said it's too soon to say if the cost of new buildings would be borne entirely by the students who would live there, or whether housing fees would have to be raised for all students.

Trustees last week approved a $442 room and board increase at the Amherst campus, bringing the full cost of attending UMass for a Massachusetts resident to about $15,200.

SGA Executive Cabinet: Resign

Members say Senate Speaker Nokes should step down

Secretary of Diversity Affairs, Russell Plato, center, and other members of the Executive Cabinet, call for the resignation of Senate Speaker Jared Nokes at last night's SGA meeting. Pictured from left to right are: Pavel Payano, Brian Long, Mina Safain, SGA President Dave Carr, and Mark Morrison.

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Government Association Executive Cabinet called for the resignation of Senate Speaker Jared Nokes during a Senate meeting last night in a prepared statement that was read before the Senate body.

"No longer can we watch while he disregards not only the Senate, but also the entire student body," SGA President David Carr read. "This Senate body deserves a better speaker than Jared Nokes, and it is time for him to step down."

The statement was signed by each member of the SGA Executive Cabinet, as well as by four senators from the ALANA Caucus. ALANA Caucus Senators Eduardo Bustamante and Gladys Franco, Secretary of Diversity Issues Russell P. Plato, and Carr took turns reading the statement, while the rest of the Executive Board stood behind them in solidarity.

"I was not expecting it," Nokes told The Massachusetts Daily Collegian last night at about 12:30 a.m. "It was very disappointing and very surprising."

From the back of the room, audience members cheered, applauded, and gasped. The atmosphere remained tense, especially for those in the room who had not already heard the news.

Last night's call for resignation is the third for Nokes' removal this year. It was brought to the floor after an email that Nokes and Chair of Ways and Means Patrick Higgins and Chair of Public Policy and Relations Adrienne Girard sent to the Senators on Monday. According to the prepared statement read last night, the three criticized the executive branch of the SGA for not being willing to follow through on a proposal that was made last week to dramatically alter the Office of ALANA Affairs, even though it sparked major criticism and concern from members of the ALANA community.

In the email, Nokes, Higgins and Girard said they considered the result of Monday's discussion to be a disgrace. Higgins tried to explain the motives behind the email last night.

"You all received an email recently where we called what happened the other night was an embarrassment," he said. "Many people have misunderstood us."

Higgins said he was upset that senators were not a part of the proposal to reconstruct the OAA. "I saw it as a lack of respect from the executive [board]. I feel that the proposals they brought have been disrespectful," he said.

At the first meeting last semester, Franco called for Nokes' impeachment because he would not recognize any of the ALANA Caucus' appointed seats. She claimed Nokes had no Constitutional right not to recognize the seats.

She also claimed that he was not recognizing the students, who had just voted in campus elections one week earlier. On the ballot, several referendum questions were posed to the students based on the ALANA appointed seats. The referendum questions passed, approving of the appointed seats, with the necessary total needed to change the Constitution. In effect, Nokes was not listening to the students in his decision.

Nokes fired back in November, bringing impeachment charges against Franco and Bustamante. He said they failed to turn in reports on the National Conference on Race and Ethnicity in American Higher

See NOKES on page 3

Open house in Student Union today

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

Today for the first time in five years, the Student Union will be filled with performances, activities and food for the Student Activities Center's Student Union Open House.

"It's an open house to showcase all the student groups," said Paula Hodecker, director of the Student Union Craft Center.

The Student Union has various cultural, political, athletic, and religious organization and agencies. The open house is designed to gain the Student Union more popularity. "We hope to let the campus know what we do here," said Hodecker.

The open house will host 27 tables from various groups in the Student Union and there will be performances throughout the day between 11 a.m to 3 p.m.

As one of the major events, the Craft Center will be running a Valentine's Day table for people to make valentines. WMUA, the radio station for UMass, will be playing live music while The Hatch will host a karaoke contest. In addition, there will be free pool and games in the game room.

The juggling Club, Ben Matthew from the South Asian Student Association, the Kendo Club, Emily Russel from Earthfoods and the Ballroom Dance Team will all be hosting events throughout the afternoon in the Cape Cod Lounge.

In the Student Art Gallery there will be an art exhibition entitled From the Arts Barn, which will display various student's abstract painting and other drawings. Showcased in the gallery will be Katie Banach, Phil McBride and Ian Gandreo.

Also in the afternoon, the Pride Alliance will perform a mock marriage ceremony.

"The whole campus is invited, that includes all students and faculty," Hodecker said.

UVC-TV19 will be in attendance to tape the event and will also sponsor an event.

The open house will be catered by People's Market and Sweets and More, and was organized by the SGA.

EMILIE DUCHANE/COLLEGIAN

LISTEN UP

Chancellor Lombardi addresses the Graduate Student Senate yesterday in the Campus Center. He said the University of Massachusetts will comply with the new fee for international students.

Campus career fairs attract thousands of job seekers

By Michelle Rivera, Sean Benson and Keyana Brown
Collegian Correspondents

Thousands of University of Massachusetts students gathered in various parts of the Campus Center yesterday for three different kinds of career fairs.

The events included the Campus-Wide Career Fair, the Life Sciences & Environmental Careers Fair, and the ALANA Job Fair.

Campus-wide fair draws more than 1,000

More than 1,000 University of Massachusetts students took the opportunity to meet yesterday with local and national employers offering interviews and potential jobs at the annual Campus-Wide Career Fair in the UMass Campus Center Auditorium.

Career Services hosted representatives from over 60 major companies, ranging from Microsoft Corporation, W.B. Mason, Hartford Financial Services Group, Liberty Mutual Group, Abercrombie and Fitch, Kinko's and Six Flags New England.

"[The fair was] very diverse and had lot of different options and companies looking for students with different majors," said Sophan Theam, a senior biology major. "It's a good opportunity and it's helpful to know what's out there."

Each company had tables set up from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., waiting to meet and collect resumes from students.

Tina Acker, associate director of Career Services and the Campus-Wide Career Fair coordinator, said that she was "very pleased with the turnout."

The number of employers at the event was approximately the same as last year's fair. The numbers of student turnout also mirrored last year's event, with a crowd estimated at between 1, 500 and 2, 000 students.

According to Acker, the fair is a very dynamic event for both students and employers. "A lot of employers are getting such a good response from students that they want to come back and do follow up interviews," she said.

The employers seemed very happy and were "pleased with the great students and great questions," Acker said.

Students were handed pamphlets at the door of the auditorium as well as floor plans for the location of each employer's table.

Many representatives used displays to attract students to their particular table, and handed out free items such as company pens, calendars and desk clocks.

Pepsi Bottling Group representative, Kirstin Enterlin, a representative from the Pepsi Bottling Group, was very pleased with the student turnout. "Students seem to be very eager and very well prepared," she said.

Some students took advantage of the opportunity and spent time going over their options with many different employers.

Maya Perepelitsky, a senior psychology major, spent an hour asking questions to representatives from several of the companies.

She said that she felt prepared for the event and found it very useful.

"I'm actually satisfied over all because I didn't expect to find anything in my field in there," she said.

However, not all students found the career fair to be totally beneficial. "I am highly unsatisfied with the fact that you didn't need a college degree for some jobs," said Perepelitsky. "I felt that they should have been recruiting at a local high school," she said.

Graduate student and mechanical and industrial engineering major, Anand Srinivasan, said that the fair was "helpful to an extent."

"There were just one or two companies there that related to my discipline," he said.

For students who were not able to attend the fair and wish to make a connection with a certain employer from the event, the employers' contact information has been made available on the Career Services web site at www-ccn.acad.umass.edu. For more direct information, call Tina Acker at 545-6247.

—Michelle Rivera

See FAIRS on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Advertising Manager Nick Markantanatos
Assistant Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Perron Saltriker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Assistant Editorial Editor Kristen Weiss
Assistant Business Manager Marty Pappas
Assistant Manager Mark Logatto
Design Manager Greg Stamm
Online Manager Renee Brand
Online Editor Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Manager David Boe
Advertising Manager JaJuan Sorenson
Assistant Sports Editor Josh Higgins
Assistant Arts & Living Editor Richard Pacheco
Advertising Manager Lisa Lynch
Assistant Editorial Editor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Arts & Living Editor Meghan Healy
Assistant Photo Editor Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Copy Editor Paige Crum
Assistant Sports Editor Erika Lovley
Assistant Sports Editor Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Editor Emilie Baumann
Assistant Photo Editor Mike Marrelli
Assistant Photo Editor Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian (USPS 325-920) is published Tuesday through Friday during the fall and spring semesters except during vacations and examination periods. Periodicals postage paid at Amherst, MA 01004. Subscriptions are $100 for the academic year. POSTMASTER: Send address changes to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003.

Career fairs attract thousands

FAIRS from page 1

SCIENCES CAREER FAIR A SUCCESS

Hundreds of students met with representatives from 11 different organizations to discuss career options at the fourth annual Life Sciences & Environmental Careers Fair yesterday.

The organizations on hand included graduate schools such as Harvard Medical School and UMass Medical School, as well as research companies like Stiefel Laboratories and Charles River Laboratories.

Representatives greeted students in front of tables containing display boards, pamphlets and contact information. Students got the opportunity to meet and make contacts with organizations they were interested in working for as interns, in co-ops, or after graduation.

"The fair is a good way for students to find internships and co-ops now so that they will have contacts when they graduate," said Ginger Goldsbury, Assistant Director of Career Services and organizer of the Life Sciences & Environmental Careers Fair. "Co-ops are helpful because they give students a chance to see if they like working for that particular company ... the employers want to be here because they are particularly interested in UMass students."

The fair was held in room 162 of the Campus Center from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. The small room separated the Life Sciences & Environmental Careers Fair from the larger campus-wide Careers Fair held in the auditorium.

"The breakdown between rooms is good because we know the students in this room are concentrating in this field," said Shane Kelley, an operations technical specialist for Triumvirate Environmental.

There was a steady flow of students into the room, most of whom were from the College of Natural Resources and the Environment and the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics.

"There's a mixture of students here, but we're seeing predominantly undergrads interested in internship opportunities," said Angela Howard, a human resources generalist at Mass. General Hospital.

Several of the representatives of the organizations had positive things to say about their experience with UMass students.

"This is our third year here. We've had success in the past with UMass grads, so we keep coming back," said Jon Abplanalp, Director of Contact Staffing at Resource Options, Inc.

"We're looking for full-time employment of UMass students," said Linda Musto, Senior Employment Specialist at Harvard Medical School. "We made five hires from this fair last year and we're shooting for 10 this year ... the animal science and basic science programs here are strong. The students here have a lot of on-campus research experience in addition to their coursework."

John Pappas, a recruiter for Charles River Laboratories, was accompanied by two UMass graduates who now work for the company. Both graduates had attended the Life Sciences & Environmental Careers Fair as undergraduates and had made contacts that led to their hiring by Charles River Laboratories at the event.

"I've been coming here for three years and I find some of our greatest employees come from UMass," said Pappas. "The students here are attractive to us because they are better prepared for the job market than those who attend small private schools, for example."

Some students had positive reactions to the fair.

"I'm looking to see what's out there," said Elissa Drum, a senior environmental science major. "The reps are all really helpful with that."

However, one student interviewed wanted to meet with more representatives.

"I wish there were more options, although I know it's hard for companies to get out here," said Emma Thomas, a senior environmental science major. "I wish there were more smaller companies from the area."

—Sean Benson

EMILIE BAUMANN/COLLEGIAN

Michael Niles, a representative from Staples, speaks to Susan Chen, a sophomore accounting major, at yesterday's ALANA Job Fair, held in the campus center.

ALANA FAIR DRAWS HUNDREDS

The ALANA Job Fair drew hundreds of UMass minority and international students to the Campus Center auditorium last night.

"Wow! The event was amazing and the student turnout was tremendous ... about 700 or more came throughout the evening," said freshman volunteer Lakear Cromartie.

While ALANA sponsored and organized the event non-minority students were in no way discouraged from attending, according to senior Stella Kwong, who helped organize, manage and promote the fair.

"Even though the Job Fair ran very smoothly and received lots of support and student participation, I would have liked to see even more company/business turnout," she said.

Some individuals attended the Job Fair dressed casually, while others wore business attire. Most came with the intent to seek employment opportunities, prerequisites and connections as well as to gather further information about careers, jobs and internships.

The range of employers in attendance was quite diverse. The fields included communication, health care, military and business.

Eddie Carbone and Jonathan Sun of the New England Professional Golfers Association PGA said they sought to hire at least 20 passionate students interested in golf, sports media and sports information.

"It's good to come back and check out the school again and make a positive influence," said Carbone, a UMass graduate of 1988.

Cristina Alves, a Target store representative, was seeking unique, charismatic, friendly and unique leaders for a 12-week summer internship. The interns will serve as executive team leaders in training, selected interns will experience what it's like to run a target store.

Freshman students Tracy Lin and Lily Huang agreed the presentation was excellent and that they got a chance to explore different career options. Lin also said she found out about internships that she never even knew existed.

The co-sponsors of the ALANA Job Fair were the Bilingual Collegiate Program, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students, Diversity in Management Education Services, the Minority Engineering Program, the United Asia Learning Resource Center and Career Services.

— Keyana Brown

EMILIE BAUMANN/COLLEGIAN

BREATHE IN, BREATHE OUT

Akshaye Sikand, president of the UMass Art of Living Club, speaks to students at a meeting last night in the campus center.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN
All staff meeting Feb. 18th at 7 p.m. in the newsroom

Party at
The Blue Wall Pub!
21+ To Drink
18+ To Party
Every Wednesday Open Mic
Come perform for your friends and classmates
First come, first serve
sign-up sheet goes out at 6:00PM every Wednesday
Weekly winners will be awarded a full set Friday night in April!
Every Friday Live Local Music
Friday 2/13 at 7:00PM
Special Guests Pacifica Quartet
in a special intimate encore appearance following their morning performance at the Fine Arts Center.
Friday 2/20 at 7:00PM
Stay Behind and The Skeptics
Friday 2/27 at 7:00PM
Rudy Brown and Natural Descent
Admission to all events is free
Never a cover at the Blue Wall

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Wine:	Liquor:
Harp Lager 2/12 pk btls. $19.99*	Dom Perignon 1 lt...$94.99	Bombay Sapphire Gin 1 lt...$22.99
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk cans. $15.99*	Moet & CChandon White Star 750 ml...$29.99	Bushmills 1 lt...$22.99
Icehouse 30 pk cans. $13.49*	Foxhorn Chardonnay or Merlot 6 bot./750ml...$10.99	Jameson Irish Whiskey 1 lt...$22.99
Keystone 30 pk cans. $13.49*	Canyon Road Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99	Romana Sambuca 750 ml...$18.99
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*	Vendange Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99	Southern Comfort 1 lt...$17.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Wyndham Estates Merlot, Cabernet, Shiraz 750 ml...$7.99	Tequila Rose 750 ml...$17.99
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl...$11.99*	Jacobs Creek Chardonnay, Cabernet, Shraz, Merlot 750 ml...$6.99	Rubinoff all flavors 1.75 lt...$9.99
Sam Adams 12 pk btl...$10.99*	Arbor Mist All Flavors 1.5 lt...$4.99	Cask&Cream all flavors 750 ml...$8.99
Killians Irish Red 12 pk btl...$8.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 2/05 THROUGH 2/11
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

Executive cabinet says Nokes should resign

Executive cabinet statement read at last night's SGA meeting

NOKES from page 1

Feb. 11, 2004

Members of the Senate and the student body,

At the first Senate meeting of the Spring 2004 semester, Secretary of Diversity Issues Russell Plato offered an Executive Branch proposal to expand and reorganize the Office of ALANA Affairs into an Office of Community Diversity Affairs. This proposal, which was developed without the consultation of the ALANA Caucus, the Office of ALANA Affairs or leaders of the ALANA community, was put forth as an effort to make the OAA a more effective resource and advocate for students. Representatives of the ALANA Caucus and of the Office itself made clear their concerns about the proposal before it was released to the Senate.

At that point, the Executive Cabinet, Franco, and other senators joined Bustamonte in reading the letter calling for Nokes' resignation.

When it was Nokes' turn to speak, he said he would not comment on the letter last night. Later last night, however, Nokes told The Collegian he felt the timing of the letter was odd. "Everyone who supported that letter was standing there, and eight of them have no vote."

A two-thirds vote in the Senate would be necessary to impeach Nokes.

Nokes said he sees next week's meeting going well. He noted that 36 out 41 Senators stayed until midnight last night when them meeting ended. The Senate will address the Alcohol Task Force Policy during next week's meeting.

These statements evidence a complete and total disregard for the student body by the speaker of the Senate. His belief that the Cabinet should have continued to press forward with a proposal that was met negatively by the community serves as an indication of his inability and unwillingness to recognize that he, too, should listen to and be responsive to students. As the speaker of the Senate, it is his responsibility to further the goals of students as expressed by the Senate. He has failed to do so.

Even more problematic is the implication found throughout the email that Speaker Nokes has more effectively responded to the needs of ALANA students than has the Executive Branch. Every single action that Speaker Nokes has taken with regard to the ALANA Caucus appointed seats has been designed to frustrate the obvious desires of the student body, as those desires were conveyed in the creation of the appointed seats and the September 2003 passage of a referendum question that would have added the ALANA Caucus appointed seats to the SGA Constitution.

Speaker Nokes took it upon himself to rule upon the legality of appointed seats, even though it is entirely outside of his powers to make such rulings. He attempted to block the recognition of the appointed seats for the 2003-2004 Senate session by using Parliamentary procedure and his powers as Speaker to prevent it from being placed on the Senate agenda.

Throughout his tenure, Speaker Nokes has acted outside the bounds of his position and without regard for the stated opinion of the student body and the Senate. He has formulated positions on issues about which the Senate has not spoken; he has met directly with administrators to argue for particular policies without having been asked to do so by the Senate; and he has abused his discretion as Speaker to block controversial legislation from being presented on the Senate floor.

The Speaker's primary responsibility is the facilitation of Senate meetings, but Speaker Nokes has shown himself unable and unwilling to fulfill even this very simple function. He does not arrive at the meetings in time to call them to order; he walks around chatting with Senators during announcements, officer reports, and the consideration of motions. When he does stay at the podium, he pays absolutely no attention to the proceedings of the meeting.

His actions toward the ALANA Caucus have been particularly egregious, starting with his refusal to recognize the ALANA Caucus appointments to the Coordinating Council. He then refused to recognize the ALANA Caucus appointed Senate seats despite overwhelming sentiment in the student body that they wished the seats to be recognized. He manipulated the Coordinating Council through proxy voting and recognition of non-members to the point that the integrity and legitimacy of the Council became seriously questionable. These offenses are not simply egregious; they are impeachable. If anyone has embarrassed the Student Government Association, it is Jared Nokes.

Despite our differences in the past, we now stand together against Jared Nokes's blatant abuse of his position. No longer can we watch while he disregards not only the Senate but also the entire student body. This Senate body deserves a better Speaker than Jared Nokes, and it is time for him to step down.

Sincerely,
David Carr
President, SGA

Russell P. Plato
Secretary of Diversity Issues

Mark Morrison
Attorney General

Lisa Jollimore
Secretary of Administrative Affairs

Carla Moy
Secretary of the Registry

Mina Safain
Secretary of Public Policy and Relations

Catherine Donaghey
Secretary of Finance

Brian Long
Secretary of University Policy

Senator Aiysha Cooper
External Chair, ALANA Caucus

Senator Gladys Franco
Internal Chair, ALANA Caucus

Senator Eduardo Bustamante
ALANA Caucus Senator

Tayo Aiyeku
ALANA Caucus Senator

Legislature rejects amendment to ban gay marriage

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Legislature narrowly rejected a compromise proposal yesterday that sought to legalize civil unions but ban same-sex marriages, delivering a setback to lawmakers who wanted to avoid taking the divisive issue head-on.

The defeat of the compromise means that lawmakers will return to the Statehouse today to consider either an outright ban on gay marriage or letting the state's constitution remain intact.

The joint House and Senate session adjourned for the evening about 8:30 p.m. after about six hours of debate.

The bipartisan proposal was crafted by Senate leaders who wished to overturn a high court decision legalizing gay marriage while still extending equal benefits to gay couples. It was rejected 104-94.

The compromise would have made Vermont-style civil unions automatically legal in Massachusetts in November 2006, the earliest an amendment could be placed on a ballot for voter approval. At that time, any gay couples married in Massachusetts would be stripped of their licenses and considered part of a civil union.

Massachusetts was thrust into the epicenter of the national gay marriage debate in November when the Supreme Judicial Court ruled 4-3 that that it was unconstitutional to bar same-sex couples from marriage.

The court definitively reaffirmed the decision last week, clearing the way for the first state-recognized gay marriages in U.S. history to start taking place in May.

Rep. Philip Travis, a Democrat who sponsored the original ban on gay marriage, said the compromise proposal would have asked voters to decide on two potentially conflicting initiatives — a ban on gay marriage and the legalization of civil unions — with one vote.

"It goes beyond what the people wish to vote on," Travis said. "It is almost like offering a true/false question. How do you respond by voting yes or no at the ballot box?"

People from across the country were confronted with tight security and a throng of reporters as the lawmakers entered the volatile national debate over gay rights.

Impromptu rallies erupted outside the two-century-old building, and hundreds of people lined both sides of the street, holding signs, waving flags and eliciting honks from passing cars.

The chants broke out spontaneously in pockets up and down the street, and included, "Hey hey, ho ho homophobia's got to go." Others chanted, "Adam and Eve, not Adam and Steve," or held signs that read "Civil Unions Sitting on the Back of the Bus."

State police had to separate two crowds inside the Statehouse who began pushing and shoving after one group unfurled an American flag across from the chamber and began chanting "One Man. One Woman. Let the People Vote." Moments later, a contingent of gay marriage backers arrived shouting "Equality Now."

At one point, dozens of opponents of gay marriage knelt and prayed amid the din.

The debate began with consideration of an unexpected amendment, proposed at the last minute by House Speaker Thomas Finneran, that would ban gay marriage but allow the Legislature to adopt civil unions.

After two hours of debate and accusations that the Democratic speaker was trying to hijack the process, that amendment was shot down by a 100-98 vote.

Debate then turned to the Senate compromise, which suffered the same fate.

In arguing against the gay-marriage ban, Sen. Dianne Wilkerson drew upon her experience as a black woman growing up in Arkansas, where the hospital did not allow her mother to deliver her children.

"I know the pain of being less than equal and I cannot and will not impose that status on anyone else," a teary-eyed Wilkerson said. "I could not in good conscience ever vote to send anyone to that place from which my family fled."

Supporters of a ban called for the Legislature to respect 3,000 years of tradition.

"Every society, every culture, every nation in all of recorded history, including Massachusetts, has up until this point at least defined marriage as one man and one woman," Finneran said.

The Legislature is tightly controlled by the Democrats, who hold 169 of the 199 seats. (One seat is vacant.) The Legislature is also heavily Roman Catholic.

Spring Break Student Special
Havana, Cuba
Participate in a restoration project at Iglesia Baptista (church) in Havana
March 13-20, 2004
Trip Includes:
• Seven nights dormitory accommodations at the church
• All meals, transportation, and daily schedule
• License and visa for legal travel to Cuba
• Round trip air fare from New York City to Havana
Cost: $1695.00
For more Information or to Register
413.637.3512

FREE DELIVERY!
Located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
150 Fearing Street
Special: Large Cheese Pizza $5.00
Thurs./Fri./Sat.
Pizzaria
Open Sun.-Wed. 11am-1am
Thurs.-Sat. 11am-3am
549-6073
Accept all major credit cards and OCMF!

Hello LeBeau!
Valentines Day February 14th
LeBeau Florist and Gifts offers chocolates, Roses/flowers, and gifts
What better way to say I love you...
Then with LeBeau Florist and Gifts
LeBeau Florist and Gifts
Located in two convenient locations
460 West Street, AMherst, MA, 253-6993
112 Cottage Street, Easthampton, MA, 527-2502
good thru Febraury 14th 2004
10% Off any Valentine purchase
Not Valid with any other coupon offer

Lori Granat-Dupell '01
Attorney
Montague & Desautels
Attorneys at Law
Worcester, MA
Find Common Ground
With a law degree from Western New England College School of Law Lori Granat-Dupell is prepared to help clients find equitable resolutions in family law disputes.
Whether you intend to take your place in the courtroom or the boardroom, our outstanding legal faculty will prepare you to practice what we teach. From research and writing to law clinics, national competitions to externships, our collegial learning environment offers hands-on experience for success in many fields.
OPEN HOUSE
Full- and Part-time
Saturday
Feb. 21, 2004
12:30-3:30 p.m.
S. Prestley Blake Law Center
1215 Wilbraham Road
Springfield, MA
Call 800-782-6665 or 413-782-1406 to RSVP
www.law.wnec.edu
Law
Western New England College
School of Law
Practice What We Teach.

Free & Open to all students
Atlantic 10 Shoot Out
$10,000
Register at www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS
Win Airline Ticket(s)!
Win Basketball Shirts!!
2-Person Shootout Competition
Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed
GMAC
Pontiac
QUALIFYING ROUND
Thursday, February 26
7 PM - Earth Hour Club
Free Samples From Aero, Edge, Nestle Crunch, TicTac and UltraMax win a trip to europe!

contiki.com/campus
get into a real greek week!
>we've got the ultimate toga party!
>new! mykonos resort 7 nights from $599
>aegean classic cruise 7 days from $579
>greek island hopping 14 days from $1289
>london to athens 23 days from $1799
prices are per person, land only, subject to availability.
>packages include accommodations, transportation, many meals and as much fun as you can handle! call now or go online to make the vacation of a lifetime!
contiki
VACATIONS for 18-35 year olds for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent
call 1-888-CONTIKI
visit www.contiki.com
europe > australia > new zealand > america

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Apartment housing is a good investment

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees announced Tuesday that the University will expand its student housing with new apartment-style residences for up to 1,500 more students, with amenities like high-speed Internet, kitchenettes, and cable television.

The project will cost approximately $85 million, the amount authorized by the UMass trustees to be used through bonds. There are some who will criticize this effort, saying that the university needs to save money and control its population, not spend money and expand. However, there is no doubt that this move is a shining example of change at UMass.

Financially, the fact that the trustees are secure enough in UMass' fiscal future to approve the transaction says that brighter days are ahead for the university. Though it isn't easy to accept, we must be willing to spend money in order to make money. As it is, the dormitories on campus are overcrowded, and without an attractive housing option like the proposed apartments to offer prospective students, interest in coming to UMass will suffer.

Moreover, these apartments provide an excellent option for students seeking to move out of the dorms, without having to go through the rigmarole of finding decent, affordable off-campus housing. With rent prices skyrocketing and good apartments becoming harder and harder to find, the proposed apartment developments will alleviate the stress of finding acceptable housing, as well as provide a little breathing room to a clogged campus which must force students to live in lounges and the Campus Center Hotel.

That, in fact, may be the best reason for the new housing options. While the University is making the move because it plans to increase the number of students by roughly 1,500 over the next five years, it is the juniors and seniors who will most benefit from this plan. Granted, it will have an effect on a very small percentage of the current student population, but it is an important step towards making UMass a more pleasant place to live and learn.

This alternative housing idea is not entirely original. At Quinnipiac University and St. Anselm College, apartment-style housing has successfully provided upperclassmen with an affordable housing option that removes them from the cluster of dorms, yet doesn't force them to live far from campus. Bus routes are no longer a priority, because students' apartments are within walking distance. UMass students should have full faith that the same convenience and opportunities will soon be available to them.

There is, as always, a catch. Student housing fees will increase by over $400, and this burden will be felt by all students — regardless of their housing type. However, in the dire financial state this institution has endured for the last few years, the only way to dig ourselves out is to stop expecting help from the Boston-centric state legislature, and start fixing the problem with our own resources. The Collegian firmly believes that such an effort will pay off. Exceptional new housing will go a long way towards student morale, campus beauty, financial health, and an overall sense of growth here at UMass.

Information from gazettenet.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

There's no title – just read it

Matt Brochu

Last Thursday night at 9 p.m., I was wiping the steam off my bathroom mirror so I could spend those two awkward minutes convincing myself that I actually look cool in a towel. Last Thursday night at 9 p.m., 508 miles away from cozy Amherst, one of my best friends was doing the same thing, only in a blind-as-a-bat-without-his-glasses kind of way.

Last Thursday night at midnight, after maybe eight games of beer pong, I was gradually reaching the point where, "I'm wicked sober," actually means, "Give me my car keys and I'll get you home without a severe head injury roughly 50 percent of the time."

Last Thursday night at midnight one of my best friends was probably doing the same, only replacing pong with Jaeger Bombs. Last Friday morning at 3 a.m., I was complaining about how my boogers froze to my face on the walk back to Puffton. Last Friday morning at 3 a.m., one of my best friends was lying in a puddle of his own blood, mugged, beaten, and discarded in the streets of a major city, possibly left for dead.

I could write about how he was found, or how long his emergency reconstructive surgery lasted. I could write about how a blizzard was the only thing keeping me from driving down to Virginia in hopes of beginning a new string of sniper shootings. But instead, I'll write about something else that shook me up: the fact that I talked to my four best friends in the world today and I can't even remember the last time that happened.

You might have read that college isn't the place you meet your future husband, but instead it's where you meet your future bridesmaids. You might think that going away to school means you have to ditch the people you grew up with, merely tossing aside the memories that seemed to be so poignantly encapsulated by that high school year book you can no longer find, only to be replaced by new ones. Lies. To me, college is a place where you come to realize just how irreplaceable your best friends from home really are.

As much as I love everyone I've met here at UMass, and as much as I hate the thought of having generic, uncomfortable conversations with 85 percent of my townie high school class at my first reunion, four years of papers, parties, and puking is no substitute for the 18 years I spent finding out who I really am. And because I'm going to remember those years over the course of my lifetime, and because there wasn't nearly as much alcohol back then to make me forget, I'm pretty sure I'm damn well going to remember the people I spent that time with.

Some day it's going to hit you that although you spent those years convinced that you were trapped in a sleepy town where nothing ever happened, in reality there was just too much happening for you get a handle on. It was a time of firsts: first steps, first 'A' paper put on the fridge under that pizza place magnet, first group shower in a locker room full of dudes, and your first kiss with tongue.

College, on the other hand, is a time of lasts: Last Scantron sheet, last Microsoft Word experience where Courier New is a necessity, last stiffing of the Wings delivery guy because there's no way you can find 15 percent at 2 in the morning, and the last time you'll wake up and wonder, "How the hell did I end up in this bed … with this girl?"

Lord, by the time you get your diploma, quite a few of you might even have new last names. But as nerve-wracking, sweaty, and forgettable as those firsts may have seemed, it's that same juvenile awkwardness that prevents these memories from taking their respective places next to your freshmen Greek Mythology notes underneath the emergency exit signs of your mind.

But these experiences have nothing to do with that precious little thing we call fate. Everything does not happen for a reason. There is no reason my friend should have to explain to me why his doctors are pretty damn sure that something other than a fist was used to repeatedly hit him in the face. There is no reason he should have to walk around looking like a lanky Harry Potter for the rest of his life. This kid is too humble, too loyal, and too genuine for me to believe that. Things happen, because … well they happen. It's our job to find the reasons and attempt to convince ourselves that they were, in part, to make us stronger, more caring human beings.

Some things do happen for a reason. There's a reason you guys are next to each other in that picture of the human pyramid, both before and after the fat kid made it collapse. There's a reason you had no doubt in your mind that they would drive the 12 hours from their schools just to spend the weekend in Boston to catch a Red Sox game. There's a reason they'll be the ones standing at the head table of your wedding reception, glasses raised, smiles wide, eyes half glazed over, just when it hits you that damn, we made it this far … together. The reason? God, or Buddha, Celine Dion, or whomever you count on to give you faith when your personal stock has all but run out, put these people on earth just for you.

So look forward to the next time you head back home. Create some new firsts, sing the "Golden Girls" theme song together, or do the same old stuff you've always done. Just have fun when you do it, and know that there's a pretty good reason you wouldn't have it any other way.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

A dangerous contradiction

Sanam Hakim

I am an American woman of Iranian decent. English was not my first language, but I do not have an accent. On my college application, I was told that I was "white," but most of the time, I am considered "non-white." I am a full-time undergraduate student at the University of Massachusetts.

Every article I have read so far concerning ALANA, the SGA, and the appointed seats has served as nothing but a contradiction for me, and, in my opinion, the entire student body.

It seems as though the SGA constitution has been quoted left and right in this dispute between ALANA and the SGA, while the most important parts of the constitution have been overlooked.

In the preamble of the constitution, it clearly states that the underlying purpose of creating a student government in the first place is "to promote the general welfare of all University undergraduate students." A representation of ALANA in this student government is extremely important to utilize all resources in promoting the welfare of ALANA students. However, appointed seats are not the answer. Jackie Robinson was the first black major league baseball player in 1947. He is a legend today and, moreover, a marking point in the advancement of colored Americans, not because he was appointed to the baseball team, but because he earned it.

Every single time an article is printed regarding this fight for appointed seats, the Senate and the campus as a whole is taking one step backwards. It is a form of separation between ALANA and the rest of the SGA, making it seem like the minorities on campus need these appointed seats, when in reality, more is gained without them. Last semester, when the SGA declared the appointed seats unconstitutional, ALANA students ran for positions as student senators and are currently hold 25 percent of the Student Senate.

Before this last election, ALANA senators made up 13 percent of the student senate in appointed seats. Instead of aiming to bring back the appointed 13 percent, the aim should be running for 50 percent of the Senate. Appointed seats are not a form of advancement; they are holding the Senate back from functioning as a unified body of representatives.

An important aspect of maintaining a fully functional student governing body is "to promote the general welfare of all University undergraduate students." But when half the Senate is struggling to promote the general welfare of ALANA students and the other half is struggling to promote the general welfare of the other students, a greater harm has been done.

Beneath the struggle, the Senate is deteriorating. Our student governing body is designed to represent our student body as a whole, but if the SGA continues to advocate this deterioration, the Senate will always be separated into two counterparts: ALANA and those against it.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

Not just a game of chance

Gilad Skolnick

For far too long decisions have been made on campus using obsolete tools. Frankly, I am a tad disappointed with what this says about the University of Massachusetts. Day after day, I see UMass students foolishly using tactics such as the coin toss, odds and evens, and even "enie-menie-minie-moe" to make decisions. Such methods stifle creativity and reward people based on luck rather than sheer intelligence.

When it comes to making a decision about who should do something, true geniuses, such as myself, prefer to use the Rock-Paper-Scissors game, otherwise known as RPS. The game measures one's wit, ingenuity, craft, hand eye coordination, and speed.

In fact, there is even a World Rock Papers Scissors Society, which is dedicated to "the promotion of Rock Paper Scissors as a fun and safe way to resolve disputes." They have an annual international competition, as the Olympics do not yet recognize the sport, as well as provide the rules and their amendments, and different tips and strategies.

Upon the start of freshman year, I was more than disappointed to find out that a well-known and respected school such as UMass does not have its own RPS team. For a long time, I have strived to find an outlet to display my talent; yet sadly, UMass does not provide such opportunities, probably due to budget cuts. Throughout my college career I have become so good at the game that now, by looking into my opponent's eyes, I can see what he or she is going to throw out at me. There are few people who can beat me at this game, and those who do, I must call pure geniuses.

Rock-Paper-Scissors is no laughing matter, but rather a serious and well-loved game that is a part of all of us.

For those of you who are uncultured or Canadian, to play Rock-Paper-Scissors (RPS), players throw one of three possible throws: Rock (closed fist), Paper (hand flat) or Scissors (top two index fingers extended). Rock beats Scissors, Scissors beats Paper and Paper beats Rock. There are no other options, no other throws, and despite what Kramer claimed in Seinfeld, Rock can be beat by paper, a rule I would still like to see overturned one day.

Knowing your opponent when playing RPS can give you a great advantage. Some people tend to loose their concentration easily or perhaps throw out a rock when they get pissed off, which are all things to look out for. People who tend to be very aggressive or angered easily throw out rocks left and right.

In addition, a recent study by the RPS Public Relations Department, called, "The Effect of Recent Media Coverage on RPS Throws," showed that after the airing of a "Simpsons" episode in which Bart plays RPS with his sister Lisa and thinks to himself "good old rock, nothing beats it," the use of Rock has risen by over three percent nationwide. This marked the largest increase in use of Rock since the fall of the Berlin Wall.

Paper is considered a weak, cowardly move by most, as there is nothing aggressive about a limp piece of paper. This is a move that is coincidently favored much by the French as well as certain players who see it as a more subtle attack. Some left wing radical paper fanatics have even dubbed paper as "the victory of modern culture over barbarism."

Scissors is thought of as a more clever or crafty throw, which www.worldrps.com calls a "well-planned outflanking maneuver." From my limited experience, students from Amherst College tend to favor the use of scissors frequently, to such an extent that I find it quite sickening.

Strategies are key when preparing to play against someone, not to mention that with memorized moves, it's harder to predict what you will throw out next. The move entitled "Fistful O'Dollars" consists of a rock followed by two papers, a move that took the 1967 RPS World Championship by surprise and is said to be "arguably one of the greatest surprise offensive moves." A subtle but far more aggressive gambit (three throws, minimum needed for a game of RPS) is called the Avalanche, a personal favorite of mine. It's three rocks in a row and most people don't see it coming. It was reportedly developed in the early 1890's.

Rock-Paper-Scissors is no laughing matter, but rather a serious and well-loved game that is a part of all of us. A respected technique for decision making, people who use RPS are said to do better on tests and have a higher self esteem than those pathetic individuals who resort to playing odds and evens. They might as well use a hot dog eating contest to decide on things. I'm not even going to get into "enie-menie-minie-moe", which is perhaps more fitting for someone who goes to such lesser places as UNH or Canada.

Before embarking on a round of RPS, I advice you all to do hand stretches. No one wants to pull a finger muscle while they shoot out scissors. I've found RPS to be great for shotgun disputes, deciding who picks up the wings, or even when negotiating with some of the more liberal minded professor on campus when it comes to grades. Anyone claiming that this game involves probability should not be going to UMass. As www.worldrps.com states, "Human beings will always use some impulse or inclination to choose a throw, and will therefore settle into unconscious but nonetheless predicable patterns."

My last piece of advice is never, under any circumstances, get too excited and animate your moves, as in doing the actual scissors cutting motion, etc. The RPS Steering Committee made a ruling on this very issue about 15 years ago after in a hotly contested semi-final round, Mustafa Nwenge of Kenya pulled a scissors and had the ligaments in his index finger crushed by the overzealous rock of a Swedish competitor. Thus, ritualizing or animating the moves is now illegal for professional play. Unfortunately, Mustafa was never able to play competitively again, but the world RPS society claims that he is in very hot demand as a motivational speaker.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist..

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

IRAQ PRESENTATION MISREPRESENTED

An article by staff writer Keyana Brown in the Feb. 6 edition of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian misrepresented a presentation on labor conditions in Iraq made by David Bacon and Clarence Thomas last Thursday.

Ms. Brown wrote, "According to Bacon, privatization of businesses is one of the many steps needed in order to improve and reform working conditions, benefits, treatment and wages. Initially, some workers would be laid off, he said, but he suggested that privatization would be beneficial in the long run."

Mr. Bacon said no such things.

The main point made by Bacon and Thomas was this: union organizers whom they met in Iraq want the U.S-led Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) to end its occupation of Iraq now. This is because the economic program the CPA is implementing was designed by Washington elites to enrich corporations — primarily American ones — and their international investors while baring real democratic participation by the Iraqi peopie.

Iraqi trade unionists are demanding a voice in decisions regarding the future of Iraq's economy, particularly on the issue of privatizing or closing state-owned factories, since privatization would result in massive layoffs — up to half the workforce in some industries — and greater control of resources by American corporations. These women and men believe that their efforts to organize unions are being suppressed by the CPA because they constitute an unacceptable challenge to the economic agenda set by the Bush administration. Anyone who disagrees with this assessment should have a compelling alternative reason for why the CPA is resorting to enforcement of Saddam-era laws against unionization while preaching democracy and empowerment for the Iraqi people.

Brent Scowcroft, who served as national security adviser for the first President Bush, may have summed up the Iraq situation best when he commented last April on the prospects of a democratic election in Iraq: "[if] the radicals win…we're surely not going to let them take over."

In the eyes of the current administration, 'radicals' does not merely denote religious fundamentalists, but extends to any Iraqi political movement that dares to defy the exploitative economic program planned for Iraq. For this reason, we must all oppose the current occupation and open our ears to the wishes of the Iraqi people.

Dave Bisson
UMass Student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MAGAZINE CULTURE

EVERYBODY HAS THEIR OWN INTEREST

Some like to browse through them in the store; some like to have them delivered straight to the door; some like to read them before going to sleep; others like to read them while dropping a heap; and of course, everyone likes to read them in the doctor's office.

Magazines play an important role in our society and culture. Our wide range of interests as human beings are put on display when you check out your local magazine rack. There is an A-Z list of interests and an equal number of publications to match.

Of course, there are the generic mainstream media mags like Time and Newsweek. There are those familiar mastheads like Sports Illustrated and Rolling Stone, which both have a particular focus, but at times break free of their boundaries and report on other aspects of our lives. Then there are those magazines with very specific content, geared towards a certain type of person…

Fashion buffs love Vogue; computer nerds love PC Magazine; gossip queens love Us Weekly; automobile lovers can't get enough of Car and Driver and stoners crave their High Times.

Magazines provide people with an inside scope on issues covered by the mainstream media. The Nation is considered one of the most important pieces of journalism for the left wing. Magazines can also bring a community together and building a united sense of pride between people with specific identities. For example, Essence and Ebony are cornerstones of the media for Black America.

Like the world itself, the magazine world is gigantic and diverse. Even The Massachusetts Daily Collegian enters this magazine world. In the fall, The Score tickles the fancy of UMass sports nuts, while entertainment connoisseurs of the Pioneer Valley can enjoy The Scene in the spring.

So what is your favorite magazine? Here are some of the ones that excite the interests of the Collegian's editorial staff.

-Glen Straub

Jen Eastwood, Editor in Chief
"I love Disney Magazine because I love the legacy."

Dan Lamothe, Managing Editor
"Sports Illustrated will never go out of style — they've been at it for more than 50 years. They've done some really compelling feature stories on people you wouldn't expect to read about in their magazine, and that's one of the things that sets them apart from the rest of the field."

Nick Markantonatos, Night Supervisor
"Us Weekly, because of the ultra-splashy layouts (neon colors!), punchy headlines, and super-short articles make this read about as entertaining as the stars they cover."

Glen Straub, Arts & Living Editor
"High Times, so I know where to find the nicest tree to sit under."

Forrin Salmker, News Editor
"The New Yorker is a brilliant publication that shows the best of literary journalism and who can think of a better set of cover pages than this magazine."

Mike Marzilli, Assistant Sports Editor
"Sports Illustrated On Campus because they pay me $500 a semester."

Matt Reid, Ed/Op Editor
"My favorite magazine is definitely Cosmopolitan. Every month, my Cosmo tells me the very best ways to please my woman."

Scott Eldridge, Photo Editor
"Martha Stewart Living is perhaps the most well put together magazine of its ilk. In the 'self-improvement make your home look obsessively put together pretty and pink' category, no publication can touch Stewart's pride in print."

Meghan Healy, Assistant Arts & Living Editor
"Adbusters because it is funny and thought-provoking."

Erika Lovley, Assistant News Editor
"My choice is Maxim. It's well written and informative. What other publication would include an article entitled 'How to Cure a Feminist?' Plus, it provides tips that teach me how to get down — way down."

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE MAGAZINE?

ISBN 0-9658970-0-1
9 780965 897006
US $FREE CAN $4.95

#BXBDHGJK*CARR-RT
U MASS COMMUNITY
AMHERST CAMPUS
AMHERST MA 01003

'Eve' goes to battle with the cheating kind

Advice from Eve:

I still hook up with my high school sweetheart when I go home on the weekends. We're not committed, but I don't date any other men. I'm a virgin; he isn't. How long can a guy last without actual sex? We never discuss other people, so I don't know if I'm the only girl he's been with since we've met. Is it possible to have faith in his abstinence? -L.B.

Nope. When it comes to sex, guys need it as much as women need shoes or the newest fashion. I highly doubt an experienced male in late teens or early 20s could last four full years without sex — especially without a commitment.

I am in a gay relationship with someone I love, but sometimes I want to vent my sexual energy with other men? Is it okay to have fun without emotional attachment and still remain committed to the man I love? Are these normal desires? -S.T.

Desires: yes. Acting on them, however, differs — unless you discuss having an open relationship with your partner. It's harmful to yourself and the man you claim to love. It seems you might be too inexperienced to take on commitment. Why do it if you want to experiment with others? Either grow up and treat your mate respectfully, or talk to him about your interests. Just don't lie.

Original Sin

Eve

I'm usually more like the typical man when it comes to relationships. I could care less if they call. That's why I never get hurt. It was so easy.

Maybe it came from feeling a bit envious that the butterflies were never there. I can't remember just when or why I decided to try feeling like everyone else, really. But, it happened; I took the plunge. I was aware that with great love comes great pain. Fine. And on cue, the lucky man came to me one sunny afternoon, and the fate was sealed.

Not only did he cheat on the floor below our room, but he was also completely two-faced for a whole year. He didn't even have the decency to leave the dorm. (Rule 1: Don't cheat where you sleep.)

It all provoked the question further: How does anyone know who anyone else really is? With him for a year, I thought I knew him. But I didn't. I was so upset that even my appetite for Haagen-Dazs was lost.

I guess it really does take one to know one. I looked back on the year and realized I was actually faithful to this person. I then understood the terrible truth about all men, and some women too - all men cheat, have the need to cheat or the desire to be involved with many others.

Men are anti-monogamists. Deep down, they prefer variety. Everyone knows this, so why do we get so angry at a man's natural-born instincts? I wish I knew.

Either we accept their need to spread their seed, or we wait with our fingers crossed for the one exception. Maybe college students are all too young and busy to settle. The idea of commitment is what we're really in love with — not the actual reality of commitment. My last experience with love, for one, was love of an idea that's time had come … and gone.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_orginalsin@yahoo.com

STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
Backpacks? Hostels?
3 Cities in 4 Days?
This ain't your parents' travel agency... it's yours.
London.....$245
Amsterdam.....$245
Rome.....$245
Brussels.....$245
Miami From $740 • 6 nights
Vegas From $646 • 6 nights
Rate is round-trip from Boston and prices are per person. Subject to change and availability. Package purchase required. Some blackout restrictions apply. Fares are valid for students and youth under 26.
BOOK IT BEFORE THE THRILL IS GONE.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
44 Main Street
(413) 256.1261
ONLINE •• ON THE PHONE •• ON CAMPUS •• ON THE STREET

MURDA' SHE WROTE

Mr. Vegas sings to the crowd at "Reggae Fest and West Indian Bash" Saturday night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
75 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Ol' Dirty Bastard takes his act to Pearl Street

By Evan Goldfried
Collegian Correspondent

To paraphrase comedian Lewis Black, fanatics are people without a sense of humor.

Hip-hop stands as the unquestionably dominant force in the record industry today. It pervades into all facets of music and blurs the lines between movies and music, creating a business that spans the globe.

But with success comes its trappings. So many rappers today are fanatics, clinging onto the image they and the hip-hop industry present. The benefits of a lucrative rap career have, in many cases, overshadowed the music itself. Flashy jewelry, cars, women, throwing the largest party, and representing with the largest posse — these are the doctrines of fanatical rappers, adhering to the preaching of an industry that takes itself as serious as death — literally.

But every now and then, an artist takes it upon himself to work in his respective music career with a comic irreverence that's both genuine and necessary. He is an observer, watching with an inquisitive and intelligent eye hidden behind the shroud of clowns. Rock has had its share, from The Rutles to This is Spinal Tap, and recently Tenacious D and the Darkness.

Hip-hop has the Ol' Dirty Bastard.

Tonight at 8:30 p.m. at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton there is an opportunity to experience the madness of Ol' Dirty Bastard.

There is little that can describe the delivery, the style, or the person that is the Ol' Dirty Bastard. Since 1994, O.D.B. has been the humorous bastard child of the rap industry — a mad genius completely committed to his own manic persona. He was once Russell Jones, but now he sheds names like layers of clothes: Osiris, Dirt Dog, Big Baby Jesus and Dirt McGirt.

We watched O.D.B. in the early Wu-Tang videos, a frenzied presence in the midst of the darkness of Staten Island. We watched him on MTV, as he went to pick up food stamps and groceries. We saw him rush the stage at the Grammy's, taking the microphone and shouting, "Puffy is great, but Wu-Tang is for the children." One of the more popular topics in his rhymes is the fact that he has had gonorrhea twice.

Ol' Dirty Bastard
Tonight
Pearl Street
Northampton
$25

But with the comedy that Ol' Dirty Bastard injected into the rap world came the real tragedies that happen to so many creative forces. He's fathered over 10 children with a variety of different mothers. Police arrested him for breaking and entering in 1995. O.D.B. claimed he was fleeing assassins and later he was shot twice in the back — but survived. Another warrant and subsequent fugitive status came in July 2001, when he was arrested for possession of crack-cocaine and probation violation. He served two years and was recently released, nearly 300 pounds and swearing sobriety.

Perhaps the greatest tragedy in the career of the Ol' Dirty Bastard has been his artistic achievements overshadowed by his personality. He's best known for the obnoxiously catchy "Ghetto Superstar," an undeniable hit in 1998 movie "Bullworth." There was "Got Your Money," another major club anthem, which was the first to feature the "Milkshake" girl Kelis and the uber-producers, the Neptunes. But then there were his classic rhymes on "Enter the Wu-Tang," many of which stole the spotlight. His second solo album "Na Please," is a critical success and still one of the more creative hip-hop albums to date.

COURTESY GERALD H. UNO

Senior forward Cleo Foster hopes to help the Minutewomen snap a 19-game road losing streak.

Minutewomen to face Rams

WOMEN'S HOOP from page 10

percent from the field, including a dismal 7-for-43 from three-point range.

"It's baffling to me because back in my playing days I was always a scorer, scoring has always come easy," Dacko said. "So my team has played me because they've struggled putting the ball in the hoop, that's why we're practicing shooting."

On Tuesday, the Minutewomen spent the first half of practice working on shooting with no opposition. The practice was designed to get the team rest, while working on one of its deficiencies.

Dacko doesn't believe her team's shooting woes can fully be attributed to the opposition's defense.

"Its amazing to me how open they are. It gets to the point where, its no joke, but I believe they need to get their eyes checked," Dacko said. "Some of them, I really think need to get their eyes checked."

Bailey, who missed a week of practice before the Minutewomen's game against Duquesne, has been practicing with the team and looks to start on Friday evening. Bailey had a career game against the Lady Dukes, scoring 16 points with 18 boards.

"I think what happened was we were waiting for her to get a Cortizone shot," "Then after a week of not playing she practiced very light on Saturday and played well against Duquesne."

As far as team moral is concerned, Dacko knows how hard it is to lose, but respects the positive attitude her team is taking down the stretch. With nearly half of the team on the injured list and only a handful of victories, keeping positive is sometimes an uphill battle.

UM to compete in Fiesta Bowl

SOFTBALL from page 10

World Series opener.

Rivera, a two-time All-American catcher, has been one of the best at her position since her 2002 freshman campaign. The junior catcher/designated hitter has one of the strongest arms behind the plate, with Pac-10 leading seven pickoffs. Her 25 homeruns lead the nation and set a UW single season record. A finalist for the Honda Broderick Award last season, given to the nation's top player, she is one of the favorites for National POY this season.

The young Minutewoman team also has a player in the national spotlight. Aisha Franke was selected to the initial Top 40 Watch List for the USA Softball Player of the Year. Franke's .403 batting average led the A-10 conference and was 40th best nationally. Now a senior, Franke is looking what the team needs to succeed.

"We have a young team this year, so confidence is the biggest thing we need," Senior Aisha Franke said. "The talent and skills are there. It's just a matter of the mindset of us going out there and we're going to go far."

"We are going to take care what we need to care of. We just need to know we can do it and then we'll be unstoppable after that."

Sortino had the challenge of replacing five seniors — including four All Atlantic 10 selections — in the off-season, including NFCA All-American Emily Robustelli and two-time A-10 Pitcher of the Year Kaila Holtz. Sortino has reloaded with top-level talent and considers this a very deep and talented team.

"We have some young kids looking to get the chance to play, so I got some tough decisions to make who to put out there at first," Sortino said. "I'm looking for my kids to seize the moment. They have been waiting for this for a long time, some waiting a couple years to play."

"I'm sure we're going to get out there. This team has great offensive and defensive depth, more than any other team I have ever coached."

St. Joe's featured on S.I. cover

A-10 from page 10

"The little man from the little school that's beating everyone."

The cover story, written by Philadelphia-based S.I. senior writer Michael Bamberger, highlights Nelson, a leading candidate for 2004 National Player of the Year, as well as the rich history of the SJU men's basketball program.

"A Sports Illustrated cover brings a spotlight specifically on our basketball program. But more importantly to me, it's a spotlight on a great university," said Head Coach Phil Martelli. "All human emotions overtake you — it's humbling, it's exciting, it's a sign of respect. Whatever word you can use to describe it, encompasses the feeling of everyone involved in our program seeing Jameer Nelson on that cover."

While the issue will mark the most publicity S.I. has ever given the Hawks, it is not the first time the school's men's basketball program has been recognized by the magazine. The 1965-66 squad was picked No. 1 in the magazine's preseason poll, but never graced the cover.

PGA Tour to kick off at Buick

TIGER from page 10 years.

"It catches your attention," Singh said.

Everything else, however, is business as usual. Players stop him wherever he goes to congratulate him on his success. Singh even sees them studying the way he practices, realizing there might be something to the long hours he puts in.

The streak is merely a byproduct of his work, as is his goal of replacing Woods at No. 1.

"I'm not thinking about the streak," he said. "I wasn't even aware of it until guys started talking about it. I'm sure it's going to end one day. I'm just going to try to play the best I can."

Mickelson played the first three rounds of the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am with Singh, and said it was easy to see the biggest difference in his game.

"Putting," Mickelson said. "He's always driven it straight. He's always hit pretty good irons, pretty good short game. But he's making everything."

Singh took mild exception to that assessment.

"I putted good with Phil. Maybe that's why he thought I was putting well," Singh said with a laugh. "I hit the ball pretty good, too."

It's difficult to assess how Woods is playing because he hasn't been around.

Woods tied for fourth in the season-opening Mercedes Championships, then took the next four weeks off.

Then again, Woods tends to play his best after long layoffs.

He won two of his first three starts last year, including a dominant victory at the Match Play Championship. While Singh is always itching to play, Woods is careful not to overload tournament golf into his schedule.

"I could not do what Vijay does – hit that many golf balls after every tournament round, play as many tournaments as he does," Woods said. "He's able to maintain that high for a long period of time. If I did that, I would break down, because I would start losing my focus."

Woods doesn't have to adjust his eyes to see who's coming at him. Singh is at the top of the list, although Mickelson and Els — the usual cast of characters — are all right there.

How he handles it will unfold over the rest of the California swing.

"With regards to Tiger, he'll come out and keep doing what he's doing," Darren Clarke said. "I don't think it will affect him in the slightest."

Everybody needs a little PRIVACY now and then!
Get away from the dorm life without leaving campus
Now you can reserve a room for a night, or a weekend at 35-60% off the normal rate when you present a 5-College student ID at check in. Call around, we have the best rates in town!
549.6000
Call today to

Smooth Skin for Spring Break!
AMHERST LASER & SKIN CARE CENTER
Laser Hair Reduction- with GentleLase™
Utilizing advanced laser technology.
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Laser treatments available for acne, brown spots, and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Students who sign-up before March 1st will receive 50% off package price.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
AMHERSTLASER@VERIZON.NET

MIT LINCOLN LABORATORY @ UMASS AMHERST
If you would like to learn more about MIT Lincoln Laboratory, please attend our informational session. To be considered for an on-campus interview, you must apply to:
1. Your Career Center's online recruiting system AND
2. To MIT Lincoln Laboratory's website at http://www.ll.mit.edu/careers/careers.html (Click on College Recruitment)
INFORMATIONAL SESSION:
Thursday, February 26, 2004
5:30 P.M., Campus Center, Room 911-15
REFRESHMENTS
CAMPUS INTERVIEWS:
Friday, February 27, 2004
If you are pursuing a degree in:
• Electrical Engineering
• Physics
• Mathematics
• Computer Science
• Mechanical Engineering
• Aeronautics/ Astronautics
• Molecular Biology
• Biochemistry
• Materials Science
or a comparable field, our technical staff members welcome the opportunity to consider you for an on-campus interview.
Put some power behind your ideas. At MIT Lincoln Laboratory, your research and ideas will be transferred directly into the development of leading-edge, real-world applications, including air defense, space surveillance, communications and air traffic control systems.
Lincoln Laboratory
Human Resources
Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Lexington, Massachusetts
781-981-5500
An Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F/D/V.
U.S. Citizenship is Required.
LINCOLN LABORATORY
MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY
www.ll.mit.edu

FRIDAY • FEBRUARY 13TH • 7PM
UMASS HOCKEY VS.
WHITE OUT NIGHT
FIRST 2,000 FANS RECEIVE FREE T-SHIRTS!!!
FLIPFLOPS.com SMG MULLINS CENTER DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
THE HARP Amherst, MA O'CONNELL'S PLUS NORTHAMPTON TOYOTA
NORTHAMPTON KIA DUSEAU TRUCKING
Junior Forward Greig Mauldin
UMASS ATHLETICS
A TRIBUTE TO AL SKINNER
Join Rick Pitino and Julius Erving as the University of Massachusetts honors basketball great Al Skinner by retiring his number on February 18, 2004.
FEBRUARY 18, 2004
UMASS VS. RHODE ISLAND
7:00 P.M.
MULLINS CENTER
Coca-Cola
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
The UMass Court Club
FOR TICKETS CALL
1-866-UMASS-TIX

Clarett cleared to enter draft

By Larry Neumeister
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Maurice Clarett is ready to enter the NFL draft, clearing another legal obstacle Wednesday when a federal judge rejected the league's request to suspend her ruling.

U.S. District Judge Shira Scheindlin concluded the Ohio State running back could face "very detrimental" harm if excluded from the draft. She said the NFL would not be irreparably harmed if Clarett and other underclassmen are eligible.

"Maurice Clarett's going to be in the draft," the player's lawyer, Alan Milstein, said after the decision.

NFL lawyer Gregg Levy said the league will ask the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to stay Scheindlin's ruling while it appeals.

Scheindlin ruled last week that an NFL rule barring eligibility to Clarett and other young players from April's draft violates antitrust law.

"Contrary to the NFL's argument, most of the rules governing this case were established decades ago," she said.

"Indeed, the legal framework for that decision was laid in a long line of Supreme Court precedent," she added.

Scheindlin said "it would be perverse indeed" to grant a delay of her ruling.

"If a stay is granted, Clarett will miss the 2004 draft," she said. "He will not be eligible to play in the NFL until the 2005 draft, when he would have been eligible under the current rule. If the stay is granted, Clarett will have effectively lost his lawsuit."

The judge said the NFL's concern that younger players may over-train or resort to steroid use to better qualify for the draft "makes no sense." Players must announce they are entering the draft by March 1.

She predicted few younger players would enter the draft.

"At worst, the NFL will be forced to tolerate the handful of younger players who are selected in the 2004 draft," she said. "What would amount to a one-year suspension of the league's eligibility rule scarcely imposes any great hardship on the NFL or its teams."

Levy, the NFL lawyer, was not surprised by this latest ruling and insisted the league is confident about its coming appeal.

"Mr. Milstein is ahead at the end of the first period," he said. "There, the game starts over."

Milstein said he was not concerned because the 20-year-old running back had won at the lower court level on every issue.

"It was frivolous here," he said, referring to the NFL's claims. "It will be even more frivolous there." Clarett ran for 1,237 yards and led Ohio State to a national championship as a freshman in the 2002 season. But the school suspended him before last season for accepting money from a family friend and for lying about it to NCAA and university investigators.

Colorado set to investigate Barnett following allegations

By John Mossman
Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. – When Gary Barnett was hired to coach Colorado's football team five years ago, he was embraced as a disciplinarian who would end an era of loose recruiting practices and return the team to national prominence.

Now the coach is at the center of the school's biggest scandal in decades, perhaps ever.

Amid accusations that a boozy round of recruiting visits by high school prospects in 2001 ended in gang rape, Barnett faces a university investigation that was all but ordered by Colorado's governor.

The latest blow came this week when a striptease operator said he regularly sends lapdancers to perform for Colorado athletes. The most recent performances were booked two weeks ago – well after the rape allegations became public and just days after Barnett promised to step down if it was shown his staff had anything to do with what he called "tawdry" behavior by student-athletes.

To top it off, a former athletics official said Barnett seemed reluctant to crack down on entertaining recruits because it could give an advantage to other schools.

Barnett denies it all, telling The Associated Press he will be cleared by the investigation and disputes accusations in a federal lawsuit that the Boulder campus is a hostile place for women.

"I expect them to find that we have an exemplary program in every aspect," Barnett said.

The coach blames the players and students for the December 2001 party that led to the rape allegations and says he can't watch players and recruits 24 hours a day.

"No coach or any member of my staff had anything to do with that night," he said. "At no time did any coach take part in arranging, creating or encouraging a party of any sort. You just don't do that."

At 57, Barnett has led Colorado to a Big 12 Conference title and a BCS bowl game in his five seasons as head coach (his contract runs through 2006). When he took over from Rick Neuheisel in January 1999, his former players at Northwestern said Colorado was getting a new sheriff.

During the last two seasons, nine players were suspended for various violations of team rules, including curfew and behavior standards.

"Coach Barnett is such a stickler," receiver D.J. Hackett said. "He's really strict on rules and stuff."

Still, Barnett had his share of controversy even before becoming head coach at Colorado.

He led Northwestern to a pair of Big Ten titles and a Rose Bowl berth after the 1995 season. He was also there during a betting scandal in which four football players were indicted and accused of lying about gambling and point-shaving activities.

Their coach was not implicated. Barnett later called the scandal a "tremendous betrayal" by the players.

Barnett was also with the Colorado program as an assistant coach during some if its darkest days. Between 1986 and 1988, players were accused of crimes ranging from drunken driving to serial rape, and the school was featured in a Sports Illustrated cover story that still brings bitter memories.

Barnett himself wasn't criticized during that mess, which tarnished the tenure of head coach Bill McCartney but didn't stop the Buffs from winning a national championship in 1990.

Since then, the program has been slapped with two years of NCAA probation for violations that occurred mostly under Neuheisel. The problems included illegal contact with recruits and excessive reimbursement for recruits' travel and entertainment expenses. Barnett was cited for two minor violations.

Much more serious are the accusations leveled in federal lawsuits filed by three women who say they were raped during or after the 2001 off-campus recruiting party. The suit accuses the program and university of fostering an environment in which women are routinely sexually harassed, which would violate federal bans on gender discrimination in colleges.

No players or recruits were charged. But Boulder County's top prosecutor accused the university in a deposition of using sex as a recruiting tool. The school is appointing a panel to investigate, and the criminal investigation has been reopened.

The party took place during what Barnett calls a brief period of free time that recruits spend with their student sponsors.

"Their day is packed," he said. "As coaches, we're involved with them all but 3 1/2 hours every day. And for those 3 1/2 hours they're with one of our players, one-on-one. You try to eliminate as much risk as you can."

Still, for coaches to be with recruits 24 hours a day "would not be a college experience," Barnett said.

Barnett insists he responded properly when the rape accusations first surfaced. He imposed a 1 a.m. curfew on recruits and required their player hosts to sign a pledge to keep recruits from being exposed to inappropriate behavior, including underage drinking.

"It's obviously been working pretty well," Barnett said. "And the other way worked pretty well until one night."

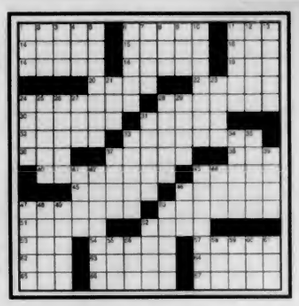
Colorado's former senior associate athletic director, Robert Chichester, suggests otherwise. In his deposition in one of the lawsuits, he said Barnett seemed unwilling to set a tone of intolerance toward rowdiness during recruiting visits.

Chichester, now athletic director at the University of California, Irvine, characterized Barnett's position as: "If (players) weren't taking (recruits) out and partying, that it would be a recruiting disadvantage. ... If alcohol happened to be there, Coach Barnett never really voiced an opinion to me that that was objectionable."

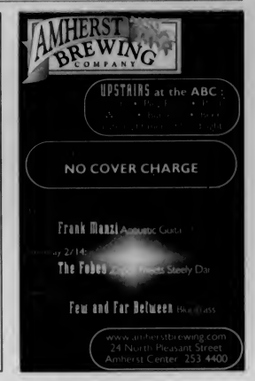
For his part, Barnett insists he and his staff are in "complete control" of the program.

Asked about his promise he would resign if the probe turns up evidence of involvement, Barnett said, "There won't be. There won't be."

Quote for the Day



"You can't borrow tomorrow."



-Faith No More

Today's Crossword Puzzle

ACROSS
1 Inaugurates
8 Painter
11 Theater's Ms. Hagen
14 Wide destruction
15 "Beat" writer
16 Leaf out
17 Cut a wide —
18 Daily com
19 Antique
20 Pitcher in a basin
22 Hitch-hayed
24 Feeling inadequate
26 Enumerated
30 Plundered the bridge
31 Beauty parlor
32 Sea eagles
33 Catcher
36 Like some cheese
37 Greatest concern
38 Licorice plate
40 Tufts of grass
43 State-run game
45 Escapades
46 Thin layer
47 Pals on
50 Conjunction
51 Fish basket
52 Staged as a comeback
54 Buffoons
57 Mind's eye view
62 CPR pro
63 Middle's
64 Defiant reply
65 Oriental sauce
66 — bumps
67 Garbo of films

DOWN
1 Signs of distress
2 Bake a food
3 Spacewalk, to NASA
4 Replay's last word
5 Intrigues
6 Make collectible
7 Sightseeing trip
8 Holy terror
9 Admission
10 Wall paintings
11 Bub (boss)
12 Dental filler
13 Toted up
21 Join together
23 Hive
24 Greek war god
25 Bernhardt of the stage
26 Swarm for one
27 Summer cooler
28 Oven shelves
29 Ocean surges
31 Grocery bags
33 Male deer
34 Hurry fish eaters
35 Cracker spreads
37 Study hard
39 Winter — Vidal
41 Fr. title
42 Using the post
43 Accident-prone sailors?
44 Sean Lennon's mom
48 Kind of nectarine
49 Aesthetic
54 Appealing glory
55 Timid
56 Delta — of prop
57 Hounds for payment
58 Bobsey's companion
59 Opposite of spread
60 Mid-da
61 Fish eye
63 Fetch
64 Historical period

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Shepherds Pie
- Captain's Catch Sandwich
- Lentil Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Flank Steak
- General Tso's Chicken
- Penne with Spinach and Tomato (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 35
- Low: 22

FRIDAY
- High: 39
- Low: 24

SATURDAY
- High: 36
- Low: 4

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Erika Lodiev
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Meghan Healy, Russell Silva

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Pretend that you're a wolf and howl at the moon. oooooowwwwwoooooooooo.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The reaction of others is nothing. Trust yourself!

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Type your days away on Instant Messenger.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Surprise! Your Valentines Day date looks like cutie-patootie.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Listen to Black Betty before a big game. It gets you pumped up.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Shocking as it is, sometimes you do succeed.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The printer hates you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Get crazy with your bad self.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Check out a good book at DuBois.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You have slacked off too much lately.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Take a personal day and relax; you've been working too hard.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't feel bad; you didn't do anything wrong.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com 253-7879

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspensquare.com

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Cierra, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Employment

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspro-motions.com

"Barrending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

$250 to $500 a week Will train to work at home Helping the U.S. Government file HUD/FHA mortgage refunds No experience necessary Call Toll Free 1-866-537-2907

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercam-pemployment.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

For Rent

Spring Break Rental Daytona Beach, Resort Studio 1Wk March 14th-21st $1500.00 1-866-284-3972 Ref#8430

Roommates Wanted

Great House! Minutes from Campus Need responsible roommates Singles/groups welcome $325/month + 4 rooms open 12 months Starts June 1 Call or IM Lisa a.s.a.p.: (860) 227-4502, LMP3383

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummer-tours.com

Spring Break 2004 It's here...book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sun-splashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida! Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887.4.CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

The Collegian Marketplace: Call 545-3500 to place your own classified ad!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fiesta for Minutewomen

UMass will travel to Phoenix to compete in three-day event

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The No. 30 Massachusetts softball team opens the 2004 season in Phoenix, Arizona, this weekend during the three-day Fiesta Bowl Classic. Now in her 25th year as head coach, Elaine Sortino has made winning a tradition and knows the Fiesta Bowl Classic is a very challenging start to any season.

Last season, Sortino saw her team go 2-3 in the competitive tournament. UMass pulled off an eight-inning upset over No. 13 Arizona State, but also lost an extra inning 4-2 heartbreaker to No. 4 Nebraska in last season's visit to Phoenix.

"This is everything to us," Sortino said. "It doesn't matter if it's the first game or the last game, we've always started out with a very tough schedule. These are teams we know we have to beat if we are looking at postseason play. This is it."

The weekend schedule has UMass facing three teams ranked in the ESPN/USA Softball Preseason Top 25, including No. 21 Fresno State, No. 16 Cal State Fullerton and No. 4 Washington. The Minute-women are also slated to face Ohio State, who received one less vote than UMass, for the first time ever.

Following their game against OSU, the Minutewomen will have to prepare for FSU, led by All-Americans Jaime Southern and Christina Clark.

The junior hurler was one of three finalists for the National Player of the Year award last season. As a freshman, Southern led the nation with 0.44 earn run average — the second freshman in history to lead the nation in ERA — and posted a 33-10 record, 22 shutouts and 400 strikeouts.

The next game has the Maroon and White against Cal State Northridge in Saturday afternoon, followed by a 7:30 match-up under the lights against Fullerton. The Minutewomen lost to the then-No. 10 Titans 3-1, in last season's tournament.

Sunday has the Minutewomen looking at their toughest opponent this season in the talented Huskies, led by All-Americans pitchers Tia Bollinger and Kirsten Rivera.

Last season, Bollinger posted a 29-3 record, including 10 shutouts, 209 strikeouts and a 1.23 earn run average. Thirteen of her victories came against teams ranked in the Top 25, and her five saves pushed her career total to 12, a school record and second in the Pac-10. She also earned a 3-1 victory against Oklahoma in the College

See SOFTBALL page 7

Lowly Fordham hits rock bottom

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

As if the current state of Fordham men's basketball wasn't bad enough already, the Rams may now have hit an all-time low.

On Tuesday, the university suspended Director of Men's Basketball Operations Alex Groothuis for two games after one of the team's student managers was accused of illegally using a walkie-talkie near the Xavier bench during Fordham's 74-52 loss to the Musketeers last Saturday.

Joe DiBari, Fordham's director of sports media relations, released a statement announcing Groothuis' suspension, citing "an act of unsportsmanlike conduct."

Notebook

The student in question was not named. Whether Groothuis played a role in the incident was neither confirmed nor explained and DiBari said the school had no further comment on the issue.

Groothuis was unavailable for comment.

The incident in question reportedly involved the student manager in question sitting near members of the media, close enough to the Xavier bench in order to relay plays that XU coach Thad Matta drew up on his dry-erase board to the Fordham bench by walkie-talkie.

According to the Cincinnati Enquirer, a Xavier student manager informed the manager in question that such communication was against NCAA rules, and the Fordham manager moved back to his own bench before halftime.

First-year Ram coach Dereck Whittenburg vehemently denied the charges.

"There's no walkie-talkies," he told the Enquirer. "I don't know what you are talking about. You got any evidence of that? I have no idea what you are talking about."

Xavier, which reportedly sent a tape of the game to the Atlantic 10 offices for investigation, refused to comment, saying the matter had been turned over to conference officials.

Atlantic 10 spokesman Ray Cello said the conference is satisfied with Fordham's actions and is not pursuing further disciplinary measures.

Jinx on the horizon?

For the first time in the history of the University, and for the first time in the 50-year history of the publication, undefeated No. 3 St. Joseph's is featured on the cover of Sports Illustrated.

The Feb. 16 issue features All-American point guard Jameer Nelson standing alone on its cover, holding a basketball above a caption that reads

See A-10 page 7

UM set to battle Rams

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

As the Massachusetts women's basketball team approaches its final two weeks of the season, it will be looking to salvage some pride in a year that is all but lost.

The Minutewomen will travel to the Bronx, N.Y. tomorrow night to take on conference rival Fordham. UMass is currently on a six-game losing streak, including a 61-45 loss at the hands of the Lady Rams.

Fordham has lost its last two games and look to end the skid against the last team they defeated.

Pacing the Lady Ram's offense will be the scoring tandem of Monica Mack and Beth Ann Dickinson. Both guards are scoring just about 13 points per game and are each dishing out three assists.

Mack dismantled UMass in its last meeting with Fordham, dropping 18 points with seven assists. She also went 4-of-9 behind the arc.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko has been switching defenses between zone and man and will be looking to put some pressure on the perimeter. Last time the teams met, the Lady Rams went 7-of-19 from downtown.

"We've got to really watch the wings on our 2-3 zone," Dacko said. "We've got to bump kids out and last time we didn't do it."

In their last game against the Rams, the Minutewomen had a defensive breakdown in the second half and were outscored 36 to 22.

Cleo Foster and Monique Govan were both sidelined during the game, leaving a weakness at the point. Foster has been an intricate part of UMass's defense for most of the season, and Dacko is pleased to have her back for the second meeting.

"In the second half of Fordham we didn't have Cleo and I think the key to the defense is having Cleo back," Dacko said. "She does is really the stabilizer for this team. Having her in the lineup for us against Fordham is going to be a huge difference."

Part of the Minutewomen's troubles has come from poor shooting from the field. In its last three contests, UMass hasn't shot above 40

See WOMEN'S HOOP page 7

Guard Monique Govan and the Maroon and White will travel to the Bronx, N.Y. Friday night to face Atlantic 10 rival Fordham.

Men's indoor track heads to Boston U.

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's indoor track squad will be up against some of the stiffest competition in the north this weekend as they travel to Boston University for the Fast Track Invitational on Saturday.

"It's wide open for any schools around the country who want to come, and they all recognize that B.U. is a great facility," said Coach Ken O'Brien.

"So for the most part, you end up with all the best schools in the northeast, and then a pretty good amount of schools from farther away, who would like to come in and record some times that could possibly qualify them for NCAAs."

The Minutemen will once again count on sprinter Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng to have a strong day on the track. The senior is coming off a career day last weekend at the University of Rhode Island, where he set a new school record in the 55-meter dash with a first-place time of 6.38 second, and took home a fourth in the 200m.

Frimpong-Boateng's efforts won him Atlantic 10 honors as male track and field performer of the week. He has placed first in every 55m event this season, and will look to continue that streak in Boston.

Junior John O'Neil is coming off a solid performance in the 500m, taking home third at URI with 1:06.63.

Long distance will be a key in this meet. Junior Jon Korhonen (3000m) and junior Dave McMenamy (800m) are both coming off fourth place finishes this weekend, while Ryan Corbett (mile), a 12th-place finisher Saturday, will need a faster time if he is to put up some competition.

Another key for the Minutemen will be in the talent-deep pool of jumpers. In the last outing, Glen Opie and James Godinho tied for fifth in the high jump, both parties clearing 1.86 meters. The Minutemen also scored two point-winners in the long jump, Godinho (6.58m) and James McCormack took home fifth and sixth, respectively.

There will be pressure on junior jumper Henry Smith to have another strong performance in the triple jump, after his second-place performance in Rhode Island last Saturday in which he leaped 13.60m.

As O'Brien stated earlier, the road from Kingston would not get any easier. Living proof will be the competitors at BU this weekend, ranging from defending A-10 champ Rhode Island to national powerhouses such as Connecticut.

"You're looking at three to four times as many schools as we'd have seen at any one meet this year," O'Brien said. "What it makes for is, regardless of what event you are picked to participate in, there is going to be a lot of good competition."

The URI Rams feature a double threat in the form of sophomore sprinter Eric Groce and senior captain Colin Aina. Having earned A-10 and ECAC honors after last weekend's performance, taking first in the 200m (21.95) and 55m (6.47), Groce will look to repeat his performance with another strong day. Aina holds school records in both the 55m hurdles (7.30) and the 60m hurdles (7.90).

The UConn Huskies boast a two-time All-American in senior Will Thomas. A multi-event athlete, Thomas is a two-time Big East champion in the pentathlon and three-time Big East champ in the decathlon. He is coming off a strong performance in Princeton, N.J., where he won the high jump.

PGA Tour to begin at Torrey

Woods, Singh are early favorites at Buick Invitational

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO – Tiger Woods couldn't help but stop and soak up the view on the 13th tee at Torrey Pines, a blue panorama of clear skies and the Pacific Ocean as far as he could see.

"It wasn't like this last year," Woods said, recalling rain and a soupy fog that greeted his return to the PGA Tour at the Buick Invitational.

That isn't the only difference.

A year ago, Woods wasn't sure how his left knee was going to respond to surgery that kept him away from competitive golf for two months. Ernie Els had won three tournaments, Davis Love III was coming off a victory at Pebble Beach and Mike Weir was already showing signs of being a Masters champion.

Now, his chief challenge is as clear as the skies over Torrey Pines — Vijay Singh, owner of the longest top-10 streak in 27 years, a man in full command of his golf game.

Woods sees him as only the latest rival.

David Duval in 1999. Phil Mickelson the next two years. Ernie Els in 2002.

"He's definitely up there," Woods said of Singh, whose victory last week at Pebble Beach was his third in nine tour events, and 12th consecutive finish in the top 10. "Everyone has their own little run where we all play well. I think it's a fun time in golf right now because there are a lot of different challengers out there."

The fun really gets started Thursday at the Buick Invitational on two courses at Torrey Pines (South and North), a tournament that tends to favor the big hitters.

Woods is the defending champion – yes, the knee held up just fine as he won by four shots.

Mickelson, coming off his worst season, opened the year with a victory in the Bob Hope Classic, a tie for seventh in Phoenix and third place last week at Pebble Beach. He is a three-time winner at Torrey Pines, and will be among the favorites this week.

Still, much of the focus is on Singh.

"I already feel like I'm going to play well," Singh said. "I guess that's the momentum carrying me through."

The Fijian actually has bad memories of this place. It was last year when he tucked a tiny sponge ball under his left armpit as part of a drill during a five-hour session on the practice range.

He felt pain, but figured it would go away. When he finished his marathon session, it hurt even worse. He withdrew from the tournament, discovered he had a cracked rib and missed the next five weeks.

He returns to Torrey Pines only two top 10s away from the record Jack Nicklaus strung together in 1977, and closer to Woods in the world ranking than anyone has been in nearly five

See TIGER page 7

DENIS POROY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tiger Woods is among the early favorites at the PGA Tour's kickoff event, the Buick Invitational, which begins today at Torrey Pines.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 82

Mullins Center gets Naked, Barenaked
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

UMass takes on No. 1 Boston College in 'White Out' game
SPORTS, PAGE 8

PVTA faces cuts; community dismayed

By Kristin Erekson
Collegian Correspondent

AMHERST — Hampshire county citizens vowed to work with the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority in order to help offset the proposed cuts in bus routes due to a $1.5 million deficit during a community meeting last night.

Concerned citizens, the Amherst Council on Aging and the Massachusetts Senior Action Council, Inc. filled up the seats in the Large Community room at Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, yesterday to hear the anticipated cuts in PVTA service.

PVTA administrator Gary Shepard brought the bad news to the crowd, stating that if Gov. Mitt Romney doesn't allot "dedicated transit funding from the statewide transit sales tax," cuts such as $28,000 fewer trips and no Sunday service could be implemented on July 1.

"Shoot the messenger all you want," said Shepard in his speech at the hearing. "Just don't shoot the message."

PVTA riders were particularly upset to hear that some routes, such as South Deerfield, West St. and Pine St could possibly be eliminated or modified.

"This problem won't be fixed by the PVTA," said Issac BenEzra, MSAC President, in a response to Shepard's discourse. "The only place it will be fixed is Beacon Hill. We are not going to let seniors, the disabled and the frail be held hostages."

Though the crowd did agree with Shepard that the only way to solve problems is by working together as a team, many thought it would be best to take the issue to the next level. The MSAC has started a petition to send to the governor that declares a "moratorium," or halt, on any cuts to the PVTA service. The MSAC has also pointed out in the petition that the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority "receives an inequitable amount of sales tax revenue."

"For five years in a row we have had the same level of funding from the state," said Shepard. "Over the first four years $3.5 million in service was cut and we had to raise fares for the first time. The passenger trips are down to 10 million and will fall to nine million with these cuts."

Shepard listened to the stories of PVTA riders and assured them that the PVTA is "not part of the problem but part of the solution." Shepard also said he is trying to maintain "fairness and equity" for the diverse amount of people that inhabit the Pioneer Valley area.

Shepard sent a letter on Dec. 10, 2003 to Gov. Mitt Romney asking for dedicated funding of transit, but has yet to hear a reply.

Citizens said that they felt they must act fast in order to get the attention of the governor, or better yet, the legislators.

"Let's stop traffic for two hours on Route 9 so people can realize how it feels to not get where they want to go," said BenEzra in a passionate tirade as his supporters cheered him on. "Let's hold a Boston Tea Party on the Northampton Bridge so that Boston can come to us."

Many Hampshire County citizens were motivated to tell their stories of how the PVTA is their lifeline. The disabled and elderly voiced their opinions on how they not only rely on the bus service to get to doctors appointments but they use public transportation to go shopping and see friends.

A Sunderland couple, Susannah Sheffer and Aaron Falbel, said that they would also be greatly impacted if there were modifications or eliminations of bus routes. Sheffer and Falbel are residents of River Road and rely on the bus to get their destinations.

"I think that any cut to any transportation is detrimental," Falbel said. "Fewer people ride and then the service dismantles. The public transportation here was one of the great strengths to why my wife and I moved here. I've lived my whole life without a car, I hope to continue that."

Bill Delzell, a resident of Orange St. in Springfield, believes that public transportation is a necessity because it helps the environment and could possibly help to alleviate the war.

"There is a war on oil," said Delzell. "So I am challenging people to sacrifice using a car to stop the war on oil."

Shepard hopes that Romney gets the PVTA's message soon. The MSAC is also holding a meeting at 1:30 p.m. on Feb. 25 in the Bangs Community Center to decide the course of action on how to further address the situation.

Sandra Sheehan outlines some of the proposed changes to the PVTA bus system. Due to fiscal constraints, the PVTA administrators are looking at altering and eliminating some of its fixed route service.

Open house event entertains students

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

The Student Union bustled with activity for the Student Activities Center's Student Union Open House yesterday.

"It was a really upbeat day for us," said Paula Hodecker, the director of the Student Union Craft Center.

The day was filled with various performances from groups including the Kendo Club, the Juggling Club, and Corey Auger, a guitarist. The Theater Guild, WMUA, People's Market and the Student Activities Center all donated prizes for everyone who participated in the karaoke activity. In addition, the Pride Alliance held a mock wedding for same-sex couples.

Upon entering the lobby of the Student Union, students were met by members of MassPIRG and members of the Student Center for Education Research. Representatives from the Student Center for Education Research spent the event registering students to vote.

"We're trying to get up the number of registered voters," said Brett LaPointe, a sophomore member of the group.

Vox: Students for Choice had a table that gave out pamphlets and information for safe sex as well as contraceptives.

"We're trying to recruit younger students," said Julia Beckert, a member of Vox.

Participants from other registered student organizations used the event as an opportunity to showcase their talents.

"It's another opportunity for exposure," said Jessica Yerkel, juggling Club president. Yerkel said that the juggling Club has about 35 active members and has been in existence for 16 years.

"We're all about having fun," said Brett Constantine, a member of the Juggling Club as he gave a show out in the lobby.

The event was catered by People's Market, Sweets and More, Sylvan Snack Bar and Earth Foods.

Hodecker was very optimistic at the turnout, and she said that she hopes that open house will be an annual event.

"We would love to do this again next year," she said.

Lombardi: Student enrollment to grow

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

Despite some skepticism from Senate members, Chancellor John V. Lombardi announced big plans to increase the school's revenue by adding more students, yesterday at the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate meeting.

The Faculty Senate meeting began with opening statements from the chancellor about growth and expansion, his statement set the tone for the meeting.

"Our strategic plan is real and straight-forward," Lombardi said. "We envision to use state money at the same level, with increases in fees to maintain inflation levels."

Lombardi also spoke about various classrooms, buildings and dormitories that are in great need of repair and updating.

"We are in an ultimate state of repair," Lombardi said.

He mentioned that there are several buildings that were built in the 1970s that have never been updated and have "reached their age limit." He said the status of the buildings is a trigger to look at the quality of buildings campus wide. The proposed cost for this "major construction" is between the $40 to 50 million range, he said that this figure would cover only half of the preferred maintenance.

"We expect to expand our student population," Lombardi said. "We are expecting to add 300 students every year for the next five years and collect revenue."

He said that this campus was built to capacitate 27,000 to 28,000 students and hopes to meet that goal during the next five years.

Another issue Lombardi addressed was the importance of making UMass desirable and competitive.

"Students have expressed concern to me about campus housing and that it is not entirely optimal," he said following a chuckle from the crowd. "We must work to build better dorms so that our university is up to the national norm of high quality."

Lombardi hopes to add 1,500 new student rooms and have a plan for a new building by the end of this academic year.

Lombardi said he is striving to raise private money with a major fundraising campaign.

See CHANGES on page 2

Chancellor John V. Lombardi addressed the Faculty Senate on the campus' future plans yesterday.

EMILIE O'CONNOR/COLLEGIAN

Dan Pomeroy, Chair of the RSO Advocacy Committee, and Raul Brens, SGA Senator, kiss after a mock same-sex wedding held by the Pride Alliance in the Studet Union, yesterday.

Same-sex couples need legal marriage for protection, says UMass study

By Amanda Koeck
Collegian Correspondent

A study released Monday, conducted by a team of University of Massachusetts economists, found that more than 4,200 same-sex couples raise more than 8,000 children in Massachusetts, concluding some beliefs that same-sex couples need the economic protections of legal marriage.

According to the study, published by The Institute for Gay and Lesbian Strategic Studies, one key reason to allow same-sex marriages is to improve the economic stability and well being of thousands of families and children in the state. The study concludes that providing a supportive legal climate for same-sex couples contributes to a healthy cultural and economic climate in Massachusetts. The study also exhibits that offering health insurance to gay couples would not harm businesses — and the majority of businesses would see no impact; 1.2 percent of newly married same-sex couples would sign up their new spouses for health benefits.

"Legal marriage provides many important rights and responsibilities for couples, especially when they are raising children," said co-author M.V. Lee Badgett, associate professor of economics at UMass and research director of the institute.

The study states that the benefits of legal marriage for same-sex couples include access to tax and health care benefits. Couples would also receive security of the family home from creditors, as well as property ownership rights. Same-sex couples would also have the right to sue for wrongful death of a spouse, and inherit rights if a spouse dies without a will.

The study, based on US Census data from 2000, found that same-sex couples with children have 10 percent lower household income (roughly $7,500 less) than married parents because same-sex partners do not have access to the financial protections and benefits of marriage.

"Almost half of people in same-sex couples have a bachelor's or graduate degree, and most work in the private sector," said co-author Michael Ash, assistant professor of economics and public policy at UMass. "Same-sex couples are important contributors to our economy and communities."

According to Ash, it is possible that not having family health insurance for both partners could be a reason why household incomes are lower; one party may not be able to advance his or her career as a result.

"The absence of marriage does pose a puzzle," said Ash.

The study states that one quarter of same-sex couples (out of 17,099) have children, compared to 46 percent of married couples. Of both married and same-sex couples, three out of five parents are employed. Seventy-three percent of same-sex couples are homeowners compared to 79 percent of married couples.

The difference is in the values of these homes, according to the study. Same-sex homeowners' houses are worth less than that of married couples. This difference could be related to the fact that same-sex couples cannot marry, making it more complicated for these couples to get credit for

See STUDY on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salzinker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Puppo
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagatis
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallach
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kuggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lorley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS' FALL AND SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY RUN BY STUDENTS. OPERATION OF ADVERTISING BEGINNED FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS SEVEN TIMES AND THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1908. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1911 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1990. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1990. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN RECOGNIZED SINCE ITS FOUNDING IN 1890 FOR EXCELLENCE IN WRITING, EDITING AND PUBLISHING. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. PERIODICALS POSTAGE PAID AT BOSTON, MA. 02130

Campus changes

CHANGES from page 1

"This is a 10 year conversation," he said. "We are going to do it in five, we need to do this to reach a level of competition."

The secretary of the Faculty Senate expressed concern about getting the Massachusetts state legislature enthusiastic about the upcoming plans.

"The issue of legislature report requires care and thought," Lombardi said. "The state expects students to invest more in their education; we can never expect that the sate of Massachusetts will restore our budget, we have to create alternative sources of revenue — we can't ask them to perform miracles beyond their reach."

Lombardi also said in response to another question that the plans were not going to create a new kind of university.

"Universities are resilient," he said. "I'm more worried about making it as competitive as it may be and finding the revenue."

He mentioned that other universities are deceptive, saying that it appears that universities are getting more revenue and remaining highly competitive but that is only because their student population is growing and creating more funds.

"We must work to make the university more attractive to students," he said. "We have a great capacity to succeed, we just need to work 24 hours a day, seven days a week."

International students who are protesting a $65 fee imposed by the University met with the chancellor on Wednesday.

"We had a great meet," Lombardi said at the Senate meeting. "We discussed a great deal of perspectives on international students, we are on our way to an improvement."

In addition to Lombardi speaking, the Senate approved a new motion that added three new education classes to the curriculum. Also, the Senate approved to add a nutrition area of concentration to the Ph.D program in public health and approved an agreement for a student exchange program.

The Board of Trustees announced that the committee searching for a new UMass president is well-focused and the process is going wonderfully.

UMass conducts study

STUDY from page 1

home purchases, according to the study.

The study states that by overruling the Supreme Judicial Court's decision to deem the banning of same-sex marriage unconstitutional, the state could drive away business and heterosexual people who thrive in a diverse environment. The study argues that talented and well-educated workers are attracted to high levels of tolerance and diversity.

The institute is a think tank established in 1993. In 1994 the institute combined with Lee Badgett and the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Policy Research Network to conduct rapid response studies and policy analysis as well as fellowship support for long-term academic research.

Campus Perspectives

By Scott Eldridge II

Do you use the PVTA?

freshman
Marketing major

"No. I have my own car so I kind of jet around in that."
Jeff Smith

freshman
Undeclared major

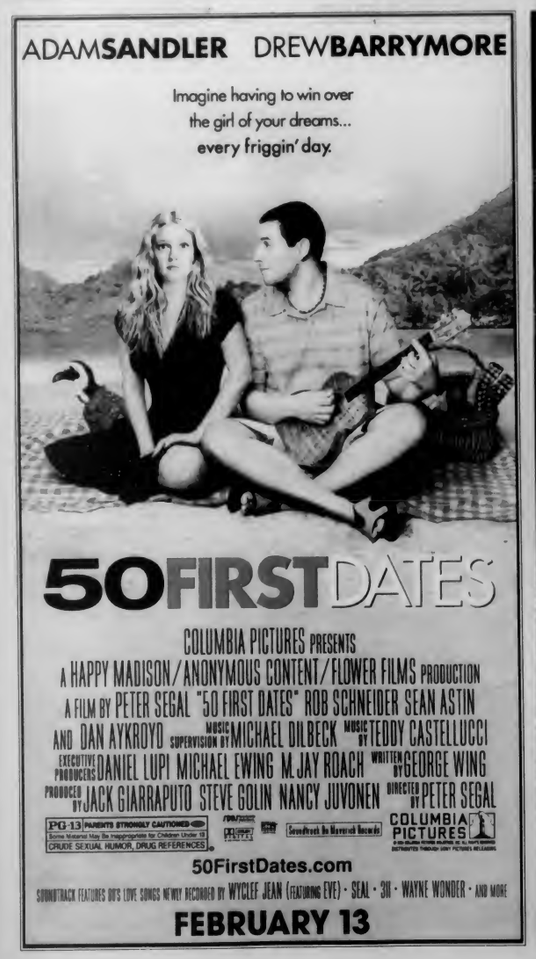
"I just use it to go to town and get food and CDs."
John Clark

junior
History major

"I do use it, I commute here every morning from Greenfield."
Amber Ortiz

sophomore
Computer Systems Engineering major

"They're very useful for transportation. It's easier to get back to your dorm."
Archana Krovi



freshman
Undeclared major

"I just go into town. I might use it to go to class."
Omar Maksoud

freshman
Computer Systems Engineering major

"I use the bus. It's very hard for me to walk around late at night."
Shobana Shankar

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Epidemic an issue nationally and locally

A state of public health emergency has been called in the South — but the fear surrounding the emergency is spreading across the nation. An unexpected HIV outbreak among male college students in North Carolina has health officials very concerned, according to USA Today.

"It's a public health emergency. I don't know any other way to put it," said Peter Leone, medical director of North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services.

Over the past three years, 84 new HIV cases have been found, resulting mainly from homosexual encounters with men. Additionally, 73 of the infected are black — an overwhelming majority. Although the reported number of new HIV cases increases every year, it is the increase in college-aged cases that have officials most concerned. They believe that these cases are a defining outbreak and a general progression of the disease through the human population.

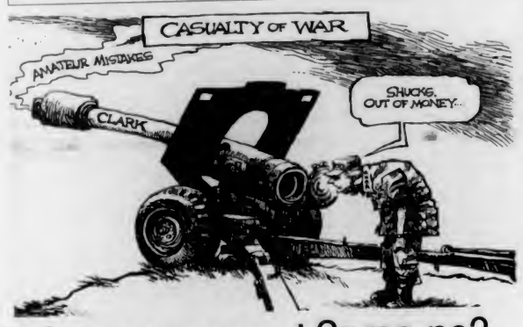
The North Carolina case, described as a "mini-epidemic" by The Washington Post, probably happened when the disease was introduced into a small, enclosed college population and rapidly spread.

The infection has now been traced far outside the college area, and has come to include 69 linked cases, eight of which include men outside the college area.

The epidemic spread as quickly as it did because the pool was so small and most of the men had sex soon after being infected. The HIV virus is most easily transmitted during the early stages of infection, because the virus count in the blood can be up to 10 times higher than it would in the later infection stages, making the disease more easily transmitted. The notice of the outbreak was gained through simple blood tests, in which the HIV virus was present in the blood without antibodies. This condition lasts for only two weeks after the infection.

The 84 new cases were spread across 33 colleges in North Carolina, Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina. School officials are trying to prevent future outbreaks by releasing notices in school newspapers, campus-wide presentations, and free HIV testing centers.

While the HIV/AIDS epidemic may seem like just another statistic or a problem present in Third World countries, the North Carolina cases is a frightening reminder how close — and how quickly — HIV can rip through a population.



Although the preachy "safe sex" spiel may sound like an old hat, the message behind it is still as important as it was when we first heard it in middle school. Despite the safe, comforting and exciting aspects sex may bring, it is vital to remember the responsibilities — and dangerous risks — that surround unprotected sex.

HIV is not simply a disease transmitted by gay men. The disease knows no racial, sexual, educational, age, or geographical barriers, as proven by this North Carolina college-area case.

This same story could have easily taken place here in the rural Five College Area. This should serve as a sobering reminder to college students across the Pioneer Valley.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian urges students and community members alike to be responsible and cautious when engaging in sexual situations. HIV killed 60,000 people between the ages of 15-24 in 2001, according to the US government. By protecting ourselves, we are also protecting the spread of an epidemic through our college community.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Executive Board.

A Constitutional obligation

Becky Martins

Turning 18 in the United States not only enables one to purchase cigarettes, pornography and scratch tickets legally — it also brings the right to vote.

A little more than three years ago, Americans felt the consequences of not putting their constitutional rights to use. In 2000, the presidential race came down to two candidates: Republican George W. Bush and Democrat Al Gore. We obviously know how this story ends, but who knows if our economy would have plunged from a surplus to a deficit if more US citizens had cast votes. American troops in the Middle East might still be safe at home if more individuals had realized their influence in US politics. In this instance, we will never know what could have been, but we can prevent the situation from occurring again.

Today, Americans are facing a new presidential decision — in which numerous candidates seek our votes. Their campaign trails stretch nationwide; each contender preaching his views, values and hopes with every new city he arrives in.

It is rare for someone today that has not heard the names John Kerry and Howard Dean. Each nightly newscast is never without the candidates' current standings. Even MTV has put out a special on the upcoming presidential election. The actual decision day is months away, yet our attention is already focused on who will become America's next leader. And honestly, it is about time people started listening.

There are no negative effects to voting. The opportunity gives us a voice: one in which government and politics are taken into the hands of citizens. We have the chance to decide who our leaders will be, what actions we, as a country, may potentially take, and what type of nation we are to become.

The public should not make these decisions lightly at whim, or worse, not at all. Many people have taken for granted the liberty we experience as Americans. Not all living in the world are so lucky.

But the voting right of every registered, US citizen, over the age of 18, has not always existed. Instead, it has been a hard-earned victory. According to www.lwvavc.org, white, property-owning men were at one time the only Americans allowed to vote. Yet, after much struggle, the 15th Amendment was added to the constitution in 1870. This addition stated voting would not be denied to anyone on account of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Then 50 years later, women were granted the right of suffrage when the 19th amendment was ratified, stating any US citizen's right to vote would not be denied on "account of sex." Finally, in 1970, the 26th amendment lowered the voting age to 18, allowing more Americans to change to participate in elections. Suddenly, after realizing what our ancestors went through just to cast a ballot, it seems disrespectful not to show up on Election Day and vote.

Many people have taken for granted the liberty we experience as Americans. Not all living in the world are so lucky.

If registering is presenting a problem, the process is quite easy. Voter registration can be done in person, like in an individual's town or city hall. It can be accomplished online, on numerous sites that offer forms to download and print out.

Also, students at the University of Massachusetts Amherst may actually be approached in person to register, such as in Worcester Dining Hall. Basically, the process is simple, foolproof and ridiculous not to complete.

So stop making excuses. Whether the ballot is for our next president, or mayor of our hometown, make sure to cast a vote. It is our responsibility as US citizens to care which leaders come into power and what roles they play in our lives. But definitely do not let this presidential election become a nightmare like our last.

History will not repeat itself if people make a conscious effort to do things differently than before. We always doubt our importance in the larger picture, but our choice could make a difference. We certainly know what can happen if we leave our vote for others to decide.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

Young voters absent on balloting

Amy Grzybinski

I was watching CNN the other night, when a serious question caught my attention. Larry King asked about the young demographic and how important they were to this year's election. An older correspondent quickly dismissed the question, saying how it wasn't important at all.

Why? Because the majority of the demographic doesn't even vote, despite clever attempts to appeal to it (see: "Rock the Vote") and the campaigns are more focused on groups such as the Soccer Moms and NASCAR dads instead.

Does anyone else see something seriously wrong with this?

This is not just "a demographic." We're talking about us here. This is you and I, our friends, our roommates and our classmates. This is our age group. How do our peers and political analysts get off saying that, as far as the presidential election is concerned, we're "not important"?

Think about what would happen if most of us actually took the time to educate ourselves about political issues and actually put our vote out there.

According to the US Census for 2000, 54.6 percent of 18 to 24 year olds were not even registered to vote, and out of the 45.4 percent that were, 67.7 percent did not vote. So to give you the numbers, 11 million U.S. citizens that voted in the 2000 election, and 8.635 of those citizens were ages 18 to 24. That's not even 13 percent.

So what's wrong with this picture? Why do most young people not vote?

In a survey conducted by the "New Millenium Young Voters Project" (kpearson.faculty.tcnj.edu), the main reasons given by college students for why they do not vote is that they don't have enough information. Not surprising, is it? Think about the upcoming election. How much do you actually know about the issues and the candidates?

You most likely didn't learn anything in school, because more than half of the students surveyed said that schools do not do a good enough job giving young people the information and skills needed to vote, which is true. I never knew anything about the political system until last semester's American Politics class.

Chances are, if you have any information, you went looking for it yourself: on the Internet, in newspapers, or if you're a geek like me, by watching CNN. But even so, 38 percent of students say that they're simply "too busy" to become politically involved.

I'm here to tell you, in case you haven't been paying attention the past four years, that the election in 2004 is critical. We currently have a president who has lied in order to start a war that didn't need to be started, and has sent Americans to their deaths who didn't need to die. We have a president who is taking money away from schools and putting it into unnecessary military operations. We have a president who is taking away our jobs, taking away our civil rights, and giving Americans a bad name all over the globe. You may not think these issues affect us, but they do. This is our education, these are the jobs we're going to enter when we graduate ... what we do now is going to affect the country we raise our children in.

The other reason that was given as to why young people don't vote is that they don't think their vote makes a difference. Which may be true, seeing that Bush didn't even win the 2000 election. But read a few paragraphs up. Do you see those numbers? Not even half of our age demographic is even registered to vote.

Think about what would happen if we were. Think about what would happen if most of us actually took the time to educate ourselves about political issues, and actually put our vote out there. It is our right, and it is our responsibility, to stand up and let our voices be heard, before it's too late.

Amy Grzybinski is a UMass student.

Los coupons ¿Como no?

Frances Carr

On Saturday nights I go to sleep happy, no matter what I've done. This is because I know that when I wake up, my Boston Sunday Globe will be patiently awaiting the end of my slumber at the foot of my driveway. When I retrieve my paper and return to the warmth of my bedroom, I all but completely ignore the headlines that frame the front page, ripping the sections apart looking to find my double Smart Source coupon magazines. I leaf through, reveling in the savings that I am destined for. I rip, clip and snip away, convincing myself that the savings outweigh the fact that I wouldn't normally buy any of these things.

One dollar off Resolve triple action carpet cleaner! How ironic, just this weekend I spilled cranberry juice on my white carpet! One shiny quarter off Thomas' English muffins? I was going to try to watch my carbs, but I can't pass this deal up. Another dollar off, if I just buy 13 cans of Progresso soup. I'll get around to eating them someday. Two dollars off something in a sparkly blue package. I don't know what it does, but what unprecedented savings! I can afford to take a chance. Snip, snip.

So now here I sit with a toppling pile of coupons, which will invariably sit and collect dust until the impending expiration date comes and goes. The fact that I don't actually ever use any of these coupons occurred to me the other day. I go grocery shopping fairly often, usually on Sundays, mere hours after scouring the paper for savings, but somehow the coupons never come with me.

So, I wonder: Why do I experience this panicky sweaty palmed excitement in the face of them? Do I have a passion for coupons? Because seriously, how many of these things would you actually buy if you did not have a coupon? Doritos Rollitos? The companies that offer these coupons don't actually expect you to use them, they are just banking on your glancing at them.

And on top of all of this, the coupons aren't even a good value. Let's just go back to Doritos Rollitos, if I may. In order to save 50 cents off this processed garbage that you never would have bought on your own accord without the coupon, you have to buy two bags. That's $4 down, 50 cents back. Hmmm, there's something wrong here.

There are the people that do take advantage of the savings that coupons provide. I'm sure you know these people, but let's be honest ... they're a little nutty. My friend's dad, for instance, will come home after a long day of shopping, sit down and calculate how much he saved that day. The other night I was over at their house and witnessed his weekly ritual. He sits in the kitchen with all of his receipts and actually calculates the percentage of money he saved in a particular store and compares this to how much he would have paid in other stores. Then, using the quadratic formula, number theory and quantum physics, he charts his savings vs. the GDP of Japan vs. the national deficit on a three dimensional graph. After figuring out that he had saved exactly $7.62, he announces to us "coupons are the greatest modern day invention."

And here's the rub: half the stuff he buys would never have entered his house without the magical power of coupons. The night I was there, we helped my friend's father empty the car of all of the glorious deals he had gotten that day.

"Dad, what do we need this donut pan for?"

"There was a coupon for them. It used to be $19.95 for a pan, and I got these for only $17.95."

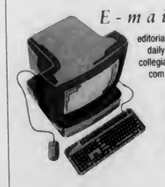
"But dad, we never make donuts. And you hate them."

"Yeah, but aren't you always telling me to broaden my culinary horizons? Plus, we saved two bucks."

Another coupon headcase is my roommate and her equally deranged boyfriend. (I love you guys — dinner at eight? Oh, and remember to tape "The Bachelorette." I heard blank tapes are on sale at CVS.) I have crowned these two kooks queen and king of bargain shopping. In fact, as I was writing this column she called in from the living room, "can I pick through these coupons?" No joke. These two sit around the day after they go grocery shopping lamenting about the savings they could have gotten, had they only waited for the next periodical to come out.

Just last night I sat pouring over my latest assignment when Queen Coupon came into the room eyes fluttering and mouth agape in what appeared to be a fit of seizure. I briefly wondered if those crazy terrorists had struck again. Or maybe the kitchen was on fire. As it turned out, things were much bleaker than I had first thought.

In a falsetto that rivaled that of even the most emotional Eagles tune, she screamed, "I was just reading the latest Stop & Shop circular and everything is two for one! I could have gotten twice the sponges for a quarter more."



I calmed her down and bent my head back to work. I pity the poor girl and the sweat and time she pours into saving a few bucks each week. Then again, my wallet is looking pretty empty and I heard that nothing fuels the late night homework engine like a couple of bags of those new Doritos Rollitos. Maybe I'll see if the paper is still lying around.

Frances Carr is a Collegian columnist.

Now looking for new writers and comic artists. Come to the meeting Wednesday, Feb. 18 at 7 p.m. in The Collegian newsroom.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be no more than 500 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax:
413-545-3699

Mail:
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Network G4 links gamers

After years of neglect by television companies to put together an all-gamers network, Comcast has finally brought a ray of light onto the video gaming world with the G4 network. The new station, which began last April, has a large variety of video game-related shows that give gamers a station they can call home. The network has shows that contain everything from reviews to reality shows.

Based out in Los Angeles, Calif., the G4 network thrives at bringing the new information that gamers crave and making it entertaining. "10 Play" is a new interesting twist on a top 10 list. It counts down viewers' favorite characters, weapons, music, and so on based on certain themes. "10 Play" also provides gamers with an alternative look on some games — both new and old.

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

On the reality-based show "Game On," co-hosts Matt Gallant and Randy Kagan coach two teams against each other in multiple gaming challenges. They play everything from "Dance Dance Revolution" to "Unreal Tournament 2003," even throwing in an older game like "Spaced Invaders" every now and then. The show is original, but get ready for dry humor and bad puns throughout the show from the co-hosts.

"G4: Gaming Network" also provides viewers with a review show, cleverly titled "Judgment Day." Hosted by Victor Lucas and Tommy Tallarico, "Judgment Day" looks at the detailed ups and downs on video games and accessories, lets the viewer know about upcoming products, and rates games on a 10-point scale. The hosts are very objective toward the games and are pretty honest about their ratings. Even if a game gets a low rating, they still point out the positives in case it might be of interest to a particular gamer. No bad lines in this show, these guys have a job to do and they do it well.

"ICONs" is for the video gamer historians out there. This is G4's documentary show that covers the people who made big breakthroughs that changed the gaming industry. It goes into detail about how some companies became as successful as they are today. One of the better episodes is on George Lucas' "Lucas Arts." They started long ago, making games for Atari, then stepped it up with the PC games such as "Sam and Max" and "Full Throttle." As you know, they still make some of the best games today.

The G4 gaming network is definitely a must-see by all hardcore gamers out there. The problem is that since it is a Comcast network, it is not likely that it will be available for on-campus students at this time. If you have Comcast digital cable, G4 can be found on channel 219 in Massachusetts. Check out G4TV.com to see if G4 is available in your area and to learn about information on internships with the network.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

Information from G4TV.com was used in this column.

OURS HOPE TO MAKE BOSTON THEIRS

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Many people, especially in writing, are subject to hyperbole. It's easy to exaggerate how good that movie you saw last weekend was, or how cold it was outside yesterday. However, it can be pronounced, without a hint of hyperbole, that Ours, the New Jersey dark rock group, is one the most exciting, talented and powerful groups that exists today.

While the band had mild success with the track "Sometimes" from their 2001 debut "Distorted Lullabies", they have been largely ignored by the mainstream, despite "Distorted Lullabies" and their remarkable 2002 release, "Precious." Add an intoxicatingly energizing live show that is, to say the least, awe-inspiring, put these elements together and it's easy to note that Ours very well might be the best kept secret in music today. Local fans and interested parties should be ecstatic that the band will be stopping at the Paradise in Boston on Friday as a part of an extremely small batch of shows before they head into the studio to record their third album.

The band, which carries both an air of gloom and a hopeful promise, is wholly original and difficult to describe, calling to mind something in the region of The Cure and A Perfect Circle mixed together. Jimmy Gnecco, the founder and architect of Ours, has an astounding voice that is often compared to Jeff Buckley but, at times, can be reminiscent of Thom Yorke or Chris Cornell. Like the music, Gnecco's vocals can be soft and delicate and then suddenly turn into the type of forceful scream that will leap into your head and your heart and stick with you for days.

Ours
Paradise
Boston
Tonight
$10

Since the band's last tour, a self-financed round around the country, guitarist Dave Milone has left. He has been replaced with two new guitarists, who simply go by Locke and Vincent, and although Gnecco truly enjoys playing with them and the band's other members, Race, the bassist, Anthony Demarco, who plays keyboards, and Gnecco's brother, Pit Orbach, on drums, he says that there is no such thing as a sure lineup for Ours.

"Ours is basically my forum to do whatever I want," Gnecco explained to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian in a phone interview two weeks ago. "As far as defining a line up, that was never meant to be the case. There were only five of us coming out on the first record because that's all that the label would give us money for." Gnecco does seem to be the face, as well as the soul, of Ours and although he doesn't want to shortchange the other member's contribution and importance, at the end of the day Gnecco wants to keep Ours as his vision.

"It's like an orchestra ... it's not set up so much as a rock band, it's a project of mine," he says. "I basically did the first record, I had an amazing team of people on it but I oversaw the whole thing, I was responsible for just about every note that's played on it." However, on the next album, "Precious" Gnecco allowed for a rawer, more full-band sound. While most fans hold it in as high regard as they do "Distorted Lullabies" the whole process is a bit of a sore subject for Gnecco.

"When it came time to do the next record, out of mainly a feeling of camaraderie of a band I spent a year touring with, I wanted to make that record about the sound of that band," Gnecco recalls. "I was ridiculed so much for taking so long on the first record [Gnecco infamously spent four years after being signed working on 'Distorted Lullabies' although he claims it was the label that held him up], I was hearing so much shit from everyone around me that I was too precious about my music. 'You're too fing precious about it, let it go, let it go' so that's why I let everything go and things that felt like rough mixes were let go."

COURTESY ANGRYTEL.COM

Dark rock band Ours will play Boston's Paradise tonight. Ours are best known for their 2002 album "Precious."

Aside from that, Gnecco was dealing with label difficulties, which seem to be more and more common for bands like Ours who aren't instant smash hits. Gnecco finds himself most unhappy with the inclusion of the Lou Reed cover "Femme Fatale." "I told [the people at DreamWorks, the band's label] ... that they would have to drag my dead corpse to the studio to get me to sing on a cover if they ever wanted it on a record. I said 'there's no fing way' [but they] talked about the kind of push they were gonna give us and that we were their number one priority and got me to put a cover on the record ... and than three weeks after the record was out, they [stopped promotion]."

Additionally, Dreamworks released the track "Leaves" as the sole single, not "Realize", Gnecco's preference. When "Leaves" didn't take off, the label cut funding for their tour, which left the band twiddling their thumbs for most of 2003, save for the aforementioned self-financed tour last summer which, Gnecco states with great pride, ended at the Field Day Festival with Radiohead in New York and then selling out a headlining show at the Bowery Ballroom in New York, proving to the label that the band could indeed sell out bigger shows.

Gnecco is not only a talented musician and a dedicated performer but, unlike many quote-unquote "artists" in the music scene today, he is truly passionate about his music. And while it may seem that Ours is Jimmy Gnecco, he insists otherwise. In fact, Gnecco claims that is where the band name came from.

"There was this guitar player trying out for the band," Gnecco recalls, " ... and he was going around telling people, 'Ours, what the f is this kid talking about, he should call the band Mine.' He missed the point, the name Ours has nothing to do with a band it has to do with the feeling that I'm hoping the music gives you. There's always been something so personal about what we do that I found that people would take it really serious, anybody that would get involved with it. What ended up happening is so

See OURS on page 5

BNL to give UMass 'Peep Show'

Canadian pop band to play Mullins Center on Valentine's Day

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff

To many, the prospect of spending Valentine's Day with five bare, naked ladies, is an appealing one. When it comes out that these "ladies" are actually husky men in their mid-30s, well ... that promises to be all the more exciting.

Barenaked Ladies
Mullins Center
UMass
Tomorrow
$35, $45

Canadian popsters Steven Page, Ed Robertson, Jim Creeggan, Tyler Stewart and Kevin Hearn will overtake the Mullins Center this Valentine's Day as part of the Ladies' "Peepshow" tour. Though nudity isn't out of the realm of possibility, it will be worth the trek down to Mullins for this show. Barenaked Ladies are well known for their stage show — musical talent coupled with oddball antics and a slightly off-color sense of humor — and have enjoyed their fair share of radio success in recent years.

Best known for hits like their breakout single "One Week" and the infectious "It's All Been Done," Barenaked Ladies have actually been making music since 1988. Founded by singer-guitarists Robertson and Page, the Toronto-based band have engrained themselves in North American culture over the past 16 years, becoming one of the most popular touring bands around.

Past tours have brought out the wacky side of BNL in quite a few ways.

Over the years quite a few traditions have developed at the live BNL experience. The most notorious is likely the throwing of Kraft Macaroni and Cheese on the stage during a verse in fan-favorite "If I Had a Million Dollars." "If I had a million dollars/ We wouldn't have to eat Kraft Dinner/ But we would," Robertson and Page croon, and on cue many dedicated followers of BNL shower the stage with uncooked noodles. Though the majority of band members have gone on record saying they aren't really amused by the Mac and Cheese deluge anymore, the tradition persists on.

COURTESY CANOE.COM

Steven Page, of BNL, will be appearing with the band tomorrow night at Mullins.

Fans have also taken to throwing something slightly more risqué than uncooked macaroni noodles onto the stage during shows. During the song "Pinch Me," when Robertson dryly sings, "I could hide out under there ... I just made you say underwear," a bombardment of lady's — and even men's — undergarments take the stage.

Elaborate stage set ups, clever costuming, pop-song medleys and heavy amounts of crowd interaction have also become staples of the BNL concert extravaganza. Just as the title of their 1997 live release "Rock Spectacle" suggests, Barenaked Ladies aren't just performing a few songs — they are putting on the greatest show on Earth.

Opening for BNL will be young up-and-comer Gavin DeGraw. An acoustic rocker more akin to Howie Day than John Mayer, DeGraw's first effort, "Chariot," is impressive to say the least. The lead single off the album, "Follow Through," has earned the novice musician comparisons to Third Eye Blind and The Push Stars. DeGraw's sound is unique and should serve to compliment BNL quite nicely.

So bring your Valentine, a pair of your best (and hopefully clean) underwear and a box of Mac and Cheese and make your way down to the Mullins Center tomorrow night. The show starts at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $45 for floor and lower-arena seating and $35 for upper-arena seating.

Barbie, Ken split up

By Samantha Critchell
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Just like J.Lo and Ben, the romance is over for Barbie and Ken.

After 43 years as one of the world's prettiest pairs, the perfect plastic couple is breaking up. The couple's "business manager," Russell Arons, vice president of marketing at Mattel, said that Barbie and Ken "feel it's time to spend some quality time — apart."

"Like other celebrity couples, their Hollywood romance has come to an end," said Arons, who quickly added that the duo "will remain friends."

Truth be told, the announcement was prompted by the fact that Mattel is releasing the Cali (as in California) Girl Barbie, arriving in stores now. Ken will still be in the picture — only now he's "just a friend," Mattel claims.

Whatever. The important news is that to better reflect her single status, Cali Barbie will wear board shorts and a bikini top, metal hoop earrings, and have a deeper tan.

Barbie — the most popular fashion doll in the world, according to Mattel — met Ken on the set of a TV commercial in 1961, and they have been inseparable ever since.

Arons hinted Wednesday that the separation may be partially due to Ken's reluctance to getting married. All those bridal Barbie dolls in toy chests around the globe are really just examples of Barbie's wishful thinking, she explained.

Another possible factor is Barbie's career. The doll who was "born" Barbie Millicent Roberts in 1959 has been everything from a rock star to military medic, and she's currently marketed in more than 150 countries. According to Mattel, every second, three Barbie dolls are sold somewhere in the world.

Splits-ville

The romance is over. Barbie and Ken, who met on the set of a TV commercial 43 years ago, have decided to spend "quality time" apart, according to manufacturer Mattel, which just so happens to be releasing a new Cali Barbie.

New single Cali (for California) Barbie -- board shorts, bikini top, metal hoop earrings, and a deeper tan.

Ken, "still friends," will continue hanging out with Barbie.

SOURCE: Mattel Inc. AP

Lowfish CD not a flop

'1000 Corrections Per Second' triumph for artist

By Timh Gabriele
Collegian Staff

For those of us that follow the entire output of certain record labels, like obsessive groupies in Winnebagos, trucking behind limousines to the next tour stop of their favorite band, each subsequent release is a complimentary treat to satisfy one's own overindulgence in a certain aesthetics' personal audile success gauge. There can be no doubt that Canada's blissful neo-electro label Suction insatiably appeals more and more to the eardrums, for whatever reason, with every successive album.

Lowfish's "1000 Corrections Per Second" is no exception.

Formed in 1997 primarily as an avenue for J. Solvent and Gregory Lowfish to expose their music to a wider audience, Suction's musical output actually only amounts to a couple handfuls of LPs. Though much of the earlier work focused more on IDM, the monumental influence of early experimental new wave and staccato synth-pop is impossible to deny on every Suction release.

Lowfish
'1000 Corrections Per Second'
Suction

The glacial analogue aesthetic favored by those Canadian robots both preceded and surpassed recent fads in electroclash and Detroit techno. However, this is not simply retro-chic substituting for electronica's perpetual, systematic, genre-crossing technological race to the moment. Rather, Suction and Lowfish's music, like the best neo-electro, posit a retreat and retaliation from hyperactive equipment-updating by choosing to further explore the unnavigated melodic spaces and interfaces that the old technology has to offer.

For the most part, the modern underground scene, with its often unhealthy fascination for the barrage of creative output between 1976 and 1983, has fortunately avoided falling into the trap of allowing itself to be entranced by the dark allure of novelty, which was what lead to the artistic downfall of so many of the relevant musicians from that time frame.

Of course, anything even remotely retroactive will have a hard time completely distancing itself from the confines of novelty, but most of the better work has been executed with admirable levels of self-restraint and appropriately low levels of irony.

The problem then — besides the influx of attention creating a rushed, hasty desire for artists — lies with the recontextualization of the old styles with new technology, modern production techniques and the incorporation of later hybrid genres. Sure, the Human League's "Dare" was an innovative and delectable advancement on the face of pop music at the time, but with the creation of electronic microgenres nearly every week, a "Double Dare" with hip-hop beats seems neither relevant, revolutionary, nor necessary.

With that said, Lowfish's "1000 Corrections Per Second" has a timeless feel that, like Solvent's "Solvent City" before it, establishes an instantly recognizable kinship to the incontestable synth-pop forefathers it shares with Orchestral Manouvres in the Dark's eponomytous debut and Yaz's "Upstairs at Eric's." The shield that protects Lowfish from the pitfalls of other backward-yet-forward thinking music is a lush minimalism that excludes the album from referential pretension.

"1000 Correct- ions Per Second" is a very simple record that does not have to tell you that many of the sweeps come from Gary Numan and a couple of the beats were aided by the guidance of Giorgio Moroder — though Lowfish does openly admit to these very influences in the liner notes. The deep impact of the body of work these names have contributed to the collective pop unconscious, and Greg Lowfish's personal awareness, become apparent in the music. The listener's knowledge or lack thereof of these influences does not hinder one's enjoyment of the record.

The album begins with "Glass Houses," which levitates on synth charm, procuring a blissful entry for the listener into Lowfish's idyllic, utopian mindset. Screeching sound effects instantly arrive like a Nintendo MIDI-modulated liftoff noise to accompany a first-person space racing game. A considerably marginalized art form (except in Japan where Nintendo composing God Koji Kondu's works are performed symphonically), video game music is becoming a noted influence on much of the modern electro scene. It would not be surprising in the least if Lowfish had Star Tropics in mind as much as I-F when writing songs like "Glass Houses." Rapidly sifting over the fragile domiciles with a carefree glee, the song is careful not to shatter them nor detract appreciation from the spectacle of reflected light that it aims to represent. The song's stiff 808 drums and gingerly bouncy oscillated bass are familiar and reassuring, but fun enough to hope that the thoroughly engaging ride to the electric technotopia does not end soon. It does not.

"1000 Corrections per Second" does not wear out its welcome by peaking into the seven-minute range like so many dance-floor-deliberate techno peers. Most songs tap out at around four minutes here and defy endless loop standards by adhering to pretty strict verse-chorus-verse standards. That's why calling Lowfish techno or electronica would be ignorantly dismissive. This is just instrumental pop music.

Good stuff too, the kind of music that makes one wonder if much of the world's synthpop would actually approve without the tin soul of a handful of Phil Oakey imitators. One distant, repeated, and obscured vocal refrain does appear in "Air of Supremacy," but it's hardly a throwback to the detached and impassionate lovelorn lyrics of yore. Not that there's anything wrong with that. It's simply that the recontextualization of such a musical statement throws the validity of one's intentions into question and the music suffers. This is why so many electroclashers come off sounding like new romantic versions of the Darkness.

Lowfish surprisingly chooses to stray from the Utopian vibe as he reaches the album's final tracks. The somber shift is hinted at in tracks like "Photo Disintegration" and the bizarre sound effects littered across "Deadlines and Errors," but the downer still remains completely unexpected. However sudden, the brooding and contemplative final four tracks are as piercingly beautiful as the frantic, joyful songs that precede them. Perhaps Lowfish arrived at his destination and the princess was in another castle. Perhaps at such an ecstatic pace, the sad machine ran out of corrections to make. For some reason, that would not surprise me. I wouldn't change a damn thing on this album.

Boston makes way for Ours

OURS from page 4

many people got involved with it, in different aspects, that helped me out that I felt like ... that it was such a universal mentality. If it was called Nine Inch Nails like Trent's band is, it wouldn't be so weird, it's no different than that situation, it's just that the nature of the word is a confusing one."

While Gnecco is very focused on the next record, at this second he's concentrating on putting on the best show he can for the crowd. "We're gonna try out a bunch of the new songs and get out and play a lot of the songs that we didn't get a chance to play [last time] ... the truth is we need to go set the record straight about what the f we're trying to do, because we were punch drunk the last couple of years." Everyone with a predilection for dark art-rock would be wise to do their best to make it to the Paradise to check out Ours in their rawest form, and if that's impossible "Distorted Lullabies" and "Precious" should more than hold you over until the next album.

People in the News

Compiled by Associated Press

Dustin Hoffman

LA VERNE, Calif. (AP) — Dustin Hoffman is dashing to church again.

The actor reprised his rush to the church in 1967's "The Graduate" for a car commercial in which he stops his daughter's wedding.

COURTESY THE LOS ANGELES TIMES.COM

The ad being filmed in this east Los Angeles County city is only the second commercial the 66-year-old Hoffman has appeared in, he said Wednesday. It will air in Europe only.

In the final scenes of "The Graduate," Hoffman's breakthrough film, his character, Benjamin Braddock, pulls Katharine Ross' character, Elaine Robinson, from the church as she's getting married. They fight off parents and guests before riding away in a bus.

In the car commercial, directed by Michael Bay ("Pearl Harbor"), Hoffman again rescues the bride, but this time returns to a 2005 Audi.

Kimberly Mathers

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. (AP) — Eminem's ex-wife was sentenced to serve at least a month in jail Thursday for using cocaine while on probation. Circuit Judge Edward Servitto ordered Kimberly Mathers to serve 30 days in the Macomb County Jail and then be transferred to an inpatient substance abuse treatment program for an additional 90 days.

Mathers, who's been the target of some of the rapper's songs, admitted a week ago to her probation agent that she was using cocaine, the Michigan Department of Corrections has said.

She tested positive for the drug after taking a urine test during a Jan. 29 meeting with the probation agent. She missed a scheduled meeting last week but later met with the agent and admitted using cocaine, the corrections department said.

Mathers was sentenced Jan. 21 to two years' probation after pleading guilty to charges of possessing 25 grams or less of cocaine and failing to give adequate space to an emergency vehicle. The charges came from a June traffic stop in St. Clair Shores.

Defense attorney Michael Sinutko didn't immediately return a telephone message left Thursday morning at his office.

Mathers and Eminem, whose legal name is Marshall Bruce Mathers III, have a daughter, Hailie Jade. Eminem has rapped in his songs about killing his ex-wife; in "97 Bonnie and Clyde," he talks about stuffing her body in a trunk.

Jose Saramago

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Nobel Prize winner Jose Saramago said President Bush was an "imbecile" for leading the war against Iraq.

The Portuguese novelist, who won the Nobel literature prize in 1998, on Wednesday called the war "stupid, obscene" and said it was "directed by that imbecile named Bush."

He added that the White House was more interested in finding water on the planet Mars than fighting poverty.

"It is obscene that (someone) could die of hunger," Saramago said.

Saramago was in Mexico City receiving the Isidro Fabela medal from the National Autonomous University's law school.

George Strait

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A federal grand jury indicted a Louisiana man on extortion charges that he tried to further his music career by threatening country singer George Strait.

Walter J. Bonin Jr. said he'd "go Rambo" if Strait didn't record at least one of his songs, according to the indictment a grand jury issued Wednesday. He faces seven counts of extortion over threatening e-mails sent in July and August 2003.

"It's all fake," Bonin said Thursday in a telephone interview from his home in St. Martinville, La. "Somebody has been getting into my e-mail for the past four or five years."

But prosecutors charged that Bonin tried to correspond with Strait through the singer's representatives between June 1993 and August 2003. The first notes weren't threatening, but on July 29, 2003, a note sent to Danny O'Brien, president of Strait's fan club, read:

"Please have a nice talk to Erv and George telling them again how hard I've worked at getting my songs recorded by my idol/friend George Strait. Your wife, Anita knows I deserve my dream and destiny. If it comes down to it and I have no choice but to go Rambo, let me just say that I won't be the lone gunman."

Introducing FREE in-Network Calling Between 36 Million Verizon Wireless Customers.

From the National in-Network Coverage Area.

Requires 1 year agreement

Plus, unlimited night & weekend minutes and 400 anytime minutes

when calling in the America's Choice® Network. in-Network calling not available everywhere in the America's Choice Network.

for only $39.99 monthly access

Network not available everywhere. Select CDMA phone required. Calls placed outside of rate area are 69¢/min.

Are you in?

Bring in this ad and receive

$25 Mail-In Rebate Offer

When you buy and activate a V120a phone through February 29, 2004.

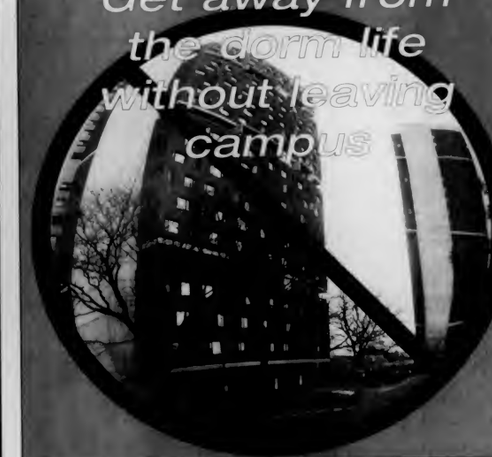
$25.00 Regular Price
-$25.00 Less Rebate
$0.00
Your Price FREE

New 2 year agreement required. While supplies last. Limited time offer.

verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer

NWinAd4-04

@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com



HOLYOKE
50 Holyoke Street • (413) 533-2500

HADLEY
322 Russell Street • (413) 587-3248

Nights 9:01 pm - 5:59 am M-F; Wknds 12:00 am Sat - 11:59 pm Sun.
Taxes & surcharges apply & may vary. Federal Universal Service Charge of 1.88% (varies quarterly based on FCC rate) & a 5¢ Regulatory Charge per line/month are our charges, not taxes.
Important Consumer Information: Subject to Customer Agreement, Calling Plan & credit approval. $175 cancellation fee, other charges & restrictions. $35 activation fee with 1-yr term. Cannot combine with other offers. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused minutes lost. Offers not available in all areas. National in-Network Coverage Area covers over 234 million people. ©2004 Verizon Wireless

Everybody needs a little PRIVACY now and then!

Get away from the dorm life without leaving campus

Now you can reserve a room for a night, or a weekend at 35-60% off the normal rate when you present a 5-College student ID at check in. Call around, we have the best rates in town!

549.6000

Call today for our best rate!

Limited Availability. Weekend rates apply.
This promotion cannot be combined with other discounts.

Chartier and swim team look to defend A-10 title

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

Greg Chartier is a product of the system.

Born and raised in Amherst, Mass., the freshman swimming sensation has never drifted far from his roots.

When he's not practicing his freestyle at Boyden Gymnasium, there's a good chance he can be found across town coaching the Tritons, his former recreational team comprised of students from Amherst Regional Middle School.

"It's just natural for me to swim and coach here in Amherst," Chartier said. "I've known Russ (Yarworth, UMass men's coach) since I was 13 and I started going to UMass meets when I was a kid, so Amherst swimming is really all I know."

Last year when Chartier was a senior at Amherst Regional High, he became one of the country's most heavily recruited swimmers. Named an All-American in the 200-yard individual medley, and state champion in the 200-yard IM and 100-yard free, he was also honored as the Massachusetts state Swimmer of the Year in 2002.

After losing 10 seniors to graduation last season, Yarworth, with an under aged squad of eight freshman and two transfers are about to face a mammoth task. Next Thursday the Minutemen will defend the A-10 title, which they've held the past three years.

"We were forced to put a lot of pressure on the freshman this year because we lost eight seniors who figured into the scoring during last year's A-10's," Yarworth said. "I knew Greg and Evan (Swisher) were talented swimmers but I wasn't sure how long it would take for them to get adjusted to the pace of collegiate races."

From the start of the season it was apparent that Chartier wouldn't need much of a grace period. After his first two races for the Maroon and White, Chartier received the season's first A-10 Rookie of the Week honor.

In the season opener Greg finished first in the 400-yard IM, with a time of 4:13.5. But a first-place finish at the Husky Invite Oct. 18 was only a preview of what was to come. Seven days later, Chartier led the Minutemen to victory at New Hampshire with a win in the 200-yard free (1:45.44).

A month after UNH, Chartier found himself receiving another A-10 Rookie of the Week citation, after dominating mid-distance events at the Nutmeg Invitational, Dec. 5-7. He placed first in the 400-yard IM and the 500-yard free at the Invite, with times of 4:05.08 and 4:38.48, respectively. He then went on to swim a leg on the winning 800-yard freestyle relay, which finished in a season-best 7:02.30.

The already accomplished freshman recently turned his attention to the November 19-21, A-10 Championships set to be held in Buffalo, N.Y.

"I'm very excited for the A-10, we leave for New York next Tuesday and we're looking forward for the chance to win another Conference title," Chartier said. "We do have a lot of freshman swimming in their first major championship, but we should be able to fill the spots and hopefully win again."

Youthful Minutemen travel to play Xavier teams we need to beat."

BASKETBALL from page 8

The Musketeers are in a similar situation to the Minutemen offensively, as they are forced to play a smaller rotation since they too only have one big man.

"They're kind of going to a four out one in a lot of the time with [Anthony] Myles being their only big guy and I think they've found some success with that," Lappas said.

"They've settled in on a rotation," he said. "They're not playing as many guys as many minutes as they were earlier and I know against Richmond they played really six guys so I think they shortened the rotation and the guys that they have playing are playing better."

According to Lappas one of the biggest problems for his team this season has been their lack of experience. Experience can't be taught, but it's what beat UMass last Sunday and the Minutemen need to find a way to defend against it.

"You keep teaching them," Lappas said, "You hope the natural progression that's going to take place with their experience is happening, which it is ... no matter what we do in practice we're not going to give our guys the experience that Sato and Chalmers and Myles have, we're just not going to be able to do that. But we can do some things to help them and to make that experience factor not as big of a gap."

UMass Weekend Schedule

Friday, Feb. 13

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Basketball	at Fordham	7:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Ohio State	12:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Fresno State	2:00 p.m.
Men's Ski	at CSC Carnival	9:30 a.m.
Women's Ski	at CSC Carnival	9:30 a.m.
Women's Track	at Valentine Invite	4:00 p.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	vs. Boston College	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Feb. 14

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Basketball	at Xavier	4:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Cal State Northridge	2:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Cal State Fullerton	7:30 p.m.
Ski	at SAC Carnival	9:30 a.m.
Women's Track	at Valentine Invite	9:30 a.m.
Men's Track	at Fast Track Invite	2:00 p.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	at Boston College	8:00 p.m.

Sunday, Feb. 15

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Basketball	vs. St. Josephs	2:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Washington	12:15 p.m.
Women's Track	at Syracruse	12:00 p.m.

New NEXTEL series a fight to the finish

NASCAR from page 8

places receive points in decreasing order. In addition, any driver outside of the top 10 after race No. 25 will still be eligible if within 400 points of the leader.

Who is likely to win under this new system? Defending champion Matt Kenseth should be strong again, but this new system may allow some others to step up. If the new rules were in place last year, the champion would have been Jimmy Johnson, who certainly has a good shot at it this year, as well as his teammate, Jeff Gordon.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. has showed he can run on the super speedways of Daytona and Talladega, as well as the ovals and road coarses the Nextel Cup goes to. But this new system should favor drivers like Kurt Busch and Ryan Newman.

Newman had more wins (eight) than anyone else last year, but finished a disappointing sixth in the standings because of a series of poor finishes, especially at Daytona and Talladega where he was involved in two big wrecks.

Another driver to watch for is Harvick, who came on really strong last year, and looks to be a serious championship contender. Of course, you can't forget about Stewart. After winning the championship in 2002 he had sort of a down year and should be looking to be a title contender yet again.

In addition to the readjustment of the points system, the title sponsor has also changed, both out of necessity and to give the circuit a more national profile.

Winston has left as the title sponsor, replaced by communications giant Nextel, which should allow for even more exposure to 16-35 year olds. Sunoco has also replaced longtime fuel supplier Unical 76.

With all these changes you can still expect this to be a very interesting and exciting season, with more variables in play than ever. One thing can be counted on though, the teams that usually challenge every year should do so yet again; the good teams always do.

Justin Marques is a Collegian columnist.

Trackless but prepared

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

Anyone who's ever picked up a ball will agree that success in athletics is due to practice. The key to any sport is practice, whether it's in a pool, on a football field, in a basketball court, on the ice of a hockey rink, in the turf of a lacrosse field, or in the case of the Massachusetts women's indoor track team, in a field house on a track.

Except that's not the case — not at all. In past years, the athletic facilities at Smith College have been made available to the team on certain nights, but this year that option was out, and that put the team in quite a predicament.

Basketball has first dibs on the space in Curry Hicks Cage, home at least to an indoor track of sorts, albeit one that tunnels so closely under bleachers that on the turns runners have to move into lane two to avoid being clipped by the corner. So reluctantly, Coach Julie LaFreniere adapted.

"Our goals with all of our meets would be to have each individual compete as well as they possibly can, but the lack of facilities makes that difficult," LaFreniere said. "The only time we get to run on an indoor track at all is when we race."

But even so, the team is running well. They placed 8th out of 12th at the Rhode Island Invitational last weekend with some fantastic performances. The meet turned out to be much larger than it was originally planned to be, but LeFreniere didn't mind.

"The bigger the meet, the bigger the competition," LaFreniere said.

Most meets are strong in at least one area. For example, distance, sprints, or throws, but with meets that size, there was bound to be competition in all events, and the Minutewomen handled it well.

In LaFreniere's opinion, some of the most impressive performances of the day were actually the double performances of two veteran distance runners who both competed in the open mile and the Distance Medley Relay (DMR), (400meter, 800meter, 1200meter, mile).

Kate Markopoulos's time of 5:18 may not have been enough to earn points in the mile, but later she anchored the DMR, running an amazing 5:17 for her second mile of the day.

"Kate Markopoulos ran really nice back to back miles," LaFreniere said, "and that's something she hasn't done before. She really needs to be recognized for that."

Ford ran the open mile in 5:22, and returned to race especially well for the Distance Medley, running 2:21 for the 800meter leg. Although Ford's training was interrupted for a couple weeks during January, according to LaFreniere she's definitely making a quick comeback.

"[Markopoulos and Ford] may not have scored points in the mile, but they came back to pull together an outstanding DMR," LaFreniere said.

The best performance of the day was Elisabeth Budd, whose time of 1:16.9 just barely missed the time for the Eastern College Athletic Conference meet. But LaFreniere has no doubts that Budd will make it, hopefully at the Valentine's Day Invitational tomorrow at Boston University. The brand-new 200meter, six lane banked track at BU is a proven fast track.

Although it's not one of the team's stronger seasons, LaFreniere and the team remain optimistic.

"The attitude is great, we just do what we have to do, and the athletes work incredibly hard," LaFreniere said.

Tomorrow's meet is a higher-level meet. As the season progresses, and the number of runners in a meet raises, so do the expectations, and LaFreniere is using this meet as a chance to fine-tune the team at one of the fastest tracks in the country.

"We're using this meet as a chance to help more people qualify for the big meets later in the season, like New Englands," LaFreniere said.

Not bad for a track team whose only practices on actual tracks are in full uniform.

UMass challenges B.C.

HOCKEY from page 8

Hockey East play this season. Both teams have 59, and the Eagles have done it in one fewer game. They're also at the top of the goals allowed average chart, with 1.84, and they're outscoring Hockey East opponents by 1.88 goals per game.

"It's a tall order," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "They're a terrific team, they're as good as there is, so we've just got to try to rally and bring our best game forward. We played pretty well the last time we played them, and they still beat us by three goals. We just have to be that much better."

The two teams met on Nov. 14 at the Mullins Center, and after a period of mostly even hockey, the Eagles pulled away on three unanswered goals, including an empty-netter and downed the Minutemen 4-1. Neither goaltender was heavily tested, as UMass' Gabe Winer stopped 18 of 21 shots and Matti Kaltiainen turned 14 of 15 aside for the Eagles.

That kind of game hasn't been typical for the high-flying Eagle offense this year, and if the gentlemen from the Heights bring more pressure tonight and tomorrow, Cahoon would like his team to return the favor.

"The reason you have to be good on the counter-attack is that they're going to attack," he said. "There's no stopping them. We just have to be thorough when we have the opportunity to have puck possession, we have to be thorough with it.

"They have great speed, and they'll sometimes skate you down. It's a struggle enough when they have possession of the puck, you can't be giving them the puck back when they don't have it."

As for implications, the weekend has plenty. The Eagles lead the Minutemen in the Hockey East standings by just a point — something worth reflecting on for Pöck, who's seen good and bad in his four years in the Pioneer Valley.

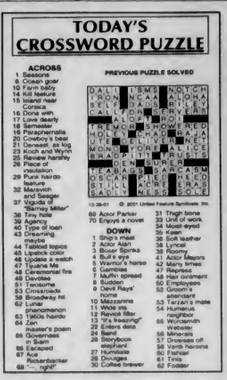
"It's definitely satisfying," Pock said. "The first couple of years were obviously horrible, hockey-wise, we didn't do as well. But last year we picked it up, and this year we're making a name for ourselves."

The Minutemen also have a chance to clinch home-ice advantage in the Hockey East quarterfinals. They'll need help, specifically losses by fifth-place Providence and seventh-place UMass Lowell, but two wins would do well towards securing playoff games in the Mullins Center a month from now.

"It's definitely nice," Pöck said of the prospects of a home playoff game. "We haven't done it since we've been Division I, and obviously it's something great for the fans to come back for some extra games."

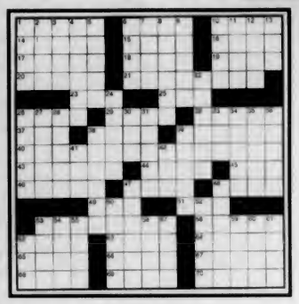
FREE DELIVERY!
Located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
150 Fearing Street
Special: Large Cheese Pizza $5.00
Thurs./Fri./Sat.
Chicago Pizzaria
Open Sun.-Wed. 11am-1am
Thurs.-Sat. 11am-3am
549-6073
We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!

Hello LeBeau!
Valentines Day February 14th
LeBeau Florist and Gifts offers chocolates, Roses/flowers, and gifts
What better way to say I love you...
Then with LeBeau Florist and Gifts
LeBeau Florist and Gifts
Located in two convenient locations
460 West Street, Amherst, MA, 253-6993
112 Cottage Street, Easthampton, MA, 527-2502
good thru Febraury 14th 2004
10% Off any Valentine purchase
Not Valid with any other coupon offer



Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
75 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Panda East
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi bar!
*OCMP accepted
*Delivery available!
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173



Spring Break Student Special
Havana, Cuba
Participate in a restoration project at Iglesia Baptista (church) in Havana
March 13-20, 2004
Trip Includes:
• Seven nights dormitory accommodations at the church
• All meals, transportation, and daily schedule
• License and visa for legal travel to Cuba
• Round trip air fare from New York City to Havana
Cost: $1695.00
For more Information or to Register:
413.637.3512

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Lemon Pepper Fish
- Vegan Cutlets (vegan)

Dinner
- Shrimp & Scallop Creole
- Beef Strudel
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

Friday
- High: 42
- Low: 24

Saturday
- High: 45
- Low: 6

Sunday
- High: 12
- Low: -7

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Photo Technician
Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor
Leah Wyner
Production Supervisor
Irene Rios
Production Staff
Molly Eggleston/ Oliver Chong

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your roommate is more grateful for your support than you'll ever know. You rock.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Use today to hone your skills making soft-serve cones. It's a valuable skill.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Stop being a hermit. Your ex is definitely not worth it. Neither is his car.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
There is a time to eat healthy foods. This is not that time. Eat chocolate. Lots of it.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
The gym is paying off; your butt looks great. Keep up the good work.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go shorty, it's your birthday. Except it's not. But that's okay.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Attendance in your early classes is not voluntary. Get up.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Spend Valentine's Day head banging. The music can never be too loud.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Tonight is an excellent night to dance on a table to the song, "Hypnotize."

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You're definitely getting lucky on Valentine's Day. There's no doubt.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Stop complaining. Not everyone is lucky enough to look as good as you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Lay off the late-night calzones for a while. You'll thank yourself.

Quote for the Day

"A bank is a place that will lend you money if you can prove that you don't need it."
-Bob Hope

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartment for Rent

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspensquare.com

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Ciera, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Employment

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Employment

Start your career now! Upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland. Customer service, wait staff, or retail experience ideal. This is a part-time position during the school semesters, and full time in the summer. The experience is a great introduction to a career track in business or marketing. Must be able to work Saturdays. Please call Amy at (413)781-0734 ext.732.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

Employment

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring. Experience preferred but will train. Come be a part of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Employment

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

For Rent

Spring Break Rental Daytona Beach, Resort Studio 1Wk March 14th-21st $1500.00 1-866-284-3972 Ref#8430

Roommate Wanted

Great House! Minutes from Campus Need responsible roommates Singles/groups welcome $325/month + 4 rooms open 12 months Starts June 1 Call or IM Lisa a.s.a.p.: (860) 227-4502, LMP3383

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992

Travel

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Travel

Spring Break 2004 It's here- book now! Lowest Prices-Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800 426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Hipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Clash of the Titans

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Thousands of fans. Two of the best teams in Hockey East. National attention. Implications for the rest of the season.

Tonight, the No. 13 Massachusetts hockey team hosts No. 1 Boston College (21-3-4, 12-1-3 Hockey East) in the first of a home-and-home set, and while there are still five more games after the affair at the Mullins Center (7 p.m.), it might as well be playoff time.

From the "white out" promotion, that will likely fill the student side of the arena with white T-shirts and leave few empty seats on the cushy side, to the fact that it could mean first place in the conference, to the home-ice advantage that's on the line for one team, the game is one of the bigger events to hit Amherst in quite a while.

The Minutemen (16-8-5, 12-4-2 HEA) feel it too.

"Obviously we're all looking forward to this game tomorrow," senior defenseman Thomas Pöck said. "[Seniors] Mike Warner, Nick [Kuiper] and I were talking about it, and we said, 'once in these four years we want to sell it out, we want to start doing that all the time,' and with six games left in our senior year, it's finally getting close to it, so obviously we're going to be excited. But once it comes to 7, it's hockey, it doesn't matter how many fans are there or not, we have to do the best we can. This is obviously a good team coming in, the most gifted in the country."

There's certainly no disrespect towards the Eagles coming from the Minuteman camp. But Pöck remains optimistic.

"Looking at [Boston College], we honestly have no chance going up with them to see who can score more goals, but if we go out there and play the way we know how to play, the way we played the last six games, we know that we can beat anyone."

The Eagles are tied with New Hampshire for the most goals in

See HOCKEY on page 6

Senior defenseman Thomas Pock leads all Minutemen in scoring with 29 points. UMass faces off against No. 1 Boston College tonight at the Mullins Center for a 7 p.m. face-off.

NASCAR season takes a fresh start

When the NASCAR season starts Sunday at the Daytona 500, many changes will be on display, in both sponsorship and personnel within teams, as well as a new points system.

With these changes, the usual contenders should again be a threat, not only for a win in the season's biggest race, but to challenge for the championship throughout the entire year.

Justin Marques

With both Dale Earnhardt Inc. cars of Michael Waltrip and Dale Earnhardt Jr. running strong in winter testing, don't bet against one of them winning a third Daytona 500 for car owner Theresa Earnhardt.

The Hendrick Chevy Monte Carlos driven by Jeff Gordon, Jimmy Johnson, Terry Labonte and rookie Brian Vickers should be strong if they are together by the end of the race. They may be able to work as a unit and take victory from the DEI contingent. All drivers with the exception of Vickers had very good runs during the Bud Shootout Saturday night.

Robert Childress Racing driver Kevin Harvick should also be a factor, as well as both Gibbs drivers, Tony Stewart (who would really like to change his luck at the big track) and Bobby Labonte.

Roush Racing has entered in a partnership with Robert Yates Racing on engine development, and they may be able to make the proper gains in horsepower to take victory at Daytona. With Yates driver Dale Jarrett winning last week's Bud Shootout, and Roush driver Greg Biffle surprising many during the next day's qualifying run and winning the pole for the 500, one can already see the progress made within this new partnership.

Kurt Busch is another driver who cannot be overlooked; his aggressive, take-no-prisoners style could really play to his advantage this year. In addition, Ricky Rudd has been fast all throughout testing and using Roush Racing engines, so he could be a dark horse to win the 500.

The Dodge teams don't seem to have a serious challenger at Daytona, except for Team Penske. Veteran Rusty Wallace wants a Daytona victory as much as anyone, and teammate Ryan Newman looks to rebound from his wild ride last year.

Bill Elliot is running a limited schedule in his retirement year, and going out with a win at Daytona would be a great end of a career for the two-time champion.

During last weekend's exhibition race at the track another challenger stepped up. Ganassi drive Jamie McMurray. McMurray gave his Texaco Dodge a very impressive run before being caught up in a crash. Now for the championship.

There has been an alteration this year to create more excitement during the late fall months by creating a new points system during the final ten races, which will be referred to as the "Chase For the Championship."

When the series rolls into Loudon, N.H. for race No. 26 of 36, the top 10 will be readjusted. The leader will receive 5050 points, and the rest of the

See NASCAR on page 6

Tennis team ready to take on the A-10

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

There's no doubt about it. The Massachusetts Women's tennis team is in for an exciting season, starting this weekend in a first-ever match against Syracuse.

UMass Coach Judy Dixon sees the match as a great way to start the season.

"We've been practicing now for two and a half weeks, and we're really ready to play," Dixon said. "I think the Syracuse match is a good first match to put us on the path to our goal for the season, which is to win the Atlantic 10 Championships."

It's not exactly the easiest thing to aim for, but if Dixon has any doubts, she doesn't show them. After an amazing season last spring, the team lost the A-10 title to powerhouse Temple. That's something Dixon wants to change this season, and she has an exceptionally talented group of players to make it happen.

Junior captain Sasha Edelstein and senior Jenny Munroe hold the top two positions for the team. Edelstein's biggest strength is her energetic court presence, and the international experience she brings from Haifa, Israel.

Munroe comes very highly ranked in the United States, but due to injury was unable to play until her senior year. Exceptionally smart on the court, Munroe hits hard and flat, and more often than not overpowers her opponent.

"[Munroe] is definitely the spark of the team," Dixon said, very confident about the top two spots this season. "[Munroe]'s hard to play against because the ball's coming at you very fast. With Sasha [Edelstein] on the other hand, it's not coming at you as fast, it's coming at you with a spin."

Stephanie Price, a two year member of the A-10 All-Conference team, will play in the number three spot. Another hard, flat hitter, her strength is her ability to hit with pace to all parts of the court, and her valuable experience with playing under pressure.

"[Price] has a lot of experience, especially in very crucial matches," Dixon said.

Freshman Christine Liehr from Germany holds the number four spot. An outstanding freshman who hits with spin, Liehr is a threat all over the court.

Dorothy Iwanowicz is on fire. She was undefeated in the conference last year playing position four, so Dixon is confident she will continue to dominate the fifth position this year.

"Iwanowicz's strength is that she hits the ball extremely early, putting pressure on her opponent," Dixon said.

Senior co-captain Susan Hyams will be playing position six with sophomore Jana Barteloni. Hyams, a four-year player and a lefty, has had more than enough wins to put herself on the UMass all-time lists for both singles and doubles.

"Susan [Hyams] not only has four years of experience, she was part of the team that went to the NCAAs one year, so she has experience in big matches," Dixon said. Bartoloni, who played position seven last year, hits the ball hard and has a lot of spin. She went undefeated in the fall, and one of her biggest strengths, according to Dixon, is her ability to move on the court.

Freshman Sadie Sandquist is currently recovering from an injury, but will definitely see some playing time later in the season.

The number one doubles team is powerful heavy-hitting duo Price and Sandquist, an intimidating force to be reckoned with.

"They're very hard to play against because it's like the ball's coming at you at a hundred miles an hour," Dixon said.

With such a solid team, Dixon's goal of winning the A-10 Championships is hardly far-fetched.

"I expect that we're going to have some bumps along the way, but if we can stay healthy, our goal is definitely attainable for sure," Dixon said.

UMass faces Musketeers

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

With the end of an unsteady season fast approaching the Massachusetts men's basketball team will take on Xavier, Saturday at 4 p.m. at the Cintas Center.

The Minutemen (9-12, 3-6 Atlantic 10) had their winning streak snapped last Sunday with a 66-59 loss to Dayton. The Musketeers (13-9, 4-5 A-10) are currently riding a three game win streak that includes wins against No. 10 Cincinnati and A-10 foes Fordham and Richmond.

UMass has had a week to prepare itself for this weekend's game and according to freshman guard Art Bowers, rest and time has helped them out in the past.

"It's kind of good," he said. "Usually when we have weeks off we come out and play well, this is a game we need to win, so hopefully we'll come out and play well.

Head coach Steve Lappas agrees that with more time than usual, more things can get accomplished.

"We still are going to do this as a two day prep like we do most of our preps but we were able to spend some time on our stuff which is going to help us for the game on Saturday," he said. "Work on our half court offense, work on our half court defense, work on a different defense than we've been playing lately, so we've been able to at least hone in on some of our things without worrying about Xavier for a couple days."

Senior guards Romain Sato and Lionel Chalmers have been major contributors for Xavier this season as well as the main producers in recent games. In the past three games, Sato has averaged 16 points, 3.7 assists and 11 rebounds, while Chalmers averaged 21 points 1.7 assists and 4.7 rebounds.

Prior to their 3-game streak Sato, Chalmers and the rest of the Musketeers struggled to find their rhythm. Now that they've settled in, Lappas knows that his young squad will be put to the test when it goes up against the strength and experience of Xavier, namely Sato and Chalmers.

GERALD H. LING

Sophomore Jeff Viggiano scored 11 points and grabbed 13 rebounds last Sunday against Dayton. Viggiano and the Minutemen face off against Xavier tomorrow at Cincinnati for a 4 p.m. tip-off.

"[Sato] is strong and he's a great offensive rebounder so those are big factors for us without a doubt," Lappas said.

I just heard he's a real good shooter," freshman guard Art Bowers said of Sato. "Very physically strong. He's one of the marquee players in the Atlantic 10."

"[Chalmers] is really good," Lappas said. "He's having a great year shooting very well from three doing a lot of good things. He's been underrated, when you play with West and Sato and he was hurt ... so he kind of went under the radar a little bit for this year, but he's a very good player."

Bowers has been a key player for UMass over the past few games, and although he struggled against Dayton, he knows that this is an important game in helping to determine his teams' future.

"I just do my regular routine, right now just working off this past week," Bowers said. "When my shots not working, what else can I do to help the team? Not rely on my shot. But I've definitely been working on it so when I come against Xavier I'll definitely be ready to play.

"They're definitely one of the top teams," Bowers said of Xavier. "We know in order to continue the season and play in the post season this is one of the

See BASKETBALL on page 6

Country music takes Mullins by storm

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Minutemen sell out Mullins, but can't top No. 1 Eagles

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 83

Student activists launch pro-Israel campaign

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Alliance for Israel recently organized a semester-long flyer distribution effort to promote Israel's image on the University campus, and launched its inaugural attempt yesterday after dark.

Pro-Israel student advocates met at the Hillel House, and passed through campus, posting in their wake, their messages of Israel's technological, environmental and humanitarian accomplishments.

Vice President of SAFI, Gilad Skolnick, organized the flyer campaign, which has involved over 20 students since its inception less than two weeks ago. To Skolnick, displaying a positive message of Israel is more important in promoting Israel than focusing on criticisms from the other side.

"Everyone focuses on the negative aspect of suicide bombing and people getting blown up from terrorism, and [hasn't] focused enough on the positive aspects of Israel, like a heart attack blood test diagnosis by phone," the sophomore communication and Judaic studies major said.

Indeed this complicated-sounding technology is only one of many modern conveniences the group brought to attention through its flyers. Also highlighted was cell phone technology, America Online Instant Messenger, the Intel Pentium MMX processor and Microsoft Windows NT. According to the group, Israel has played a significant role in the development of these technologies.

"When people think of Israel, they tend to think of it as a far away place that doesn't affect them, but here we are trying to show them that Israel affects them everyday and that it shouldn't be thought of as a distant place," said Steven M. Spiegel, a sophomore history major.

"These are all technologies that were either invented, or significant portions of [their invention] were the results of Israeli technological advances," said Meir L. Dashevsky, a sophomore philosophy major. "And these are things we just use every day."

According to Skolnick, 500 flyers were posted across campus in Marcus Hall, Thompson Hall, Herter Hall, Whitmore Administration Building and the Campus Center. There were nine messages the group posted, he said.

The group plans to continue its effort throughout the semester, on a consistent basis. The campaign will culminate with a celebration of Israel's Independence Day, on Apr. 26 of this year.

ANDY TAUER/COLLEGIAN

Play on

University of Massachusetts professor Eduardo Leandro's Percussion Ensemble performs for the Saturday "Day of Percussion" at the Fine Arts Center.

Nursing student missing for days

By Erika Lovley and Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

Police are investigating the disappearance of a University of Massachusetts student who was last seen at the site of a car crash on Monday, Feb. 9.

According to the Boston Globe, Maura Murray, 21, of Hanson, Mass. crashed her car into a snow bank last Monday in Haverhill, N.H. The accident was her second in three days; Murray had recently crashed her father's car on Saturday of the previous weekend.

Murray disappeared from the site of the crash after a resident tried to help and who had called the police, despite Murray asking him not to, the Globe reported. Murray was gone upon arrival of police, her car left abandoned and undrivable, the Globe said.

Chief Jeff Williams of the Haverhill Police Department does not think foul play was involved.

"Our concern is that she's upset or suicidal, something the family was concerned about," he told the Globe on Friday.

The accident took place along Route 112, about five miles away from Wells River, Vt., and a mile away from Swift Water Village by the Connecticut River.

Police used dogs, a helicopter and Fish and Game Officers to perform an immediate search around the crash site area and found nothing. The search has since been called off.

Murray is a junior nursing major, a Dean's List student who works in a local art gallery.

Two UMPD officers, Detectives Chris Thrasher and Brian Davies and two counselors from Mental Health Services visited a junior nursing class, Parent-Child Nursing, on Friday afternoon. Joan Cully, administrative director of the Office for the Advancement of Nursing Education and Eileen Breslin, dean of the school of Nursing were also present at the meeting.

In addition, an email was written by Breslin, and released to the UMass nursing community. According to the email, Murray sent an email to her faculty Monday afternoon at 1:24 p.m. indicating she was heading home for the week due to a death in the family and that she would contact everyone when she returned.

Lindsay Pemberton, a junior nursing major, has the same class schedule as Murray and was present for the meeting on Friday. Pemberton told The Massachusetts Daily Collegian that staff in the nursing department spoke to Murray's family, and were told that there were no recent family deaths.

"Also, her dorm room was all packed up, like she was planning on moving out," said Pemberton.

The email to the nursing community also stated that Murray called her boyfriend, Army Lieutenant Bill Rausch, Tuesday morning. At the Friday meeting police said that Rausch only heard someone breathing on the other line. The police were unable to trace the call.

According to Sharon Rausch, the boyfriend's mother, Murray had e-mailed her boyfriend on Monday afternoon, saying she needed to speak with him.

Murray's family, including Rausch, and his parents, have flown to New England and are passing out fliers along the New Hampshire-Vermont state boarder, hoping someone will recognize Murray.

"She was really quiet and didn't hang out with any of us," said Pemberton. "She was a sweet person, but she didn't get personal with anyone."

Murray and Rausch met at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

As of yesterday afternoon, the Haverhill police have had no leads in the case and hope that Murray will try to contact a friend or family member.

Click trick vexes Internet chatters

By Andrea Gross
Collegian Correspondent

Be careful what you click for: it's the lesson University of Massachusetts students on America Online Instant Messenger have been learning the hard way since last Tuesday.

Internet chatters who have clicked on what appears to be a harmless link, sent through AIM by their Internet buddies, have discovered there's more to a hyperlink than what meets the eye.

The link, which comes offering a link to games themed on capturing Osama bin Ladin and Saddam Hussein, downloads an unwanted program that uses the chatter's computer to both deliver potentially unwanted advertising messages and to send out the link to his or her entire buddy list.

"This is not a virus," said the Web site of Network Associates, the company that authors the McAfee software suite, including its well-used anti-virus program. "It is a potentially unwanted program that requires users to download an installer, agreeing to the terms of the program, which includes sending a message to all users on your AOL Instant Messenger buddy list with a link to the installer page."

This unwanted program, a type of software commonly referred to as Adware because of the content it delivers to the user's machine, installs at least two components, called Buddy Links and PSD Tools Instant Messenger Client. These programs are not affiliated with AOL.

Students at UMass say they are very annoyed by it. Mechanical engineering sophomore Joshua Halpin said after he clicked on the unknown link, he left his room for five minutes, only to find 20 instant messages from his buddies when he returned. The IM's inquired about the nature of the link, or warned him about what the link actually did.

"It made me dyslexic," Halpin grumbled about his many IMs. Out of the 191 people Halpin has on his buddy list, he has seen about five others actually download the program and unsuspectingly send him the bothersome links.

"I get like three IMs of that a day," said sophomore journalism major Chris Terrat, who also acquired the program. "A lot of people have complained about it."

Junior astrophysics major, Katherine Whitaker, said she is not very concerned that the program is sent to people on her buddy list because she believes that most people are conscious of the program by now.

Senior Technical Support Consultant, Kevin Skelly, of the UMass Office of Information Technologies drew a parallel between the "Buddy Links" program and the more well-known Adware.

"I guess you have to put it in the same category as Weatherbug. You get things you didn't intend to install," he said.

Instructions of removal can be obtained at

See ADWARE on page 3

Alleged child porn gig exposed

SOUTH YARMOUTH (AP) - A motel worker accused of photographing a young girl in the nude was arrested after police allegedly found hundreds of sexually explicit photographs of young girls in his home.

Robert E. Laplante was scheduled to be arraigned Monday in Barnstable District Court on three counts: possessing child pornography, enticing a child under 16 and posing a child in the nude.

"What we found in his house was very, very disturbing," Yarmouth Police Lt. Stephen G. Xiarhos told the Cape Cod Times.

The investigation began Friday when a psychologist at the girl's school told police a student there reported being photographed naked. Police searched Laplante's house and seized videotapes, cameras and several computers, Xiarhos said.

Police said they also found dozens of Barbie dolls and a collection of newspaper clippings of JonBenet Ramsey, the 6-year-old Colorado girl who was found murdered in Colorado in 1996.

— Associated Press

Kerry shakes things up; faces his own troubles

Recent campaign strategies changed

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

WAUSAU, Wis. (AP) — A confident John Kerry launched a full-throttle attack on President Bush's economic policies, mostly ignoring his Democratic rivals on the eve of the Wisconsin primary. Howard Dean's campaign shed another top manager and John Edwards vowed to press on no matter how he fares Tuesday.

Kerry, who has a commanding lead in the race to oppose Bush this fall, chided the president for taking time out Sunday to attend the Daytona 500, saying the country was bleeding jobs while he posed for a "photo opportunity." Bush had donned a racing jacket to officially open NASCAR's most prestigious event in front of some 180,000 fans.

"We don't need a president who just says, 'Gentlemen start your engines,' " Kerry said.

See CAMPAIGN on page 3

Delegate count

Breakdown of Democratic delegates allocated to candidates.

Kerry	741
Dean	188	2,161 needed for nomination
Edwards	166
Others	105

NOTE: Numbers are based on party and state rules, delegate interviews and analysis of election results by The Associated Press

AP

Kerry answers affair allegation

By Matthew Rosenberg
Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A woman who has been the subject of rumors linking her to Senator John Kerry denied Monday that she ever had an affair with the Democratic presidential candidate.

Breaking her silence four days after the allegations surfaced on the Internet, Alexandra Polier issued a statement to The Associated Press, saying, "I have never had a relationship with Senator Kerry, and the rumors in the press are completely false."

Kerry already has denied reports that he had an extramarital affair. On Monday, his campaign said he would have no further comment.

Polier's statement was released to the AP in Nairobi, where the 27-year-old freelance journalist is visiting the parents of her fiance, Yaron Schwartzman, an Israeli who was raised in Kenya. She previously worked as an editorial assistant for the AP in New York.

"Whoever is spreading these rumors and allegations does not know me," Polier said, appealing to the media to respect her privacy and the privacy of her fiance and his family.

Polier also took issue with reports that referred to her as a former Kerry intern.

"I never interned or worked for John Kerry," she told AP over the phone.

In a separate statement, Polier's parents, Terry and Donna Polier of Malvern, Pa., dismissed the "completely false and unsubstantiated" allegations about their

See AFFAIR on page 3

WTO chastized by speaker from Brazilian embassy

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Correspondent

A crowd of more than 100 congregated in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Friday afternoon to listen to Evandro De Sampaio Didonet address Brazil's role and objectives in the World Trade Organization and the Free Trade Area of the Americas negotiations.

Minister-Counselor Didonet, deputy for economic and trade affairs for the Brazilian embassy in Washington, D.C., who is in charge of coordinating Brazil's position in the World Trade Organization, highlighted issues before a panel of professors and a room of attentive students and guests about Brazil's emerging role in their involvement with the WTO and FTAA, and expressed eagerness for trade liberation.

"In Brazil, achieving trade surpluses is not a policy option, but rather an unavoidable requirement, given macroeconomic realities," Didonet said.

Brazil has been the leader in trade negotiations for many developing countries and is one of the most persistent arguers for concessions from the United States and the European Union.

According to Didonet, since the WTO meeting in Cancun, Mexico this past fall, there has been a growing awareness in developed countries about imbalances in the Multilateral Trade System and an acknowledgement of central importance in agriculture.

Didonet said Brazil has seen some element of positive developments since the WTO meeting in Cancun. However, "Brazil is approaching trade negotiations in a cautious manner," he said.

The WTO was established in 1995 and is a powerful new global commerce agency that transformed the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade into an enforceable global commerce code. The WTO is one of the main mechanisms of corporate globalization.

The WTO agreements have created a gap behind now-developed countries by banning developing countries from making improvements the same way developed nations used to, Didonet said. For developing countries, the ability to gain market access for exports under global trade rules is now conditioned on implementing changes to domestic policy, he said.

According to Didonet, no country has ever developed under the conditions and terms required by WTO rules.

Didonet said that his country, "will oppose any further liberalization that is not reciprocal in terms of market access to developed countries."

Didonet also touched upon matters involving FTAA, and highlighted a few main areas of negotiations from market access, agricultural services, investment, government procurement, competition policy and dispute settlement.

The FTAA is the expansion of the North American Free Trade Agreement to every country in Central America, South America and the Caribbean, except Cuba. The FTAA, currently being negotiated by 34 countries of the Americas, is intended to be the most far-reaching trade agreement in history.

Robert Pollin, UMass professor of Economics and Co-Director of the Political Economy Research Institute, took the podium as a commentator after Didonet's

See SPEAKER on page 3

Anti-Bush stance a new trick for Kerry

CAMPAIGN from page 1

"We need a president who says, 'America, let's start our economy and put people back to work.' "

Kerry for the most part has chosen in recent days to aim his Campaign 2004 rhetoric directly at Bush as he has lapped his competitors, winning all but the South Carolina and Oklahoma delegate-selection contests.

His broadside against Bush came as the president argued anew against any rollback in the tax cuts that Congress has passed at his behest, and on a day in which Dean divulged the departure of national campaign chairman Steve Grossman.

For his part Edwards declared "there are differences" with his Democratic rivals and said he was confident his campaign was gaining momentum. He said he would remain in the race well into March and the Super Tuesday round of electoral faceoffs.

Dean told reporters: "Let me remind you all that I have more delegates than everybody else in this race except John Kerry. So I think the campaign obituaries that some of you are writing are a little bit misplaced."

Kerry's latest criticism of Bush came during a town hall meeting at Northcentral Technical College, where he toured the school's machine tool lab and posed for press pictures with students who engraved an 40-pound aluminum plaque with "Wisconsin Backs Kerry in 2004."

Lasee Philips, who is learning about the electrical and mechanical trades at the school, rose during the forum and told Kerry his support for the North American Free Trade Agreement was "throwing some red flags in my mind."

After working 22 years as an injection molder in the same factory, Philips lost her job last year and blames the trade agreement.

Kerry responded that the United State initially gained jobs under NAFTA, but blamed subsequent losses on the failure to enforce side agreements on labor and environmental standards.

Speaker advocates for redistributive policies

SPEAKER from page 1

address to say that "all countries should practice free trade."

Didonet answered several questions from students and guests in an active discussion after his speech.

The final message conveyed by Minister-Counselor Didonet was that "trade must not only be to create wealth but to distribute wealth and to alleviate poverty in developing countries."

UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi, who is of partial Latin American descent, was in attendance at the symposium and introduced Minister-Counselor Didonet.

"This was a great program and a great symposium and this was a terrific start," he said. "Minister Didonet was very expert and well-prepared."

"His comments were clear and effective and I thought he really helped clarify a lot of complicated issues about the World Trade Organization and the negotiations between Brazil and the rest of the world," the chancellor said. "I think it was a great success."

The symposium took place in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union at 4 p.m. on Friday, and was partially funded by the Latin American Studies Consortium of New England and was co-sponsored by the Five College Latin American Studies Council.

The symposium continued Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. in the UMass Campus Center with five separate sessions covering topics ranging from transnational connections in and beyond Brazil, rural strategies for social reform, issues of belonging in Brazilian cities, politics and policies toward social change and diversity and the politics of identity.

Haitian rebellion takes central city, kills three

By Mark Stevenson
Associated Press

GONAIVES, Haiti (AP) — Haiti's rebellion spread to the central city of Hinche on Monday as rebels and former soldiers killed at least three officers at a police station. President Jean-Bertrand Aristide pleaded for foreign help to stop the bloodshed.

Approximately 50 rebels descended on the police station in Hinche, about 70 miles northeast of Port-au-Prince, according to a Haitian security official who spoke on condition of anonymity. They killed District Police Chief Maxime Jonas, pushed police out of the city, freed prisoners from the jail before burning the station and threatened government supporters, the official said.

At least 56 people have died since the rebellion aimed at ousting Aristide exploded Feb. 5 in the city of Gonaives.

Louis-Jodel Chanblain, a former Haitian soldier who led a paramilitary group known as the Front for the Advancement and Progress of Haiti, or FRAPH, which killed and maimed hundreds of people between 1991 and 1994, reportedly led the attack, according to witnesses.

The attack was considered a serious blow and the first to the city of 50,000 people where corn, millet and beans are produced. The rebels now control most roads leading in and out of the Artibonite district, a rich agricultural area home to almost 1 million people.

"Blood has flowed in Hinche," Arstide told reporters at a news conference late Monday, saying he had asked for technical assistance from the Organization of American States. "It may be that the police cannot cope with this kind of attack."

Arstide refused to talk about strategies for halting the unrest or whether he would ask for military assistance. He did, however, say the government would use peaceful means to quell the uprising that has prevented food, fuel and medical shipments.

"A group of terrorists are breaking democratic order," Aristide said. "We have the responsibility to use the law and dialogue to take a peaceful way."

Rebels armed with machetes and rifles escorted an aid convoy led by the Geneva-based International Committee of the Red Cross into Gonaives on Monday. The convoy was carrying 1.6 tons of supplies, including blood and surgical equipment.

A surgeon and a physician were also sent to treat some 40 people wounded in the fighting.

"We are here to bring urgently needed medical assistance to Gonaives," Pedro Isely, leader of the Red Cross mission in Haiti, said Monday after arriving in the city.

In addition to the medical relief, the international non-governmental organization, CARE, began distributing food to people in Gonaives. About 50,000 people will receive a gallon of vegetable oil, while others will get sacks of cereals, said Sandy Laumark, director of CARE in Haiti. The distribution will last about 10 days.

The rebels launched the rebellion from Gonaives, 70 miles northwest of Port-au-Prince, unleashing a deadly wave of violence that has spread to more than a dozen towns. Both sides have suffered casualties.

On Sunday night, Aristide loyalists reportedly killed two anti-government supporters in the port town of St. Marc.

Although the rebels are thought to number less than Haiti's 5,000-member police force, exiled paramilitary leaders and police have joined their forces, vowing to oust Aristide.

"They have joined us. We have created a national resistance," Winter Etienne, one of the rebel leaders in Gonaives, said Monday. "We're going to take a major part of Haiti."

Also helping is Guy Philippe, a former police chief who fled to the Dominican Republic after being accused by the Haitian government of fomenting a coup in 2002.

"We don't have any platform," said Philippe, 33, in an interview taped Saturday that was obtained by Associated Press Television News. "Our fight is for a better country. ... We are fighting for the presidency, we're fighting for the people."

Kerry puts down rumors

AFFAIR from page 1

daughter.

"We love and support her 100 percent and these unfounded rumors are hurtful to our entire family," the statement said. "We appreciate the way Senator Kerry has handled the situation, and intend on voting for him for president of the United States."

The statement did not address purported quotes by Polier's parents in the British tabloid The Sun that were harshly critical of Kerry. But in a later statement e-mailed to the AP in New York, Terry Polier said he was misquoted by the Sun and that his wife never talked to the Sun reporter. Contacted early Tuesday, the Sun had no immediate comment.

Kerry has won 14 of 16 Democratic primaries and caucuses, and is expected to be the Democratic challenger to President Bush in November.

Rumors of a relationship between Kerry and Polier first appeared Thursday on the Internet and were picked up by newspapers in several countries outside the United States. Few U.S. publications printed her name, however.

Asked Friday about the reports, Kerry told reporters: "I just deny it categorically. It's rumor. It's untrue. And that's the last time I intend to respond to questions about it."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Bourdas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Manager Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Ferron Salzaker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Manager Marrs Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagetto
Financial Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Riggins
Assistant Financial Richard Pacheco
Assistant Photo Lisa Lynch
Graphics Assistant Charlie Higgins
Arts, Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lesley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Financial Emilio Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

Adware infects campus through AIM client

ADWARE from page 1

the Network Associates Web site. They are involved in removing programs that have names related to Buddy Links, PSDT Messaging Integration and PSD Tools ChannelUp v1.0.

The Terms of Service of the Adware do stipulate its intension to distribute promotional material.

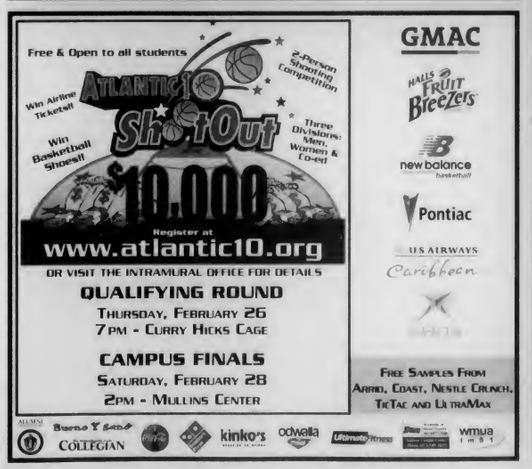
Skelly warns students to rid their system of Buddy Links. Even though no apparent danger can be seen right away, the program is too young to know if it actually can cause harm to computers, he said. The discovery date for Buddy Links was Feb. 10.

In the event that a student enjoys the game and wants to keep it, options are available to hinder the Buddy Links program's capability to spread through IM to others.

"Those whose computers harbor the program can also, according to PSDT's documentation, disable its ability to reach out by going to Start, Programs, buddylinks.net, selecting buddylinks.net Configuration, and then unchecking the box that reads 'Use buddylinks.net technology to send fun links to my friends'," Wired.com said.

America Online was not available for comment about the program.

On the Net:
http://cl.bai.com/scripts/content/v_101007.htm



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

General interest meeting

Wednesday night, 7 p.m.
in the Collegian newsroom
113 Campus Center Basement

For anyone interested in writing for the largest college daily in New England

Any questions, call 413-545-1809

Party at
The Blue Wall Pub!

21+ To Drink
18+ To Party

Every Wednesday Open Mic
Come perform for your friends and classmates
First come, first serve
sign-up sheet goes out at 6:00PM every Wednesday
Weekly winners will be awarded a full set Friday night in April!

Every Friday Live Local Music
Friday 2/13 at 7:00PM
Special Guests Pacifica Quartet
in a special intimate encore appearance following their morning performance at the Fine Arts Center.
Friday 2/20 at 7:00PM
Stay Behind and The Skeptics
Friday 2/27 at 7:00PM
Rudy Brown and Natural Descent

Admission to all events is free
Never a cover at the Blue Wall

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lombardi's new plan for UMass is promising

When Chancellor John V. Lombardi presented his 430 million dollar plan to make major improvements to the University of Massachusetts campus two weeks ago, there were a plethora of areas that any University-affiliated person could nominate that are in need of improvement. However, Lombardi's new plan looks as if it just might cover them all.

Over the course of the next five years, the Chancellor wants the University to spend over $430 million to replace deteriorating buildings and to raise the school's level of academic competition in order to attract better students, professors and faculty on a national level.

The Amherst Campus Strategic Plan does not seem as far fetched as the budget proposals of the past. For one, the proposed plan would invest in more student-faculty programs, such as the UMass-Amherst Baystate Hospital regional enterprise, and national research funding. This means attracting faculty who can earn grant money to fund the high quality research that makes UMass the fine research school that it is.

The recognition of high student fees, slow-to-improve participation with annual giving, and struggles with a small endowment is an important step in bringing the University into a higher national standing. Lombardi also recognizes that the budget cuts over the past few years have done significant damage to nearly all University programs – the intramural athletic department cuts being extremely prominent – as well as a $21 million cut in expenditures.

Better fund-raising methods and the acceptance of more out-of-state students will vary student population, as well as bring in more revenue, especially due to the fact that schools are now allowed to keep out-of-state tuition. Lombardi is outlining a major fund-raising plan to begin in the next 18 months.

By increasing the student population at a minimum of 300 students per year, the campus will slowly develop and grow, while taking in more revenue through tuition and student fees, which will provide reparations and means for a steady stream of new housing.

Reparations and restoration is one of the most necessary investments UMass could make. By keeping our buildings functional, attractive, the actively cared for, national attention to our campus and our academic programs will rise.

Years worth of ignoring buildings falling into disrepair now requires UMass to make a substantial investment – at least 52 million for each of the next five years. However, UMass Amherst does have several positive qualities going for it already. As the flagship school, the University offers NCAA Division I AA athletics, and is a prominent member of the Five College Inc., which helps to better the Five College area.

Basically, when it all comes down to it, UMass wants to remain a national competitor as an institution of higher learning. Our student fees are some of the highest for a public institution, and due to budget cuts, we haven't seen that money put back into our school. Rather, it has been used to fill in the gaps that budget cuts have created. Lombardi's vision for UMass is this: quality education should be available at an affordable price, with professors and students that rival those of private institutions.

Of course, in order for such dreams to come to reality, risks must be taken – the University will have to borrow money. $24 to $30 million dollars will need to be borrowed each year, with $16 million of that spent on repairs. Repairs will include many buildings dating back as far as the 1860's, a new heat plant, road repairs, safety upgrades and revamping sports facilities.

Although intimidating, Lombardi's plan actually appears to hold water – and could possibly float. Pulling the flagship school from the depths of the budget cut well will not be an easy task. However, if all goes to plan over the next five years, the University will be seeing stellar growth and improvement, not only in an aesthetic sense but the quality of education it provides its students as well.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Gay marriage is not at fault

Andrew Merritt

It's time to recognize the fact that all the critics of same-sex marriage are right. The value and sanctity of the institution of marriage is being threatened, and in some cases torn down, by a problematic, virulent force nobody is really willing to talk about.

The hitch? They're attacking the wrong target. Two men, or two women, who want to get married to each other, are in no way destroying the importance or relevance of marriage. On the contrary, two people who love each other, and want to signify that love by legally and spiritually committing themselves to one another for life is exactly the point of marriage, and the very reason it is so special.

But there is a social problem with marriage, an element of society that is ruining the sacredness of matrimony. And you have probably taken part in it.

The problem is on our television screens a dozen times a week.

It began with the highly watched, heavily anticipated "The Bachelor" show. The plot was simple: take one rich, improbably good-looking man, and have him whittle a list of women down to one who he liked a lot. Then, they go off and get engaged, married, and have a happily-ever-after life together.

Pop culture was enraptured. Television viewers across the country waited with bated breath to see who the lucky fella would eliminate next. They would become attached to some of the "contestants," a meat-market group of suitors who the man would hardly know when it came time to choose the woman with whom he'd spend the rest of his life.

It didn't stop there. Next, there was another installment of "The Bachelor," and then "The Bachelorette," to give a jilted woman from one of the first shows a shot at her own dream guy. Even worse, the concept grew in its morbid, cruel use of marriage and love as a ratings weapon.

Possibly the worst of all of these shows was "Married by America," where you, the lucky viewer, got to screen some poor schlub's choices for a mate, and then vote off the island the suitors you just didn't like so much. It's hard to tell what was more pathetic here: that someone would leave his or her fate up to the idiots gawking on prime-time TV at home, or that enough people actually watched the show to make it noteworthy.

Before we go on, it's important to note that a basis for "Married by America" is the arranged marriage, which is popular in countries that have likely never thought of the idea as something to put on TV. Don't get me wrong, I'm not even close to bashing that tradition. The bastardization of that tradition, though, well, that's fair game.

Of course, as is always the case in television development, one idea became the basis for a million spin-offs, some successful (see "Joe Millionaire"), some not so successful and all a travesty against the tradition and importance of marriage.

The true assailant of the American marriage is not same-sex unions ... it is the powerful and harmful aspect of our culture that has degraded marriage to the point that it can be exploited on television.

And now, a new spin: The ABC show "Extreme Makeover" recently featured a couple from Ipswich, Mass. who, before getting married, wanted extensive plastic surgery done to fix all of their superficial flaws.

While I have no right to tell these people they shouldn't have had plastic surgery — if they're disappointed with their looks, and have the means, go for it — it is troubling that their lives prior to the procedure were depicted as sad and unfulfilling, and then after the work was done, their wedding was presented as a triumphant event.

And it certainly was, but only because they were so gosh darn good looking. The minister who presided over the ceremony became a game show host, anxiously describing the "big reveal" that has become the climax of every "Extreme Makeover" episode.

It's all enough to make you want to forget marriage altogether.

Full disclosure: I am an only child, and my parents were divorced when I was three years old. As a result, marriage has had a different meaning for me than I suspect for others. It has become more important than almost anything in life. Marriage is, in my humble opinion, the most amazing, honorable, admirable thing two people in love with each other can do. And when I see that it is being degraded to the point that a coiffed, tanned TV host is guiding a woman's hand through the hole in a frosted-glass partition, so that a complete stranger on the other side can slide a ring onto it, I feel incredibly betrayed.

We have lost touch with what is special and holy about marriage. We have lost our connection to what makes the ring important. It doesn't matter how pretty the other person is, or whether or not they also like opera. It should be up to nobody but the two people getting married to make the decision.

And yet, we watch. We give the networks reason to sell ad space. We cross our fingers and close our eyes, just praying that Trista will pick the right guy, the guy we like more than the other guy, who was somehow better than the other 40 shallow, fame-hungry participants in this carnival of depravity.

All this, while the divorce rate in the United States reaches an abominable number, predicted to be as high as 50 percent by the U.S. Census Bureau. While that number isn't entirely perfect, it does suggest an alarming trend. The true assailant of the American marriage is not same-sex unions, same-sex marriage, or any semantic variation. It is the powerful and harmful aspect of our culture that has degraded marriage to the point that it can be exploited on television.

That two people are so in love with each other that they want to get married is enough for me. And it is a disturbing hypocrisy that one of the leading voices in the anti-gay marriage conflict are religious groups, when the highest divorce rates come from marriages between two religious people.

We must stop attacking the idea of same-sex marriage, because it has absolutely the same value as an opposite-sex marriage. We must refocus our criticisms on our own culture, which allows the manipulation of marriage to run rampant enough to make the idea of matrimony fodder for sweeps week.

Material from Americans for Divorce Reform was used in this column.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist.

Fetuses and PETA

Zach Oelschlegel

"PETA believes that animals deserve the most basic rights —consideration of their own best interests re-gardless of whether they are useful to humans. Like you, they are capable of suffering and have interests in leading their own lives; therefore, they are not ours to use — for food, clothing, entertainment, or experimentation, or for any other reason."

-People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals

I confess. I'm that guy. I'm the kind of guy who throws red paint onto mink coats; I'm the kind of guy who will sit on top of a tree to save it from despicable tree-cutters, and I'm that same guy who will fly through the air to take a bullet for a deer. The last time I ate meat was 15 years ago, as my mother force-fed me bratwurst at the timid age of five, only to have it spewed right back at her in violent fashion. I cried knowing that I had just eaten Porky Pig, and vowed from that day on animals were my friends, and plants were to be my mortal enemy. Like the food I eat, PETA and I were peas and carrots.

It sounds extreme, and it is extreme in comparison to everyone else, but PETA members are the only people thinking clearly these days. It boggles the mind how people could hear the screech of a cow as it gets slaughtered and still not feel remorse for literally licking their chops hours afterward. We can think of victories PETA has had in ensuring dolphin safety with fisher's nets, yet pigs, an animal of close intelligence to the dolphin, are still inexplicably eaten at an alarming rate. It's scary to think of the society we live in.

There is one thing, however, that I find wrong with PETA. Nothing is ever perfect, and PETA is no exception. There is one animal they left off the list of endangered species, one just as smart as the purpose if not smarter, one animal with the potential to rule them all.

Fetuses.

That's right, those little gobs of tissue that women seem to carry around with them from time to time. People may not classify them as animals because they haven't seen daylight, but in my mind, if it looks like an animal and moves like an animal, it's animal in our hands (or wombs). Sadly, the demise of the fetus is along the lines of the deer being shot for sport: There is no use for the fetus after death; it just rots away with the other dead animals in the dumpster or in other cases the waste treatment plant.

I can only imagine that every time a fetus is done away with, Bambi thinks to himself, 'This is one for our side!'

The worst kind of assassin in the hunting world is the one who kills or maims for his own enjoyment. Fishermen who mutilate cobia or marlin with their hooks in the brutal practice of "catch and release," or marksmen who shoot down deer to simply massage their own egos are among the most vile murderers in the land. Cows, pigs and animals with beautiful fur don't die in vain, like the fish or birds do; at least they stave off starvation for a hungry child or keep humans warm in the form of a coat, ultimately serving some purpose after death, despite how grisly that purpose may be.

Fetuses, however, are in the same boat as the deer. Instead of being useful after their death as a tasty late night snack, or their soft skin made into coats not unlike the leather jackets worn at 1980s parties, they are wasted. It just begs you to cry out, "Why?!" when you consider what could have been. If you aren't quite as enlightened as I am on the subject of fetal consumption, read Jonathan Swift's essay "A Modest Proposal," where he spells out the dishes that can be prepared using animals of this kind. In a world where people are dying daily of starvation, the fact that fetal consumption isn't even considered an option in many areas where eating other animals is commonplace, is completely outrageous. The same goes for freezing children stuck in the throes of Siberia.

I'm trying to convince myself that it's a type of affirmative action. Since fetuses come from a class of animals that tends to distinguish itself separate from the rest of the animal kingdom, I think this is an equalizer in the grand scheme of things. Animals have been killed since the beginning of time, but this fetus slaying is somewhat recent, since it was only allowable in a recent Supreme Court ruling from 1973. I can only imagine that every time a fetus is done away with, Bambi thinks to himself, "This is one for our side!"

It would take many years for the animals to get even with the fetus species in terms of total deaths, but I know two wrongs don't make a right. Just because the fetal ancestors continue to massacre other animals, it doesn't make it OK to let the fetal killing continue.

Ghandi once said, "Non-violence is the greatest force at the disposal of mankind. It is mightier than the mightiest weapon of destruction devised by the ingenuity of man." When we stop killing these fetuses, we will be that much closer to having a weapon of the magnitude Ghandi speaks of. PETA should be ashamed for not making a stand against these horrible acts. I mean, they're all animals.

Aren't they?

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Hearing the whistle before the smoke begins to rise

Yousef Munayyer

It turns out that weapons of mass destruction are a threat we should be worried about from abroad. Just not from Iraq. In fact, the truth is the biggest proliferation scandal to date has just recently been uncovered, and it originates in Pakistan. Abdul Qadeer Khan, or AQ Khan as some are calling him, confessed to sharing atomic secrets that he attained while working on Pakistan's nuclear weapons program.

Khan is considered the 'father of the bomb' in Pakistan and is revered by many Muslims across the globe for helping to bring such a power to a Muslim nation. This put Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf in a very tight spot. Could he, the secularist military leader of Pakistan who has recently been the target of two assassination attempts by radical fundamentalist Muslim groups, punish the 'father of the Muslim bomb'? Of course not, and he chose to pardon him completely. Any other alternative would have been politically and perhaps literally suicide.

Pakistan had just become America's best friend in the region after 9-11 and these events will surely put that relationship to the test since Khan was found to have shared secrets with Libya, Iran and North Korea. Not exactly our choice bedfellows, not this decade at least.

When it comes to proliferation, the talking heads in the defense department are caught off guard. All of a sudden the pre-empive-strike-if-they're-not-with-us-they're-against-us nonsense does not work. They find no other way to deal with this than containment, appeasement and (gasp!) international law. That's right: Washington is beginning to talk about treaties and international agreements again. For the past few years, I would have believed they cut those terms out of the white house dictionary. I figured that would make some room for all the other words the president has notoriously made up.

Still we have to be serious about this threat. In doing this, we have to analyze global proliferation and think diplomatically. "Speaking softly" is key, because when you are dealing with other nuclear powers, they all have "big sticks."

The big question will become actually implementing a policy to deal with these issues and to do so we cannot ignore the nation in the Middle East with the largest nuclear arsenal: Israel.

Not many people associate Israel with nuclear power because many facts still remain unclear. This is partially due to the fact that the Israeli government has never acknowledged, or for that matter denied, possessing weapons of mass destruction. Also, a recent amendment to the National Security Act bans high resolution imaging from non-government satellites over Israeli soil. Why is it that Israel is specified as a place that shouldn't be seen from the sky? Why does our government want to create this blind spot on the map of proliferation?

What is known is that sometime around 1958, with French assistance, Israel began developing the "Dimona Reactor," a nuclear facility with a heavy water reactor capable to reaching high enough levels of power to produce weapons grade uranium. The facility in the Negev desert was kept highly secret, and it took the CIA about three years to figure out what was going on. At that point, the Eisenhower administration passed on to the Kennedy administration all that it knew about the facilities and the CIA took some heat for the blunder.

Then in 1986, a former Israeli nuclear technician named Mordechi Vanunu revealed to the London Times that the facility was much more active than initial projections estimated and that Israel has a dangerous nuclear arsenal. It is unclear why Vanunu revealed this information; maybe he just needed to get this off his chest. Still I think it's appropriate to take a moment to think about Vanunu, who was captured and taken to Israel to serve a prison term in solitary confinement, because he may be the last person employed by the Israeli government to have a conscience.

Israel easily has delivery capabilities with Jericho missiles that can carry warheads over 1,200 miles. This poses an immediate threat to surrounding capitols like Damascus, Cairo and Tehran.

The Library of Congress Federal Research Division reported that in 1988 Israel has somewhere between 100- 200 bombs. The same report also notes that 100 kilograms of enriched Uranium was found to be missing from an Apollo, Pa. facility and evidence of a conspiracy with Israel was noted. It further reports that 200 tons, yes TONS, of ore disappeared from a vessel in the Mediterranean in 1968 and was likely diverted to Israel.

U.N. resolution 687 at the end of Gulf War I, which was a basis for sanctions and resolution 1441, which was used by President Bush as approval for Gulf War II recalls "the objective of the establishment of a nuclear-weapons-free zone in the region of the MIDDLE EAST."

Iran's WMD threat is growing, but we cannot expect them to halt their programs if Israeli nukes are pointed at their major cities.

Bush wants to talk tough on proliferation and banning weapons, but if he is going to be serious about it he has to be ready to attack the Israeli WMD problem.

The U.S. may trust Israel, but it is time to verify.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
all-staff meeting is this Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the newsroom.
We are looking for new writers.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Stirring the masses

Toby Keith rocks UMass

By Emilie Duggan
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — For a venue that has had trouble selling events in the past, taking a risk and bringing in a controversial act like Toby Keith was a brilliant move on behalf of the Mullins Center. The Northeast is a market often overlooked by country acts but those that do make it here never have trouble drawing a crowd, and Toby Keith's appearance in Amherst on Thursday was no exception.

From the opening song to the final notes of an all-too-brief encore, Keith rocked the crowd with a raucous set lasting just shy of two hours. He kept the crowd laughing with his deadpan comments ("Everywhere I go I find a crowd of rednecks"), cheering wildly at his politically incorrect "bus songs" that will never be released to radio and stomping their feet, begging for more of what can only be called great country music.

Toby Keith
Mullins Center
UMass
Feb 12

Sharing the stage with the larger-than-life country star was a 13-member band that included a trumpet, a saxophone, and a trombone, as well as three female backup singers whose only job, it seems, was to model the latest belly-bearing fashion trends. Purists would probably object to a theatrical tour like this, arguing that pyrotechnics and elaborate sets have little place on the country music stage. But, Keith never claimed to be a purist and those critics must have never seen Keith's show.

Keith opened his show with a video where he and country music parodist, Cledus T. Judd, provide the voices of two dogs, one of which has "made it big." The crowd reacted to various clips of Dan Rather (boos), Keith's brief promotional appearance in a professional wrestling ring (cheers) and Natalie Maines of the Dixie Chicks (more boos).

It would be easy to get lost in the humor of the show — and there is a lot of it — but the key to a Toby Keith concert is the music. The underlying barroom, meat market, pick-up chicks theme of "I Love This Bar" is amusing, but it was Keith's strong baritone and the tight performance of his band that made the song flawless. The same thing applied to every song of the evening. With talent like that, it's hard not to respect the music.

Keith is as expert at plucking the heart-strings as he is the guitar strings. One of few

See TOBY on page 7

Country music's 'Shock' rocker, Toby Keith, pictured above in Albany in November, played to a sold-out crowd at the Mullins Center Thursday night.

Country gets 'Shocked'

By Emilie Duggan
Collegian Staff

Given Toby Keith's penchant for spouting off at the mouth in the most un-politically correct manner possible, it's hard to imagine a time when he sang about unrequited love or a simpler way of life as a cowboy.

Keith's latest album, "Shock 'N' Y'all," does it's best to erase any remaining memory of the way things used to be, and Keith makes it abundantly clear what he is all about. He likes beer, women and the good ol' U.S.A. He doesn't like critics or the Taliban. Keith is the kind of artist the critics love to hate and the fans love to love. And if you don't like him, he doesn't particularly care.

Toby Keith
'Shock'n Y'all'
Dreamworks

With his outspoken, blatantly rightwing slant on politics, it is easy to dismiss Keith as a redneck from the backwoods of Oklahoma — indeed, he seems to enjoy being a redneck. His album title is a bad play on the military slogan from the war in Iraq, and he's downright notorious for being the country bumpkin that took on Dixie Chick Natalie Maines in a war of opinion. But don't let that deter you. Keith's new album will win you over, country fan or not.

This album starts out innocently enough, with the tune "I Love This Bar," Keith's first number-one single. It's representative of stereotypical country-song subjects but is absolutely different from any country song released in the past 20 years. From the opening twang of the electric guitar, it's clear why this has become a fan favorite. With lines like "I like my truck/ I like my girlfriend/ I like to take her out to dinner/ I like a movie now and then/ but I love this bar," Keith appeals to the redneck in everyone.

It is a mid-tempo salute to something his fans, and college students can relate to: drinking. "I Love This Bar" gives a nod to every group. From hookers to lookers, bikers to yuppies, if you've been to a bar, you can appreciate this song.

"Whiskey Gal," is a catchy ditty describing Keith's ideal woman as a "ragged on the edges girl," but that's OK because he likes them "rough." She turns her nose up at beer, doesn't like roses and champagne, and prefers a '69 Mustang with "four on the floor" that he can "drive real fast." She drinks whiskey because there "just ain't enough burn in tequila." The song veers into misogynistic territory with lines like, "Don't

See SHOCK'N Y'ALL on page 7

Pearl Street gets funky with Addison Groove Project

Northampton plays host to notorious jamband

Brendan McGinn of Addison Groove Project rocks out at Pearl Street Friday night.

By Bradley Farberman
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — When New England's favorite sons, Addison Groove Project, threw down a heaping mess of funk last Friday night, an enthusiastic Pearl Street crowd responded in kind: They got funky. The Boston-based quintet coerced the room into shaking it for two expert sets of jazz/rock mayhem, making it difficult to keep both feet planted on the floor at any given time.

Opening with live staple "The Reverend," the Project gave its audience a taste of what they're all about — fast, up-tempo funk strewn with James Brown horn lines, chunky key work, chicken-scratch guitar and competent vocals. The tune bounced and bumped around the club, often serving as a showcase for the group's superior horn section, rounded out by Ben Groppe and Dave Adams on tenor and alto saxophones, respectively.

And out of that funky madness came David Bowie's "Fame," a rollicking cover that made the people move.

And while the Project hardly explored new territory with their reading of the classic rock standard, the tune was executed excellently, and proved a highlight of the first set (their last show at Pearl Street included a take on Pink Floyd's "Have A Cigar," and they hit Stevie Wonder's "Boogie On Reggae Woman" on New Years; the group is notorious for spontaneously busting out fun cover songs).

As did "Brown Sunlight," an Adams original which also featured the composer on lead vocals, a welcome surprise (guitarist Brendan McGinn doubles as primary vocalist). This fairly new piece has a smooth feel to it and a vibe that owes more to the 1970s than 2004, thanks to pianist Rob Marscher's synthy keys-work. "Crullers and Nyquil," a newer instrumental featuring Groppe on flute, also conveyed a vintage feeling, channeling Herbie Hancock's Head Hunters for inspiration.

New England-based band Addison Groove Project brought down the house when they brought their funkified sound to Northampton this weekend.

Another vocal tune, "Scratchy," also found its place in the ensemble's first set. McGinn's voice, a somewhat less sophisticated instrument, guided this tune through more pop-ish territory, complete with feel-good lyrics. "When we walk away from one thing, we're just moving towards the next," he sang. "Turning Points" capped off the first set with its intense stop-time movements and Parliament-Funkadelic vibe; it swelled to a fiery climax and relaxed back to the melody.

Addison Groove Project
Pearl Street
Northampton
Feb. 13

In celebration of Marscher's birthday, the mellower second set opened with a number of rock covers sang by the keyboardist, including Squeeze's "Take Me I'm Yours." But while the band gleefully hammed it up onstage, the crowd lost interest. The room had cleared out some by the conclusion of their mini rock set, and even a spirited take on DJ Shadow's "Organ Donor" could not salvage the evening's vanished momentum. The kind patrons of the Pioneer Valley had come to grab a taste of George Clinton or Miles Davis, not the band that brought you "Pulling Mussels (From The Shell)."

However, the Project closed out their Pearl Street performance true to form: damn funky. Despite the group's brief foray into the annals of rock stardom, Addison Groove Project delivered the goods last Friday night. Their sound was full and rich, and suffered little from the impermanent departure of bassist John Hall for medical reasons (Marscher's left hand supplied bass lines all night).

BNL plays 'everything for everyone' at Mullins

Steven Page and the rest of the Barenaked Ladies rocked the Mullins Center on Valentine's Day. The group is touring in support of their new album 'Everything For Everyone.'

New disc is timeless

Lyn Paul Junction hit 'bullzeye'

By Deborah Geiger
Collegian Staff

Lyn Paul Junction may be another band out of Boston, but as the opening track on "Bullzeye" — their new full-length album proclaims — they're not the "same old s."

The last time the northeast tried to put out pop music, the sound came off as a blatant resurrection of the folksy sound of 1970's rock 'n' roll: end results being acts like the Abba Teens. Lyn Paul Junction has thankfully come along and made good for the New England music scene.

Lyn Paul Junction formed in 2001 with singer-songwriter Lyn Paul on guitar, keys and percussion, Sean McNeely on bass and background vocals, Tommy Pope on lead guitar, and Ed Loring on drums.

"Stop and Smell the Roses" lyrically paints a glorified image, while backup vocals echo the upbeat and not-too serious sentiment of the track. "She never took the time to stop and smell the roses. She always drinks his wine, diamonds in her eyes, look so frozen."

"Nobody" is a tune with some colorful, serious and timely blend of messages. "Nobody trusts the clergy; nobody has much faith. Nobody gets a fair jury when the victims feel the pain," the track cynically proclaims. "Nobody wants to see, nobody wants to be ... Nobody's satisfied ... Nobody to sympathize." Lyn Paul's driving vocals, along with McNeely's sullen bass, join forces, driving the listener to repeat these lyrics over and over.

You may have heard "If You Want to Be Free" — a bonus track on "Bullzeye" — on MTV's Fraternity Life in October 2003. The chemistry behind the members of Lyn Paul Junction is fraternal indeed — serious tracks intertwine effortlessly with lighthearted jingles such as "Gotta be the One:" "Let's get together and tumble, my heart pounds like thunder, whenever she talks, whenever she walks by me ... she's gotta be the one ... she's gotta be the one for me." Ed Loring is not afraid to take chances, either, as the drum quickens speed like Abebe Bikila at the 1960 Olympics.

Lyn Paul Junction
'Bullzeye'
Blackbird

The songs have a timeless feel to them, and the listener will get the sense that these are tracks he or she has heard before. But these songs are new — and they're not the same. "When Friday night comes round, we'll be hitting the town ... when Saturday night she's free, gonna make her my queen ... oooh, she's my queen, she's obscene, my mean green machine!" Lyn Paul croons on one track. The song is a weekend anthem in the making that's sure to make an unexpected hit at your next party.

"I feel myself dreaming away ... passing the time away" is the last thing you'd expect to hear Lyn Paul sing wistfully, but this ensemble's versatility comes through in the plethora of songs on "Bullzeye." Sullen guitar picks up where you expect vocals, an unexpected touch on "Daydreaming."

"I'm such a fool who loves to dream away, Catch me before I fall, And I feel myself dreaming away" are lyrics we can all relate to, and sing along to mentally and vocally — especially if you're still hitting those cups.

"A Boy named Lyn (Sue)" is a surprising throwback to storytelling rock, but still doesn't hearken back to divorces and ghost towns. "Honey Child" is a compilation of AC/DC-like tendencies, with a compulsive beat and 1970s Deep Purplish charm — another excellent attribute of Lyn Paul Junction's sound.

Lyn Paul Junction is a great choice if you're looking for something new with an old twist. If you like energy, if you like to be the first of your friends to 'discover' a band, and most of all, if you don't want the "same old s," then pick up Lyn Paul Junction's "Bullzeye."

Perfect chemistry for Sandler and Barrymore

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

First date, 50th date or 50th wedding anniversary, Valentine's Day is a day of kisses, chocolate and for those of us lucky enough, the 'L' word. "50 First Dates" the new romantic comedy that opened Friday just short of V-Day, starring "The Wedding Singer" duo Barrymore and Sandler had impeccable timing. This is one of those strange incidents that a movie, because of its holiday appeal, will very likely bring in more box-office the second day of release than the first.

For those of you who braved the long lines of smooching lovers dressed in red at the theater this weekend and saw this wonderfully quirky little film, consider yourself lucky. With the 'L' word in the air and Cupid sitting on your shoulder, you saw this movie in the ultimate atmosphere. It is probable that your over-the-top, enlightening experience will not be matched when you run out to buy the film on DVD in a few months. But do not despair, you can always wrap it up in heart paper and put it in a perfumed drawer to ferment until next February.

'50 First Dates'
Directed by Peter Segal
Starring Adam Sandler, Drew Barrymore
Columbia
Rated PG-13
99 mins
Grade A

Drew Barrymore and Adam Sandler reunite for '50 First Dates.' The pair last worked together on the 1980s inspired 'The Wedding Singer.'

A joint production effort by Flower Films (Barrymore's film company) and Happy Madison Productions (Sandler's film company), the premise on which this new production rests is one of difficult humor. Lucy Whitmore — played by Barrymore — is a girl who has experienced severe brain trauma and cannot retain short-term memory. Henry Roth (Sandler) is a womanizer who falls in love with Lucy and makes it his mission in life to be with her. Because she awakes every morning, forgetting everything that happened the day before, this relationship is — in a sick and twisted way — ideal for Henry, who is afraid of commitment.

Like Woody Allen's, Sandler's comic characters are always fallible in one area but then redeemable in others. His weird and maybe selfish obsession with Lucy turns into a blatant refusal to give up on her. As the movie progresses, the relationship goes from kind of disturbing to really moving. By the time credits roll the audience is trying to figure out what Lucy and Henry's babies would look like.

Making this disorder the impetus of the audience's laughter might seem insensitive to politically correct viewers. However, many films explore the inherent drama that psychological disorders possess and with no criticism to boot. Films like "A Beautiful Mind" and "Rain Man" certainly walk the thin line of social commentary and exploitation of very powerful diseases. More thematically related to "50 Fist Dates" is "Memento" about a guy who has the very same memory disorder as Lucy, but it's set in a very different, thriller-type atmosphere. The fact that Lucy's disorder is handled in a manner that alludes to hope and progress in her life, the comedic treatment of this disorder is appropriate and results in a feel-good experience for the audience.

Sandler charms audiences in his latest romantic comedy.

Perhaps the most insensitive sequence in the movie is the accident that procures the head injury. In order to keep the audience laughing, the accident is a collision with cows and pineapples, in other words, watered down and laughable. One must wonder why this scene, which was shot in flashback, was deemed necessary. The film would have maintained its well-controlled and sweet humor if it weren't for this moment. Although, one must wonder if it is hypocrisy to favor one type of comic "exploitation" of a rare disease, over another not-so-rare tragedy.

Among the supporting cast, actor Rob Schneider who plays Ula, a crazy one-eyed Hawaiian with an arsenal of little children and a proclaimed "ugly wife," gave the most shining performance. Another fantastic, if not surprising, performance came from Sean Astin who plays Lucy's brother Doug, a steroid addict with a lisp. Most recently playing Sam Gamgee in the huge "The Lord of the Rings" success, it was delightful to see this hobbit turned superstar tackle a less serious roll.

Overall, this Valentine's Day treat was worth waiting in lines full of P.D.A. before Adam Sandler breaks out with some of his old school humor and sings a song reminiscent of his 1990's album "They're All Gonna Laugh at You." Young women in the audience giggle and wonder why they find themselves strangely attracted to the egg-headed geekboy. Drew Barrymore has seemingly found the fountain of youth and looks just as young, if not prettier than she did in "Mad Love."

And the chemistry between these two is simply unmistakable

win a trip to europe! contiki.com/campus
>save $150 to europe
>looking for a good time?
>8 day berlin/prague getaway
explore the czech republic and germany!
>10 day london/paris getaway
experience the best of england and france!
>13 day simply italy
florence, venice, rome, pisa and more!
>14 day european discovery
explore eight european countries!
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com
contiki
europe · australia · new zealand · america · can

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
Cheap Fares? Budget Hotels? Advisors Who Get It?
This ain't your parents' travel agency... it's yours.
London.....$245
Amsterdam.....$245
Rome.....$245
Brussels.....$245
Miami From $740 » 6 nights
Vegas From $646 » 6 nights
Fares round trip from Boston and prices are per person. Subject to change and availability. Package examples are based on double occupancy. Tax not included. Restrictions and exclusions apply. Fares are valid for students and youth under 26.
BOOK IT BEFORE THE THRILL IS GONE.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
44 Main Street
(413) 256.1261
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
• The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
• The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
• Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

the source
(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

TuesdayFebruary17

ART

The University Art Gallery in the Fine Arts Center is currently hosting an exhibition of images of landscaping. The exhibit, titled "The Intimate Expanse — Recent Works of Alumni of the Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning," features projections onto the walls of the gallery that show the artistic accomplishments of landscape design. The works will be on display until Mar. 12. Admission is free.

The Student Union Art Gallery will host a "Design & Engineering Exhibition" today through Feb. 27. Today marks the opening of the exhibit that puts both two- and three-dimensional works of engineering design on display. The gallery is located in the Student Union and admission is free.

BOOKS

Award winning African-American poets Tim Seibles and Honoree Fanonne Jeffers come to Smith College tonight at 7:30 p.m. Both poets will be on hand after the reading in Stoddard Hall to sign books. The event is free and open to the public.

WednesdayFebruary 18

BOOKS

Broadside Bookshop in Northampton will host author John C. Bonifaz tonight at 7:30 p.m. Bonifaz will be reading and signing his new book "Warrior-King: The Case for Impeaching George W. Bush." The reading is free and open to the public.

FESTIVALS

As part of the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival, Emmy award-winning director Susan Froemke will appear tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Amherst College's Stirn Auditorium. The director will introduce her ground-breaking film "Lalee's Kin" and will also be on hand for discussion. This event is free and open to the public.

The Five College Poetry Fest kicks off tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Amherst College's Converse Hall. The Fest will feature readings from student hailing from each of the five colleges, including Christina Brown and Kathryn Puerini from UMass.

ThursdayFebruary 19

BOOKS

The Odyssey Bookshop, located in South Hadley, hosts Anita Shreve tonight at 7 p.m. The best-selling author will read from her latest release, "All He Ever Wanted." Prior to the reading Shreve will participate in a small book discussion group at 6 p.m. See The Odyssey prior to the reading for details.

FridayFebruary 20

MUSIC

UMass-based bands Stay Behind and The Skeptics will play the Bluewall tonight. The show starts at 8 p.m.

Tony Vacca & World Rhythms hit the stage of the Iron Horse Music Hall tonight at 7 p.m. Defined by the band as "an organization that reflects the global nature of music," Vacca and company will play an eclectic repertoire of collaborative efforts fusing jazz and world music. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

SaturdayFebruary 21

PERFORMING ARTS

New World Theater presents The Pioneer Valley Performing Arts High School production of "West Side Stories" tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The performance is described by the New World Theater as a "multi-dimensional exploration of race and place through music, dance, sketch comedy, satire and drama." Tickets $15 for the general public, $8 for seniors and low-income patrons and $5 for students. Second performance Sunday at 2 p.m.

weekly pinup

KEEPING IT TOGETHER

Acoustic pop-rockers Guster will play the Calvin Thursday night at 8 p.m. The trio, originally scheduled to play in December, will come to Northampton along with opener Graham Colton. Tickets are $25.

SundayFebruary 22

PERFORMING ARTS

Keep Rising to the Top, a New York-based dance troupe will perform in Northampton's Academy of Music Theater today at 2 p.m. The hip hop/ salsa dance company will be accompanied by La Santa Luz, an innovative Flamenco company and Boston's own Capoeira Brasil Boston. Tickets are $6 in advance and $8 at the door.

Keith takes genre to next level

UMass shocked 'n awed by Toby

SHOCK'N Y'ALL from page 5

my baby look good in blue jeans/ tight on the top with a belly-button ring," and "When the bartender says/ for the lady what's it gonna be/ I tell him ..."

In "Nights I Can't Remember, Friends I'll Never Forget," a song with a south-of-the-border feel, Keith recalls his wild school years with lyrics like, "We partied through college/ acquired some knowledge/ never did get a degree." Fat-boy mentality reigns supreme in this song when he sings about one of his friends that "downed every beer in the cooler just tryin' to drink that poor thing pretty." This song may just become the anthem of fraternities everywhere.

Traditionally, there are certain expectations that come with recording a country album, certain bases that must be touched. A good country album has a song about God, one about patriotism, one about drinking, a few sappy love songs and one that represents every stereotype about the genre. With Keith's reputation for bucking tradition in all that he does, is it any surprise that while this album is, without doubt, country, it is far from conventional?

"American Soldier," Keith's current hit single, touches the patriotic base, tugging at the heart strings as he sings about the life of a soldier. It is meant to be an ode to soldiers serving on the front line, but it also serves as an education to those who know little about military life. Lyrics like, "I don't do it for the money/ there's bills that I can't pay," make it clear that joining the military is less about financial security and more about serving your country. And when his slightly nasal baritone sings, "Oh, and I don't want to die for you/ but if dyin's asked of me/ I'll bear that cross with honor/ 'cause freedom don't come free," it powerfully reinforces Keith's respect for the men and women in the armed forces.

With his latest release, 'Shock'n Y'all,' Toby Keith proves he is not a run-of-the-mill country star.

In "The Critic," Keith takes an indirect jab at the journalists that have criticized him for his political beliefs and the lyrics of his song "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)." With lyrics like, "Please don't tell my mom/ that I write the music column for The Gazette/ she still thinks I play the piano down at the cathouse," Keith makes it clear that he thinks being a music critic is an odious job. "Critic" is more a spoken-word piece than a song, better suited to be performed in a smoky coffee house than the arenas Keith's been selling out. Complete with jazzy piano and snapping fingers, the listener may feel they've been transported to beatnik poetry slam by the time the track is done.

What Keith hasn't done on this album, however, is load it down with sappy-sweet love songs that give cavities to even the most cynical and jaded listener. The closest he comes is his easy-going "If I Was Jesus." He could have taken the chance to impart some Toby-esque religious wisdom on his listeners, but chooses instead to cop out with an odd love song.

The 12-track album ends with two songs Keith coined "the Bus Songs." Written with up-and-coming artist, Scotty Emerick, to entertain themselves as they traveled from city to city, the songs are acoustic numbers, recorded in concert and likely to never be released to radio.

"The Taliban Song" tells of an Afghan man trying to live life post-Taliban, and "Weed with Willie" commemorates sharing the mood-altering substance with country music's most famous outlaw, Willie Nelson.

Say what you will about Toby Keith or his music, but he sings the kind of songs that get your feet tapping whether you want them to or not.

TOBY from page 5

slow moments came as Keith sang his hit "My List." The crowd grew almost silent, thoughtful as the lights dimmed. Keith made his way from one side of the stage to the other, playing to the fans sitting almost behind the stage.

Arguably, the most emotional part of the night came at the end of the show, when Keith sang his two patriotic hits, "American Soldier" and "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)."

During "Soldier," with only a single spot for lighting and a video of troops rolling in the background, Keith sang proudly to a crowd that was loud only when he belted out the lyrics "freedom don't come free." By the end of the song, it was clear that both the crowd's response and emotional nature had rendered him speechless and close to tears.

Played on an American flag-decorated guitar, "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue" brought the house down when Keith barked, "We'll put a boot in your ass, it's the American way." Elaborate pyrotechnics exploded all around him, and red, white and blue confetti fell from the rafters.

Use Your UCard and mention this ad to receive a FREE BAGEL with any purchase of a Medium or Large drink.
Cream cheese not included in offer
Valid only at UMass Dunkin Donuts Not to be combined with other offers. Limit 1 per customer Expires 2/29/04 PICK 'EM NOW BerryBerry & Blueberry Bagels are back!
DUNKIN' DONUTS®

Dorm Life Got You Down?

Now you can afford to stay at the Campus Center Hotel
Reserve a room for a night, or a weekend at 30-40% off the normal rate when you present your valid 5-College ID at check in.
We have the best rates in town!
549.6000
A limited number of rooms are available at this incredible price. Be sure to request a STUDENT RATE when making your reservation!
Limited Availability. Blackout rates apply. This promotion cannot be combined "save thirty" gift certificates or any other discounts.

Dacko gets 100th win

HOOP from page 10

win milestone. She is in her second year with the Minutewomen after a seven-year stint with Cornell.

"Finally, the second win in the conference," Zsedenyi said. "We are prepared now, we had to win just to know what it feels like. Everybody is jumping around, it's great to get Dacko her 100th victory, we are happy for her."

UMass held a 31-21 lead at halftime and stormed out to a 51-34 advantage midway through the second half. Fordham went on a tear late in the game to pull the game within reach. The Lady Rams used a 10-0 run over a two-minute span to cut the Minutewomen's lead to 10 at 54-44 with 5:21 remaining.

UMass was unable to hit its free throws late, in a second half that saw 26 fouls between the teams. The Minutewomen were 13-for-24 from the charity stripe, while the Lady Rams went on a spree, hitting over 80 percent of their attempts.

There were no free throws in the first half.

With two minutes remaining in the game, UMass was up 61-50, but went on a cold streak that allowed Fordham to get back in the game. The Lady Rams scored 14 of the final 17 points in the game including the game-tying layup by Beth Ann Dickinson with 52 seconds remaining.

Then came Bailey's final drive.

"We feel incredible right now, we feel like we can go to any game and play with anybody," Bailey said. "I think we focused today, we had some poor shooting, but we pulled it out at the end."

Against St. Joseph's, the Minutewomen didn't have an answer for the powerful Hawk frontcourt, consisting of Erin Brady and Stephanie Graff. The duo almost out-rebounded UMass with 17 boards between them. The Minutewomen had just 19 rebounds in the game.

Despite one of their finest shooting nights, hitting 40 percent of their shots, the Minutewomen eventually folded after giving up an array of second-chance baskets.

"Today we got out-rebounded and I knew St. Joseph's was kind of down. So coming in it was a good time to come and get them and recently we've been playing good defense," Dacko said. "We need to box out so we can box out and rebound. We gave up five [rebounds] on one possession, which really hurt us."

Leading the way for St. Joseph's was Graff, who scored 17 points on the evening, and 10 of her team's first 13.

Bailey didn't miss a step from Friday's game and scored the Minutewomen's first eight points of the night. With the cold streak continuing from 3-point land, the Minutewomen used the inside tandem of Bailey and Tamara Tatham to pick up the scoring load.

Tatham and Bailey scored 15 and 14 respectively and grabbed eight of the team's 19 rebounds.

BC sweeps UMass

HOCKEY from page 10

the blue line, skated in from the right wing, and sent a long wrister over Eagle goaltender Matti Kaltiainen's right shoulder, cutting the Eagle lead to 4-1.

The Eagles struck back quickly, though. With Eaves enjoying a cup of coffee in front of Winer's net, Tony Voce worked behind the cage, and slid a pass out to his linemate. Eaves one-timed the feed past Winer to score his 12th goal of the season, and complete his first career hat trick. Voce got in on the fun 9:10 into the third, when he took a drop from Eaves, skated in toward Winer, and backhanded the puck to the top of the cage to finish off the scoring.

It didn't take long for the Eagles to open up the scoring, and it took no time for them to gain a two-goal lead. Eaves opened things up a long slap shot that came through a screen. The puck popped the net just 19 seconds after UMass' Tim Vitek entered the box for a hooking penalty.

Before Conte Forum public address announcer Andy Eck could repeat the cast of characters for the first goal, Ned Havern slung a shot from outside the faceoff circles, giving the hosts a 2-0 lead just 6:13 into the first period. Havern's goal came just 13 seconds after Eaves'.

Eaves added his second goal of the evening at 15:00, firing a slapshot over Winer's shoulder off a cross-ice feed from Tony Voce. Eaves' first two goals were on the power play, and both came less than a minute into the man-advantage. Ryan Shannon punctuated the period with another goal 27 seconds later, with assists given to linemates Chris Collins and Dave Spina.

Eaves scored his third goal with 52 seconds left in the second period, hammering home the convincing BC victory.

Most of Friday night's sellout crowd — the first sellout for a hockey game at the Mullins Center — went home disappointed, as the Eagles downed the Minutemen 4-2. Though it wasn't quite the lopsided affair that occurred Saturday in Chestnut Hill, it was clear that the No. 1 team in the nation wasn't showing any signs of letdown after its Beanpot championship a week ago.

J.D. Forrest scored what turned out to be the game winner at 16:02 of the first period, but the Eagles held dominion over UMass for almost the whole game.

It was the largest crowd for an on-campus regular-season contest in the history of Hockey East.

"[The atmosphere] was great," said UMass junior Greg Mauldin, who scored both of the Minutemen's goals. "We really enjoyed it. I just wish we could have come out with a 'W.'"

The Minutemen struck first with Mauldin's tally at 9:40 of the first period, but the Eagles took over after that. BC scored three unanswered goals in the opening frame, added another in the second, and after successfully killing off a penalty to start the third period, took the 5-2 lead when Dave Spina deflected a shot past UMass goaltender Gabe Winer (30 saves).

After he and Marvin Degon failed to connect on a two-on-one breakaway, Mauldin circled the net with an Eagle in tow. As he reached the boards, he turned and fired a shot along the goal line that snuck inside Kaltiainen's pads, making it 4-2 with 7:21 to go in the middle frame.

The Minutemen struck first, when Nick Kuiper shoveled the puck toward the UMass blue line and through a Boston College defenseman. Jamie Solon was off to the races along the right-wing boards, with Mauldin shadowing him on the left side on a two-on-one. Solon slid the puck to Mauldin as they gained the BC blue line, and Mauldin held for a second before wristing a shot over Kaltiainen's glove.

A weekend for the ages

MERRITT from page 10

Minutemen are in no way as good as the No. 1 Boston College Eagles. All who witnessed the stinging loss Friday night, or the distressing drubbing at Conte Forum Saturday evening know that the two teams that faced off this weekend are on different planes of existence.

The first-place Eagles are akin to an NHL team playing a decent AHL squad. They are faster, stronger, bigger. Their goal-scoring capability is unmatched in Hockey East, and hardly mirrored in the rest of the country. Most of us won't see North Dakota or Minnesota (No.s 2 and 4 in the nation, respectively), so comparison to those western powerhouses is tough. But even the No. 3 Maine Black Bears are a lesser team compared to the boys of Chestnut Hill.

That's a big part of why UMass fans shouldn't look upon this weekend as a sign of disaster, but simply take from it this fact: The Minutemen are good; they are not great. They do not have the scoring depth of Boston College; they are not able to wholly take over a game the way the Eagles have done so many times this season; and they do not have the champions' shine about them the way BC has all year.

That's not a condemnation, either. A quick glance at the Boston papers Saturday morning shows that the thing that led both the Boston Globe and Herald game stories for Friday night's 5-2 BC win was the raucous sell-out crowd at the Mullins Center. The big city media is taking notice. UMass is now deservedly mentioned among the contenders for the Hockey East title. While it isn't set in stone yet, a quarterfinal series at the Bill has a strong possibility of manifesting itself a month from now. This is not a weak sister in Hockey East anymore. This is a team that has almost certainly cracked the vaunted "Big Four" of BC, Boston University, Maine and New Hampshire. The Minutemen have a rightful place in any Hockey East talk, and UMass fans should enjoy that.

Cahoon said after Saturday night's 6-1 loss, "[the team] will not soon forget this game. We will have to park it at some point this week, but be sure that they will not forget this game." As much as that was a harbinger of long, hard practices for the Minutemen this week, it should also serve as a statement to be pocketed and brought out when expectations for this still-developing squad again rise beyond rational limits.

Should you, a UMass hockey fan, expect a better showing against Boston University on Friday and Saturday? Absolutely. But remember that this Minuteman squad is still prone to mistakes, still a young team high on talent but low on experience. Jack Parker's Terriers, lowly though they may be this year, always have a few extra tricks up their sleeves, and with their playoff lives on the line, should certainly be expected to start dealing in four days.

This weekend was simply a cause for celebration and discipline: celebrate the fact that your team just sold out the biggest building in Hockey East, but be mindful that Cahoon's crew is only partway up the mountain, and there are certainly a few seasons between it and the true upper echelon of Division I college hockey.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com.

3-for-3

Dale Earnhardt Jr. won the Busch Hershey Kisses 300 yesterday, a day after holding off Tony Stewart to win his first Daytona 500.

A long trip brings true rewards

FOSTER from page 10

see a blow out?

Fordham started to make its move and you could feel the momentum shift. Fordham's Beth Ann Dickinson hit a three followed by another trey by Monica Mack. Fordham started fouling hard and numerous Minutewomen missed their foul shots like they have all season. Could this seriously happen after getting lost in neighborhood that looks like something out of Menace II Society?

The officials started to get restless with all the fouling. After a total of seven fouls in the entire first half, the referees felt the second half got a little too physical, calling 26. The one person you could tell didn't like the officiating was UMass' injured star Katie Nelson. Nelson made her presence known from the bench, screaming at every bad call. You could see the passion for the game she has missed all season through her emotions from the bench during a heated contest. It was a beautiful sight.

Then, it happened. Dickinson hit a lay-up to tie the game at 64. A team so desperate for a win was about to blow a 17-point lead, lose 20 straight road games and make their beloved coach wait for her 100th win. Fordham definitely had the momentum in overtime. Maybe we should have kept going when we took the wrong exit on Bronx River Parkway.

The Minutewomen decided either they were going to win or go to overtime. After killing 28 seconds, UMass senior Judit Zsedenyi could not find an open shot and forced a jump ball for one last possession with just 3.6 seconds on the clock. If she didn't fight for that jump ball, who knows what could have happened in overtime? It was almost too surreal since there's no telling where we would have ended up if we hadn't patiently held on to the wheel and waited for the random right turn.

The inbound play looked chaotic, as none of the players knew what Dacko had called. Edris Bailey decided to be an athlete and improvise. One quick jab and a cut to the open lane, Bailey had the ball and put a soft one off the glass. And one with only a second left, Bailey had just saved the day.

The coach walked out with a beaming smile to meet the press. She finally got the monkey off her back and received the 100th win. She was so relieved to finally have something come out positive during the season from hell.

Before she could tell the press about how proud she is of her players, Bailey and Zsedenyi walked in with paper glasses on their heads after their coach told the team to get their eyes checked in a previous newspaper article. There is nothing more priceless than mocking your coach after a victory. Dacko simply rolled her eyes and let out a little smile.

After having to race the crazy Buick, move our way through seven traffic jams, getting lost in God knows where and horrible directions, watching Bailey's shot go through the net and the aftermath of excitement was worth every second.

That's why we do what we do, for the chance to catch that one unbelievable, unexpected moment.

Todd Foster is a Collegian columnist.

A-Rod in pinstripes

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Alex Rodriguez is coming back to New York, the city he left when he was four, and moving onto the biggest stage in town — Yankee Stadium.

Baseball's highest-paid player, and perhaps its most talented, was finally and officially dealt to the New York Yankees from Texas on Monday after commissioner Bud Selig approved the record-setting swap.

"I'm pretty excited. This is a big, big one," Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said at the team's minor league complex in Tampa, Fla.

"It ranks with when we signed Reggie," he said, a reference to slugger Reggie Jackson.

Rodriguez, the first reigning MVP to be traded, will be introduced at the stadium on Tuesday, flanked by manager Joe Torre and Yankees captain Derek Jeter, who will keep his shortstop job. The 28-year-old A-Rod will shift to third base to fill the hole left when Aaron Boone wrecked a knee last month.

Texas gets second baseman Alfonso Soriano and a minor league player to be named, but it will still have to pay $67 million of the $179 million Rodriguez is owed over the remainder of his deal.

Steinbrenner and Yankees general manager Brian Cashman personally assured Jeter that he would keep his position and that Rodriguez would switch to third — where his only major league experience is one inning during an All-Star game.

"You go with the man that brought you to the dance," Cashman said. "You're going to stick with him. You don't mess with success. ... There is no issue there — who's the starting quarterback? We have arguably the best left side of the infield in the history of baseball."

Rodriguez, signed to a record $252 million, 10-year contract by the Rangers in December 2000, grew tired of Texas after three last-place finishes.

He was born in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan, not far from where Manny Ramirez grew up, just a few miles from Yankee Stadium. And even though his father, Victor, closed his shoe store and moved the family to the Dominican Republic in 1979, his fondness for the city remained.

The rival Red Sox nearly acquired Rodriguez, a seven-time All-Star, in December, but that deal fell through when Boston's proposal to cut Rodriguez's salary was blocked by the players' association.

"I think Larry Lucchino is a little disappointed. He had an opportunity," Levine said, referring to the Red Sox president.

Jaime Aron in Dallas contributed to this report.

Softball goes 1-for-4 in Ariz.

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The first test this season for the Massachusetts softball team was the prestigious Fiesta Bowl Classic hosted by Arizona State in Phoenix. The Minutewomen won their first game, then lost their four remaining tournament games to finish 1-4 on the weekend.

Three of the losses came against Top 25 teams.

"I feel this was a pretty positive experience for a young team," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We were in three out of the five games. We had a couple of defensive meltdowns, but remained poised."

The Minutewomen started off the weekend with a shutout victory, 8-0, over Ohio State Friday. UMass scored eight runs in the final three innings after going hitless in the first four. Freshman first baseman Amanda Morin had a big collegiate debut with two hits, two runs batted in and one run scored.

The second Friday game found the Minutewomen on the other end of an 8-0 shutout to No. 23 Fresno State. All-American Jamie Southern was the story, giving up only one hit, walking three and striking out six. Southern also supplied some offensive insurance, going 2-for-2 with three RBIs and one run.

UMass' offensive problems continued on Saturday as two Cal State Northridge pitchers combined to shut out the Minutewomen, 7-0. Erin Sigala pitched three hitless innings and walked only two before leaving the game due to injury. Kia Fennell pitched four relief innings, giving up one hit and one walk. Centerfielder Christen Bedwell led the CSUN offense by hitting for the cycle.

It was the second game in a row the Minutewomen were not only shutout, but could muster up just one hit.

"Two days in a row, we didn't adjust to the pitching," Sortino said. "The players know we have to go through these experiences to learn something. As a coach, you hope they learn early and I think they have."

The Saturday night game look as if the Minutewomen would be shut out again after trailing No. 11 Cal State Fullerton, 6-0, in the fourth. Senior centerfielder Aisha Franke lead off the top of the frame with a single, scoring two batters later on sophomore K.J. Kelley's triple down the right field line. Senior catcher Jamie Cahalan followed up with two-run homer to left-center to cut the deficit to 6-3 after four innings.

With Kelley, Cahalan and senior Nicole Wilson all walked to load the bases in the sixth with two outs. Wilson later scored on a wild pitch, as freshman Candice Molinari worked the count to re-load the bases and put the go-ahead run on first. The following at-bat gave UMass quite a scare.

Morin was hit in the head with a 2-2 pitch from CSUF pitcher Brooke Weekley. Although her helmet flew clear off the freshman first basemen's head, Morin was fine. With the go-ahead run on second, Franke popped out to end the threat.

The last opponent for UMass in Arizona was the toughest, No. 4 Washington. All-Americans Tia Bollinger and Kristen Rivera dominated the game, leading the Huskies to a 5-2 victory. Bollinger gave up a two-run homerun by Kelley, but remained poised to finish the game and recorded her sixth win of the season. Rivera went 4-for-4 with two runs and an RBI in the game.

Kelley's performance at the tournament was good enough to earn her the A-10 Player of the Week. Kelley, who had a storybook freshman season, went 4-for-12 with four RBIs, three runs, three walks, a triple and a home run.

UM is strong at FasTrack

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Competing against more than 50 teams last Saturday at Boston University, the Massachusetts men's indoor track squad came away from the FasTrack invitational with a few respectable finishes.

Coach Ken O'Brien expressed satisfaction in his team's execution this time out. "[Last time] I was a little disappointed with their level of performance. ... Not necessarily the performance marks, but just the level the kids competed at, and we completely wiped that off the board. They competed at a much higher level in all the events, and I'm extremely happy with that."

Reigning Atlantic 10 Male Track and Field Performer of the Week Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng extended his unbeaten streak to four with another first place finish in the 55-meter dash. The senior blew by everyone in the preliminary round, taking first in 6.39 seconds, before eclipsing that with a 6.35.

"He is our best runner," O'Brien said. "There was never any doubt or question before the season started, and still isn't. He is our best performer."

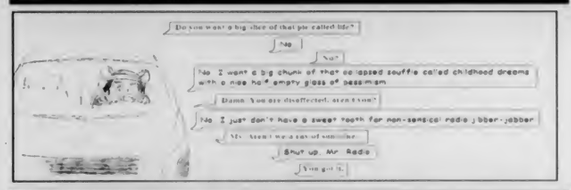
Junior jumper Henry Smith was another high finisher for the Minutemen, taking eighth in the triple jump with a leap of 13.7 meters.

"This year, he's been one of our top three or four most consistent performances during the season," O'Brien said. "So he's overcome the thing that's plagued him ... which is the first step for a field athlete before they make a major breakthrough in their level of performance."

Sophomore James Godinho took sixth and the junior McCormack took eighth place in the 500 with times of 1:04.36 and 1:04.61, respectively.

The Massachusetts women found similar success at the Valentine Invitational in Boston.

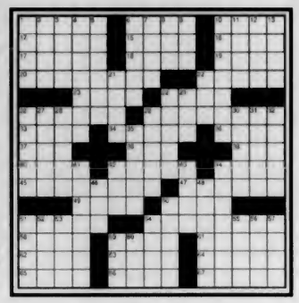
Sophomore Elisabeth Budd led the charge for the Minutewomen with a fourth place in the 500 in 1:18.07. Sophomore Ashley Creel was a top 10 finisher in the high jump, where she took eighth with a jump of 5-4 1/2.



Rounding out the top 10 scoring for the Maroon and White was jumper Chante Soares. The senior's mark of 35-5 3/4 was good enough for tenth in the triple jump.

Like sports? Like writing? How about both? Come down to The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement on Wednesday at 7 p.m. for our open house, and meet the staff!

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Reeves of "Speed"
6 Pro vote
10 Assistant aides
14 Light bulb filler
15 Hankering
16 Piece Nebraska — Wieser
17 Very funny people
18 Malevolent
19 Festival
20 Nothing here
22 Name go
23 Sewer hookrages
24 Keen enjoyment
26 Hammers
29 Got tiresome (2 wds.)
33 Put up curtains
34 Steakhouse order (hyph.)
36 Ten-gallon ton
37 Wood shelter
38 Use a charge card
39 Nth degree, slangily
40 Follow the recipe
42 I.e. words
44 Locator distinct
45 Promoted
47 Married lady
50 BHS employee
51 Cheese type
53 Oktoberfest tune
54 Use
58 What Ali slung like (2 wds.)
59 Eurasian range
61 Excel
62 Narrow fissure
63 Meadowlark guide
64 Bird's beak
65 JFK arrivals
66 Garment edges
67 Filthy

DOWN
1 Maiden of films
2 Toledo's lake
3 Beside oneself
4 Zilch
5 In stock
6 Demeanors
7 Wheels for the Reids
8 Here, in Hermosillo
9 Edmonton, Oilers org.
10 Yacht race
11 Metal dross
12 Nasty
13 Bartlett or Bosc
21 Stop working
22 Capt.'s heading
24 Pregame
25 Pie nut
26 Temporary state
27 Expels
28 Geeky
29 Impressed
30 Mood
31 Utah neighbor
32 First predecessor
35 Portends
41 Sci-fi crafts
42 "This — on me!"
43 Nerves (hyph.)
44 Law — -in
46 — — creek
48 Wholesome (2 wds.)
50 Barely
51 Inhospitable
52 Kyoto wishes
53 Bugged out
54 Pastime locale
56 Pub order
58 Works by Kool & the Gang
59 Bump or knot
59 Snort of disgust
60 Cable hero
Lash L.a. —

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.-N. Amherst
just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
February Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- BBQ Beef Sandwich
- Curried Vegetables (vegan)

DINNER
- Grilled Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabello
- Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 32
- Low: 18

WEDNESDAY
- High: 38
- Low: 19

THURSDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 24

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas

COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub / Nikolas Markantanatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
There's more where those roses you just got came from.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Poof. You're a fish. Now stay away from Red Lobster.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't worry, it's not just you. Your TA gives everyone the willies.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Share those chocolates you got over the weekend.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Go to Friendly's today. Their milkshakes bring all the boys to the yard.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Do not wear boxer shorts on your head. It's a lousy fashion statement.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Lay off the alarm clock. It's your own fault you chose a 9 a.m. class.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Quit itching yourself. It's Cat Scratch Fever.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Please note: Keystone Light does not make you a winner.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You've been acting stranger than Diet Coke with lime.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Pepperoni after 11 p.m. = bad news for the kid behind you in class the next day.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Enjoy your day!!! Wear a raincoat!!!

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"I like nonsense — it wakes up the brain cells. Fantasy is a necessary ingredient in living."

-Dr. Seuss

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus Fundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@apen-square.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Ciera, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line Entry Level on board positions available, great benefits. Seasonal or Year Round. 941-329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP CANADENSIS, A PREMIER RESIDENTIAL SUMMER CAMP, located in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania (2 hours from New York City and Philadelphia). Our counselors teach, supervise, and share in the day-to-day experience of each camper, together forming lasting friendships. Our staff brings enthusiasm and motivation as well as understanding and sensitivity. We are looking for qualified staff to instruct athletics, LEG, WSI, waterskiing, wakeboarding, sailing, jet skiing, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, cooking, arts & crafts, outdoor adventure; including high and low ropes, climbing walls, mountain biking, motor bikes, fishing and much more. Excellent facilities and great salary! ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS, 2/23-2/27. Call 800-832-8228 or apply online. www.canadensis.com

EMPLOYMENT

Entry level food testers open schedule up to $80 per assignment email address required Call 1-888-327-4842 department number call e-344

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring. Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater. Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.haispromotions.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

FOR RENT

Spring Break Rental Daytona Beach, Resort Studio HWL March 14th, 21st $1500.00 1-866-284-3972 Ref#8430

ROOMMATES WANTED

Great House! Minutes from Campus Need responsible roommates Singles/groups welcome $325/month + 4 rooms open 12 months Starts June 1 Call or IM Lisa a.s.a.p.: (860) 227-4502, LMP3383

SERVICES

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional And Customized Offering to market your skills. Affordable prices. Timely Service By Email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ camps reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED! Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.fertilechoices.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Eagles sweep weekend

Sellout brings no luck for Minutemen

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL — It was a weekend of optimism for the Massachusetts hockey team. But not too long after a record 8,373 people arrived at the Mullins Center Friday night, it became clear that a truly long weekend was in store for the Minutemen, as Boston College swept the weekend set — and the season series — with a 5-2 victory Friday, and a 6-1 trouncing Saturday.

Freshman Pat Eaves earned the first hat trick of his career to lead the Eagles past UMass for the second straight night on Saturday at Conte Forum.

Boston Coll.	5
UMass	2
UMass	1
Boston Coll.	6

Boston College (23-3-4, 14-1-3 Hockey East) now has a five-point lead in the Hockey East standings over the Minutemen (16-8-5, 12-6-2 HEA), who fall into a tie for second with Maine.

"We saw what it takes and how hard you have to play to become the No. 1 team in the country, they definitely showed us this weekend," senior Minuteman defenseman Thomas Pock said after Saturday's 6-1 BC win. "Coming in here, against the No. 1 team in the country, if you're not playing your best, there's no way you're going to win, and we saw that yesterday and today."

The Eagles came out with guns blazing Saturday night, and scored two goals in a 13-second span, starting with Eaves' first of the night. BC built a four-goal lead before the Minutemen could even answer, with Stephen Werner's tally at 14:40 of the second period, and then added two more to emphasize the victory.

Werner finally got the Minutemen on the board at 14:40, when he took a drop pass from John Lutcz at

See HOCKEY on page 8

Sophomore James Solon assisted on one of junior Greg Mauldin's two goals Friday night at the Mullins Center. However, the Minutemen fell to BC 5-2, and then lost 6-1 to the Eagles in Chestnut Hill Saturday.

Squad, fans learn a lot in wake of losses

Andrew Merritt

Years from now, when the current players are gone, and none of the crazies that filled the student section Friday night are still taking classes, Valentine's weekend 2004 will be looked upon as a benchmark in the history of the Massachusetts hockey program.

Even at the end of this season, be it after a playoff game at the FleetCenter or an unexpected early departure before the Hockey East semifinals, folks will look back on Feb. 13-14 with a semisweet grin.

It was, indeed, the best and worst of times. For the first time in the program's history, all 8,373 tickets were sold for a game. The opportunities and implications for the weekend were almost as staggering. With an improbable pair of wins, the Minutemen would have taken over first place in Hockey East — the first time that plateau would have been reached by a UMass team this late in the season.

All of that promise should be enough to sate the appetites of all the puck lovers in the Pioneer Valley — wherever you're hiding — because while the other two teams who call Mullins Center home are struggling, the least likely suspect is the one bringing all the excitement. In terms of history, in the context of the fact that there was no UMass hockey team 12 years ago, that is a testament to the success achieved by this team and its razor-sharp mentor, Don Cahoon.

At the same time, in the story of the 2003-04 Minuteman season, this weekend is also important, because it tempers the furious revival of the program. Not to put too fine a point on it, the

See MERRITT on page 8

Musketeers down UM

Freshman Art Bowers led the Minutemen with 10 points, but the Xavier Musketeers held them to their lowest point total in two years to win 66-44 at the Cintas Center in Cincinnati.

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Ever since he pulled point guard Anthony Anderson from the floor due to foul trouble during a 72-66 loss to Hartford on Nov. 24, Massachusetts' men's basketball coach Steve Lappas has maintained that it's tough for his team to win without its captain on the floor.

So when Anderson and sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman were two minutes late for the team bus to the airport on Friday morning, Lappas pulled both from the starting lineup for Saturday's game at Xavier and the Minutemen never recovered, falling behind 14-2 en route to their worst offensive performance of the season, a 66-44 loss before 10,250 at the Cintas Center in Cincinnati.

UMass	44
Xavier	66

"We were leaving at 7:30 in the morning, and they were only about two minutes late," Lappas said. "Some places, they might say that's not a big deal, but I'm a stickler for discipline, and the players know that."

"I'm definitely mad at myself," said Anderson, who had occasional tardiness problems earlier in his career. "I'm older now. It was a mistake, it happens. My alarm clock didn't go off."

Freeman, a five-time Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week, had forgotten his identification needed to board the team's flight and had to return to his dormitory, causing his tardiness.

"The fact that [Freeman and Anderson didn't start] is not the reason we lost," Lappas said. I told the team if we're able to lose a game in the first five minutes, we're not much."

"We just couldn't make shots for anything. Our offense let us down; our defense gave us an opportunity."

Freshman forward Justin Cage led Xavier with a career-high 12 points, while frontcourt mate Aaron Myles contributed 12 of his own as Xavier extended its longest winning streak of the season to four.

The Musketeers, who held UMass to season lows in points and shooting (27.8 percent, including 4-of-26 from 3-point range), also received 11 points from freshman Justin Doellman, as well as 10 from point guard Lionel Chalmers. All-American forward Romain Sato overcame a scoreless first half to finish with seven points on 2-of-12 shooting, but did grab 11 rebounds for the fourth consecutive game.

Freshman Art Bowers led UMass with 10 points, while Freeman added nine and Anderson seven, as the Minutemen were held to their lowest point output since a 63-38 loss to St. Joseph's on Jan. 5, 2002.

"Not starting didn't really affect my flow, but it affected the team's flow," Anderson said. "We'd been having a good chemistry, with Stephane Lasme and Chris Chadwick playing well off the bench, and they were thrown into the starting lineup.

XU led the entire game, using four 3-pointers to jump in front 14-2 less than five minutes into the game, and went ahead by as many as 14 when Doellman nailed a trey at the 6:10 mark of the first half.

The Musketeers, who connected on 10 3-pointers on the afternoon, led 31-19 at the half and held the Minutemen to just five field goals in the first half. The team's also combined for 37 turnovers.

Xavier continued to attack offensively to start the second half, as Myles, Sato and Dedrick Finn combined for 11 points over the first four minutes of the frame to push its lead to 41-24.

The Maroon and White never made a serious run, as Myles, Sato and Chalmers were responsible for 26 of their team's 33 points during a second half runaway.

The Minutemen return to action for Al Skinner Night on Wednesday at 7 p.m. against Rhode Island.

Dacko earns 100th victory

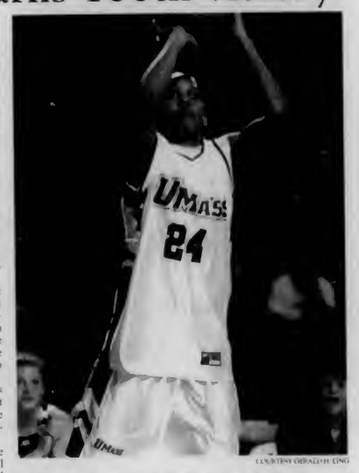
By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

On Friday the 13th Edris Bailey hit the biggest shot of her life.

With 3.6 seconds left in the storied Rose Hill Gymnasium, against conference rival Fordham, the Massachusetts women's basketball team was faced with an all-too familiar situation.

The Minutewomen had given up a commanding 17-point lead and with one possession left, the score was knotted at 64.

UMass	66
Fordham	44
St. Joe's	52
UMass	40



Senior forward Judit Zsedenyi drove to the basket and was immediately surrounded by Lady Ram defenders. In a desperate attempt to draw the foul, the Minutewomen were given possession with a jump ball.

On the ensuing inbounds play, Bailey cut to the basket from the foul line, received the pass and netted the game-winning basket.

"I just wanted to score the basket and finish it, that was all that was going through my mind then," Bailey said. "I feel great, I thought we were going to overtime and there was a lot of stuff going through my mind."

The win was the Minutewomen's first on the road this season, breaking a nine-game losing streak. On Sunday, UMass lost to St. Joseph's at the Mullins Center 52-40.

Along with breaking their six game losing streak and their 19 game road losing streak, continuing from last season, the Minutewomen's victory over the Lady Rams was coach Marnie Dacko's 100th career win.

Edris Bailey's dramatic last-second shot gave the Minutewomen a 66-64 victory Friday, the 100th career victory for coach Marnie Dacko.

"I took the road less traveled by, and I really think that's the way I've chosen my career path," Dacko said. "I hope we can continue to go and rebuild and get it done at UMass and I look forward to getting my next 100 here much quicker.

"I'm happy for the kids, it's not so much for me, I've been here and done that a long time. I just want the kids to have the confidence that they need, confidence is everything, if I could put my head on their shoulders they would be terrific."

Dacko is only the second coach in UMass women's basketball history to reach the 100-

See HOOP on page 8

A journey to hoop heaven

Todd Foster

Five hours from tip, the forest green Grand Cherokee pulled up to doors outside the Kennedy Tower as Patrycja Gulak emerged from the doors. The Olsztyn, Poland native is the future of UMass women's basketball, towering at 6-foot-4. She and the two sportswriters thought they were simply going to the Bronx, N.Y. to see UMass play at Fordham, but the road to the Miracle at Rose Hill was a long, unexpected journey on Friday the 13th.

The drive to the Bronx was almost as unexpected as the game result. The surreal part between getting to the game and the second half was the trip. In hindsight, it seemed to represent everything about the experience perfectly and what sports stood for.

After multiple traffic jams, a crazy '82 Buick, incomplete directions (thanks Fordham) and getting lost in the worst part of the Bronx, we finally got to the game — three minutes into the second half. After all the hassle, we were about to watch only 17 minutes of basketball.

UMass had a commanding lead after a stellar first half performance on the defensive end, holding the Rams to only 21 points. UMass coach Marnie Dacko had put together a brilliant mix of perfect rotating zone and a hardcore man-to-man pressure that would have been a joy to see in action. Thanks to backup on 1-91, we didn't.

As the half went on, UMass worked its way to a 17-point lead after Monique Govan forced a bad shot, grabbed the rebound and went coast-to-coast for a layup. Nice play, but was it worth following a rusty Buick swerving for 30 miles on a crowded highway to

See FOSTER on page 8

Barenaked Ladies make the perfect Valentine's Day date.
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

Al Skinner's No. 30 to be raised tonight at Mullins Center
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 84

Haitian rebellion heating up; leaders fear coup

By Michael Norton
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Haiti's prime minister warned yesterday of an impending coup and appealed for international help to contend with a bloody uprising that has claimed 57 lives. But the United States and France expressed reluctance to send troops to put down the rebellion.

Aid agencies called for urgent international action, warning Haiti is on "the verge of a generalized civil war." The U.N. refugee agency met with officials in Washington to discuss how to confront a feared exodus of Haitians.

On Tuesday, airlines in Port-au-Prince canceled flights to the northern port of Cap-Haitien, Haiti's second largest city, after witnesses in the barricaded city saw a boat approach and rumors swept the town that rebels were about to attack.

In the western port of St. Marc, an American missionary said his life has been threatened by supporters of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

"We are witnessing the coup d'etat machine in motion," Prime Minister Yvon Neptune said Tuesday, urging the international community "to show it really wants peace and stability."

Haiti's 5,000-member police force appears unable to stem the revolt, but Aristide and Neptune stopped short of asking for military intervention.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said yesterday "there is frankly no enthusiasm right now for sending in military or police forces to put down the violence."

Powell said the international community wants to see "a political solution" and only then would willing nations offer a police presence to implement such an agreement.

Powell spoke by telephone with French Foreign Minister Dominique de Villepin, who called an emergency meeting in Paris on Tuesday to weigh the risks of sending peacekeepers and discuss how otherwise to help Haiti, an impoverished former colony that is home to 2,000 French citizens.

"Can we deploy a peacekeeping force?" de Villepin asked on France-Inter radio, noting it "is very difficult" amid violence."

He said France had 4,000 troops in its Caribbean territories of Martinique and Guadeloupe trained in humanitarian work who could work with a U.N. humanitarian mission.

Later, de Villepin told French TV that "an intervention force ... implies a stop to the violence, a restart to dialogue. Nothing will be possible in Haiti if there isn't a jolt."

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said yesterday the world body plans to "become much more actively engaged" in Haiti's crisis. Officials from several U.N. agencies went to the country Feb. 8 to assess the humanitarian situation and are expected to return to report at the end of the week.

Meanwhile, Canada offered nearly $1 million in medical and food aid, and the United States said it was ready to give $500,000 in humanitarian assistance through the United Nations.

"We are calling for a truce," U.S. Ambassador James Foley said Tuesday.

A rebel of Gonaives Resistance Front points his weapon at residents crowding around a truck of the international non-governmental organization CARE loaded with food to be distributed at the Park Vincent stadium in Gonaives, Monday.

New group demands action from University

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

In an anonymous email sent to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian this weekend, the new Student Power Party shot several attacks at University of Massachusetts administrators and listed a number of potentially disrupting threats and demanded action of officials.

"The Student Power Party has been formed from the membership of students that feel profoundly ignored as members of the University community. We are forced, by threat of retaliation from the administration, to remain anonymous," reads the email.

"However, we assure the readers of our communiques that we are rational, social-justice oriented undergraduate students. Our communiques will serve to expose the behind-the-scenes dealings of University administration officials, SGA actions, and other anti-student actions."

The eight-page email was sent to Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, and Chancellor John V. Lombardi. Within the Student Government Association Jared Nokes, speaker of the senate,

See ATTACKS on page 3

Men claiming bishop abuse willing to speak with church

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The lawyer representing two men who say they were molested by retiring Springfield Bishop Thomas Dupre said his clients want to meet with church officials this week to "tell their stories."

Roderick MacLeish Jr. said his clients want to protect their anonymity from the public, but are willing to meet with officials from the Boston archdiocese and Springfield diocese.

"Both of my clients are prepared to make presentations to the church about what happened," MacLeish said. "They really want to tell their stories to church leaders. There are probably details that are not known to the diocese of Springfield that they want to have known."

MacLeish said he is still working out details such as the time and place of the meeting, and who will attend. MacLeish said he has been speaking with lawyers from the diocese and archdiocese, and is insisting that the meeting be facilitated by the archdiocese because "there is a fair degree of mistrust between our clients and the Springfield diocese."

Mark Dupont, a spokesman for the Springfield diocese, said it is appropriate for the meeting to be overseen by the archdiocese.

"Any allegations we would have received would have been turned over to the archbishop for his review," Dupont said.

Dupre's resignation was approved by the Vatican last week, a day after The Republican newspaper in Springfield confronted the bishop with allegations that he sexually abused two boys while he was a parish priest in the 1970s.

Dupre checked himself into an undisclosed medical facility last week and cited health reasons for his departure. He announced last year that he planned to retire before he turned 75, which is the mandatory retirement age for bishops. Dupre is 70.

Officials from the diocese say they have not been in touch with Dupre since the allegations surfaced.

Monsignor Richard Sniezyk, who is filling in as the diocese's top administrator until the Vatican appoints a replacement for Dupre, has said he would wait until this week before contacting Dupre.

"We have not heard that there's been any denial from Dupre," MacLeish said. "It's legitimate for the church to want to talk to these people, and we have no problem with the Springfield diocese attending the meeting."

MacLeish said he and his clients have not talked about taking legal action against Dupre or the diocese.

"It's premature to talk about litigation and lawsuits," he said.

Race no longer in the criteria for Harvard summer school

BOSTON (AP) — Harvard Business School has revised its admissions criteria for a minorities-only summer program, opening the program to some white students in response to pressure from groups opposed to race-based admissions.

The American Civil Rights Institute and the Center for Equal Opportunity sent a letter to Harvard last March complaining that the business school's Summer Venture in Management Program violated federal law because it was limited to black, Hispanic and American Indian undergraduates.

Last week, Harvard posted new admissions criteria for the program on its Web site, inviting other students to apply for the program.

The 20-year-old program will now also accept applicants from families with little business education or experience, who are the first in their family to attend college, or who attended a school whose graduates do not typically go on to a "top-tier, urban university" like Harvard.

"We're still committed to the basic objective of the program, which is to promote educational diversity and opportunity, and we're still able to do that," Harvard spokesman David R. Lampe said Tuesday.

Roger Clegg, general counsel for the Center for Equal Opportunity, said the groups are not seeking an end to the programs they challenge.

"We simply want to make them available to all students, regardless of race and ethnicity. We're glad that Harvard has agreed to change the program to reflect that," he said. "This is certainly a step in the right direction."

Harvard is not the only school to face scrutiny. The groups have complained to about 100 schools with policies the groups have deemed to be illegally exclusive, Clegg said.

Last February, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology dropped a minority-only admissions policy for summer math and science programs after the two groups challenged the programs.

-Associated Press

Discussion, discussion

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano attends the SGA Diversity roundtable discussion yesterday with students Selma Neves, a senior computer systems engineering major and Ledizia Freitas, a junior finance major.

Driver charged in police deaths

By Sarah Karush
Associated Press

DETROIT (AP) — A motorist pulled over in the middle of the night for a seemingly routine traffic stop was charged yesterday with murder in the shooting deaths of two police officers who stopped him.

A judge entered an innocent plea on behalf of Eric Marshall, who fell to his knees as the charges were read and had to be pulled up by officers holding him. He does not yet have an attorney.

Marshall, 23, faces a mandatory penalty of life in prison without parole if convicted. He's accused in the deaths of Officers Jennifer Fettig and Matthew Bowens, who were shot early Monday, becoming the 18th and 19th Detroit officers killed in the line of duty since 1990.

The traffic stop had not been called in to police dispatchers. "We don't know what they stopped him for. It's hard to say," said Cmdr. Craig Schwartz of the Major Crimes Division.

After making the stop, Bowens and Fettig returned to their cruiser with Marshall's license. The suspect got out of the pickup truck, approached the officers' car and shot Fettig twice, at least once in the head, Schwartz said.

The suspect ran away while Bowens got out of the cruiser and radioed for backup. The suspect returned and shot Bowens nine times before taking the officer's weapon and driving away, Schwartz said.

At least 22 empty shell casings were found at the scene. Neither officer was able to return fire, Schwartz said.

Police used the suspect's driver's license, found in the police cruiser, to arrest Marshall later Monday at his home.

Detroit Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick said Bowens' family noted he wanted to be an officer for as long as they could remember. The 21-year-old Bowens, who was married, joined the department in December 2000.

"This is the only thing he wanted to do with his life," Kilpatrick said.

Fettig, 26, joined in Oct. 2001 and was engaged to another Detroit officer.

The city's police force was deep in mourning. The last time two officers died on the same day was an Aug. 1993 traffic accident.

"It's going to take us a little while to recover from this," Police Chief Ella Bully-Cummings said.

The police department announced last week the creation of a task force to combat a recent spike in violence. Detroit had 35 homicides and 90 shootings in January.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantanatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
CAMPUS EDITOR Melly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagasse
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallach
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Riggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Sloger
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY'S SEMESTER AND WEEKLY DURING THE SUMMER SESSION. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED. ADVERTISING, BUSINESS AND EDITORIAL OFFICES ARE LOCATED IN THE CAMPUS CENTER. THE PAPER BEGAN AS THE COLLEGIAN IN 1890, BECAME THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1934. PUBLISHED CONTINUOUSLY SINCE 1890. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED FIRST PLACE FOR EDITORIAL, BUSINESS AND INFORMATION ALL YEARS IN WHICH IT WAS ENTERED. ©2004 THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN

General meeting at 7 p.m. today

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

February 19 - February 24 2004

Today

Amherst College — At 7:30 p.m., the second annual Five College Student Poetryfest will be held in the Cole Assembly Room of Converse Hall. Ten selected students, two from each college, will read their poetry.

Amherst College — Susan Froemke, Emmy Award-winning director, will present her film "LaLee's Kin" at 7:30 p.m. in Stirn Auditorium. "LaLee's Kin" explores the legacy of slavery and sharecropping in the Mississippi Delta. The filmmaker will be present for discussion.

UMass — Chris Edgar and Jordan Davis, poets and editors of "The Hat" journal, will give a poetry reading at 8 p.m. at Amherst Books. Refreshments will be served.

Tomorrow

UMass — At 4 p.m., students and community members will share their experiences traveling in India in "ALANKARA: Arts in India Presentations by recently returned tour group members" in Memorial Hall. The event is open to the public.

UMass — At 5 p.m., Amherst Books will host a party in celebration of the publication of Radha Radhakrishnan's new book, "Theory in an Uneven World". Radhakrishnan is a professor in the UMass English Department. Refreshments will be served.

UMass — "The Vagina Monologues" will be performed as part of the V-Day College Campaign at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets cost $8 and are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office. A second show is scheduled for 8 p.m. on Friday.

Hampshire College — The Hampshire Winter Dance Concert will be held at 8 p.m. in the Hampshire College Dance Studio Theater. Tickets are $5 for students and seniors; $7 general admission. Reservations can be made by calling 413-559-5889.

Friday 20

Smith College — The National Congress of Neighborhood Women will begin their three- day annual conference. The event is open to the public. The complete program of the conference is available at www.smith.edu/kahninstitute/conference.

UMass — There will be a 24-hour fast at the Newman Catholic Center from 5 p.m. Friday to 5 p.m. Saturday. There will be planned activities every hour including those to raise awareness of the problem of hunger in the U.S. The event is free and open to all students. The Newman Center is located at 472 N. Pleasant St. and can be contacted at 549-0300 x.11 for more information.

Saturday 21

Hampshire College — The New WORLD Theater's Project 2050: Poets in Action will be performed in the Main Lecture Hall in Franklin Patterson Hall at 9 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. In celebration of the Cultural Center's 15th Anniversary, the production explores the mid-century demographic shift, when it is projected that colored people will become the majority population in the United States. The event is free and open to the public.

Smith College — At 8 p.m., Ronald Gorevic will perform pieces by Mozart on violin and viola in Sweeney Concert Hall of Sage. The featured of the performance will be the Clarinet Concerto in A Major, in an arrangement by Lionel Tertis for viola. Clifton I. Noble, Jr. will accompany Gorevic on piano.

Sunday 22

Monday 23

Hampshire College — Los Angeles animation artist Pat O'Neill, regarded as a master of optical printing, will present his avant-garde film "The Decay of Fiction" at 3 p.m. at the Academy of Music in Northampton.

Tuesday 24

Smith College — At 4 p.m., poet, priest, and peace activist Daniel Berrigan will read from his poetry at the Helen Hills Chapel. Berrigan has authored more than 50 books, his most recent being "And the Risen Bread."

Smith College — John Pemberton III, professor emeritus of religion at Amherst College, in conjunction with the Smith College Museum of Art exhibition "African Artistry: Insight and Imagination," will speak on "Yoruba Masquerades: Seeing the Unobservable" at 7:30 p.m. in Graham Hall in Hillyer of the Brown Fine Arts Center. The lecture will be preceded by a West African processional dance at 7 p.m.

Romney has no vote on gay marriage struggle

By Steven LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — As Massachusetts lawmakers spilled tears and shared anguished personal stories over the question of whether to ban same-sex marriage, Gov. Mitt Romney sat in his Statehouse office watching the drama unfold on live television, a bystander to history.

It wasn't a matter of indifference to an issue that has placed Massachusetts front and center in the national debate over giving gays and lesbians the right to marry. It was a harsh dose of reality that the governor is relegated to a side role in the fight.

He has no vote and no veto power over legislative efforts to place on the November 2006 ballot a proposed constitutional amendment that would ban the court-ordered gay marriages that are set to begin taking place in mid-May. Any influence he has is up to him and his skills at the power of persuasion.

A conservative Mormon, Romney has made his stand clear: He opposes gay marriage, his opposition rooted in a strong sense of tradition about the institution of marriage, which he describes as "the foundation of a harmonious family life" and "the basic building block of society."

So with no official role in the debate over amending the state constitution to ban same-sex marriages, Romney has waged his battle on two fronts: on the national stage in editorials and in phone calls between his office and the Bush administration, and on the local level in private meetings with lawmakers. He's also been researching every legal avenue available to him to try to block same-sex weddings from take place beginning in mid-May, as ordered by the state's highest court.

Romney is facing tough odds.

"His only role is to be a lobbyist and to try to influence legislators," said GOP consultant Jason Kauppi, who worked for Romney's two Republican predecessors. "You saw him keeping the House Republicans in line and encouraging (Democratic House Speaker Tom Finneran), but the power is really with the Legislature."

Interested in Event Planning as a Career?
Come Learn from Professionals!

Chris Gasbarro '98
Marketing Manager at massAv
Board of Directors, Meeting Professionals International, New England Chapter President-elect, International Special Events Society, New England Chapter Supplier of the Year Award, Meeting Professionals International

Susanne Gurman '98
2000 Bentley College Meeting Program Graduate
Certified Meeting Professional
Meeting Professionals International, New England Chapter
Special Programming Co-chair, New England Meeting Industry Convention
Co-chair, Expo After Dark
Chapter Programming Director

Thursday, February 19, 2004
2 - 4 pm
Campus Center, Room 162

CareerServices

For more information about internships, co-ops and full time opportunities go to www.umass.edu/careers or call us at 545-2224

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

General interest meeting

Wednesday night, 7 p.m.
in the Collegian newsroom
113 Campus Center Basement

For anyone interested in writing for the largest college daily in New England

Any questions, call 413-545-1809

A clear sign adorns the entrance to the building that houses Cingular Wireless in Atlanta, yesterday. Cingular Wireless won the bidding war to acquire AT&T Wireless Services for nearly $41 billion.

Cingular cleared to buy AT&T

Vodafone steps out of the bid; Cingular may become the largest cell phone carrier in the nation

By Michael McDonough
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — Britain's Vodafone Group PLC said yesterdat it has withdrawn from the bidding for AT&T Wireless, clearing the way for Atlanta-based Cingular to acquire the third-largest U.S. mobile phone provider.

In a statement, Vodafone said it concluded that it was "no longer in its shareholders' best interests to continue discussions."

Vodafone's announcement came after The Wall Street Journal reported on its Web site early yesterday, citing people familiar with the matter, that Cingular Wireless won the bidding war with Vodafone with an offer of $15 a share, or about $40.5 billion.

David Caouette, a spokesman for Redmond, Wash.-based AT&T Wireless, told The Associated Press early Tuesday the company had no comment. Several messages left by the AP for Cingular spokespeople were not immediately returned.

In Tuesday's statement, the British company said it remained "committed to its existing position in the U.S. market with its successful partnership in Verizon Wireless."

Earlier this month, Vodafone said it was considering bidding for AT&T Wireless. The company on Monday matched Cingular Wireless $38 billion bid for AT&T Wireless, a source told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

Vodafone had no comment on details of its bid.

Cingular, the United States' No. 2 mobile phone provider with 23.4 million customers, early Monday offered $14 a share for AT&T Wireless, after offering $13 a share, or $35 billion, over the weekend, two sources said.

A Vodafone deal would have required the British cell phone giant to sell its 45 percent stake in Verizon Wireless, the biggest mobile phone company in the United States.

Vodafone shares rose 17.48 cents — or 0.9 percent — to $2.67 a share on the London Stock Exchange following the announcement.

In Paris, shares in Vivendi Universal SA rose 4.5 percent in early trading on speculation that Vodafone would now turn its attention to the French company, hoping to gain control of SFR-Cegetel. The telecoms unit account for almost a third of Vivendi's revenue.

E-mail demands action

ATTACKS from page 1

Russell Plato, secretary of diversity affairs, and David Carr, SGA president received the email.

The email, written in defense of the ALANA Caucus seats and the Office of ALANA affairs, claims that the ALANA community is under direct attack of individuals in the SGA and in University administration. Recently Plato made a proposal to replace OAA with the Office of Community Diversity Affairs, or CDA, an office that would eliminate the OAA. After protest from the ALANA community, the proposal was repealed.

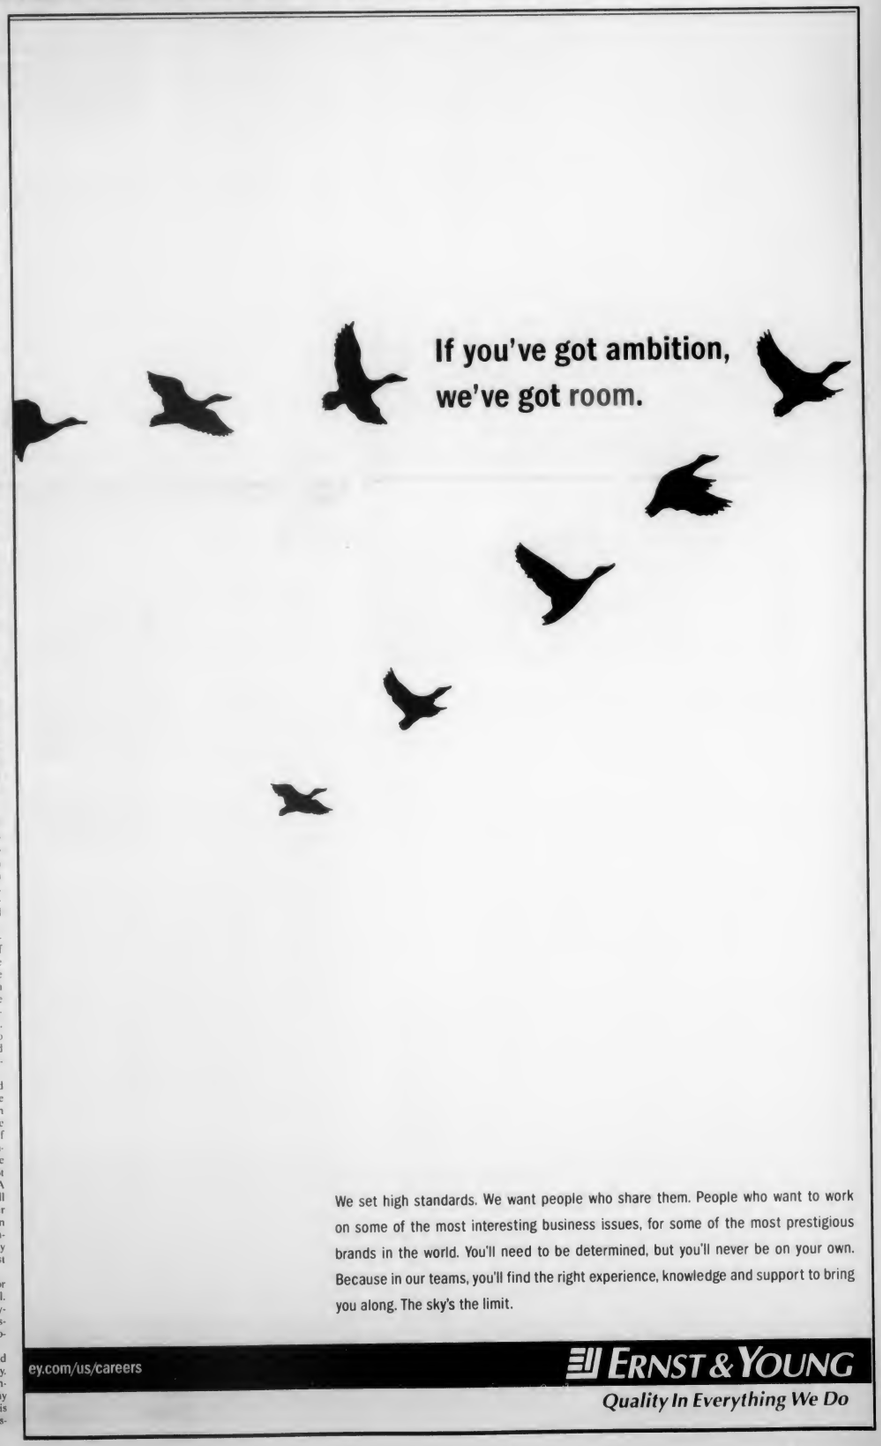
The Student Power Party claimed that Gargano has stolen power away from the ALANA community and has unfairly taken control of the fate of the office and the decision concerning a new director. Currently the director of OAA, Nelson Acosta is scheduled to take a four-month medical leave due to personal illness. His absence will leave the OAA without any professional staff.

"Mr. Gargano has essentially inserted himself as the person with the 'final say.' To do that is to usurp the sovereignty of the ALANA students over their office, the OAA," reads the email. " It is to disregard their wishes and established a de facto ... situation in which the Vice-Chancellor ... makes the decisions over institutions and issues that affect ALANA students."

The email also attacks Charles Dimare, director of Student Legal Services. The Student Power Party claimed that Dimare has unfairly entered the debate over the future of OAA and has placed himself squarely against the ALANA Caucus and concerned ALANA students.

"We believe he has maneuvered much too long in the shadows of boardroom politics in the University," reads the email. "We are going to shine the light on him and condemn his participation in what should be, by right, logic, and moral correctness, an exclusively ALANA Caucus and ALANA student affair."

In addition, the email included a list of demands, some of which refer to administrative changes. The demands include higher pay for faculty and staff, a cease in student tuition and fee increases, and a halt of the dismantling of the ESL program. The Student Power Party also demanded that the SGA and Gargano cease in exerting control over the OAA.



"We sincerely hope these and other ALANA issues can be resolved through recognition, on the administration's part, of the sovereignty of the desires of ALANA students and all students in general," reads the email. "If Mr. Gargano does not heed the demands of the ALANA students, then the students will shut down the University. To our friends in the ALANA Caucus, in the SGA, and in the UMass community, the Student Power Party stands with you in all your just demands."

As of press time Chancellor Lombardi had not read the email.

"I would not respond to anything that was sent anonymously," said Gargano. "It's not appropriate to comment."

Nokes did also not respond to the email due to its anonymity.

"I would respond to any concerns if someone walked into my office," he said. "As long as it is in the appropriate form of discussion."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Accusations are the wrong approach

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian received an email recently from a new organization on campus, the Student Power Party (SPP). The email, which was unsigned, was titled "An Open Condemnation of Chancellor John Lombardi, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano, and the University Administration." The communiqué was also mailed to members of the SGA, and Gargano himself.

The letter was over 2,700 words long, and contained numerous criticisms against various people and organizations on campus. It specifically attacked Gargano's "appalling" unwillingness to comply with the wishes of ALANA members, and proceeded to make a list of demands directed towards the University of Massachusetts administration. It also said that "the students will shut down the University" if certain demands are not heeded.

The serious threats made by the SPP address numerous hot-button issues on campus (such as the ALANA dispute, the lack of funding for professors, and the elimination of the "English as a Second Language" program). However, the letter reads as nothing more than a series of pusillanimous threats and unreasonable demands. Every student should have a right to defend his or her freedoms, but anonymous attacks are not the proper way to go about it.

The SPP said that their anonymity would allow them to "penetrate the highest levels of University power, and expose the corruption within the University system." However, the SPP's blindsiding approach eliminates any chance of an unbiased and peaceful forum for discussion. A more open dialog, free of threats and personal attacks, would not only allow a civil conversation form both sides, but it would allow certain misunderstandings to be reconciled.

It also seemed highly contradictory that the SPP letter accused the administration of "behind-the-scenes dealings." This overly ambiguous statement creates a conflict, as the SPP, by going about their accusations in this way, are mirroring exactly what they are criticizing. Nothing could be no more "behind-the-scenes" than the way the SPP went about sending their letter.

The SPP mentions The Daily Collegian specifically in their letter, saying that The Collegian has done a courageous job preventing the student body from being "manipulated by the mean-spirited individuals with the university." The Daily Collegian, while appreciative of the praise given by the SPP, has never accused any "mean-spirited individuals" of any sort of manipulation.

The SPP has taken serious steps in furthering their causes. The newly formed organization wishes to "stand as a force for change" on campus, and wishes to represent the best interests of our university. We all want UMass to be, as the SPP letter states, free from "corruption and inequality." However, only through open discussion and open, impartial considerations can anything of the sort be accomplished.

We at The Daily Collegian do not condone what the SPP stated in their email. The actions taken by the SPP up to this point are seen as subversive and threatening, and contrary to what they claim to be trying to accomplish. Defending the rights of students is one thing, but campaigning an open and accusatory insurrection against the administration is another. The SPP must learn the difference between the two if they are to make any progress whatsoever towards the equality they claim to seek.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

What you didn't see on the front page

Dan O'Brien

Feb. 6, began as a typical news day. Articles concerning the gay marriage controversy, the Superbowl, and the credibility of Central Intelligence Agency information were splattered all over the Boston newspapers. Yep, it was just a typical news day in New England.

Or, was it? All of these stories certainly had the relevance to appear in the paper because they affect a number of people. Gays might be able to get married. Tom Brady is a symbol of New England victory and is a hero in the minds of many New Englanders. And, CIA Director George Tenet is essentially accusing our president of lying. There was no doubt that these stories were important to the lives of many. However, on this day both the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald overlooked one big story.

Abdelghani Mzoudi, a 31-year-old Moroccan man, walked out of a German courthouse with his freedom after being acquitted of acting as an accessory in the murders of 3,000 people in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. The Globe reported the story briefly on page eight in their "World" section. The Herald did not print the story at all.

Mzoudi's trial was only the second trial, anywhere, of a suspect in the 9/11 attacks. He was a longtime acquaintance of lead hijacker Mohamed Atta, and so much so, even signed his will. At one point, Atta and Mzoudi lived and studied together in Hamburg, Germany. Furthermore, Mzoudi was trained as a terrorist in training camps.

This story is one that people would have loved to read if it had happened on Sept. 11, 2002 because it would have been in the news at a time when people were remembering the 9/11 tragedy. However, Mzoudi's acquittal happened on Feb. 5, 2004 and got lost in the hoopla that is news in America. This story occurred at a time when Janet Jackson's breast had been dominating the news for days, and these days there is little room for news that is not sensational.

The story was so important that one of the cable news networks could have certainly picked it up and made it sensational. Mzoudi being linked with hijackers certainly falls into the "War on Terror" category, doesn't it? Unlike a lot of the war on terror stories that we see on Fox News and CNN, this one has actual merit. It's an example of how good — or bad — of a job our government is doing in capturing these terrorists. German officials have even hinted that Mzoudi would have been convicted if Washington had provided the Germans with more information.

Germany's chief federal prosecutor criticized Washington for refusing to allow U.S. captive Ramzi Binalshibh to testify in the trial. Binalshibh was believed to have been the main contact between the hijackers with the rest of Al Qaeda.

This is just one example of the media not reporting the important stories behind the war on terrorism. Because many Americans are not going to read about Mzoudi's acquittal, many people are going to see and hear more immaterial sound bites about the war on terror and base their judgments on frivolous information.

But, what do I know? After all, I wasn't the one who conducted the survey on CNN and Fox News viewers – the survey that revealed 40 percent of people who watch the Fox News Channel and 30 percent of people who watch CNN falsely believed that Saddam Hussein was partially behind the 9/11 attacks.

No matter how important I think the Mzoudi story is, the importance of this story versus the other stories that we read in the papers is an arbitrary decision, one that is left up to news editors. These editors have to make important decisions about which stories will be printed in the next day's paper. They must decide how much space a story gets, whether the story deserves a photo, and what page each story gets printed on. The most important stories are published on page one, but you already know that.

We think that these papers are managed by professionals. Let's see how great of a job these professionals did on Friday's edition of The Herald.

The stories on the paper's first three pages included the following: a half-page color photo of Tom Brady at a golf tournament, (keep in mind, the Patriots had already won the Superbowl five days earlier.) A story about a dog being rescued by firefighters from an icy river, which included a huge photo. And, another Jackson-related story. The headline: "Janet, return my gift... Offended jeweler demands earrings back from Jackson."

Even though the Mzoudi acquittal is a key piece of the 9/11 story, the Globe and the Herald chose to focus on the issue of gay marriage, football, and breasts. Gay marriage is an important story, but in the end it is not a story that will truly change the face of the world. For example, Canada, as well as some other countries, already have gay marriage.

The Sept. 11 story has had the entire world on edge for a year, changed our political and economic climate, started a war on terrorism, and affected the lives of millions who died or knew someone who died. Maybe these newspaper execs' believe that people think a half-page color photo of Tom Brady waving to a crowd at Pebble Beach is more important than whether or not anyone is being held accountable for the worst terrorist attacks in American history.

Dan O'Brien is a Collegian staff member.

An ode to Egged Buslines

World Perspectives

Leah Vitale

Greyhound, Peter Pan, and the world-famous PVTA are all bus companies with which most all of us are familiar. There is another bus company that I believe deserves much recognition and somehow tragically goes greatly unnoticed. This transporter is called Egged.

Egged is the primary form of transportation serviced here in the state of Israel. Dating back to 1938, Egged has ventured onto roads main and obscure bringing the citizens of Israel from one destination to another. So? Big deal... that's what buses do, right?

What makes Egged unique from other bus companies is the great risk it must undergo in order to operate. For the company, drivers and passengers, the hazard is enormous and often life-threatening.

Last semester, I traveled to the ghost town of Hebron. The situation in Hebron is one of the largest centers of dissention between the Jews and the Arabs as both stake a claim to the city. As a result of the inability for a truce to be made, the entire city is under scrupulous watch and guard by the Israeli army. The Jewish inhabitants of the city comprise a mere 400 while the surrounding Arabs make up a shocking 15,000. I traveled to Hebron via bulletproof bus, and as we rode through the steep and winding streets surrounded by gripping Arab livelihood, I could not help to notice my bus' great role in the city.

Upon my arrival I saw a few cars in the parking strip; however, I realized that most of the citizens relied on the bus for their main exit and entrance to and from their homes. Due to the great danger for Jews posed by the Arabs in Hebron, driving out of the city in a standard car is highly unexercised. When putting myself in the shoes of the inhabitants of this imaginary universe, I felt tremendously helpless. The thought of only accessing my home by means of public transportation seemed implausible. It was at the awareness of this thought that I realized how colossal a role Egged plays in the lives of my very own roommate was traveling just 20 minutes before its explosion, I thought once again about Egged's huge courage by continuing to operate. The great liability the company encounters regularly alone makes its continued existence unbelievable. Additionally the drivers exercise incredible bravery simply by waking up each day and going to work. Aside from the unknown threat of terrorism with which he/she must be aware of, he/she is also constantly subject to regular security checks, suspicion and check points. And of course, the passengers also bear the awful understanding that they too might not make it to their destination. Unfortunately, due to so many.

I traveled to Hebron via bulletproof bus, and as we rode through the steep and winding streets surrounded by gripping Arab livelihood, I could not help to notice my bus' great role in the city.

After this realization I began to take note of the bus' position in other facets of Israeli society. One inescapable aspect of Israeli life is that of the haunting terrorism which pervades everyone unpredictably at any place in the sphere of the entire general public. More frequently than not however, this location is on the bus to and from work, the bus visiting one's relatives, or even on the bus to university as was the case just a few weeks earlier. After a bomb exploded on the very bus route I used to get to my university, on which the poor economic situation, most don't even have the means to travel in any other way. It is all the more tragic that their only means of transport carries such a lingering weight over their shoulders.

For all of the aforementioned reasons, I feel it is imperative to recognize Egged as a knight in shining armor in a land of terror and fear. Let us all rise up and appreciate its existence and operation. "Yashar Koach" ("May You Have Strength" in Hebrew) Egged!

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist.

Dupre accusations frustrating

Dan Lamothe

This one hits just a little too close to home.

As reports of a possible sexual scandal involving the bishop of the Springfield Roman Catholic Diocese surfaced last week, any change of me being able to ignore the abuse that has plagued the Catholic Church died.

Two years ago, when The Boston Globe first reported on the sexual abuses in the Archdiocese of Boston and the cover-ups that went with it, it was easy to get angry. I certainly did. After growing up Catholic, including singing in a choir, attending Catholic school for nine years, and serving masses as an altar boy, I was as insulted and shocked as anyone else could have been ... from afar.

All of that has changed now.

The resignation and accusation of The Most Rev. Bishop Thomas L. Dupre last week hit me on so many levels. Not because I've been abused, and not because I've ever seen something like that happen to someone else. Frankly, I have very few bad memories of growing up in the Catholic Church.

This one hurts, though. It's awkward, frustrating and confusing, and if it's true, it's infuriating.

It's no longer Boston, or Pittsburgh or Portland, Me. Dupre was my bishop — the same bishop who grew up in my hometown of Chicopee, attended the same Catholic school as I did two generations before, and served as a priest in my church during the early 1970s. He's also the same bishop I shared an altar with as an altar server when I was an innocent little 10-year-old.

Dupre was my bishop — the same bishop who grew up in my hometown of Chicopee, attended the same Catholic school as I did two generations before, and served as a priest in my church during the early 1970's.

The allegations haven't been easy on a lot of the older and wiser people I grew up around, either. To many of them, Bishop Dupre was one of our own — a local hero of sorts. For many of the lifelong parishioners in my church who remember him as a priest there, he represented not only the head of the Springfield Diocese, but a feel-good success story: the tale of the local boy who made it, despite notorious shyness, by living right and keeping faith.

So yeah, you'll have to forgive me. The allegations have been shocking for us back home in Chicopee, and I'd say most of the people who grew up with Dupre don't believe a word of this right now.

That doesn't mean it couldn't have happened, though, and that's what's freaking so many people out. If the allegations are legit — which as far as I am concerned, is still a big if — it means that Dupre's scandal will be the worst one of all. Worse than John J. Geoghan, worse than Paul Shanley, and yes, worse than Richard R. Lavigne, a convicted child molester and accused killer. If the allegations are true, it's horrific — it's as bad as if Cardinal Bernard Law had not only potentially covered up the scandal in the Archdiocese of Boston, but molested children himself, as well. No violation of trust would be worse than having it proven that an active bishop charged with cleaning up the last sexual scandal in the diocese was involved in one of his own.

The amount of unanswered questions aren't helping, either. Dupre stands accused molesting two minors, and that's no small charge. Since the charges have been levied, though, he's been tucked away from the press, the district attorney and from the diocese he led with no answer at all for the charges. No denial, no rebuff — nothing.

The silence is deafening.

For now, though, I'm holding out hope. I'm holding onto the notion that a random accusation by an unnamed victim who has chosen not to press any charges does not equate to a smoking gun. Bishop Dupre isn't a molester yet, and there's not enough yet for me to equate him with one.

If it turns out to be true, though, the Springfield Diocese has a gigantic mess to clean up. This one could affect Catholics in the region confidence-wise, faith-wise and trust-wise while undermining the work of thousands of good clerics in the region. Every time something like this happens, priests (and now bishops) everywhere take a hit. It's a vicious cycle that needs to be broken, and the only way for that to happen is to come clean and start over.

Here's hoping this mess gets sorted out, and quick. The heritage of several generations could ride on it.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR NEW WRITERS AND ARTISTS
IF YOU'RE INTERESTED COME TO THE ALL STAFF MEETING TODAY AT 7 PM IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT

Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness

Adrienne Bossi

Massachusetts is entering a very exciting time in our country's history. We are in a very unique position with the spotlight on us for John Kerry's success in the polls and the upcoming Democratic National Convention being held in Boston. We should take this opportunity to spread our voices across America. What a perfect time for the Boston Supreme Court to be faced with the monumental decision about homosexual marriage rights.

Massachusetts has granted gays the right to civil unions, like Vermont has. Yet, what is being pressured in the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court is the legalization of same sex marriages, not same sex civil unions. Vermont style civil unions carry the same benefits of marriage minus the title. Rose Arce, a journalist for CNN.com, describes the differences between the two. "Civil unions grant couples most of the rights of state civil marriages, except the name, but provide none of the federal benefits of marriage, such as Social Security benefits," she says.

Opponents of gay marriage are pushing for a constitutional amendment defining marriage as a union between a man and a woman. This amendment won't be on ballots until at least 2006. Until then, it appears that in May this year, same sex marriage will be legal in Massachusetts. There is no information available as to what rational grounds government officials, including Massachusetts State Governor Mitt Romney, have against gay marriage.

Those in favor of the constitutional amendment defining marriage as a union between men and women are promoting a society that pays lip service to its ideals.

This issue is groundbreaking on many fronts. Yet, many wonder why the topic of marriage has made it into the political sphere in the first place. We do, after all, have a separation of Church and State in this country. President Bush calls marriage a "sacred institution" and vows to do "what is legally necessary to defend the sanctity of marriage." It's up to religion, not George W. Bush, to sanctify anything.

When two people marry, they talk about love and God and holy matrimony. Yet, when two people divorce it becomes clear that marriage is ultimately a legal document of property and tax rights. Our government cannot decide who can partake in God's bond of holy matrimony, but it can decide whether or not all citizens should have equal property and tax rights under that bond. It is not up to the American government to decide upon the validity of a marriage and assign rules to whom a person can and cannot love. Why do people marry anyways? Family. Companionship. Love. Are these things the government ought to regulate?

The choice to marry or not, how to express sexual intimacy, and how to build a family are basic individual liberty's that our Declaration of Independence is supposed to protect (life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness). Arbitrarily excluding gays from one of the most basic tenants of the American dream is a violation of these basic human rights.

Again our country is faced with a controversial civil rights question. Yet, how much controversy should there be? Hasn't the case of civil rights historically been one of logic and reason versus impassioned religious and racial prejudices? It has always been that "all men are created equal". Yet, our society systematically deals with equality within each group that has been discriminated when the conclusion is always the same.

All men are created equal and ought to be treated that way. So what is different this time? Another minority group is striking many Americans as making the same outlandish claim that they deserve the same comforts of life as the majority. And why shouldn't we listen? Why shouldn't homosexuals have the right to marriage? They are people. They are friends and relatives. They are someone's brother, someone's aunt, someone's child. Just as all other minority groups that have struggled and still struggle are.

Those in favor of the constitutional amendment defining marriage as a union between men and women are promoting a society that pays lip service to its ideals. If gays who want legal marriage benefits marry a member of the opposite sex that they do not love, isn't that itself a threat to the "sanctity of marriage?"

Passing a bill that allows same sex civil unions, but falls short of marriage, "makes for unconstitutional, inferior, and discriminatory status for same-sex couples" said the four Massachusetts supreme court justices who ruled in favor of gay marriage Feb. 4. Hopefully our legislators are going to set their prejudices and religious beliefs aside and stand by the mountains of precedence that show that separate rights are hardly, if ever, equal.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian columnist.

We've got a bigger problem

Rachel Smith

There is a crisis in America. The very fabric of our existence is being challenged from within our hearts and minds. There is something creeping into our prime-time television viewing, our newspapers and our homes. This thing is threatening our children and even our national security. They've been in the Justice Department for years and have only recently been dealt with. Children around the world, six months and younger, are looking at it right now.

Gentle reader, I'm talking about breasts.

I'm not just talking about harmless, covered, shapeless breasts; I'm talking about naked, protruding sexy breasts—apparently the number one threat to our American society today. What has led me to this startling conclusion? I had to look back, way back, at least to the year 2000.

First, there was the mother arrested for breast-feeding while driving. Although the woman took unnecessary risks with her child's safety by driving with the infant in her arms, the real threat was reckless exposure of bare breast. What if somebody saw her nipples? I hope that woman's doing some hard time in a cold cell where she can reflect upon her carelessness.

Then Jennifer Lopez wore a revealing green designer dress to the Grammys. Although no nipple was exposed, Ms. Lopez came dangerously close to destroying the fundamental notion of democracy as she traded witty banter with P-Diddy.

Skip ahead a few years and one can almost predict the hysteria that shook our most wholesome and American of events, the Super Bowl. Janet Jackson's fully exposed breast and partially bare nipple is still haunting us on television, in the newspapers and in our minds, but the true tragedy is our children!

How will America's young children ever overcome the trauma of seeing Ms. Jackson's silver ornamented areola? They won't! They can't! My teenage cousin is still in a state of shock; he watches the exposure over and over on his VCR and does nothing but search for breasts all day on the Internet. His grades are fine and social life is unaffected, but he looks at bare breasts; he'll never be the same.

I must applaud the major networks and most newspapers for doing a terrific job warning us of this threat. The Tuesday after "Nipplegate," when Arizona, Delaware, Oklahoma and South Carolina held their crucial Democratic primaries, exit polls and interviews with pundits were overshadowed by Janet Jackson's breast. I couldn't find a lead story about the elections anywhere. Thank goodness! If it weren't for CNN's vigilant nipple coverage I wouldn't have ever known I was faced with such a threat; it is comforting that at least somebody was covering Jackson's nipple.

We must remain vigilant. Beyonce danced, or rather bounced, alluringly during the NBA half-time show wearing a low-cut dress that clearly exposed the side portions of the singer's bust, according to the Associated Press. The American people must not allow breasts to slide in through the side door; you're either with us or you're with the breasts.

There are other so-called news stories floating around that might distract attentive viewers from the real problem. Don't get sidetracked by the liberal media bias of networks such as CBS; the real weapons of mass destruction are beneath women's clothing, not in Saddam's arsenal. News coverage of the upcoming national election, the war on terrorism and other such nonsense is only a footnote to the subversive threat bare breasts pose to each of us, whether man, woman or child.

As easy as it may be to wait passively as nipples invade our television screens, magazines and even our bedrooms, we have a duty as citizens of the United States of America to curtail this insidious threat no matter what its cost.

Ladies, we're at the forefront of this problem. Remember, breast exposure occurs most frequently within our own homes. It is primarily our responsibility to safeguard this fine nation against the ticking time bombs under our shirts. Women of all ages make the first line of defense against bare chests. We will only be free of this threat when we can contain it.

Don't get sidetracked by the liberal media bias of networks such as CBS; the real weapons of mass destruction are beneath women's clothing, not in Saddam's arsenal.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

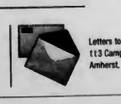
LETTER TO THE EDITOR

NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN ISREAL

In response to Yousef Munayyer's editorial titled "Hearing the whistle blow before the smoke begins to rise:"

In the simplest of terms, the words democracy, responsibility, and self-defense, must take precedent before the evolution of any discussion involving Israeli nuclear weapons. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld said it best, responding to a question Saturday about Israel and nuclear weapons: "Israel is a small state with a small population. It's a democracy and it exists in a neighborhood where many — over a period of time — have opined from time to time that they'd prefer it not be there and they'd like it to be put in the sea. And Israel has opined that it would prefer not to get put in the sea, and as a result, over a period of decades, it has arranged itself so it hasn't been put in the sea." (U.S. Defense Department).

Denise Benveniste
UMass student



SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

Some random observations

Ben Feder

On the table next to my desk is a 10-gallon fish tank that has no fish in it but is filled with water anyway. The water has become murky with dust and I think there are small bacteria colonies forming on the water's surface. While I stare into this mini abyss I can only ask why we have a full fish tank with no fish. Along with this thought, I began to wonder about life, like all great young minds, and started making observations and asking questions that I feel I need to voice.

I began to wonder about life, like all great young minds, and started making observations and asking questions that I feel I need to voice

What ever happened to that show on VH1, "Pop-up video?" That was a great show. It gave us the chance to see the videos we loved to watch, with little factoids that would give us the inside scoop and make us feel like part of the action. Why would anyone take something so great off the air, I don't know about anyone else, but a part of me died the day that show was canceled.

Another thing I find odd are the headphones for cell phones. Yes, they are a marvel of modern technology, but let's be honest, they make people look they are talking to themselves. I watched a girl walking by the library yelling into thin air until I noticed the cord dangling from her ear. Another time I had a five-minute conversation with a kid who had the cord hidden under his shirt and long hair over the earpiece. He was looking straight at me talking to whomever while I was sharing their conversation. It wasn't until he pulled his cell phone out that I realized my error, all the while I thought that I was making a new friend.

How come on all those sports video games, I have greater, exaggerated athletic talents and abilities, but in real life, there is no way I'd be able to accomplish these things? For example, I can't survive a 500-foot drop on a snowboard and land on my head. What we need is either more realistic sports video games, or actual sports that are less realistic.

Why do people commit so much of their time to drinking? I know this sounds like a dumb question, but compared to the amount of false promises we make, it's ridiculous at what lengths we will go to hit the bottle.

When Friday arrives we become alcohol tacticians. We plan who's getting the beer, from what store, at what time, and how we're going to sneak it into the dorms. We successfully coordinate a round robin so each room represents a different country and research which alcoholic drink goes with what nationality. I hate to sound like my mother, but if we spent as much time in being productive as we do in planning our weekends, we'd probably be half way to ruling the planet with real estate on Neptune by now.

People have started investing too much time in Instant Messenger, and not enough time actually talking to people. It's gotten so bad that people have begun to do all their serious and emotional talking over IM instead of physically talking to the person. Besides being extremely annoying, people are starting to lose innate social skills when it comes to confrontations. If someone makes you angry, you need to confront them so an emotional exchange can occur. Over a computer, you are severing that bond and forced to let all your bottled emotions fly at 2 a.m., drunk at a party.

The "foot-in-the-mouth" emoticon on IM looks like someone throwing up.

Guys have a complex system of dibs. If a girl is your first dibs, like a girlfriend or big crush, than none of your friends can touch her. If she's your second dibs, then it'd be nice for your friends to lay off, but it's acceptable if they don't. Beyond that, it's anyone's ball game. Girls have a simpler system – backstabbing each other and then telling everyone that the guy is a prick for hooking up with both of you.

Why is "Moulin Rouge" considered such a great and romantic movie? The man gets with a hooker who later dies of tuberculosis. What the movie doesn't show you is now Ewan McGregor's character contracted tuberculosis from her too. I guess the movie's message is "no glove, no love."

After entering your senior year you realize two truths. One: you will be more clean-shaven during your freshman year than you will be at any other time in your life. Even if you shaved five minutes earlier your face will never be that pristine and sheer ever again. Two: you will hear about your friends' college experiences and wonder why you never traveled abroad, got an internship, joined the marching band, or other things that would make your bleak resume impressive? Relax, that's what the fifth year is for.

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist

Ghost of the Providence bathhouse

Thomas Naughton

My friend, Xavier, had gotten a new job, which was a big deal during the summer of economic downturn that President Bush had ushered in with Operation: Oops, There Are No Weapons in Iraq and Hundreds of Soldiers Died for Nothing.

Xavier was laid off from his job at General Electrics Panametrics, which really pissed him off because he had a lot of self image tied up in the fact that GE paid for him to have business cards with his name on them. Men are strange. We sat down at Uno's and waited with bated breath for him to divulge his secret job.

"Male Escort!" I squealed, angering the old people at the next table who I glared at while holding my knife in my lap in the 'ready' position.

"Not exactly," Xavier replied.

"Janitor!" Alex yelped in between sips on her cocktail.

"Well, not really, but kind of," Xavier said.

"Escort Janitor! Your name could be Big Mop Handle!" I cut in eagerly.

"OK, receptionist" Todd offered. Todd is the sensible one.

"Well, you could say that too," Xavier said, shrugging, still not giving up the goods.

"Oh my God! You're a Male Escort who cleans up the apartments of your 'clients' and sometimes files and answers phones before during and after sex!" I yelled and smiled a teethy grin at the aforementioned AARP sitting to my left.

"Thomas, shut up, I work at a bathhouse, ok?" Xavier said and then looked down.

Then we all stopped talking for a long time.

"Well, what do you do?" Alex asked, trying to draw him out.

"I answer the phone, hand out towels, clean the rooms, and make sure that the guys don't beat each other up or break the furniture."

"So I was right, a sexually provocative janitor who can transfer a call with the greatest of ease," I quipped and then cowered waiting for a big slap from Xavier.

"You're insane," Xavier said, laughing.

The mood had lightened, but it was true. Xavier was working in a bathhouse in Providence. A bathhouse is a "gentleman's club;" it's basically a gym with showers, a sauna, and rooms with beds in them for clients to "sit and talk". Men go to these places to have sex. They were quite popular in the 1980s until the AIDS virus swept through the bathhouse community and the peripheral gay male community quickly when a regular client had contracted the virus. San Francisco, the most popular bathhouse community (second only to New York City) shut down its bathhouses to stop the spread of AIDS. Other cities followed suit. Some bathhouses turned into clubs like the one my friend Xavier works at.

"You're all coming to visit me," Xavier said ternly as he looked at me.

"Fine, I'll come for 15 minutes, but keep those scary men away from me, Big Mop Handle. I'm only doing this because I might get a column out of it."

Friday night came and I was hanging with the homos, or in proper English, going to a gay bar. The guitarist of my band called me. I told him I was going to a bar, but before the bar I was going to stop by a friend's work. He didn't know what a bathhouse was so I told him.

"You're a dirty whore," Billy said and hung up.

"NO!" I screamed and called him back. He didn't answer. I knew for sure he was laughing his head off so I left a message, "Billy, when I see you tomorrow I'm going to shank you. I don't want to go to the bathhouse. I have to, my ill-conceived friend, Xavier, got a job there and I'm trying to be supportive, so I'll say hi to your stepdad when I see him there tonight." And then I swore and said some offensive things about sexual relations with his brother.

The gay bar I was going to was 15 minutes from Xavier's bathhouse, so I walked over. Xavier, who looked tired, greeted me; it was midnight. The place looked like a very well furnished YMCA. If it weren't for the moaning of gay porn on the television in the common room and the hallways of rooms where men were undoubtedly having sex, one would think it was a YMCA—

I looked at these men as they checked in and out, wondering. "did you wear protection, did you ask him if he's been tested, did you divulge your health status, were you honest with him..." — all things that I share and ask of my boyfriends before we become sexually active (safely 100 percent of the time) in our relationship. I realize that I am different from these men, but the issue remains the same, we all have a responsibility to one another, male and female, gay and straight. We must disclose our health, we must wear protection, we must get tested.

As I walked out of the bathhouse in Providence, I turned around and saw more men entering, men that looked like your father and mine. I realized that these men are ghosts—living, for now, that they are the ghosts of a disease in the past. They are the premonitions of our future when we do not take responsibility for our health.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ol' Dirty Bastard is getting 'ol" and tired

By Evan Goldfried
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON – I left the Ol' Dirty Bastard concert Thursday night in a daze, walking out of Pearl Street into the freezing cold, huddled together with a mass of disenfranchised fans. Only after I managed to shamble my way to the car, turn on the heat and sit for a few seconds did the commiseration begin. Did I really just see that? Did that concert really happen?

And how the hell were there no bous?

Ol' Dirty Bastard performed in Northampton Thursday to a small but loyal group generously numbered at nearly 500-strong. Why loyal? They were loyal because each person was willing to shell out the $25 to see the once (and assumedly future) king of shock-comedy rap. Each person was willing to stand and support the opening acts, a solid but bland solo MC and Rhythm Ruckus, an extra large duo hailing from the Five-College area. And each person was willing to stand – and wait – and wait, over an hour by my count, as O.D.B. took his time preparing for his entrance.

Ol' Dirty Bastard — Pearl Street — Northampton — Feb. 12

But this wasn't enough. O.D.B.'s longtime partners-in-crime, Brooklyn Zoo featuring the enormous Budda Monk, first came on stage to warm the crowd up. Keep in mind; it was nearly 11:30 p.m. The concert started three hours earlier.

Finally! Finally, O.D.B. stepped on stage. Or rather sidled in behind his four-man posse, suddenly appearing out of the darkness in front of the DJ booth. The crowd cheered, the anticipation was at a head.

And I have to give them credit. For two songs, he had the crowd. He began well with "The Stomp" and then cut straight to his first hit, "Shimmy Shimmy Ya." We cheered; we sang along, people danced.

It could have been great.

And then suddenly, O.D.B. regressed, relegating himself to the background, giving full freedom for his less-than-endearing sidekicks to take over the show. Rarely did he return to the front of the stage. At times, he let his backing track do the lead vocals and he would simply chime in with the Brooklyn Zoo, as though Ol' Dirty was backing, well, Ol' Dirty.

Perhaps the most infamous moment came during a new track called "Child Support," in which Budda Monk shouted about how terrible it is when you have to provide for a child that you've fathered. This song was followed by the lone female counterpart of Brooklyn Zoo, bearing it all for the crowd.

The horror ... the horror. Strangely enough, O.D.B. cut the song short. Was it an act of benevolence, sparing the crowd, particularly the women, any further shame and degradation?

I wish. It became fairly obvious that O.D.B. wanted nothing less than to be on stage performing at Pearl Street, let alone performing in general, especially when he unceremoniously finished another unidentifiable song and decided to call it quits.

So why did no one boo? There simply wasn't enough time. He decided to end the concert at midnight. He began at 11:30 p.m. That is nearly a dollar a minute, by my count. A hefty price to pay to see a once-great artist in what appears to be the tail end of a fading career.

COURTESY OF ELEKTRA RECORDS

Veteran rapper Ol' Dirty Bastard gave a half-hearted performance last week at the Pearl Street Nightclub.

A NAKED VALENTINE

Canadian rockers Barenaked Ladies provide laughter, tears and good music at Mullins

EMILIE LEGGAN, COLLEGIAN

Guitarist Ed Robertson and the rest of BNL entertained the Valentine's Day crowd

Barenaked Ladies — Mullins Center — Amherst — Feb. 14

Gavin Degraw opened for Barenaked Ladies on Saturday night.

By Meghan M. Healey
Collegian Staff

For those members of the University of Massachusetts' population that were not out being wined and dined this Valentine's Day, the Mullins Center provided an equally, if not better, alternative. Canadian rockers Barenaked Ladies made a triumphant return to Amherst on Saturday night, playing to a nearly full arena. The majority of the crowd appeared to be long-time BNL fans, but even those experiencing the Ladies for the first time were having a good time.

After nearly 10 years on the road BNL seem to have perfected their on-stage performance. All present at the Mullins Center this weekend were lucky enough to see one of the world's premier touring bands at their best. And, with eight full-length albums under their belts, the band has a lot of material to choose from, making each show a unique experience.

The show at the Mullins started with a video montage of the quintet and the introduction that flashed on the screen read: "Barenaked Ladies play everywhere ... for everyone ... and tonight they are playing in ... AMHERST!" to which the crowd cheered loudly. The stage remained dark until the band took the stage. When the guys came out they wasted no time getting straight into the music. With the energetic anthem "Maybe Katie" the spectacle that is a BNL show was underway. After the song, fans met Steven Page and Ed Robertson greeted the audience and pointed out a little girl in the front row. The young concertgoer was holding a sign that read "What's so 'Maybe' about me?" and the band busted into one of their impromptu-pour-of-the-moment freestyles, laden with using foul language around the young Katie and balls of all different sizes.

Following up 2001's hit "Are Limes Late" with BNL classic "Number One" and "It's All Been Done," the Ladies kept the crowd thoroughly in the mood to rock – that is.

As expected since Barenaked Ladies came to Amherst as part of their "Everything for Everyone" promotional tour, there was an shortage of new tracks as the band continues release of the same name. Favorites including "Chimpanzees," "Celebrity" and "Brand New 1,2,3" were among the power-pop quintet formed and those lucky enough to see them received by the Mullins Center crowd. The latest batch of songs [illegible] musical maturity for the [illegible] wacky antics and [illegible]. On stage these [illegible] appearance as well as [illegible] theatrics in his performance [illegible] there was none of the usual [illegible] fans have come to expect [illegible] of other old school BNL [illegible].

The [illegible] highlight [illegible] definitely the [illegible] fan favorite "Shopping [illegible] another unique [illegible] performance [illegible] touch [illegible] Klaus [illegible] the [illegible] "Pinch Me" [illegible] "Yesterday" [illegible] "Brian Wilson" [illegible] "Alcohol" [illegible] "War on Drugs" [illegible] "Old Apartment"

L.A. hires DePodesta

By John Nadel
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES – New Dodgers owner Frank McCourt settled on a general manager – and just in time for the start of spring training.

McCourt's first move since the close of his $430 million purchase of the Dodgers from News Corp. was the hiring of Paul DePodesta, considered one of baseball's top young executives, on Monday.

Pitchers and catchers report today to the Dodgers' spring training site in Vero Beach, Fla.

"My mission is to be on a relentless quest for baseball knowledge," DePodesta said at a news conference. "I know that will lead us in a positive direction. What I'm committed to is finding a way to win. I've been given a mandate by Frank and also the resources to be as aggressive as we possibly can."

At 31, DePodesta is the third-youngest person to be hired as a big-league general manager. Theo Epstein was hired by the Boston Red Sox at age 28 in 2002, and Randy Smith was 29 when the San Diego Padres hired him in 1993.

DePodesta, an assistant to Oakland GM Billy Beane since 1998, succeeds Dan Evans, who had one year remaining on a three-year contract.

"We needed to make a change, we needed a fresh start," said McCourt, a Boston real estate developer. "In the end, I found this to be a clear choice if not an easy one. During the search, there was one person that stood out.

"A lot of capable people had a high level of interest in this job. Money was no factor at all. We wanted to find the best possible person. We found that man in Paul."

DePodesta graduated cum laude from Harvard in 1995 with a degree in economics. He played baseball and football for the Crimson.

"I don't have all the answers, I know that," said DePodesta, who signed a five-year contract. "I don't think that there's any one way of doing things. When we were in Oakland, we did what we felt we had to do to win. I think probably my best attribute is being able to have an open mind."

Oakland reached the playoffs the last four seasons, but failed to win a postseason series. DePodesta worked for Cleveland for three years before joining the A's.

DePodesta said the Dodgers have about twice the resources as the A's.

McCourt repeated what the Dodgers announced Friday upon closure of the sale – that Jim Tracy would be their manager. Tracy has one year remaining on his contract.

"I'm flattered at the fact that they are going to give me the opportunity," Tracy said. "I apologize for nothing that we've done in my three years. We've won 40 more than we've lost."

L.A. hasn't made the playoffs since 1996 and haven't won a postseason game since 1988.

No announcement was made concerning the future of Kim Ng, the Dodgers' assistant GM.

McCourt said Jan. 30 – the day after baseball owners unanimously approved the sale – that the 44-year-old Evans would be merely a candidate for his own job.

The Dodgers' GM since Oct. 3, 2001, Evans interviewed along with other candidates including Philadelphia Phillies assistant GM Ruben Amaro.

Chartier coming into his own for Minutemen

SWIM from page 10

come. Seven days later, Chartier led the Minutemen to victory at New Hampshire with a win in the 200-yard free (1:45.44.)

A month after UNH, Chartier found himself receiving another A-10 Rookie of the Week citation, after dominating mid-distance events at the Nutmeg Invitational, Dec. 5-7. He placed first in the 400-yard IM and the 500-yard free at the Invite, with times of 4:05.08 and 4:38.48, respectively. He then went on to swim a leg on the winning 800-yard freestyle relay, which finished in a season-best 7:02.30.

The already accomplished freshman recently turned his attention to the Nov. 19-21, A-10 Championships set to be held in Buffalo, N.Y.

"I'm very excited for the A-10, we leave for New York next Tuesday and we're looking forward for the chance to win another Conference title," Chartier said.

#30 Al Skinner

COLLEGIATE CAREER

- A three-time letter winner in basketball at UMass
- Led the team in rebounding from 1971-1974, totaling 749 rebounds
- Set a school record for highest career field goal percentage at UMass (.557), and held the single season record (.620) for nearly 20 years.
- A three-time first-team All-Yankee Conference selection.
- Led the league in scoring in 1974, averaging 18.7 points per game
- Became only the eighth player in school history to join the 1,000-point club, finishing his career with 1,235 points.
- Inducted into the UMass Athletic Hall of Fame in 1982.

PROFESSIONAL CAREER

- A member of the New York Nets 1976 ABA championship team.
- Named team captain and Players' Association representative when Nets moved to NBA in 1977.
- Led Barcelona, Spain team to European championship.

COACHING CAREER

- Served as the head coach at the University of Rhode Island from 1988-1997, posting a record of 138-126 with two NCAA Tournament appearances.
- Currently the head coach at Boston College, posting a record of 103-85 with two NCAA Tournament appearances.
- Named 1992 Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year, 2001 Big East Coach of the Year, and 2001 National Coach of the Year.

win a trip to europe! contiki.com/campus
get into a real greek week!

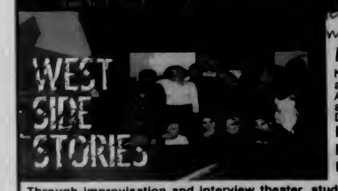
>we've got the ultimate toga party!
>new! mykonos resort 7 nights from $599
>aegean classic cruise 7 days from $579
>greek island hopping 14 days from $1289
>london to athens 23 days from $1799
prices are per person, land only, subject to availability
>packages include accommodations, transportation, many meals and as much fun as you can handle! call now or go online to book the vacation of a lifetime!
contiki
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com
C0741001/7/06-20

Free & Open to all students

Win Airline Tickets!
Win Basketball Scores!
5-Person Basketball Competition
Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed
GMAC
Pontiac
Register at www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS
QUALIFYING ROUND
Thursday, February 26
7PM - Curry Hicks Cage



Hippodrome
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
How far will you go?

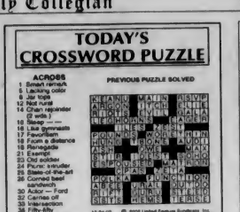
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 → Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 → A great place to get contact lenses
3 → Convenient hours and location
4 → FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 → Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
- The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
- The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
- Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

New WORLD Theater



West Side Stories
New WORLD Theater presents a Pioneer Valley Performing Arts High School production, in association with the UMass Department of Theater.
Feb. 21@ 8 pm & Feb. 22 @ 2 pm, Bowker Aud.
Students $5 545-2811
Through improvisation and interview theater, students from Amherst Regional High School, the Pioneer Valley Performing Arts, and Project 2050 collaborate in a multi-dimensional exploration of race and place through music, dance, sketch comedy, satire, and drama.

A Revolutionary Convening: The Vision of June Jordan Feb.27 & 28 -FREE-
Presented by the UMass Women's Studies Department in association with New WORLD Theater, the Student Activities Center, the Black Student Union, WOCLN of EWC and the Office of ALANA Affairs.
Friday, Feb. 27 - 7:30 pm, SUB - Keynote Address by Sonia Sanchez.
Saturday, Feb. 28 - 9 am - 5 pm, CC101 - Round table discussions. 8 pm, Bowker Auditorium - BLUEPRINTS FOR REVOLUTION: A PERFORMANCE, featuring Sonia Sanchez, Kate Rigg, Letta Neely, Jane Sapp and the Voices of Today, Magdalena Gomez, Evelyn Harris, and Project 2050. For Conference info call Linda Hillenbrand 545-1922.
www.newworldtheater.org
Ford Foundation

Georgetown University
2004 SUMMER PROGRAMS
Latin America and the Age of Globalization
Buenos Aires, Argentina - June 14 - July 23, 2004
Latin American Politics: Globalization and the Meltdown of Society
Buenos Aires, Argentina - July 5-August 13, 2004
The European Union: Antwerp Exchange Program
Antwerp, Belgium - May 23-June 5, 2004
Gateway to Business Program
Washington, DC - June 1 - July 2, 2004
School for Summer and Continuing Education
Georgetown University
1437 37th St. NW, Washington, DC 20057
Phone: (202) 687-5719/5832 Fax: (202) 687-8954
E-mail: sscespecialprograms@georgetown.edu
Web: www.georgetown.edu/ssce/spp

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

THE HARP Irish Pub

413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. · Reggae Night dance party
THU. · Yellow Brick Ed rock and roll!
FRI. · Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. · Hi-8-US grove rock
February Special! Molson: $2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burrito
- Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Italian Meatloaf
- Native American Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 37
- Low: 20

THURSDAY
- High: 41
- Low: 20

FRIDAY
- High: 45
- Low: 28

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Dave Pessah/ Jen DiMeglio/ Molly Eggleston

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Make like it's 1983 and dance around your room to "Like a Virgin".

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Give that loved one what he or she wants, it will benefit you next week.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are a God/Goddess.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You should have Chinese food tonight.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Visit New York City, it will be good for you.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Talk to your professor about it.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
An Aries loves you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Floss every other day, cause it's nasty not to.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Wake up at 3 a.m. and watch TV. (Not the dirty kind)

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The hotness is overwhelming.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Put down the mayonnaise.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Call her!!!!!!!!!!

Quote for the Day

"We are looking forward to a non-racial, just and egalitarian society in which color, creed and race shall form no point of reference."

-Steve Biko, South African freedom fighter.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus Fundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartment for Rent

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspen-square.com

Auto for Sale

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Cierra, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Employment

Photography position available. Photographer for Whitewater trips. Some photography experience necessary. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time Summer season. Call 625-2288 Deadline 2/26/04

Employment

CAMP CANADENSIS, A PREMIER RESIDENTIAL SUMMER CAMP, located in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. (2 hours from New York City and Philadelphia). Our counselors teach, supervise, and share in the day-to-day experience of each camper, together forming lasting friendships. Our staff brings enthusiasm and motivation as well as understanding and sensitivity. We are looking for qualified staff to instruct athletics, LFG, WSI, waterskiing, wakeboarding, sailing, jet skiing, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, cooking, arts & crafts, outdoor adventure; including high and low ropes, climbing walls, mountain biking, motor bikes, fishing and much more. Excellent facilities and great salary! ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS, 2/23-2/27. Call 800-832-8228 or apply online, www.canadensis.com

Employment

Cruise Line Entry Level on board positions available, great benefits. Seasonal or Year Round. 941-329-6434 www.cruise-careers.com

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

Entry level food testers open schedule up to $80 per assignment email address required Call 1-888-327-4842 department number call c-344

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater, Full or Part-Time jobs. No Experience necessary. Will train. 625-2288 for Info. Deadline 2/26/04

Employment

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Snider, video director 577-0319

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Summer Nanny position Caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall. Full Time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

For Rent

Spring Break Rental Daytona Beach, Resort Studio 1Wk March 14th-21st $150.00 1-866-284-3972 Ref#8430

Roommates Wanted

Great House! Minutes from Campus Need responsible roommates Singles/groups welcome $325/month + 4 rooms open 12 months Starts June 1 Call or IM Lisa a.s.a.p.. (860) 227-4502, LMP3383

Services

Math/Physics tutor available; $30/hour; $20/hour (travel); Call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Services

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional And Customized Offering to marketing your skills. Affordable prices, Timely Service By Email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

PREGNANCY TEST ING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels; Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Spring Break 2004 It's here, book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

Place your own classified ad. Call 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A night for No. 30

UMass to face Rhody; will honor Skinner at half

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

At halftime of tonight's contest between the Massachusetts men's basketball team and Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island, former UMass great and current Boston College head coach Al Skinner's number 30 will be retired alongside George Burke and Julius Erving's number 32 and Lee Roe's number 15 on the William D. Mullins Center's south wall, marking the highest honor an academic institution can bestow upon one of it's former student-athletes.

"I am very honored and happy to be receiving this recognition, but this is not just an individual award," Skinner said in a release after learning of the honor. "I share this with my teammates. I am glad that our accomplishments have been able to withstand the test of time. I realize this is the highest honor that the University of Massachusetts can bestow upon a student-athlete. I again truly appreciate the recognition."

With special guests to include former ABA/NBA legend Julius Erving and Louisville head coach Rick Pitino, the night will surely be one of celebration and emotion. Thus, the task at hand for Maroon and White (9-13 3-7 A-10) head coach Steve Lappas is to overcome this controlled chaos and focus on the fact that there is indeed still a basketball game to be played.

"It is obviously going to be a special night for Al and his family and the University of Massachusetts, but we have to focus on the task at hand and that is basketball," Lappas said.

One area where the Lappas and the Minutemen may benefit from the hype surrounding the night is that of fan support. With the sparse Mullins Center crowds that have plagued the team for much of Lappas' tenure in Amherst growing slightly larger as the 2003-04 has progressed, quietly team and university officials are predicting — and hoping for — a large turnout from paying fans as well as the students who have been all but completely absent from the equation for much of the season.

"We hear the crowd when they show up," team captain Anthony Anderson said. "[When we played Dayton at home] we knew they were there, and we fed off them. We obviously want more people to continue to come out and support us, and those who are there making a lot of noise help us too.

So with a former legend and a strong home crowd behind them, the Minutemen will hope to duplicate one of their more impressive efforts of the season, a 67-63 win at the Ryan Center on Jan. 31 in which freshman Maurice Maxwell's 3-pointer with 25.6 seconds remaining helped seal UMass' third victory in a row.

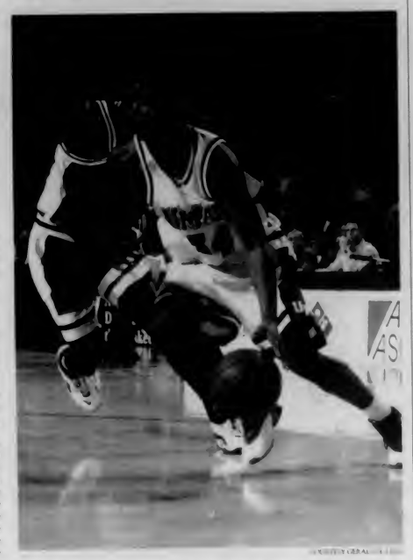
The task may be easier now that the Rams (14-11 5-8 A-10) have begun to slide, losing eight of 10 after beginning the season 12-3. However one player who has continued to thrive in coach Jim Baron's system despite recent woes is guard Dawan Robinson.

"He's a dynamic player who can do a lot of things on both sides of the ball," Lappas said prior to the teams' last meeting. "He's quick off the dribble and create a lot of his own offense.

"He makes a lot of good things happen for himself and others around him."

On the season, Robinson leads the team in scoring at 16.8 points per game — more than comparable to some of the better backcourt players to come through Kingston in recent memory including current NBA stars Cuttino Mobley and Lamar Odom.

Senior guard Brian Woodward (13.4 ppg) and junior swingman Dustin Hellenga (11.8 ppg) help carry the offensive load for the Rams, and are second and third on the team in scoring, respectively.



"They have a lot of players who can beat you," Lappas said. "Our team defense, as it always is, is as important as anything."

Another area of concern for Lappas will be rebounding, as URI leads the A-10 in rebounding with 40.6 per game, including 5.1 rebounds per game from Woodward and 4.7 rpg from center Marcel Mompl aisir. Yet if the last time these two teams met is any indication (the Rams outrebounded UMass 36-31), the Minutemen know that keeping the rebounding margin to a minimum will be important.

"We're going to find ourselves outsized night in and night out," Lappas said. "We just need to continue to battle and do what we can on the glass, and if we come close to breaking even we'll be OK."

For the Maroon and White, it will also be important to find a rhythm offensively, something they were not able to do following the suspension from the starting lineup of both Anderson and sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman in a 64-44 loss to Xavier on Saturday.

UMass was led by Art Bowers 10 points in losing to the Musketeers, and the freshman guard is hoping to duplicate his game-high 18 point effort against Rams in Kingston, which also saw all five starters in double figures for the Minutemen.

Freshman Art Bowers' 18 points helped lead the Minutemen to a 67-63 win over Rhode Island on Jan. 31.

Sox should breathe easy about A-Rod

Mike Marzelli

So the deal that the New York Post affectionately deemed New York's "Biggest Since Babe" has finally gone through. Alex Rodriguez is officially a Yankee, George Steinbrenner is officially a spoiled little convicted felon, Brian Cashman is officially off the hook for now, Joe Torre officially has far too many egos for one clubhouse and the greatest rivalry in sports has now officially become wicked outta' control.

So now what?

Well for one thing, there is no reason for despair here in Red Sox Nation's westernmost outpost. Contrary to popular belief, the A-Rod trade does not put the Yankees over the top as the greatest team since Mr. Burn's company softball team. In fact, it doesn't even make them the best team in their own division.

What it does do is establish what we already know: Georgie Porgie will stop at nothing to accentuate the fact that the Yankees have an unfair advantage that no other team in professional sports can boast; that being unlimited resources.

What the A-Rod situation has shown about the comparison between baseball's most expensive team, the Yankees, and its second most expensive, the Red Sox, is that when a player like Rodriguez is there for the taking, Boston has a limit on how much money it has to spend and New York simply does not.

Are the Yankees better than the Red Sox now, at this point, with Rodriguez? I say no, and for a number of reasons. First of all, few have talked about what the Yankees are giving up in this deal. Alfonso Soriano, when he's right, is as tough an out as there is in the American League. He is a five-tool player with the quickest hands this side of Gary Sheffield, and if there is anyone in baseball who could become the next A-Rod, it's him.

When you take his numbers and compare them to Rodriguez, there just isn't that significant of a difference in what was a down year for both players. While Rodriguez hit .298 with 47 homeruns and 118 runs batted in, Soriano checked in at .290 with 38 homers and 91 RBI.

Sure there is a difference of nine round trippers and 27 RBI, but when you consider that Soriano's numbers came out of the leadoff spot, it's tough to make a case for Rodriguez making a significant difference on statistics alone. If given the opportunity to drive in runs from the heart of an order, there's no saying what he could have done.

Second of all, how will Rodriguez not only react to moving positions, but to moving out of the primary limelight? In both Texas and Seattle, Rodriguez was the main attraction as he established himself as the best player in baseball. Now that he's in New York that will change.

The Yankees are Derek Jeter's team, which is why it's Rodriguez and not Jeter that is moving to third. Can A-Rod play third? Probably, but it's worth considering that there may be some growing pains. Can he handle being second fiddle to a player who is his baseball inferior (Jeter), an owner who is inferior in many capacities and to the Yankee name which is supposedly above focusing on any one individual? That remains to be seen.

With that in mind, how will the Yankees handle their new collection of egos? Three years ago, it was unselfish players like Paul O'Neill, Tino Martinez and Scott Brosius who patrolled the Stadium clubhouse, deferring any and all matters to Jeter, Steinbrenner and manager Joe Torre. Now, it's a hodgepodge collection of personalities, varying in age from relatively young (A-Rod) to relatively washed-up (Kenny Lofton), and of course the always-lovely Gary Sheffield.

For Jeter, the challenge will arrive in a most uncomfortable form. The Yankees shortstop is widely considered a legend, however he is not a great player. He is certainly a very good player, and a very clutch player, but 10 homers and 52 RBI's is great only in New York. How will the Yankee captain react to being shown up by none other than his partner on the left side of the infield? When A-Rod puts up numbers far beyond what Jeter could ever dream of in 2004, how will No. 2 deal with being the captain of a team he is no longer the star of?

Do these Yankees have the potential to blow up? Yes sir, they do. It will be quite interesting to see how the enigmatic personalities of Sheffield, Lofton and Kevin Brown react to not only the intense pressure and scrutiny of playing and winning in New York, but doing so with each other. If any one of them folds and/or pulls a Hideki Matsui and refuses to hit the ball in the air, it has the potential to crack the entire team.

Finally, Mr. And Ms. Yankee fan reading this column, who is going to play second base? Trading for Rodriguez certainly fills a hole at third, but in the same stroke opens a gaping one at second. Is Enrique Wilson the answer? The Red Sox fan hopes so, as he is as far from every-day capable as possible, and is the sole factor keeping the Yankees from having a truly "great" lineup. The Sox of 2003 had no easy outs one-through-nine, and the Yankees of 2004, with Wilson and a deteriorating Lofton, nearly have two.

And of course, what if A-Rod gets hurt?

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com.

Swimmer making a name for himself

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

Greg Chartier is a product of the system.

Born and raised in Amherst, Mass., the freshman swimming sensation has never drifted far from his roots.

When he's not practicing his freestyle at Boyden Gymnasium, there's a good chance he can be found across town coaching the Tritons, his former recreational team comprised of students from Amherst Regional Middle School.

"It's just natural for me to swim and coach here in Amherst," Chartier said. "I've known Russ [Yarworth, UMass men's coach] since I was 13 and I started going to UMass meets when I was a kid, so Amherst swimming is really all I know."

Last year when Chartier was a senior at Amherst Regional High, he became one of the country's most heavily recruited swimmers. Named an All-American in the 200-yard individual medley, and state champion in the 200-yard IM and 100-yard free, he was also honored as the Massachusetts state Swimmer of the Year in 2002.

After losing 10 seniors to graduation last season, Yarworth, with an under-aged squad of eight freshman and two transfers are about to face a mammoth task. Next Thursday the Minutemen will defend the A-10 title, which they've held the past three years.

"We were forced to put a lot of pressure on the freshmen this year because we lost eight seniors who figured into the scoring during last year's A-10's," Yarworth said. "I knew Greg and Evan [Swisher] were talented swimmers but I wasn't sure how long it would take for them to get adjusted to the pace of collegiate races."

From the start of the season it was apparent that Chartier wouldn't need much of a grace period. After his first two races for the Maroon and White, Chartier received the season's first A-10 Rookie of the Week honor.

In the season opener Greg finished first in the 400-yard IM, with a time of 4:13.5. But a first-place finish at the Husky Invite Oct. 18 was only a preview of what was to

See SWIM on page 8

A-Rod officially a Yankee

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Alex Rodriguez left New York a child, returned as a celebrity and hopes to leave as a champion.

A-Rod is moving onto the biggest stage in town, Yankee Stadium, where he's expected to help New York win the World Series for the first time since 2000.

"I'm pretty excited. This is a big, big one," Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said after commissioner Bud Selig approved the record-setting swap with the Texas Rangers.

"It ranks with when we signed Reggie," he said, referring to slugger Reggie Jackson, who became a Yankee after the 1976 season.

Rodriguez, the first reigning MVP to be traded, was introduced yesterday at Yankee Stadium, where the sign board outside proclaimed: "A Rod. Welcome to NY."

Coming up from Florida to attend were manager Joe Torre, who will miss the opening of the team's spring training camp, and Yankees captain Derek Jeter, who will keep his shortstop job. The 28-year-old Rodriguez, a seven-time All-Star, will shift to third base to fill the hole left when Aaron Boone wrecked his knee.

Texas gets second baseman Alfonso Soriano and a minor league player to be named, but it will still have to pay $67 million of the $179 million Rodriguez is owed over the remainder of his deal.

Steinbrenner and Yankees general manager Brian Cashman personally assured Jeter that he would keep his position and that Rodriguez would switch to third — where his only experience is one inning during an All-Star game.

"Derek's response to me was he thinks this is pretty cool," said Cashman, who also said moving Jeter was "not a consideration whatsoever."

"You go with the man that brought you to the dance," he said. "You're going to stick with him. You don't mess with success. ... There is no issue there — who's the starting quarterback? We have arguably the best left side of the infield in the history of baseball."

MARY ALTAFFER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

New York Yankees manager Joe Torre (left) and shortstop Derek Jeter (right) welcome Alex Rodriguez to New York.

The ladies of 'Sex and the City' say their final farewells

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

AL 30 SKINNER

UMass retires Al Skinner's No. 30

SPORTS, PAGE 12

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 85

Students to protest new fee today

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

A rally protesting the New International Student Fee will be held at noon today outside the Student Union. The rally is organized by the Graduate Student Employee Organization, and will include a march to the Whitmore Administration Building, petition signing and sign-up sheets.

"We will be speaking on why the SEVIS fee is totally discriminatory," said Mini Kidrian, a GEO staff member.

The online petition opposing the fee is posted on the GEO website, addressed to Chancellor John V. Lombardi. It has collected 933 signatures online as of yesterday. The total number of petition signatures is well over 1,500.

The fee is a $65 charge that applies only to international students, and covers the cost of the International Programs Office instillation of a monitoring system that tracks the personal information of students who are not citizens of the United States.

The Student and Exchange Visitor Information System, (SEVIS), is a requirement of the Patriot Act. The University is responsible for funding the system, which is covered by the New International Student Fee, which was implemented by UMass at the start of the spring 2004 semester.

Other universities across the nation, such as the University of Chicago, have spread the SEVIS expenses throughout the entire student body, eliminating the need for a fee directed solely at international students.

"That's just like saying all women need to pay a fee for Everywoman's center, ALANA students need to pay for ALANA recruitment and handicapped need to pay for ramps. It just opens up a whole can of worms," Vials said.

The rally is open to all, and will be run by GEO staff members, graduate and undergraduate union members, faculty speakers and UMass students.

SGA discusses Alcohol Task Force

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Government Association Senate debated the alcohol abuse prevention recommendations made by the Alcohol Task Force at a Senate meeting last night, as well as hearing a response from Speaker Jared Nokes after the SGA Executive Cabinet's call for his resignation last week.

During his report, Nokes read a statement in which he likened President David Carr calling for his resignation to former President Bill Clinton calling for then Speaker Newt Gingrich to resign a few years ago.

"Yes, President Clinton could have done it, but Speaker Gingrich would not have taken the request seriously," Nokes said.

He said he would not take the resignation seriously because most of the Senate continues to support him. He noted 12 people signed the letter, but that eight of them are from the Cabinet, who are non-voting members in the senate. He dismissed the other three as senators who "have been asking for my resignation since September." The last was a former ALANA senator.

Nokes said Carr has political reasons for calling for Nokes' resignation.

"I can't help but think there are some election purposes," he said.

Nokes also said that the Senate has a lot of work to do. He said there are still many issues facing students the Senate has yet to speak on, including the alcohol policy changes and new dorms. He promised he will continue in his position until May, when his term ends.

Once the Senate concluded with reports, Senator Timothy Busiere attempted to add his own motion to the agenda, favoring the findings of the Alcohol Task Force. Patrick Higgins, chair of ways and means and Adrienne Girard, Chair of public policy and relations, attempted to counter with Busiere's motion, which mostly disagrees with the Alcohol Task Force's findings.

Last year, the Alcohol Task Force was formed with 21 members of the faculty and administration and three student members. The members met weekly to discuss what steps the University should take on the prevention of alcohol abuse.

One of the student members, Brian Long, secretary of university policy, was the sole representative from the SGA. He consistently came to Senate meetings last year and asked for more senators to come to the meetings to help voice student's opinions, but few attended.

This fall, the Alcohol Task Force presented Chancellor John V. Lombardi with an 11-page document, including several attachments with their findings.

They made many recommendations with both long-term and short-term goals. Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, is considering a recommendation that would make it mandatory for parents and guardians to be notified when their sons or daughters are subject to discipline after a violation of the UMass Alcoholic Beverage Policy.

Gargano is specifically considering sending a letter home for a first offense when a student is charged with having a large volume of alcohol or providing it to minors. A letter will also be sent home when a student is charged with a second offense for having an open container or being underage with alcohol.

Long has several problems with this. One argument was that parents should not be notified of alcohol abuse, because currently, parents are not notified if a student gets removed from housing.

Jared Nokes, speaker of the Senate, responded to the call for his resignation at last night's SGA meeting.

Gargano told the Collegian that he would look into sending a letter home under both circumstances.

Higgins and Girard's motion coincided with Long's argument — they said a letter should not be sent home. Busiere's did not.

Both motions state that creating separate housing for those 21 and older and community billing after alcohol-related vandalism is not what the student body wants. The Alcohol Task Force recommends both.

Neither motion received the two-thirds majority necessary to be added to last night's agenda.

The Senate wants both motions to be sent to the University Policy Committee.

Busiere said the fact that both motions had to do with the Alcohol Task Force's recommendations and that neither had gone through committee shows the "alcohol culture" that exists within the Senate.

"We have senators who leave in the middle of meetings to go to the Blue Wall and then come back to continue their jobs as senators," Busiere said. "We also have senators who have come in drunk this year. The fact that my motion, which generally supports the Alcohol Task Force recommendations, got fewer votes to be added to the agenda than did the motion which generally goes against the Alcohol Task Force recommendations, simply shows that many in the Senate are inherently against making alcohol policy stronger on this campus."

Busiere said this is unfortunate, and that the Senate is still faced with two different choices.

"I have every confidence that the senate will reject many of the findings of Alcohol Task Force," Higgins said.

Both motions will be heard at Senate next week, Nokes said.

EMILIE DUVANNEQUEHAN

A night to remember

Al Skinner, left, and UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon display the banner with Skinner's jersey number that will adorn the Mullins Center's south wall. For more coverage, see pages 11 and 12.

Romney rejects new UMass Boston employee contracts

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

Months after he gave raises to the higher paid employees at the University of Massachusetts Boston, Govenor Mitt Romney's administration rejected new contracts for the lowest paid workers on the campus.

Jeffrey Hall of the Service Employees International Union said because UMass Boston is a public school, tax dollars pay for the school's contracts, and the Governor thinks that the state can't afford to pay for the lowest paid workers.

"His excuse for rejecting it is because of the financial situation of the state," Hall said.

The classified staff, which is made up mostly of secretary and clerical workers, is affected most by the contraction rejection. The group has an average salary of less than $32,000 a year, and includes about 300 people.

"Without them, this place can't run," Hall said.

Hall said the pay increase classified staff hoped for was about two to three percent. Classified staff has been working for about two years without a funded contract.

"It's really a drop in the bucket," Hall said of the amount the raise would cost. Hall said that the desire for pay increases is not just about money.

"This is about increases the university agreed to years ago," he said.

Because state funds pay for the employee's contracts, there is a lengthy process that the employees must go through before their contract is approved.

After negotiating the new contract, it is sent to the Romney administration so the Governor can file an appropriations bill to cover the cost of pay increases for the state employees.

However, Hill said that the Romney administration rejected the proposal and refused to file funding legislation.

"It's really an unorthodox move," Hall said.

Less then two months ago, the Romney administration approved funding of other contracts for the higher paid employees at UMass Boston. Professors, professional staff and clerical staff all got raises in that contract.

Hall said that the raises that Romney gave these employees were to assist with the increase in cost of living.

Susan Brown, the chief steward of the UMass Boston clerical staff, said that the cost of living in and around Boston is increasing, and she said that she should be paid accordingly.

After the ruling, Hall said that many employees were upset and tried to contact the Governor's office but were met with confusion.

"I called the Governor's office to register a complaint, and they said they knew nothing about it," said Christine Boseman, an administrative assistant at the UMass Boston campus. "It's not fair to target those of us who are here making the least."

Hall said that this is not the end for the classified staff. Gov. Michael Dukakis' rejected a bill during his term and the legislature heard the case anyways. Hall hopes this will happen in this situation.

"Romney is not keeping his word," Hall said. "The next step is getting the word out about what happened," Hall said.

Hall said that he wants to encourage people to call their legislatures to tell them to fund the classified staff's contract.

"There will be no more broken promises," he said.

Interfaith Student Council to evaluate views on dating

By Matthew Consolini
Collegian Correspondent

Students from various religions, including Catholic, Hindu, Jewish, Mormon, Muslim and Pagan, will talk about their faith's views on sex and dating at the UMass Interfaith Student Council's first event of the semester tonight.

"We wanted something pertinent to college students, and what's more pertinent than sex?" said coordinator Jillian Marcus.

The panel discussion, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center, and will give students a multi-faith perspective on issues like sex and dating.

"These issues will be framed around the context of healthy relationships," said Marcus. "On a general level, religion really teaches morals and ethics, and we figure this is something people can use."

The discussion will also be on a more personal level since panelists will be discussing their own perspectives as well as the religious doctrine concerning these issues.

Marcus said she formed the council because she felt the campus really needed an interfaith venue to respond to myths and stereotypes that people might have towards various faiths.

"There's tension between Christians and Jews, because some Christians believe that Jews killed Jesus," Marcus said.

Another problem she cited is the negativity towards Muslims on the national level because of Sept. 11. Marcus hopes that the interfaith council will let students see other faiths in a positive light and encourage them to learn more about other religions.

"It's so much better to learn from each other," Marcus said. "I can't ask a Jewish student to tell me about Paganism. It makes more sense to ask a Pagan."

She feels that panels are the best format for these events because it allows everyone to participate, giving everyone a better understanding of each religion.

Marcus said the council has had great success with events in the past and that students have shown interest. The council's last panel discussed creation stories and their roles in religion.

She hopes that this and future panels will allow people to walk away with a better understanding of their fellow students' faiths.

"A lot of people don't know about Pagans," Marcus said. "The hear about witches and random rumors, and people come to learn with open minds and open hearts."

Also at tonight's panel there will be representatives from the UAOS Interfaith Bookshop in Amherst, who will be selling books on topics like incorporating religion into one's romantic life and tips for healthy relationships.

For more information, contact Marcus at jmarcus@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantanatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Stroub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reed
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marry Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagoy
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Ramer Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jachynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kiggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Graphics Adviser Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Hanly
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lawley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Morselli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Alpha Tau, become the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1916 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been recognized since January 1994 for advertising rates and information, call business office 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Dean ends campaign after disappointing defeat

Democrat drops out of race after 17 losses

By Ross Sneyd
Associated Press

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Faster than you can say dot.com bust, Howard Dean's quest for the presidency ended yesterday as the Democrat, winless in 17 contests, bowed to political reality and abandoned his bid.

Once the little-known former governor of a small Northeast state, Dean took a summer ride to presidential campaign heights, attracting scores of followers and a Democratic record $41 million in campaign dollars largely through the Internet.

Exactly one month ago, Dean was the candidate to beat — front-runner in national polls and poised to begin his primary romp with a win in the Iowa caucuses. It all crashed when the real votes were counted.

Dean finished a poor third in Iowa, second in New Hampshire and managed just single digits in several states through early February. One of his biggest union backers — the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees — bailed out on the day of the Washington and Michigan caucuses.

In the meantime, rival John Kerry had cruised to 15 wins and seized the front-runner moniker. Dean dubbed Wisconsin a must-win, then a not really. After the votes were tallied Tuesday, the race had become what Dean had predicted — two-man contest — but between Kerry and John Edwards.

A day after his distant third-place finish in Wisconsin, Dean announced that he would no longer actively pursue the presidency, but "we will, however, continue to build a new organization using our enormous grass-roots network to continue the effort to transform the Democratic Party and to change our country."

Striking the defiant tone that has been the hallmark of his candidacy, the former Vermont governor urged his delegates of some 200 to stick with him.

"Keep active in the primary," Dean declared to an overflow crowd of more than 500 flag-waving supporters and staff. "Sending delegates to the convention only continues to energize our party. Fight on in the caucuses. We are on the ballots. Use your network to send progressive delegates to the convention in Boston."

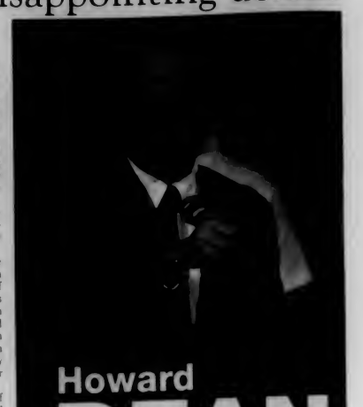
Historians will have the final say, but Dean was the candidate who rose from obscurity to a main draw on the Meetup.com Web site, news-magazine cover boy and unrivaled grass-roots organizer. It never paid off in Iowa, and all that was remembered was a high-octane concession speech that will live on long after Dean's candidacy.

His address yesterday was quieter but not much more reflective. It was a call to build an enduring political movement that will help to elect like-minded Democrats to Congress and local offices and unite to defeat President Bush in the fall.

Although he encouraged supporters to continue voting for him, he did make clear he would not seek to derail the party's ultimate nominee.

"I will not run as an independent or third-party candidate," he said, as his wife Judy stood behind him.

A physician whose rare appearance on the campaign trail had been the subject of discussion of whether she was a proper political wife, Dean drew cheers when he saluted her for starting the debate in the country "about whether a woman needs to gaze adoringly at her husband or follow her own career."



Dean did not endorse any of his rivals, although he called Edwards and Kerry to discuss his departure from the race. Both had kind words for the former candidate, with Edwards saying Dean "has energized and revolutionized this race, and excited a whole new generation of young people."

Kerry told reporters in Ohio that "it's impossible not to express admiration and respect for the campaign that he's put together and what he's achieved."

Dean has been impressed with Edwards and suggested on the campaign trail that he would make a better nominee, but Dean has decided to stay out of the Kerry-Edwards contest, a Dean aide said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Despite his departure, Dean made it clear that he will keep a close eye on the remaining candidates.

"I will support the nominee of our party," Dean said. "I will do everything I can to beat George W. Bush. I urge you to do the same. But we will not be above in this organization of letting our nominee know that we expect them to adhere to the standards that this organization has set for decency, honest, integrity and standing up for ordinary American working people."

Toby Talbot/Associated Press

Howard Dean smiles as he announces he is no longer a candidate for the presidential nomination in South Burlington, Vt., yesterday.

Democrats set for showdown

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

Their rivalry engaged, Democratic presidential contenders John Kerry and John Edwards unveiled distinctive strategies yesterday for a 10-state showdown March 2. The challenger will attack Kerry's free-trade policies and special interest ties, targeting Ohio, New York and Georgia with television ads.

The front-runner will battle Edwards on one front and President Bush on another, advertising in general-election battleground states while counting on arcane Democratic Party rules to protect his lead in nomination delegates.

"Every race is going to be contested. Every race," Kerry said in Ohio, the focal point of his plans to beat Edwards in March and Bush in November. "We're fighting for every vote."

The rhetoric reflected a get-tough attitude in Kerry's camp, victorious in the Wisconsin primary Tuesday but nonetheless stung by Edwards' closer-than-expected second-place finish.

Kerry, winner in 15 of 17 contests and still the undisputed front-runner, failed to push his chief rival from the race. He settled for the departure of Howard Dean, the former Vermont governor who quit yesterday after failing to win a single contest.

The Democratic race makes a pit stop next week in Hawaii, Idaho and Utah —where just 61 delegates are at stake — before turning to March 2 and the motherlode of 1,151 delegates, more than half the total needed to claim the nomination.

In Wisconsin, Edwards' debate performance Sunday and his criticism of Kerry's free-trade policies fueled his 11th-hour upswing. The first-term senator assailed Kerry's 1993 vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement and also aired an ad condemning the treaty, without mentioning Kerry's name.

University Health Services
Mental Health Groups Spring 2004

COED SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS
Tuesdays, 2:30-4:00 pm
OR Wednesdays, 3:30-5:00 pm
For college men and women who experience difficulties in interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships.

WOMEN'S EATING ISSUES GROUP
Tuesdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
This is a group for women who are interested in changing negative eating patterns, decreasing food and weight concerns and enhancing self-acceptance. Members will have an opportunity to learn about the underlying dynamics contributing to eating issues and to develop coping strategies.

WOMEN'S SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP
Thursdays, 9:00-10:30 am
This is a group for older undergraduates, graduate students, student dependents, and covered employees. The group provides an opportunity for women to explore personal relationships, work, studies, family of origin, health, acculturation, and other relevant concerns. The group is ongoing with members added as space permits.

ANGER ISSUES GROUP
Thursdays, 1:00-2:30 pm
This group is open to any students who would like to learn how to better manage and understand their anger. Meetings will focus on identifying emotions, memories, and situations that trigger anger, as well as strategies to manage it.

COED SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS
Thursdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
For graduate men and women who experience difficulties with interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Members will have an opportunity to explore personal relationships, work, studies, and other relevant concerns.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Thursdays, 5:15-6:30 pm
Mindfulness is a particular way of paying attention:
- with mindful intention
- in the moment
- without judgment

Although MBSR embraces the acceptance of things as they are without striving, research has shown that, with regular practice, it has the potential to lower stress, anxiety, and depression. It can promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness, and enhance the immune system. Referrals and inquiries may be made to Kathryn Proulx @ 545-2337.

Groups are conducted by Mental Health Division staff.
Payment is deducted from your UHS Basic Plan, Student Health Insurance Plan, GIC, or Health New England plan subject to plan limitation and co-pays.

Groups require an initial screening that can be arranged by calling 545-2337 or stopping by at 125 Hills North, Monday - Friday 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

WHAT DID YOU DO IN COLLEGE?

Join Amherst Fire Department's Student Force!

Recruiting NOW for the Fall.

Stop by our table in the Campus Center this week: February 17 - 20

Or call us at 549.5419

Open House at North Fire Station:
Friday, February 27 5:00 - 7:00 pm

10 am - 2 pm
This Week: Tuesday-Friday
Campus Center Concourse

ENGINE COMPANY 3
50 YEARS OF SERVICE

Amherst Fire Department
www.afde3.com

Suicide attack kills at least 8 Iraqi civilians

By Matt Moore
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Two trucks packed with explosives blew up yesterday outside a Polish-run base south of Baghdad after coalition forces opened fire on the suicide bombers racing toward them. Eight Iraqi civilians were killed and at least 106 people were wounded, many of them coalition soldiers.

The two drivers also were killed, according to the U.S. military, but no information about their identities was available.

Also yesterday, U.S. troops reported capturing seven suspected militants believed linked to al-Qaida in a raid in the central Iraqi city of Baqouba.

Troops from the 4th Infantry Division carried out the raid targeting an "anti-coalition cell" that may have ties to Osama bin Laden's terror group, a statement from U.S command said.

Seven suspects specifically targeted in the raid and 15 other people were detained, the statement said.

Baqouba is in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," north and west of Baghdad, the heartland of anti-U.S. violence in Iraq.

The Polish commander of the region, Gen. Mieczyslaw Bieniek, called the bombings near the base in Hillah, 60 miles south of Baghdad, a "well-coordinated attack."

U.S. officials have predicted an increase in attacks as the June 30 date for the transfer of sovereignty to Iraq approaches. Some insurgents fear their campaign could lose steam once power is returned to Iraqis, U.S. officials believe. However, major differences remain on how to choose a new government.

"The enemy's strategy is fairly clear," coalition military commander Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez told reporters Wednesday in Tikrit. "They plan to isolate us from the Iraqi people."

The bombing happened after 7:15 a.m. when two trucks loaded with explosives approached the front of the coalition base known as Camp Charlie. Guards fired at the vehicles, causing one to explode, said Lt. Col. Robert Strzelecki. The other struck a concrete barrier and exploded.

Eleven homes near the base collapsed in the blast and others were damaged, entire sides blown off. Debris littered the area.

Mohyee Mokheef, a 50-year-old cafe owner, who lives near the camp, said he was having breakfast with his family when he heard a faint first explosion and a second, louder one that shattered the windows in his home.

"I went out and walked toward the base, and I saw about eight damaged houses," he told The Associated Press. "I saw dead and injured Iraqis lying on the ground."

Men, women and children were among the dead. The wounded included at least 32 Iraqis and 26 Poles, as well as Hungarians, Bulgarians, Filipinos and an American.

Poland leads a multinational force of about 9,500 soldiers in south-central Iraq.

Bilal Hussein/Associated Press

A lightly-wounded Iraqi man and local resident walks past Polish soldiers yesterday. Earlier in the day, three buildings were badly damaged when two explosives-laden trucks were detonated outside a Polish military camp in Hillah, south of Baghdad.

The violence also came as members of the U.S.-appointed Governing Council distanced themselves further from the U.S. idea of holding regional caucuses to elect an interim government after the planned June 30 handover of power.

In Baghdad, Mouwafak al-Rubaie, a Shiite Arab member of the Governing Council, said yesterday that the idea of using caucuses was "gone with the wind," adding that the only solution palatable to Iraqis are general elections, as demanded by Shiite clerics.

"Anything else will make things worse and the results will be damaging to Iraq," he said. "Only elections will give the legitimacy needed for any future political process or body."

Secretary of State Colin Powell said Tuesday that the United States was committed to giving the Iraqi people control of their country by July 1 but remained open to ideas from the United Nations about how to choose the interim government. The world body is expected to give a report this week.

On Tuesday, the United States also unveiled a list of 32 wanted people.

Bloody uprising threatens Haiti's second-largest city

By Mark Stevenson
Associated Press

CAP-HAITIEN, Haiti (AP) — Frightened police barricaded themselves inside their station yesterday and said they could not repel a threatened rebel attack on Haiti's second-largest city, the last major government bastion in the north. Officers in other towns deserted their posts with no guerrillas in sight.

Even as police made clear they were too scared to patrol the streets of Cap-Haitien, militant defenders of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide vowed to take a stand against the two-week-old rebellion, which has killed some 60 people and has attracted leaders with murderous backgrounds.

"We have machetes and guns, and we will resist," said carpenter Pierre Frandley. "The police might have been scared, but the people got together and organized. ... We blocked the streets."

There were fears rebels already have infiltrated the northern port and more were headed that way.

U.S. officials worry the current crisis would only worsen if Aristide is forced to flee. One option being internally discussed is a transfer of power, with Aristide's consent, to a temporary governing board made up of Haitians who would run the country until a new president was elected. It is not clear how much support that proposal has at top levels of the Bush administration.

Aristide rebuffed Bush administration suggestions that he convene early presidential elections as a way to defuse the crisis, a senior U.S. official said yesterday.

Although the administration has said it is opposed to any Haitian opposition attempt to drive Aristide from office, Bush officials are privately discussing ideas for a possible constitutional succession before Aristide's term expires in February 2006.

Haitian government spokesman Mario Dupuy called both options "unacceptable."

"They are tantamount to admitting the legitimacy of a coup d'etat against the government," he told The Associated Press.

As Haiti's beleaguered government pleaded in vain for international help, former soldiers ousted in a 1994 U.S. military intervention crossed from the Dominican Republic to join the rebellion.

"The army is no longer demobilized. The army is mobilized," said Jean-Baptiste Joseph, a former army sergeant who had headed a group of demobilized soldiers before being jailed in the 1990s for plotting insurrection.

Dorm Life Got You Down?

Now you can afford to stay at the Campus Center Hotel

Reserve a room for a night, or a weekend at 30-40% off the normal rate when you present your valid 5-College ID at check in.

We have the best rates in town!

549.6000

A limited number of rooms are available at this incredible price. Be sure to request a STUDENT RATE when making your reservation!

Limited Availability. Blackout rates apply. This promotion cannot be combined "save thirty" gift certificates or any other discounts.

Make Finding a Job Easy!

Come to the Job Search Workshop Today!

10:30 am - 104 Career Services Building

Can't come today?

Wednesday, February 25
Noon - 104 Career Services

Thursday, February 26
10:30 am - 104 Career Services

CareerServices

For more information,
go to www.umass.edu/careers or call us at 545-2224

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dean campaign not a loss for America

In the wake of the Wisconsin democratic primary on Tuesday, Gov. Howard Dean has announced that he will no longer be a candidate in the race for the presidential nomination.

In the fall, Dean was enjoying the spotlight with front-runner status, as his campaign gained huge momentum. His popularity soared among the youth of the nation and "Dean for America" stickers were everywhere. Despite the craze, he failed to rack up enough votes to win even a single state in the recent primaries. It seems that his critics may have been correct when they said that he had "peaked too soon."

His withdrawal from the race has been expected since the last round of primaries.

"I am no longer actively pursuing the presidency," Dean told his loyal followers, according to www.cnn.com, but he did make a promise to continue working with the Democratic Party in order to achieve his goals.

According to Dean has not yet endorsed either of the remaining two candidates, but he did encourage Democrats to "stay active" in the process and focus on defeating George W. Bush in November's election.

Although there may be many who are sad to see Howard Dean step down, it was a wise decision — not only for himself, but also for the Democratic Party and America. Now, the public can focus on the two major contenders for the presidential nomination: Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry, and the South Carolina senator, John Edwards.

Kerry is still in the lead, having won 16 of the 18 primaries so far, but Edwards is close behind. In Wisconsin, Kerry was awarded 30 of its 72 delegates, and Edwards had 24. With numbers that close, it is a good thing that Dean, (who took 13 of Wisconsin's delegates), is stepping out. With fewer candidates splitting the votes, it will be easier to hear the voices of Americans and determine who the true leader is.

It remains to be seen who will come out on top, but with primaries in Hawaii, Idaho and Utah next week, followed by 10 more states the following Tuesday, it is only a matter of time before the Democratic Party will be able to choose who will make the best rival for Bush next fall.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian would like to commend Governor Dean for his wise decision to step down. Had it not been for his attempt to target young voters via use of the Internet, there would be much less interest in this election among the student age group. As recent surveys have indicated, more 18- and 24-year-olds intend to vote in the upcoming election than in the previous one. And although some of that interest may have been generated by the economy and the war, Howard Dean and his former campaign created a large part of that interest as well.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Don't judge scholarship too soon

Emilie Duggan

CNN.com reported last week that a student group at Rhode Island's Roger Williams University is offering a $250 scholarship to white students.

That's right. People of color need not apply.

The group behind this award? The College Republicans, of course. And is anyone surprised by that? Is anyone surprised that the group is asking applicants to submit an essay on why they "are proud of their white heritage" and a photo to "confirm whiteness" with their application?

My knee-jerk reaction was to be outraged, to mourn the loss of progress and prepare to step back in time to an era of Jim Crow laws and legal segregation. I had allowed myself be lulled into a false sense of security and I had foolishly let myself believe that society had moved past such public displays of hatred. Save for the outwardly militant racist groups, I naively thought that prejudice and bigotry simmered beneath the surface of only the discontent. I was wrong to assume that this kind of blatant discrimination belonged to generations far removed from ours of open acceptance.

I have a tendency, from time to time, of overreacting to situations before getting the whole story — this was one of those moments. When I finally finished my melodramatic bemoaning of the state of the world and finished reading the CNN.com article, I got it. I understand the message these kids are trying to get across: that giving financial aid based on race is unacceptable in this day and age.

This award is meant to be the College Republicans protest of affirmative action. However, too many people are stuck on the fact that minorities are not allowed to apply, and they're crying racism. To these people I say, "Get over it and keep reading."

Forget the fact that the club's president is a minority and is financing part of his education with a scholarship specifically for minorities. Forget that every article that has been written states that the scholarship is the students' way of "parodying minority scholarships" in protest to affirmative action. Their message isn't being fully disseminated because too many people can't move past the fact that this is a scholarship for whites. People from all corners of the world are having the same hasty reaction that I initially had — only they're not getting over it and reading the rest of the story.

Affirmative action was meant to be a temporary program, put in place to counteract centuries of discrimination and to level the playing field for minorities. The key word there is temporary.

The College Republicans state on their website (www.rwucr.com) that whites are put at a distinct disadvantage when it comes to scholarships. If their campus is anything like ours, then they're probably right. There are a multitude of scholarships available to minorities, simply because they happen to have melanin in their skin. Sure, these scholarships often have grade point requirements or require the student to demonstrate financial need, but the award is still only open to students of color.

What about white students? Why are they forced to compete with the entire campus for scholarships when people of color only have to compete with a small percentage of other people of color?

These students have been accused of racism, which isn't altogether surprising, given the nature of the scholarship and the fact that they're republicans. But, aren't scholarships offered to only minorities also racist? And why is it that society only roars its disapproval when it appears that people of color are being slighted? Why aren't we standing up and saying it's wrong when a student is given a scholarship and the only requirement is that the applicant be a minority?

Let me make this clear, before people go off half-cocked and accuse me of being racist: I am a person of color, and as a person of color, I applaud the College Republicans for taking a stand against affirmative action. I can say with complete confidence that I am not in college because my race provided me with an extra edge. I didn't check a box on the application where it asked for race. I am here because my test scores and my activities made me eligible for admission, and I resent anyone insinuating that I used affirmative action to my benefit.

Affirmative action was meant to be a temporary program, put in place to counteract centuries of discrimination and to level the playing field for minorities. The key word there is temporary. It was not supposed to still exist for my generation and the fact that it is still around 40 years after its inception is downright insulting to all people of color. Its very existence implies that minorities are not capable of getting ahead without a little assistance.

People of color are looked down on because of affirmative action. They are accused of stealing jobs that they don't deserve. It is possible that minorities are worse-off now than they were 50 years ago. 50 years ago, we knew where we stood. Now, there's nothing but an ever lingering doubt that maybe we got a job because there was a quota that needed to be filled.

This group of students at Roger Williams believes that scholarships should be given out on the sole basis of merit and need; that race shouldn't be a factor. As much as it pains me to agree with republicans on anything, I can't find any reason not to.

Emilie Duggan is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at emilieduggan@yahoo.com.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

BUSH AND KERRY — ALL THAT DIFFERENT?

What's the difference between Bush's continuing war on Iraq and Kerry's voting for the war and wanting to send troops there? In a speech at Drake University, in Des Moines, Iowa, on Dec. 16, 2003, Kerry said: "As we internationalize the work in Iraq, we need to add 40,000 troops — the equivalent of two divisions — to the American military in order to meet our responsibilities elsewhere — especially in the urgent global war on terror. In my first 100 days as President, I will move to increase the size of our Armed Forces."

This is not an exit strategy. This is a call for a draft. What is the difference between a Bush draft and a Kerry draft?

In response to an e-mail from me in March 2003, Kerry stated, "I voted last fall to authorize the use of force in Iraq because I believed then, as I believe now, that Saddam Hussein's development and possession of weapons of mass destruction (WMD) pose a threat to our country and to his neighbors that must be confronted. Now that our country is engaged in war, it is incumbent upon all of us to support our troops in Iraq and to support President Bush as our Commander in Chief."

Kerry won't go near Bush on the war issue because he voted for the war, urged us all to rally behind our "Commander in Chief," and intends to maintain a military presence in Iraq.

Dennis Kucinich and over 100 other Congressmen and 20 Senators were not fooled by Bush's lies. They voted against the war. Kucinich wants to end the American occupation of Iraq. He has an exit strategy. He can tackle Bush on the Iraq issue and win.

Patricia L Frisella
Farmington, N.H.

Call for resignation misguided

Anthony Pascoe

On Feb. 10, the president of the Student Government Association and his cabinet made a mockery of the student Senate by calling for the resignation of Senate Speaker Jared Nokes. The statement was a response to an e-mail sent by Nokes, Chair of Ways and Means Patrick Higgins and Chair of Public Policy and Relations Adrienne Girard in which they called the recent actions of the Cabinet and embarrassment to the SGA.

Specifically, the letter talked about the Cabinet's attempt to replace the Office of ALANA Affairs with a broader Office of Diversity Affairs. It was disappointing to see President David Carr attempt to sway the Senate, a body that does not come under his jurisdiction.

Carr has served in his role for just less than two years. During the last Senate meeting he claimed three major accomplishments in response to the accusations of the Speaker. Carr claimed to bring an ATM to Southwest, the bar to the Blue Wall and a FedEx box to the Campus Center. As some of you may remember, Trustee Seth Avakian, in 2000, began working to bring an ATM to Southwest.

Carr did oversee some logistical issues, but the work had been done prior to his term. The bar in the Blue Wall also has other origins. Upon Chancellor John V. Lombardi's arrival to the University of Massachusetts, he encouraged more revenue. As other administrators wanted a bar on this campus, all they needed was student input. Based on Carr's advice and work, discussions have been ongoing as to renovating, moving, or closing the bar. As for the FedEx Box in the Campus Center, this hardly seems like a major issue to most students.

These accomplishments seem insignificant when compared to the major problems that have faced this campus during Carr's two terms, such as student riots, increased fees and a shrinking faculty.

Carr's latest attempt to deal with the diversity was an unequivocal failure. Secretary of Diversity Russell Plato, acting on behalf of Carr, put forward a major reorganization plan for the Office of ALANA Affairs after secret discussions began in October. Upon the announcement of the plan, the Office of ALANA Affairs, in addition to many in the ALANA community, expressed anger at the plan that was thought to minimize the issue of race.

Plato refused to wait even a week to make revisions with the ALANA Caucus, claiming that they were not necessary to the implementation of the proposal. The proposal was brought to an "information session" during which it was ridiculed by several groups. Within 45 minutes of the information session ending, the executive cabinet officially informed The Massachusetts Daily Collegian that their proposal would be withdrawn.

Nokes expressed his concern that such actions portray Student Government in a negative light, making the SGA seem inept and insensitive to the needs of students. The cabinet has since called this a "learning experience" and said the incident should be regarded as, "an opportunity to open dialogue." The final few months of a 24-month term should not be the time for learning experiences from such a group.

Rather than accepting the blame for their failure, the Cabinet went after Nokes. Only Carr himself knows whether this was merely an ill-timed and misguided attempt to assert power or a calculated plan with political motives. Surely, the executive cabinet has better things to do with their time than to lecture the Senate, a body separate from the executive cabinet and one in which Carr has no power, on the competency of its leadership.

To come out two days after their own failure and call for Nokes' resignation is irresponsible and disrespectful to the Senate. If the Senate shared the sentiment of the Cabinet, a prepared motion of no confidence would have been introduced. This was not even attempted, as it was clear from the end of the reading of the president's statement that the Senate did not share their beliefs.

Only President Carr himself knows whether this was merely an ill-timed and misguided attempt to assert power or a calculated plan with political motives.

Perhaps it is time for Carr to worry more about his own actions than that of the Senate. While the executive cabinet is always willing to come to senate and tell senators how they can best represent students, it is unclear whether the cabinet is worried about doing anything for students themselves. Right now, Carr and his staff are ignoring issues in order to play politics. Several members of the executive cabinet have political aspirations for next year. With the events of last Wednesday, they have already lost my vote.

Anthony Pascoe is a UMass student.

Who's to blame for 2000?

Eliot Brown

In the past few days, the media has been reporting that Ralph Nader is expected to run as a third-party candidate next November. Hearing this makes me think back to October 2000, when I ventured to the FleetCenter to watch Nader campaign for president.

I watched as he explained all about the "special interests" and "corporate welfare" which had become the norm in Washington, and in voting for him, we could make a difference. In the Nader school of thought, a vote for Al Gore meant no more than a vote for George Bush.

I swallowed every word that came out of his mouth, and remained true to his cause until the election. But today, as our nation is controlled by one of the most conservative administrations in its history, I regret every penny of the $15 I donated to Nader's campaign. And now that I hear he wants to run again, I question whether he actually cares about the state of this nation. Needless to say, I've become a Nader-hater.

Nader's biggest problem is his obsession with the third-party (or fourth-party when Ross Perot is around). He thinks the way to change the country is to come from the far left with a new party. But it became clear in 2000 that the Green Party just split the liberals and handed the election over to the better-unified G.O.P. (Nader won nearly 100,000 votes in Florida). He responded with ambivalence, as Gore was just the "lesser of two evils."

At the time, I didn't blame him for Florida, but times have changed. Nader needs to take a lesson from Dennis Kucinich — a man with similar ideals but more brains. He took the smart route to publicize his far-left politics — through the Democratic Party. Not only has he received his share of media coverage (his share, according to voters so far, is around one percent), but also he gets to debate the other candidates — an issue which Nader was always bitter about.

Kucinich gets it. His supporters are all in the Democratic Party, so why would he want to form a third party? Our political system is not fit for more than two parties in the presidential elections. Whereas parliamentary governments seem to do well with third, fourth and even fifth parties, they do not have an executive branch of government. Because we have the office of the president, it is essential that the majority of the population support the president, not a mere plurality. Thanks to Nader and his third-party, Bush was elected president without even garnering a majority in Florida. (Bush and Gore each won 49 percent of the vote, while Nader took two percent).

Perhaps if Bush and Gore were as similar as Nader claimed, I might not blame him for 2000. But looking at our country today, it is more important than ever that he not run in November. The election of 2004 will likely be a turning point in our political history. Should Bush win re-election, we can be sure to witness a confident administration continuing, if not advancing its far-right agenda. We can watch as deficits soar, as pre-emptive foreign policy is practiced without fear, and as society becomes increasingly polarized — not just politically, but economically as well.

So Mr. Consumer Crusader, I gave $15 to your campaign last time, but this time I would gladly pay 10 times that to see you sit on the sidelines. Your ideals are valid, but your methods only do them harm.

Eliot Brown is a UMass student.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SEX & THE CITY

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2004

SEX@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Passionate about 'Sex'

Meghan Healy

Every Sunday for the past six years at 9 p.m., I've had "Sex." No matter how bad my week was, or how irritated I was at my boyfriend, or when I wasn't involved, I knew I would always count on having Sunday night "Sex."

And I wasn't alone. Across the country, millions of other women and men have relished in the Sabbath day sex ritual right along with me. "Sex and the City," which debuted on HBO in June of 1998 and found its home on Sunday nights shortly there after, created a sort of sexual revolution for women across the country. The series gave a voice to women who had previously been muted by the societal expectation that women not be sexually adventurous, and certainly not open to talking about it.

Yet this Sunday will bring with it bittersweet "Sex," as I, and countless other diehard fans, prepare to bid adieu to the series that has made watching television fun again. But as I sit here, patiently waiting for my computer to download the latest episode from Kazaa, I have to wonder ... is this truly the end of Sunday "Sex"? Or will other networks pick up where Carrie and Company have left off? Will other shows come along that employ the same witty writing and comedic take on real-life subject matter? Or, am I, along with other faithful fans nationwide, to be banished to a life of T.V. celibacy?

It started simple enough — four women in New York City, struggling to steer their way through the expansive singles scene — but somehow Darren Starr's straightforward sex series became a phenomena. Engrained in the pop culture mindset, "Sex and the City" made Manolo Blahnik a household name and thrust the Cosmopolitan into the spotlight in bars across the country. Daring style choices made Sarah Jessica Parker one of the business's most fashionable stars and a new generation became enchanted with the charm and class of New York City. Yet "Sex and the City" has done so much more than that. The series has leveled the playing field for women across the country.

As a 15 year-old girl from Connecticut, I hardly had much in

See HEALY on page 7

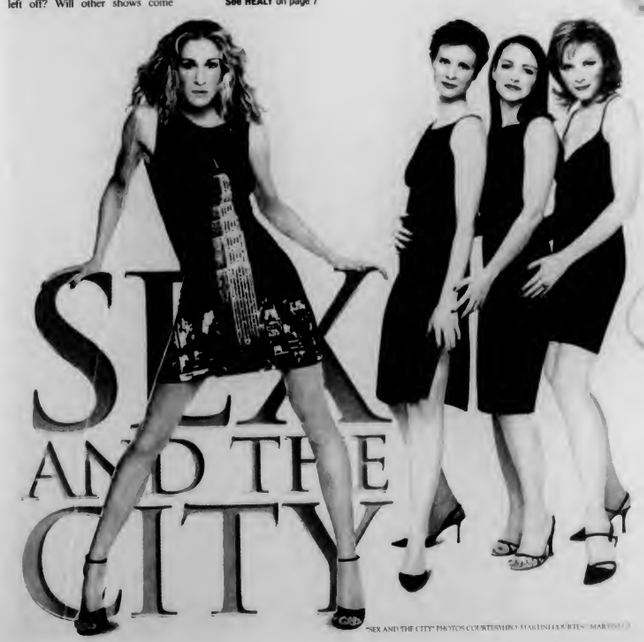
Men love 'Sex,' too

Glen Straub

Many aspects of our pop culture shoot for the audience with minds constructed only with the X-chromosome. Media outlets communicate stories of fashion, love, hygiene, sex and the overall mindset of a woman in modern day society — bringing "girl talk" to the next level. Cosmopolitan magazine, Lifetime, Danielle Steele novels and an abundant of "chick flicks" satisfy the guilty pleasures of – not all — but many women around the country.

So when Darren Star and Sarah Jessica Parker created a series nearly eight years ago about four single female friends who meet everyday to sip cosmopolitans and discuss which men are desirable or the newest line of Prada shoes, the two must have figured that "Sex and the City" would move into that aforementioned domain strictly for a female audience.

Topics like PMS, "spunk with funk," or what Carrie Bradshaw should wear on her next date are not that appealing for the majority of men. But for that single woman between the ages of 25 and 60, the storylines are part of everyday life. "Sex and the City" proves to be the right kind of medium in the entertainment world to discuss them?



However, "Sex" has defied its expectations and its pre-constructed domain.

"Sex and the City" may have started as girls-only, but the door was left open for those stereotyped to enjoy football and beer. Now, six seasons later, there are some men — even straight men — who can't get enough of the show. While Carrie, Miranda, Samantha and Charlotte play, men can't keep their ears and eyes away.

"Back in high school, some girls wanted me to come over to their house and watch ["Sex and the City"] with them, and it turned out I thought the show was good because it's fun watching middle-aged women fiend for sex," said Joel Ford, a senior political science major.

We know how the show has become such a success for females — by covering the life of a single woman living in a big city so perfectly — but how has this show so brilliantly increased

See STRAUB on page 7

"SEX AND THE CITY" PHOTOS COURTESY HBO MARTIN LOURTES-MARTINEZ

Last episode Sunday, Feb. 22 9 p.m.

The end is closing in

By Meghan M. Healy
Collegian Staff

For the past six years, viewers have watched religiously as Carrie Bradshaw, Miranda Hobbs, Samantha Jones and Charlotte Yorke took Manhattan by storm in search of Mr. Right, or at least Mr. Good-enough-for-right-now. As fans prepare to say good-bye to the series, there are many lost ends left to be tied up. In case you forgot, here's what's happened so far.

Season 1:

In its inaugural season, fans were introduced to sex columnist Carrie Bradshaw and her group of single friends. Carrie, wry and unafraid to ask the questions on the minds of New York women, led viewers through the streets and show shops of Manhattan, sharing her relationship pitfalls on the pages of the fictional "New York Star." Carrie meets and subsequently falls in love with a businessman, known only to audiences as Mr. Big. The two date, but Big's hesitance to commitment frustrates Carrie. When Big tells Carrie he will never marry again, she begins to wonder if she can deal with that limita-

See SEX on page 7

Hippodrome welcomes veteran jamband Gov't Mule

Rock 'n' roll legend Warren Haynes plays lead guitar for jamband Gov't Mule.

By Scott Eldridge II
Collegian Staff

"There's a lot more to get sick of out there," Danny Louis said of pop music.

As a member of one of the mainstays on the jamband scene, Louis and Gov't Mule are seeing a growing scene filled with more and more talent.

"There're a lot more musicians that are looking at what's going on and saying 'ah man there are all these people that will just let us play and we don't have to write a song ... that mentions baby love or sex ... just to fit the formula.'"

"I think what we found in the jamband movement, if you will, is a group of people that music is a higher priority to," he said. "If I was 14 or 15 now and I was being presented with a barrage of commercial music that's out there now, via most of the MTV and radio and records, I would be looking for an alternative. And in the jamband movement, we find a lot of people ... who have a value of music that is more like what you were referring to [not-pop] and less like what its become."

Danny Louis, keyboardist for Gov't Mule, has prioritized music. After 10 years as a band that has long felt his presence, (he officially signed on in 2002 after playing with the band for years), Gov't Mule has seen some of the greatest tragedies and triumphs made available to a band. Friday, when they come onto the Hippodrome stage in Springfield, Mass., Louis and his musical counterparts will continue in their journey forward.

Gov't Mule
Tomorrow
Hippodrome
Springfield
$25

In August 2000, the band, formed by Warren Haynes, Matt Abts and Allen Woody, lost a family member when Woody was found dead in his hotel room, immediately calling into question the band's future.

"I think after things get shaken up the way they did the normal thing I suppose would have been to either break up or find one guy to replace him, a bass player and continue on," Louis said.

But the music played on, and instead of giving in, Haynes and Apts did something that would not have seemed possible on paper. They toured and recorded with a laundry list of some of the finest bass guitarists on the music scene. Jamband counterparts Mike Gordon of Phish, Dave Schools of Widespread Panic, Les Claypool of Primus; metalhead Jason Newstead of Metallica, John Scofield, a musician largely in his own right, Stefan Lessard of Dave Matthews Band and others joined in a studio and stage tribute to Woody.

"It was the way for Warren and Matt ... to get away from what they lost," Louis said. "And I think it's a testament to Warren and Matt's expansive, musically expansive, natures."

Things are more solid now. Andy Hess, who walked through the band's "revolving door" of bass players, has signed on with some permanence. Hess has also played with the Black Crowes and New Earth Mud, but was picked this fall as the fourth corner.

"Andy's with us, and he's not going away," Louis said.

As a longtime collaborator on keyboard and writing, Louis recalled his days when he would play with a three-piece Mule in New York.

"I always felt like, you know, what do you do with a three-piece band?" he said.

Now with four, Gov't Mule is "starting to settle in with the regularity of this." This, after years of touring with different bassists, performing with different bassists and even recording two records ("Deep End" volumes 1 & 2) a DVD ("Rising Low") and putting on an impressive multi-bass show. Picking Hess wasn't the hard part, Louis said.

"It wasn't difficult in that every time that Andy played with us there was this sort of 'band thing,'" he said. "That elevates the whole to larger than just the sum of its parts."

But Gov't Mule had to pick Hess and they had to rule out many others.

"Any one of a number of people that were involved with us on the bass would have brought so much exceptional talent to the situation and made us sound great," Louis said. "[We] had the luxury of playing with so many bass players."

Before and after Allen Woody's passing, Gov't Mule always created an aura around their performances of tireless jamming, guest appearances, talent-sharing and generally working hard. For Louis, the better thing has always been to keep pushing and trying harder and even with the loss of Woody, looking forward.

Now, with Hess, the band has taken on new life (their fall tour was labeled Rebirth of the Mule) and is striding even further ahead. And, while celebrating what Allen Woody helped bring to life, Mule is starting to add new layers of music and growth as a band. Part of this look forward is a new studio album to be recorded this spring and anticipated for the fall.

"We're all just trying to do something better all the time," Louis said. "The thing about music, in theory, the more people you meet the more fulfilling it is, you have to kind of stay on it and capitalize on your opportunities."

'West Side' takes on a new look

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Staff

Would the original creators of the 1957 hit musical "West Side Story," Jerome Robbins, Leonard Bernstein and Arthur Laurents, ever have predicted that 40 years later, it would ignite controversy when a production of the play was attempted at Amherst Regional High School?

West Side Stories
Feb. 21-22
Bowker Auditorium
UMass
$5-$15

The original production ran for 732 performances and later became a classic feature film, but it has taken five years for ARHS to perform a unique version called "West Side Stories."

New World Theater is proud to present that production here Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. at the University of Massachusetts in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets will be on sale at the Bowker Box Office the night of the performance for between $5 and $15.

Students at ARHS were forced to cancel "West Side Story" and instead perform the more conventional musical, "Crazy for You" in 2000 after complaints were made about racial representations in "West Side Story."

The story of star-crossed lovers, one of American-born Polish descent, and the other of newly-arrived Puerto Rican descent, the play depicts the reality of immigrant life and the struggle of overcoming stereotypes imbedded in society. The Puerto Rican community protested the production in 2000, claiming the play uses cultural stereotyping and ultimately contains racist elements that are not appropriate for high school students to be acting out or viewing.

While the community moved on and quickly forgot what the controversy represented, Harley Erdman, theater director at the University of Massachusetts, and Roberta Uno, who was then New World Theater's artistic director, realized the issue of racial and cultural representation needed to be addressed further.

In fall 2001, Erdman and Uno taught a theater workshop for eight weeks open to high school students in the Amherst area. Participants came from ARHS, Pioneer Valley Performing High School, and Project 2050, a group of students from across the region that "engages professional artists, youth communities, scholars, and community activists in civic dialogue and artistic creation," according to NWT's Web site.

The program encouraged students to use a method called, "interview theater," in which interviews were conducted with members of the greater Amherst community.

See WEST SIDE on page 7

UMass students contribute to V-Day

By Kate Walsh
Collegian Staff

"If vaginas could talk, what would they say?"

A group of female University of Massachusetts students, varying in age and major, will attempt to answer that question tonight and then again Friday night, in their production of "The Vagina Monologues" at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Eve Ensler's award-winning play was written based on her interviews with more than 200 women about their sexuality, bodies, and stories of abuse and violence. The play gives women a chance to speak out on these issues, which are generally considered taboo by society.

Using productions of "The Vagina Monologues" as a fundraising tool, Ensler's V-Day campaign, a global movement to stop violence against women and girls, has been able to raise more than $20 million to support anti-violence programs worldwide since its creation in 1998.

This month, students from 630 colleges around the world will be given the opportunity to produce, direct, and act in performances of "The Vagina Monologues," while simultaneously raising funds for charities and anti-violence groups in their community.

Local benefits this year at UMass include the Amherst Survival Center, the Everywoman's Center, and Planned Parenthood of Western Massachusetts. In addition to local charities, 10 percent of the profits each college makes go to the V-Day organization, which each year chooses a spotlight charity. This year's donations will focus on the city of Juarez, Mexico, where over 400 women have been declared missing or murdered in the last decade.

The Vagina Monologues
Tonight and Friday
Fine Arts Center
UMass
$5 UMass, $8 Five College, $10 general

"The Vagina Monologues" has not been performed at UMass since 2002. This year, with the sponsorship of the Jewish Student Union, co-directors Lauren D'Arminio and Kai Ravelson decided it needed to be brought back to the campus.

Valerie Tosi, a freshman performer in "The Vagina Monologues," said that it is important for people to see the show because it promotes awareness about a serious topic that can be presented in an entertaining way.

"I think that by seeing the show people will definitely get a different spin on what it's like to be a woman and the different things that go along with it, and I think that it's very insightful, not only for women themselves, but for men too."

"The Vagina Monologues" will be performed tonight and Friday night at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets can be reserved by calling the Fine Arts Center box office at 413-545-1125, or can be purchased at the door. The cost is $5 for anyone with a UMass student ID, $8 for Five College students, and $10 for the general public.

Information from vday.org was used in this article.

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Party at
The Blue Wall Pub!
21. To Drink
18+ To Party
Every Wednesday Open Mic
Come perform for your friends and classmates
First come, first serve
sign-up sheet goes out at 6:00PM every Wednesday
Weekly winners will be awarded a full set Friday night in April!
Every Friday Live Local Music
Friday 2/13 at 7:00PM
Special Guests Pacifica Quartet
in a special intimate encore appearance following their morning performance at the Fine Arts Center.
Friday 2/20 at 7:00PM
Stay Behind and The Skeptics
Friday 2/27 at 7:00PM
Rudy Brown and Natural Descent
Admission to all events is free
Never a cover at the Blue Wall

Passionate about my 'Sex'

HEALY from page 5

common with a sex columnist with a ravenous shoe buying habit, an uptight art gallery director, a cynical and highly independent lawyer and a 40-something PR worker who slept with anyone who sat still long enough — at least not on the surface. Yet, as the years have progressed, and I, as well as Carrie, Charlotte, Miranda and Samantha, have grown up, it has become clear that I have a lot in common with all the girls of "Sex and the City."

Each of them embodies a characteristic I would like to have, or have grown to accept within myself. OK, so maybe I am more Charlotte than I would like to admit, but through watching the trials and tribulations of these four Manhattanites unfold for the past six seasons, I have learned a lot about myself, and what it really means to be a woman in today's society.

From Samantha's seemingly promiscuous ways I have found a source of empowerment. By not adhering to the limitations society placed on women, Samantha gave females everywhere a little more ground to stand on. If Samantha can have sex with the FedEx guy, or her new assistant, on her desk without regret, then maybe, just maybe women across the country can feel comfortable to take a few risks themselves. If, after a failed marriage, countless relationship mishaps and the news that she may never be able to conceive Charlotte remains unjaded, still believing her Prince Charming is coming, then perhaps there's still hope for all of us that are inundated by insensitive guys and unexpected detours in the life we have mapped out. If Miranda can let Steve in after years of hardened independence, if she can allow herself to change and grow, then I can too.

Throughout the seasons "Sex" has come in all forms for me. There was the painful breakup "Sex" when Carrie cheated on Aidan — I was angry enough to swear off the series for good, a vow I conveniently forgot come 8:59 p.m. the following Sunday. There was the splendor of make-up "Sex" when Aidan took Carrie back in season four, and when Steve brought Miranda lilacs in the final episode of season five. There was the thrill of secret "Sex" when Carrie reignited the flames with married ex Mr. Big. There was good "Sex" and bad "Sex," and anything I haven't mentioned Samantha has probably done it.

So as I brace myself for this Sunday's goodbye "Sex" I will do my best not to be sad. I will try my hardest to be thankful for everything Carrie, Charlotte, Samantha and Miranda have taught me. As my Sunday night ritual draws to an end, I can only hope that the entertainment industry can take a nod from this groundbreaking series and maybe, just maybe — someday — I'll find something better than sex.

COURTESY HBO.COM

In the final episodes of 'Sex and the City' Carrie (Sarah Jessica Parker) falls in love with Russin artist Aleksandr (Mikhail Baryshnikov) and moves with him to Paris.

The series finale of "Sex and the City" airs Sunday, Feb. 21 at 9 p.m. on HBO. There will be a special look back at the series airing immediately before, at 8 p.m.

Meghan M. Healy is a Collegian staff member.

Not only for women

STRAUB from page 5

its viewership across that rarely crossed almighty gender line?

It's the mixture of the humorous sexual innuendos, realistic relationship troubles and of course the constant image of four beautiful ladies walking down the streets of the best city in the world that makes this romantic-sexual comedy different from any other. The show has set new boundaries for sexual talk on television. The characters discuss it like it was no big deal – just like in real life.

While women like to see the realistic portrayal of relationship qualms, it's the "Sex" in "Sex and the City" that draws men to the show. After all, as the weary cliche goes, "all men think about is sex." That is where the appeal of the show is.

Carrie, Miranda, sometimes Charlotte and always Samantha think about sex, talk about sex and have a lot of sex. It's a man's dream to have the sophisticated, sexy and experienced woman. You get that combination with all four.

"Sex" can also teach a man a few things about acquiring a lady's heart.

"I like the storylines; they give you a great sense of what a respectable woman is thinking and feeling," said Jeff Rose, a senior exercise science major.

If you are old-school, Charlotte can show you how to treat a woman like a queen. If you fancy the successful bossy type, Miranda gets down to business. If you thought women didn't have the same kind of thoughts as men – Samantha embodies the perverted dream, and it can come alive if you listen to her.

Finally, if you're like me, there is nothing better than the all-around girl like Carrie – someone who can write, has brains, beauty, sass and a realistic sense of the world. Too bad you need to be as suave and rich as Big or as Russian as Aleksandr Petrovsky to get her.

I guess we will see which one it is this weekend.

Glen Straub is a Collegian staff member.

Taking a look back at the six seasons of 'Sex and the City'

SEX from page 5

tion. Carrie ends the season unsure of Big's real feeling about her.

Charlotte, despite her hopeful outlook, is told by a fortune-teller that she will live a long and lonely life, which dismays her. Miranda struggles to maintain her sexual identity while still being an independent female. Samantha has quite a few flings but resists the idea of a relationship, opting instead to live the single-life.

Season 2:

Throughout season two, Carrie struggles to break free of Mr. Big's hold on her. Despite a brief fling with a Yankee, she ultimately winds up back in the arms of the commitment challenged Big, much to the chagrin of her friends. Things seem as though they may just work out, until work draws Big east — all the way to Paris — for six months. Although he and Carrie have progressed with their relationship, he does not invite her to go with him. Big leaves New York and Carrie makes a rocky return into the dating pool. On a trip to the Hamptons a few months later, Carrie runs into Big at a party and is shocked to discover he is seeing someone else — Natasha, the anti-Carrie, a 20-something who Big announces he is engaged to.

Samantha continues to enjoy all New York has to offer, dating a wide assortment of men. Charlotte gets increasingly frustrated as she seeks to find a suitable husband. Miranda begins dating Steve, a bartender who is decidedly beneath her, in terms of class. The relationship doesn't last and Miranda joins the rest of the girls in the singles scene again.

Season 3:

A little older and slightly more hardened, Carrie sets out yet again to move past her relationship with Big. As her self-proclaimed "gay husband", Stanford Blatch coerces Carrie to go to a furniture show, where she meets Aidan Shaw.

In many ways, the anti-Big Carrie slides easily into a relationship with the humble furniture designer, and even ditches one of her best friends and her cigarettes in order to pursue romance with him. A surprise encounter with Mr. Big sucks Carrie back into her old habits and she eventually gives into his persistent advances. The two begin an affair that ultimately leads to the destruction of both Carrie's relationship and Big's marriage.

Charlotte's goal for the third season is to be married by the year's end. A chance encounter with Dr. Trey MacDougall yields a husband for her, and a fairy tale wedding follows. Trey struggles in the bedroom and Charlotte finds herself struggling to conceive. By the season's end the couple is separated.

Miranda and Steve move in together, but her fear of getting hurt makes it impossible for the union to work, and the following their painful break up, Miranda begins dating again. Samantha continues to shop around the New York singles scene, and even crosses paths with a sex toy model in Los Angeles for a night or two, but bails when he wants more than playtime.

Season 4:

As time passes and distances the pain of the Aidan breakup in Carrie's mind, she begins to miss him and sets out to win him back. Although things are more real this time around, Carrie and Aidan seem to make the second time a charm, and he proposes to her in the moonlit streets of New York. They move into Carrie's apartment and make plans for a future together but the bride to be cannot bring herself to plan the wedding. She and Aidan eventually split when it becomes obvious they want different things. Mr. Big makes a brief appearance, as he announces he is leaving New York for California.

A night of pity sex with Steve leaves Miranda pregnant and unsure of what to do. Deciding to keep the baby, Miranda and the girls brace for the perils of single-motherhood.

Samantha meets hotel big wheel Richard Wright and begins an affair with him. Although she originally resists her feelings for him, she falls in love with him and tries a monogamous relationship. Richard cannot handle couplehood and when Sam catches him with another woman, they end their relationship. Charlotte tries to revive her marriage to Trey, but the two cannot reconcile their differences.

Season 5:

The fifth season, short and sweet, is one of adjustment for the girls. Carrie, getting more well known for her column writing, finds her career thriving. With the release of a book of her columns, Carrie also ushers in a new romance with writer Jack Berger. The two begin dating at the very end of the season, when they cross paths at a Hamptons wedding.

Miranda struggles to do motherhood on her own terms. By the end of the season, she realizes that she is in love with Steve but cannot bring herself to tell him. Charlotte begins a secret relationship with Harry, her divorce attorney and is crushed to learn that Harry will not marry a non-Jewish woman. Richard manages to woo Samantha back. Although he claims to be totally faithful, Sam cannot trust him anymore and they split during a trip to Atlantic City.

Season 6:

In the final season, "Sex and the City," Carrie's relationship with Berger was short lived. He could not handle her success and abruptly dumped her via post-it note. Mr. Big makes a cameo when he comes into town for heart surgery. Carrie stays by his side but ultimately decides that no medical procedure will open his heart enough for the two to ever work. Following her disappointing split from Big, Carrie meets a Russian artist named Aleksandr Petrovsky and the two begin dating. When an exhibit beckons Petrovsky to Paris, Carrie is surprised to hear that he wanted her to accompany him indelinitely. She accepts his offer and quits her job.

Miranda takes the next step with Steve as the two decide to wed, and then purchase a house in Brooklyn. Samantha begins dating a hot young actor named Smith Jared. She helps launch his career and eventually allows him to be her boyfriend. Deciding to get breast implants, Sam discovers a cancerous lump during a consultation begins chemotherapy. Charlotte decides to convert to Judaism and she and Harry wed. She is overjoyed to find out that she is pregnant but becomes deeply depressed after miscarrying. The couple decides to adopt a child.

The new 'Stories'

WEST SIDE from page 6

Answers to questions such as how it feels to be stereotyped, interracial relationships, and censorship were used as material for students. They then used this information to gain a better understanding of perspectives on social issues that exist, but are considered taboo and rarely brought into dialogue.

The interviews were collaborated for the foundation of a screenplay and much of the show reflects ideas of the original play, "West Side Story."

"Using improvisation, comedy, music, and dance a variety show was woven together to create the mosaic sketch entitled 'West Side Stories,'" Erdman said.

Due to lack of funding, it took three and a half years to get the show staged.

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Wine:	Liquor:
Guinness Draught 2/12 pk btls...$20.99*	Foxhorn Chardonnay or Merlot 6 bot./750ml...$15.00	Belvedere Cytrus Vodka 750 ml...$35.99
Coors & Coors Light 30 pk cans...$18.49*	Canyon Road Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99	Belvedere Pomarancza Vodka 750 ml...$35.99
Busch & Busch Light 30 pk cans...$13.99*	Vendange Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99	Belvedere Vodka 750 ml...$23.99
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49*	Kangaroo Ridge Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt...$9.99	Bushmills Irish Whiskey 1 lt...$22.99
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*	Corbett Canyon Chardonnay, White Zin, Pinot Grigio 3.0 lt box...$7.99	Jameson Irish Whiskey 1 lt...$22.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Wyndham Estates Merlot, Cabernet, Shiraz 750 ml...$7.99	Dr. Mcgillicudy's Schnapps 750 ml...$10.99
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl...$11.99*	Jacobs Creek Chardonnay, Cabernet, Shiraz, Merlot 750 ml...$6.99	Jim Beam Bourbon 750 ml...$10.99
Long Trail 12 pk btl...$9.99*	Arbor Mist All Flavors 1.5 lt...$4.99	Cruzan Flavored Rums 750 ml...$10.99
Saranac 12 pk btl...$8.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 2/19 THROUGH 2/25
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

THE ONE YOU WANT
THE WAY YOU WANT IT
jeans by citizens of humanity
ZANNA

Free & Open to all students
2-Person Shooting Competition
Win Airline Ticketall
Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed
Win Basketball Shoes!!
ShootOut
$10,000
Register at www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS
QUALIFYING ROUND
Thursday, February 26
7pm - Curry Hicks Cage
CAMPUS FINALS
Saturday, February 28
2pm - Mullins Center
GMAC
Halls Fruit Breezers
new balance basketball
Pontiac
US Airways Caribbean
XBOX
Free Samples From Aaria, Coast, Nestle Crunch, TicTac and UltraMax
Alumni Bueno Y Sano Collegian kinko's odwalla Ultimate Fitness WMUA 91.1 FM

New WORLD Theater
Celebrating 25 Years
West Side Stories
New WORLD Theater presents a Pioneer Valley Performing Arts High School production in association with the UMass Department of Theater
Feb. 21@ 8 pm &
Feb. 22 @ 2 pm
Bowker Aud.
Through improvisation and interview theater, students from Amherst Regional High School, the Pioneer Valley Performing Arts, and Project 2050 collaborate in a multi-dimensional exploration of race and place through music, dance, sketch comedy, satire, and drama.
A Revolutionary Convening: The Vision of June Jordan Feb.27 & 28 -FREE-
Presented by the UMass Women's Studies Department in association with New WORLD Theater, the Student Activities Center, the Black Student Union, WOCLN of EWC and the Office of ALANA Affairs
Friday, Feb. 27 - 7:30 pm, SUB Keynote Address by Sonia Sanchez
Saturday, Feb. 28 - 9 am - 5 pm, CC101 - Round table discussions
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium - BLUEPRINTS FOR REVOLUTION: A PERFORMANCE, featuring Sonia Sanchez, Kate Rigg, Letta Neely, Jane Sapp and the Voices of Today, Magdalena Gomez, Evelyn Harris, and Project 2050 For Conference info call Linda Hillenbrand 545-1922
www.newworldtheater.org
The Ford Foundation

Minutewomen in search of 10th consecutive A-10 title

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Elaine Sortino has built a dynasty afte 25 years in Amherst, with the UMass coach establishing the Massachusetts softball team as one of the most talented programs on the east coast.

Looking to capture her 10th straight A-10 title and a spot in College World Series, Sortino was faced with a challenge in 2004, though.

The 2003 Minutewomen featured four of UMass' six All-Conference selections being seniors in shortstop Emily Robustelli, outfielder Anna Perey, first baseman Brandi Cross and pitcher Kaila Holtz. Sortino has reloaded with a talented freshman class and is confident this squad is one of her most talented teams ever, despite winning one out of four contests during the Fiesta Bowl Classic against the best teams in the nation.

"The difference [this year] is the experience, that's it," Sortino said. "I think we got a lot more talent this year than in past years. This is probably the team with the most depth I've ever had in my coaching tenure."

Perey, a 4-foot-11 outfielder, finished the 2003 season with a .355 batting average and stole 22 bases.

Cross hit an UMass-record 11 homeruns last season and 26 career dingers, which tied for best in school history.

Robustelli was named A-10 Player of the Year and a Third Team All-American after leading the Minutewomen with 43 runs scored, 64 hits, 15 doubles, four triples, 105 total bases and .597 slugging percentage. The shortstop's .364 batting average was also second on the team in 2003.

Holtz was named A-10 Pitcher of the Year as junior and senior, posting 75-25 and 1.40 ERA in her career. Now on staff as a first-year assistant, her 596 strikeouts, 92 complete games and 35 shutouts trail only the legendary Danielle Henderson. Holtz also compiled five no-hitters including one perfect game in her four-year career.

Outfield

Aisha Franke will be the cornerstone in front of the fence. She was named to preseason Top 40 Watchlist, which names players who are possible Player of the Year candidates. The senior outfielder sported a team-best .403 BA and has exceptional speed stealing 18 bases in 20 attempts. Franke, A 2003 All Conference and Regional selection, is a skilled defender with the speed and arm strength to make easy extra bases or hit into an instant out.

"Aisha brings this year opposed last is her ability to drive the ball," Sortino said. "Getting her on base is critical, because it gets us to steal bases. Her small game and her ability to fly down the line will only increase by her ability to drive the ball."

Junior Denise Denis and senior KC Budrewicz are the early favorites to play along side Franke. Denis is solid defender in the outfield, who hit .235 in 49 games. Budrewicz has been three years for the chance as a full-time starter. Sophomore Lesley Ferrara will add depth to the outfield.

"I think this the best outfield with the best arms we've ever had in my coaching tenure," Sortino said. "We got a lot of possibilities, so if someone isn't hitting we got another option."

Infield

Franke's speed and hitting ability, should give sophomore third baseman/catcher K.I. Kelley the opportunity to improve her impressive freshman campaign. Kelley's patience, quick hands and power made her an instant threat at the plate as a freshman with eight homeruns, tied for fourth-best all-time. After a year of experience and an off-season to improve, Kelley could be starting a storybook career at UMass.

"She's a tough out," Sortino said. "She did 20 times better at the plate than she did last year. She was a baby last year and had no idea what was going on. She is going to be a really tough at-bat every time in the box."

The third leader of the group will be catcher Jamie Cahalan. The senior captain has a solid bat, but she is most valuable through her leadership, handling the pitching staff and the strong arm behind the plate.

Junior Hilary Puglia, who will make the move from second base to shortstop, highlights the strong UMass infield defense. Puglia is an exceptional defender, evident through her .984 fielding percentage. The first option to replace Puglia at second will be sophomore speedy Kristi Stefanoni.

The battle at first base will be between a couple of newcomers. The early favorite is freshman Amanda Morin, who had a solid debut at the Fiesta Bowl Classic. The 5-foot-11 lefty appears to have all the tools—a long wingspan, speed, a good eye, strong arm and power. Freshman Amanda Acampora's hitting is regarded highly by Sortino and could be see some action at first.

Senior Nicole Wilson and junior Pam Sulick are the key veteran reserves on the team, with either player able to play first or third. In the middle, sophomore Shannon Houle and freshman Molinari will also add depth.

Pitching Staff

The ace of the pitching is still in the air. The favorite is the veteran of the group, junior Kelli Arnold. The Kalama, Wash. Native was the No. 2 behind Holtz while posting a 13-6 record and a 1.58 ERA. Arnold's five shutouts and one no-hitter last year shows her ability to dominate on the mound.

The other two hurlers are Jenna Busa and Barb LaFogg. Busa showed glimpses of greatness in first-year at UMass, going 3-0 with a 0.98 ERA in 21.1 innings. LaFogg is junior who redshirted after transferring from Seton Hall.

"The pitching staff compliments each other very well, because they are all very different pitchers," Sortino said. "Barbie is more curve-up [as] Jenna is more coming at you [while] Kelli is more down-change. We have three very different pitchers who can relieve each other at anytime, which should help us out."

A-Rod commercial proved ironic

Glen Straub

It was nearly three weeks ago that the New England Sports Nation was on an ultimate high that only championships can generate.

Little did the diehard fans know, a foreshadow of their dismay was happening right in front of their eyes during one of the finest games in Boston sports history.

It was Super Bowl XXXVIII, a matchup of the New England Patriots and the Carolina Panthers. We know the end result — no explanation is needed.

But it was in the middle of the game when an image propelled on the television screen, showing two men standing together and joking that is leaving a lasting impression this week. In retrospect, the image was the root of what might haunt fans from Beantown for the next seven years.

Taking full advantage of the country's disinterest in the NBA and NHL, Major League Baseball released a commercial during the Super Bowl in which Florida Marlins pitcher Josh Beckett, New York Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter and, at the time Texas Rangers shortstop Alex Rodriguez are playing a little game of whiffle-ball in a house you would only see on MTV Cribs.

The setting for the ad spot was in the present tense, with the superstars watching the Super Bowl, talking about their favorite commercials and displaying their anxiousness to start the 2004 baseball season. The commercial was set to excite the sports fans across the country that Opening Day is not that far away.

At the time the commercial aired, we weren't sure what team the game's best player, A-Rod, would be playing for on Opening Day. Was it going to be Texas or Boston? Was the potential deal that dominated sports pages across the nation in December going to be reached?

The big stars in the commercial, Jeter and Rodriguez, probably had a good idea which team the AL MVP was going to be on. They just did a good job of hiding it from the public.

Three weeks from the day that the Patriots won the Super Bowl and the initial airing of the commercial, a deal was made. A-Rod is moving. Was Boston resurrected into sports fan euphoria twice in one month?

Not exactly. Not at all.

Monday's trade between the nemesis New York Yankees and Texas Rangers proved to be quite the opposite. Not only is Rodriguez now a Yankee after weeks were spent trying to get him to call Fenway his home, but he will be playing alongside Jeter (just like in the commercial) rather than replacing the starting shortstop — the idea that was proposed in Boston with Nomar Garciaparra.

In the commercial, it may have been contrived that Rodriguez was excited for Opening Day, considering he was named captain of the one of the worst teams in the majors weeks before. But maybe he was. Who knows, they might have been deciding what ground they were going cover on the left side of the infield at the Stadium in January when they were filming the advertisment.

In reality — similar to the commercial — A-Rod and Jeter are anxious to get to Opening Day, which was evident in Tuesday's press conference.

But for Red Sox fans, there is no need to worry about why or how this all manifested. It was meant to happen.

Opening Day for Red Sox fans this year will be in a whole new ballpark, compared with that of any season in recent history. The Sox were so close last year to the World Series, and the additions during the off-season like right-handed pitcher Curt Shilling give Boston an even greater chance to "reverse the curse" in 2004.

The A-Rod trade may seem bad for baseball from a financial point of view, but no sporting event next year will compare to the 19-plus games these two teams will play. It will be rivalry at its finest.

Bitterness, hatred, history and the unbelievable abundance of talent these two teams now have will make this season of Yankees-Red Sox matchups the best ever.

When watching the games this summer, clicking to the next channel is highly unadvised. Even missing the commercials is not recommended — you never know what you might miss.

Glen Straub is a Collegian staff member. He can be reached at GSNYK33@aol.com.

Sox owner calls for salary cap

BOSTON - Red Sox owner John Henry thinks a salary cap could be good for baseball after watching the rival Yankees trade for Alex Rodriguez – a deal his own franchise could not complete.

Henry, whose team failed to obtain Rodriguez from Texas in December, said in an e-mail response to reporters Wednesday that he is changing his mind on whether the sport needs a salary cap "to deal with a team that has gone so insanely far beyond the resources of all the other teams."

Yankees owner George Steinbrenner quickly responded, saying: "We understand that John Henry must be embarrassed, frustrated and disappointed by his failure in this transaction."

The Yankees' payroll is about $184.8 million for 25 signed players after they acquired Rodriguez from the Texas Rangers earlier this week in exchange for Alfonso Soriano and a minor leaguer to be named.

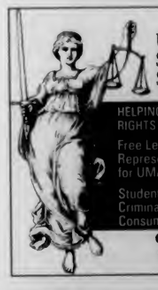
But the number would come down by about $4.8 million if third baseman Aaron Boone is released. Boston is expected to be second at about $125 million.

"One thing is certain the status quo will not be preserved," Henry wrote.

"There must be a way to cap what a team can spend without hurting player compensation ... without taking away from the players what they have rightfully earned in the past through negotiation and in creating tremendous value. There is a simple mechanism that could right a system woefully out of whack."

Henry's comments come after his team failed in its bid to land the reigning American League MVP.

-Associated Press



THE ONE YOU WANT
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
seven jeans
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

Skills For Living With Early Mother Loss
An education and discussion group for women who experienced the death of their mother before their adult years.
Tuesday Evenings 5:30 - 7:00 PM For Six Weeks
Beginning March 2, 2004
Learn to: Provide Better Self-Care
Build Healthy Relationships
Manage Anxiety and Fear of Loss
For more information call EWC Counseling Services. 577-0077

UMASS AMHERST STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995 or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
70 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

SUBWAY
FREE DELIVERY!
11 am - 2 pm
4 pm - Midnight
7 days a week!
We Accept OCMP!
Call 582.0066
Located on Rt. 9 next to the Registry

Boston University School of Medicine
MENTAL HEALTH AND BEHAVIORAL MEDICINE PROGRAM
Leading to a Master of Arts with License Eligibility for Mental Health Counseling
OPEN HOUSE
Friday, March 5, 2004
Program Informational Session from 10 - 11:30 a.m.
Final Candidates Interviews from 12 - 2 p.m.
Boston University School of Medicine
715 Albany Street
Robinson Bldg., Suite B-2903
Boston, MA 02118
To R.S.V.P. or for more information, contact Bernice R. Mark at Boston University School of Medicine 715 Albany Street Robinson Building, Suite B-2903 Boston, MA 02118 617-414-2328 • nicey@bu.edu
R.S.V.P. by March 3, 2004
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
An equal opportunity, affirmative action institution.

Emile DeGana Collegian

The Minutemen's Stephane Lasme works for post position against the Rams' Scott Hazelton in last night's 73-66 Rhode Island victory.

Minutemen come up short

HOOPS from page 12

63 at the Ryan Center with a trey from Maurice Maxwell.

According to Lappas, there was only one difference between this game and the game on Jan. 31, but it was a significant one.

"We did a better job in the last game of rebounding the ball," he said. "The only difference in this game is that we didn't rebound as well as we did the last time."

Maxwell was one of four players in double figures for UMass last night, as he led the Minutemen with 17 points. Junior point guard Anthony Anderson led all scorers with 19 points. Jeff Viggiano added 11, and Rashaun Freeman chipped in with 10.

For Freeman, last night was frustrating, as he was unable to settle down and the Ram defense did everything in its power to shut him down.

"They did a good job stopping me and that frustrated me on the offensive end and then I let it on to the defensive end," Freeman said. "I really didn't guard the way I know I can and that affected the game because they got 44 points in the paint and that shouldn't happen when we play zone. It was just one of those games where I couldn't get going and I was pressured and I was in foul trouble on top of that."

Rhode Island coach Jim Baron knew that Freeman was tough underneath. He scored 13 points and grabbed four rebounds in the previous meeting.

"We kept going man and zone," Baron said. "We switched it up and I thought it really took him out of a flow. He's very good, very strong, very aggressive and I thought our guys did a nice job of really teeing on him."

"I thought we really did a good job of rebounding the basketball."

Rhode Island senior Brian Woodward led all players with 11 boards, but going into the game he knew that the Minutemen would fight hard.

"We knew that they were a good team," he said, "but when we first played them we really underestimated them. They're a good team but tonight we were just a better team."

Honoring former UMass great Skinner was long overdue

CEREMONY from page 12

of Massachusetts for the recognition, and again I hope my teammates take as much pleasure in this as I have, because in order for an individual to receive this kind of recognition, you had to have played on some great teams, and its an indication of an era, so I really hope that they too take tremendous satisfaction in what is happening this evening."

One notable former teammate who was not present, however, was Louisville head coach Rick Pitino. Scheduled as the master of ceremonies — a role that was subsequently filled by Erving — Pitino was unable to attend due to basketball related matters in Louisville. However, Skinner remembered the legendary bench boss fondly, including Pitino's relentless efforts over the past few years to make this event a reality for his friend and former courtmate.

"For [Pitino] to put forth the effort and feel so strongly about it along with my other teammates, its just an indication of how we felt about each other," Skinner said. "The nice thing about it is its 30 years later and we're still friends. I tell my guys all the time that these are the guys you will remember for a long time, they're going to make an impact on what your future is going to be, so enjoy your teammates and enjoy your opportunity."

"We did that and because of it we're still friends today. That is something that is very dear to me, and I consider myself extremely fortunate to have shared a career with such individuals and that we're still friends today."

So far Al Skinner, thirty years removed from the school and the campus he owned as a basketball star in the early 70's, what does a remarkable night like this mean to the seasoned coach? Those who know him well say quite a lot.

"There's no question about it, he is thrilled that the university would put such a tremendous program together in his honor," Boston College play-by-play voice Ted Sarandis said. "He's been talking about this for a long time."

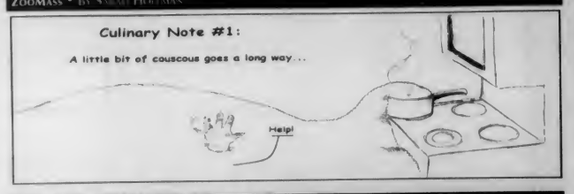
"It's a special night for Al and no question a special night for UMass athletics. To be back here on campus and to be back here in Curry Hicks Cage where he had such a marvelous career, and to have Julius Erving alongside with him is something he's been waiting a long time for."

Now fully ingrained as a UMass legend, Skinner will return to Boston College and to coaching basketball two hours from his true round ball home. It will likely be a year before he will ever lay eyes on his banner again, and the fact that his next glimpse will accompany the emotions of a competitive basketball game when he brings his Eagles to Amherst for the next Commonwealth Classic will surely prevent him from truly enjoying what he accomplished to warrant such an honor.

But for one night and for one moment in time, Al Skinner received his due. In the building he once controlled the pulse of, and on the campus where he went from raw young boy to polished grown man, he was once again in the limelight of the program he helped raise from the ashes.

For the first time since he lired his last shot in Curry Hicks Cage, No. 30 was the reason those around UMass basketball stood and cheered.

Al Skinner had a night of his own here at UMass last evening, and it was long overdue.



Former UMass great Al Skinner awaits the retirement of his No. 30 last night at the Mullins Center.

He made $31,263 last summer, is graduating with $70K+ job offers & Fortune 500 connections
Want an eXtreme summer internship?

Noah Goldstein—UMASS Senior
CWP is a nationally acclaimed, highly selective & paid internship; open to all majors & all years. If you are a leader, driven & think outside the box, immediately call or email your name & phone number to:
413-695-5101 — UMASS@collegeworks.com
Hiring Ends in 3 Weeks!!!

FRUGAL FRIDAY!
JOIN US FOR OUR SPECIAL SALES EVENT
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20TH
ONE DAY ONLY!
BUY 1 CLOTHING OR GIFT ITEM and get an item of equal or lesser value 50% OFF!*
UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
*Does not apply to sale items, regular priced merchandise only. Not valid with any other offer

ZooMass • By Sarah Hoffman

1 in 40 Billion • By Meghann Rosales

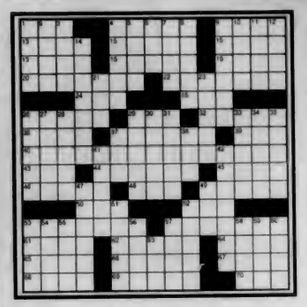
JayHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Vellard

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

Elsie Hooper • By Robert D. Kryzkowski

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across



1 Consumer protection org.
4 Fuel
9 Challenge for Iris
13 Vietnam neighbor
14 Pine cleaner
15 "Blondie" kid
17 Madly or Felipe
18 Follow upon
19 Midnight opposite
20 Thumbed a ride
21 Ms. Lupino
24 Portable bed
25 Green parrot
28 Gearshift
29 Marshy area
32 Spunk
34 Midterm or final
37 Computer capability
38 — appetit!
40 Eagle destination
43 Nabokov novel
44 Puts forth effort
45 Smooth the way
46 Jaunty hat
48 Pigment
49 Diatribes
50 Raincoat
52 Distress call
53 Percussion instrument
57 Food fish
61 Annapolis inst.
62 Prima donnas
64 Flashy sigh
65 Hang around
66 Jung's feminine side
67 Like horror flicks
68 Tree juices
69 Dr. Seuss
70 Mermaid's domain

Down

1 Unexciting
2 Romantic island
3 Car wheel lock
4 Frozen rain
5 Magician's prop
6 Capone foe
7 Move quickly
8 Valentino role
9 Letter answerer (2 wds.)
10 Like boxing
11 Love, to Claudius
12 Scads
14 Knuckle under
21 Peppery
23 Diary keeper
26 Fix up an old house
27 Hung out
28 Shrub elephant
29 Honored in style
30 Manicurist's board
31 "Calvary Row" actor
33 "Lusitania" sinker (hyph.)
34 Grove
35 Trouser parts
37 USA neighbor
38 Thing in law
41 Pleased
42 Ms. Lupino
46 Dwindling
47 Literary works
49 Watch pocket
51 Tomorrow's eve
53 — B. Anthony
53 Sloppy kiss
54 Movie terrier
55 Break suddenly
56 Master of Mumbo
57 Visited
58 Execs
59 Knowledge
60 New Age singer
63 Robust energy

10-20-04 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Amherst Brewing Company
Upstairs at the ABC
No Cover Charge
Karaoke
Funk and Monk 4400

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Oriental Beef & Vegetables
- Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
- Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 21

FRIDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 32

SATURDAY
- High: 48
- Low: 31

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan

COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovley

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Meghan Healy/ Samantha Nielsen

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Watch your wallet! There have been tons of thefts lately.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Wear your comfy clothes. It's important to feel relaxed.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Just deal with the fact that you're a silly person.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Soap operas may not be true life, but they are fun to watch.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Multi-tasking is hard to master.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Tell people how much you appreciate them.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't just find a temporary solution. Fix the big problem.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Say good-bye to some of your favorite television characters.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
A Cancer wants to meet you.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your entries are incredibly ill-timed.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Keep an ongoing to-do list; it will make you more efficient.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You are the coolest cat in the alley.

Quote for the Day

"I don't like my hockey sticks touching other sticks, and I don't like them crossing one another, and I kind of have them hidden in the corner. I put baby powder on the ends. I think it's essentially a matter of taking care of what takes care of you."

-Wayne Gretzky

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with Campus Fundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartment for Rent

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspensquare.com

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

Fast! One Owner Car 5Speed Ford Probe SE 1996 Well cared for Must Sell $1495.00 413-687-7510

Auto for Sale

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Cierra, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Employment

Express Warehouse Sale Temporary help needed. Massive inventory blow-out sale to be held February 23rd-26th in the Student Union Ballroom. Women's and Men's first quality EXPRESS CLOTHING at savings up to 90% off mall store retail. We need men and women to help with all aspects of the sale including receiving truck, setup, marketing, and sales. Contact Kathleen.quig@tol.com

Employment

500 Camp Jobs NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272 www.aroundcampus.com

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

Employment

Entry level food testers open schedule up to $80 per assignment email address required Call 1-888-327-4842 department number call c-344

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Entertainment

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

House for Rent

5 BDRM House on Main St. Bus Line Heat Include. 1800/Mo. Call Aaron 413-256-8747

Services

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional And Customized Offering to marketing your skills. Affordable prices, Timely Service By Email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Spring Break 2004 It's here...book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

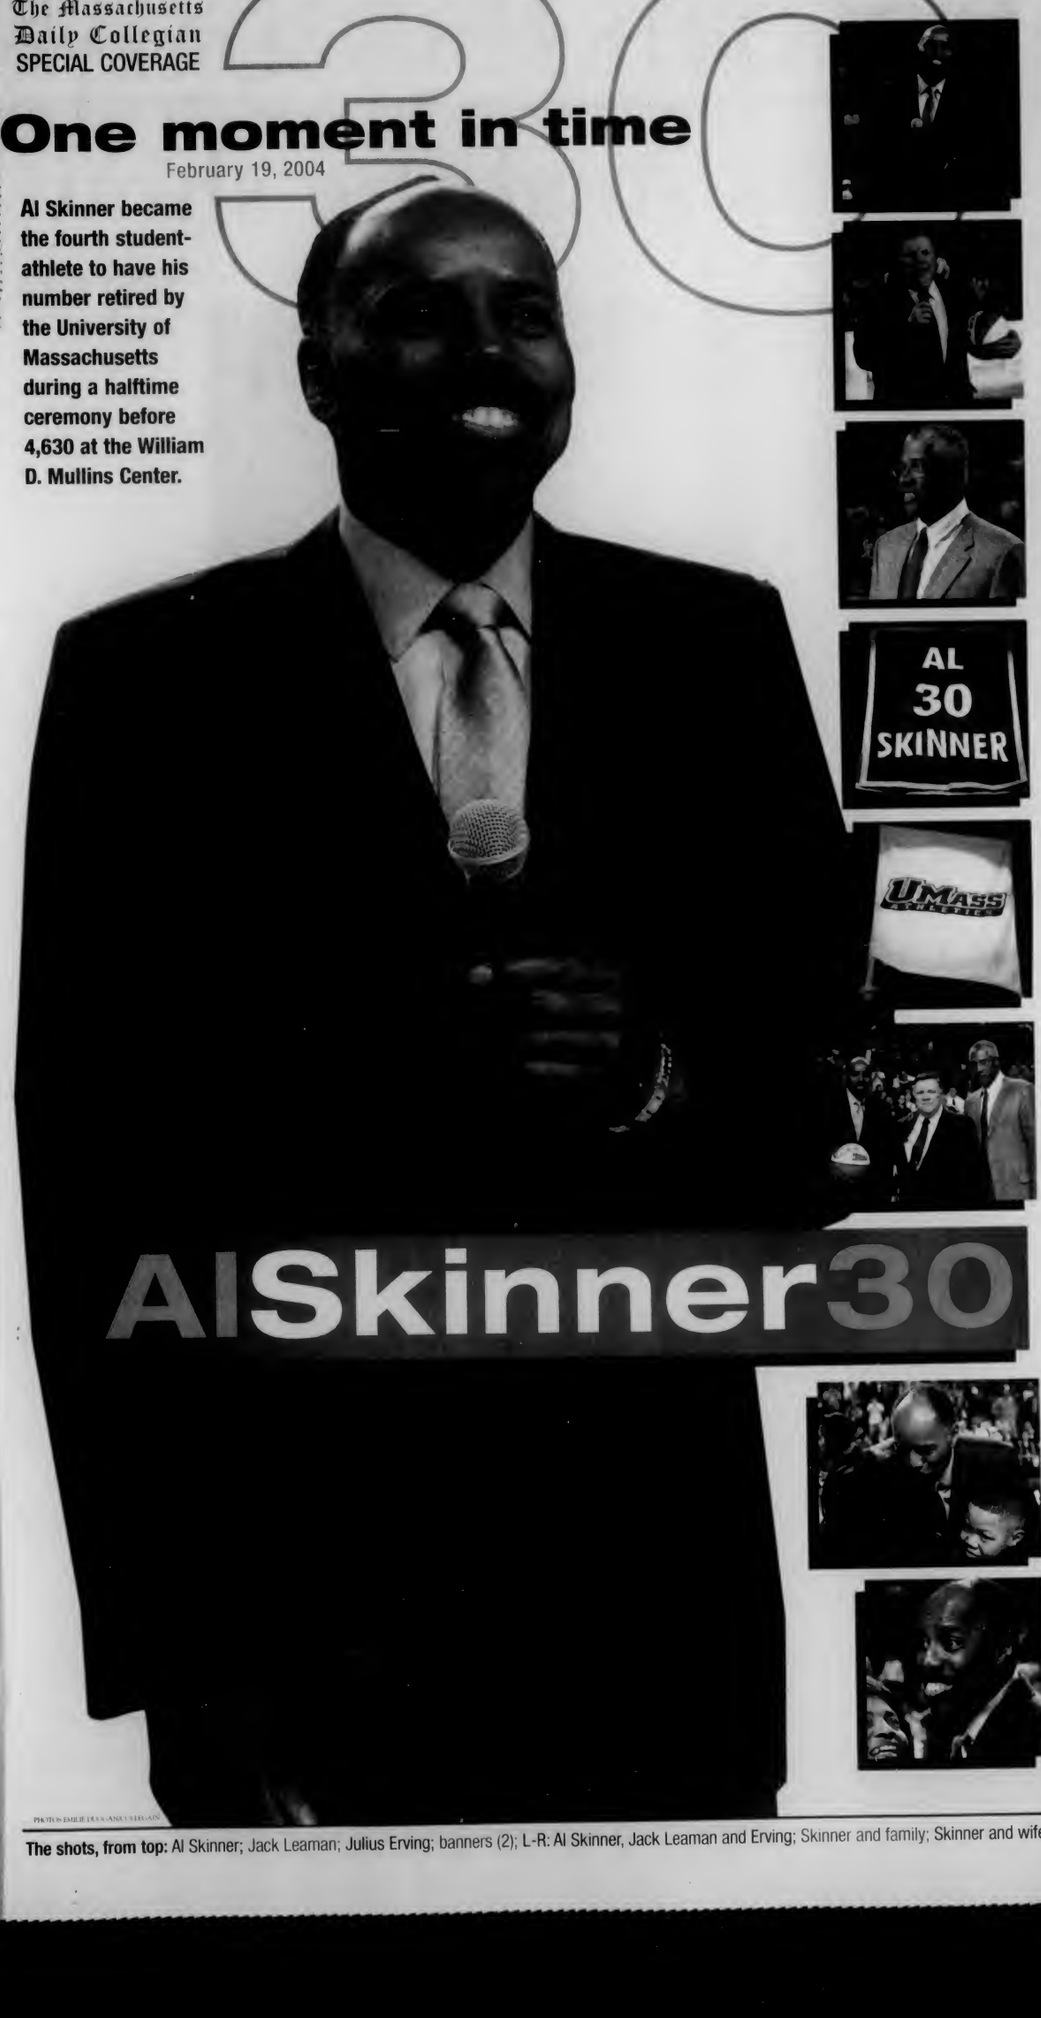
#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

Travel

887-4-CANCUN Best price. UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED; Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertnicholsesq.com



EGG DONORS WANTED! Fee for donation. Women must be 18-30. Call for application. Steven Litz, Attorney (317)996-2000 lic#10328-49

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPECIAL COVERAGE

One moment in time

February 19, 2004

Al Skinner became the fourth student-athlete to have his number retired by the University of Massachusetts during a halftime ceremony before 4,630 at the William D. Mullins Center.

The shots, from top: Al Skinner; Jack Leaman; Julius Erving; banners (2); L-R: Al Skinner, Jack Leaman and Erving; Skinner and family; Skinner and wife

Photos: Emilie Duggan/Collegian

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rams steal the show

Minutemen outmuscled, fall to Rhode Island

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

The fairytale ends.

The charade is over for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, as its true size was revealed for the first time in conference play. With their big men in foul trouble early and often, the Minutemen were unable to control the paint as they fell to Rhode Island 73-66 in front of 4,630 on Al Skinner Night at the Mullins Center.

URI	73
UMass	66

A Jeff Viggiano 3-pointer gave the Minutemen their third lead of the game at 46-45 with 13:17 remaining in the second half, but a bucket and back-to-back 3's gave URI a seven-point lead. The gap widened from there. The Rams used almost perfect free throw shooting (7 for 8) in the last three minutes to put the game away and win their first contest in four games.

Minuteman coach Steve Lappas felt it was the first time since conference play started that the reality of his squad's size was apparent.

"I thought this was the first time in this stretch playing a little depleted as we've been for the last seven, eight games where we were soft on the inside," Lappas said. "They killed us on the offensive glass; they scored 44 points in the paint, so I think it's pretty clear as to what happened tonight."

Lappas said giving up penetration to the basket was disappointing, especially while playing zone, and that this is the first time he's been upset with the team's play in league games.

"I think we've been doing a good job of masking some of our weaknesses over this period of time," he said. "We've had to play Jeff [Viggiano] at the four and he's done a great job, but tonight was the night we paid for it. We paid for being a little undersized and not being as physically strong as we need to be."

UMass won the last meeting between the teams on Jan. 31 67-

See HOOPS on page 9

EMILIE TSOUKANIS/COLLEGIAN

UMass freshman guard Maurice Maxwell explodes past URI's Dustin Hellenga, right, to the rim for two of his 17 points.

Skinner's number raised to rafters

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

George "Trigger" Burke, Julius Erving, Loe Roe and now, finally, Al Skinner.

With former teammate Rick Pitino as the driving force behind it, Dr. J serving as master of ceremonies, and proud coach and mentor Jack Leaman watching proudly, the former UMass great finally had his night. Skinner was a three-time All-Yankee Conference performer who won a pair of league titles while calling Curry Hicks Cage home.

With 16 former teammates, family and friends among some of the 4,630 in attendance at the William D. Mullins Center, Skinner capped a memorable halftime ceremony by pulling a black cord extending from the rafters down to center court, unveiling his newly retired number 30 raised high above the playing surface of the building it will now forever call home.

Al Skinner was finally, and officially, welcomed home.

"Obviously I'm extremely happy about being here and being able to revisit UMass in a non-competitive situation," Skinner said at an afternoon press conference yesterday before a dinner reception in his honor at the Cage. "I'm extremely pleased and excited about having this honor bestowed upon myself, and recognizing that this is the highest honor a student-athlete can receive at a university."

For Skinner, who is described by all who know him as an even-keel, team-oriented individual with never the slightest inkling towards self-promotion, the retirement of his number is the culmination of an individual basketball career that began in inner-city New York, festered itself on this very campus, and now thrives amidst big-time college basketball two hours due east on Chestnut Hill.

But the former Atlantic 10, Big East and National Coach of the Year looked no further than his former teammates in sharing recognition from what was a truly memorable night.

"Obviously I'm in great company, I'm just glad that friends and family can be here to recognize this," Skinner said. "I'm truly appreciative to the University

See CEREMONY on page 9

EMILIE TSOUKANIS/COLLEGIAN

Former UMass coach Jack Leaman, Al Skinner and UMass chancellor John Lombardi await the retirement of Skinner's No. 30 during last night's halftime ceremony.

One of a kind

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

In the year prior to former NBA legend Julius Erving's departure from the University of Massachusetts, Al Skinner was reminded day-in and day-out of what Erving was accomplishing on the court at Curry Hicks Cage.

Skinner, like Erving, a tall, talented kid from New York City, was repeatedly poked and prodded about what many believed could happen, but wondered if it ever would.

Al Skinner was being goomed to become the next Dr. J.

Pushed closer to the limit with each passing practice, Skinner was confident in his abilities, but didn't feel as if he should be compared with the greatest player to ever walk the campus of the University of Massachusetts.

"I can't fill Julius' shoes," Skinner said at the time. "He wears 15's and I wear 13's."

And with that, the Al Skinner era at UMass began.

"What Al brought to the table was that he had a bit of an edginess about him, had a high intellect to blend with better than average talent," Erving said. "He didn't have the greatest talent, but had a tremendous upside, blended with his skill and his intellect made him a great player."

"Al just refused to go away. His playing style on a day-to-day basis, a lot of it doesn't show up in the stat sheet. Even though he posted very good stats in college, he wasn't the type of guy who approached the game as if he needed to go out and score 40 points every night."

However, on a night designed to celebrate the accolades of one of this University's greatest student-athletes, the question of "what-if" was one that couldn't be ignored.

"I can only imagine, 'what if Al had played with Julius,'" current UMass radio analyst and Skinner's former coach Jack Leaman said. "Coach Skinner was a heck of a player, and if he had played one year here with Julius we would have been tough."

"He just worked so hard at his game and got the absolute most out of his potential. He was always a pleasure to coach and you just knew there were great things in store for him."

Erving recalled when he and Skinner actually did have the chance to play together.

"We played together and won a championship with the Nets, we played together in Philadelphia, and so the things that we weren't able to do on an amateur level outside of pickup games, which were very intense, we got a chance to do as pros," he said.

"I think it was that time in which we extended and enhanced our friendship because we were roommates on the road, and there were many times I thought of what could have happened if we had been on the same team, me, Al and Rick [Pitino]."

Nonetheless, Skinner's time at UMass is not remembered for what could have been, but rather for what did occur. With three Yankee Conference First Team selections and a pair of conference championships under his belt, Skinner certainly built his own legacy in the Pioneer Valley — one that not only still rings true around these parts to this day, but one that allows him to remain interconnected with the close-knit UMass family that helped create the Al Skinner known today.

"Oh there's no question there's a lot of memories that stay with me," Skinner said. "Most importantly, I can still call upon [former UMass coaches and teammates] for help today. There's a lot that goes into this game, and its not always about X's and O's...its about understanding people and knowing people.

"There are times that I need to bounce things off of someone and get another view, so its helpful to have people who are well grounded, who have a history, my history, and right now their biggest impact is that they are there for me and accessible for me."

Al Skinner surely created his own legacy as a basketball player and as a student at the University of Massachusetts, and the fact that he was able to do so in the shadows of the school's biggest legend is simply remarkable.

However, he would be the first to tell you that he credits that to his mentor, Leaman, his teammates and those within and around the basketball program that pushed him to be better than he ever thought he could.

There is no denying that No. 30 was as talented with a basketball in his hand as many of the great players who have ever donned the maroon and white, however. The legacy he created for himself was built around his desire to succeed for himself, as well as the University, and the special night celebrated in his honor accentuates the fact that his legacy that lives today began because Al Skinner refused to be anyone other than himself.

"I remember his first press conference," Leaman said. "He was asked, 'Are you going to be the second Julius Erving?' and he said, 'I'm going to be the first Al Skinner.'"

Sextet Ours takes the stage in Boston
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

UMass hockey takes on Boston U. in home-and-home series
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 86

US set to free British prisoners

By Ed Johnson
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — Foreign Secretary Jack Straw said Thursday that five Britons jailed at the U.S. military prison in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, will be returned home in several weeks. But they could be arrested again upon arrival.

Straw told reporters at a news conference that discussion were continuing on the fate of the remaining four British citizens being held.

"Once the detainees are back in the U.K., I understand that the police will consider whether to arrest them under the Terrorism Act 2000 for questioning in connection with possible terrorist activity," he said.

Earlier Thursday, Danish Prime Minister Anders Fogh Rasmussen told his parliament that a Dane held at Guantanamo Bay will soon be released.

Danish media have identified him as Slimane Hadj Abderrahmane. He was transferred to the U.S. Naval base in Cuba in February 2001 after being captured in Afghanistan.

"Under Danish law it is not possible to put him on trial. He will come to Denmark as a free man," Foreign Minister Per Stig Moeller said during a debate in parliament.

State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said the detainee would be released soon. He did not provide a more specific time frame.

He said Secretary of State Colin Powell had spoken with the Danish Foreign Minister Per Stig Moeller about the situation.

At the White House, spokesman Scott McClellan said the United States has received assurances from Denmark and Britain that the detainees being released will not pose "any future threat to America or our friends and allies."

Five other Guantanamo prisoners — a Spaniard and four Saudi Arabians — were recently released and returned to their countries for detention or prosecution.

"These detainees who are at Guantanamo Bay are people who are a threat to our country. That's why they were detained there, they are a danger to America and our friends and allies," McClellan told reporters.

"We have been provided assurances from those countries that we are returning those detainees to that they will make sure that they do not pose any future threat to America or our friends and allies," he said.

Students: Surveillance fee unfair

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

"Come out, come out, wherever you are," chanted a group of nearly 120 University of Massachusetts student protestors in the reception area of Chancellor John V. Lombardi's third floor office in the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday.

The protestors were part of a rally, organized by the Graduate Employee Organization, denouncing the new international student fee, which requires all international students on campus to pay $65 to fund a government monitoring system known as the Student Exchange Visitor Information System. The fee applies only to international students.

"This fee is discriminatory, unfair, and not something to stand up for," said President Chris Vials of the Graduate Student Employee Organization.

The rally included several speakers who spoke from the Student Union steps. Rally members then formed a train, which was led by Vials, and marched to Whitmore, chanting, "Hey, hey, ho, ho, this racist fee has got to go."

The protestors included undergraduate and graduate students, faculty, and several student groups, including the Graduate Student Senate, ALANA, the Radical Student Union, and several graduate and undergraduate student unions, among others.

At approximately 12:45 p.m., the group entered Whitmore and climbed the stairs to the Chancellor's office to speak with Lombardi. He was unavailable to respond to the group at the time.

"We are going to leave a message for Lombardi that we stopped by to see him," said Lisa Lasade-Piano of the Graduate Student Senate to fellow protestors.

SEVIS is a part of the USA Patriot Act. SEVIS requires the University to collect information such as address, major, occupation and special interests from international students and enter it into the government SEVIS database. The $65 covers this application process. The government does not provide funding for the information collection, leaving the University to decide how to fund it.

"If [Lombardi] needs an example, he can look at the University of Wisconsin-Madison," said Lasade-Piano.

The University of Wisconsin-Madison's international student fee was repealed after students protested. Other schools, such as the University of Chicago, have spread the fee evenly throughout the student body, so as not to single out international students.

"We'll be back," chanted the protestors as they left the building.

According to Vials, more than 200 international students have already agreed that they will not pay the fee. They have filled out withholding cards, on which they pledge to not pay the $65 charge. Undergraduate students have already had to pay the SEVIS fee, while graduate students are still waiting for their bill, although the fee already shows up in their SPIRE accounts.

"We feel that this administration doesn't see international students as community members," said speaker Ibrahim Dahlstrom-Hakki, secretary treasurer of GEO and a graduate psychology student. "And without them, this university wouldn't be what it is today."

Outside the Student Union, students held up signs saying "No paguemos", "No IPO fee", and "Surveillance is not a service". Members of different student groups opposing the fee passed out informational flyers and collected signatures for a petition to be sent to Lombardi, demanding that the fee be eliminated.

"The chancellor doesn't speak out against the [USA] Patriot Act," said George Liu, graduate ALANA/ international coordinator.

According to Liu, the chancellor asked a group of international students if they would come to study in the United States if the fee remained.

"The answer is 'no'," said Liu. "No one will come."

When the chancellor was told this, he said that students who don't like the fee can leave the school.

"I will not leave until the discrimination has ended on this campus," Liu said.

"I beg administration: repeal this fee," said speak-

See SEVIS on page 2

SCOTT ELLSWORTH/COLLEGIAN

Students protesting a $65 "service fee" for international students march toward the Whitmore administration building after a noon rally. The fee funds federally mandate services for international students.

Interfaith panel explores topics of religion and sex

SCOTT ELLSWORTH/COLLEGIAN

Students gather for a discussion on relationships, dating and sex put on by the UMass interfaith student council. The discussion focused on various religious beliefs regarding relationships.

By Matthew Consolini
Collegian Correspondent

Sex has many aspects — physical, emotional, chemical and biological — but it also has a spiritual side that cannot be overlooked, said a panel of students representing various faiths during a forum on sex sponsored by the Student Interfaith Council last night in the Campus Center.

"It is a gift from God, and God has a vision for sex and its enjoyment," said Tom K. MacDonald, a sophomore history major and Roman Catholic, who served on the panel.

MacDonald and five other students shared their religions' doctrines on dating and sexual expression with a gathering of more than 30 students last night. Though they came from different faiths, each agreed that sex is a deeply profound act.

"Physical sex is intensely sacred. It is a part of divinity," said Craig H. Surett, a senior anthropology major and Pagan, who served on the panel. "There is nothing impure or simple about it. It is a deeply, deeply sacred thing."

Sex is a way to partake in the energy that permeates all life and a way to harness the creative force that flows through the universe, he said later.

Meera S. Rajani, a senior psychology major and a Hindu, also commented on the sacredness of sex, noting it's the Kama Sutra, part of sacred Hindu scriptures.

"Hinduism views sexuality in a very open way. There is nothing wrong with being open with your body and with sexual expression," Rajini said.

Though it's somewhat open toward sex, Hinduism does have its rules, Rajini explained. She explained that for Hindus, there are four stages of life. A person begins as a student, then a householder, then becomes more spiritual before finally renouncing worldly attachments.

"Dating isn't wrong, but it detracts from duties as a student," Rajini said. For her, as long as dating doesn't get in the way with this stage of life, it isn't a bad thing.

Compared with Hinduism, Catholicism has a more closed and restrictive view on sex and dating. Pre-marital sex is forbidden, and dating is seen as the way to a scared institution: that of marriage, said Katie E. Langone, a junior animal science major. Despite the restriction on sex, she sees it as liberating.

"It's a freedom because you know why a person loves you. There aren't any games. Dating is evaluating a person's compatibility to be your spouse forever," she said.

Mormonism shares many Catholic views on sex and dating like chastity until marriage, but the Mormon Church has a stronger stance with it and monitors the actions of the faithful to prevent them from going astray.

"It's pretty concerned because it's afraid the world is going to hell in a hand basket," said Joe A. Hunt, a graduate student in the English department. He explained the church is concerned because things like pre-marital sex can ruin a person's spirituality. To combat this, Mormonism urges teenagers not to date before they are 16, and circulates pamphlets urging young adults to abstain from sex until they marry.

"We tend to have a high standard," Hunt said. "We try to keep our spirits as pure as we can and try to be like God."

Jillian F. Marcus, a junior communications major, said that Judaism also frowns upon pre-marital sex, though Reform Judaism recognizes that people have sex out of wedlock. Like her panelists, she agreed that sex is also sacred.

"Sex was almost the first commandment in the Torah, when God commanded Adam to be fruitful and multiply," Marcus said.

SCOTT ELLSWORTH/COLLEGIAN

Coming soon to a campus near you

A group of prospective students stop outside the Campus Center yesterday. Throughout this past week the campus has been inundated with tours for prospective students. High schools in Massachusetts were on vacation this week, which increased the number of tours.

Fake blood experiment a surprise to trauma victims

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — Paramedics are testing an experimental blood substitute on severely injured patients without their consent in an unusual study under way or proposed at 20 hospitals around the country.

The study was launched last month in Denver and follows similar research that was halted in 1998, when more than 20 patients died after getting a different experimental blood substitute.

Supporters say the current product, PolyHeme, made by Northfield Laboratories of Evanston, Ill., is safer and could save many of the nearly 100,000 people who die of bleeding injuries each year nationwide.

"It could revolutionize how we take care of resuscitation in the United States and across the world," said lead investigator Dr. Ernest Moore, chief of trauma surgery at Denver Health Medical Center.

The research is part of a race to find what doctors call the holy grail of emergency medicine: a product that works like human blood to save victims of car crashes, shootings or other trauma but could be carried in ambulances and given to people of any blood type.

Patients will be randomly selected to receive PolyHeme intravenously or standard saline solution at the scene or en route to the hospital.

Because severely bleeding trauma patients often are unconscious or in shock, they are unable to give the consent required for experimental treatment. As a result, the researchers in this case are being allowed to bypass the consent rules under a 1996 federal exemption that applies to emergency, potentially lifesaving research.

The exemption requires the research to be publicized beforehand in communities where the study will be conducted, both to let people opt out if they are ever injured and to give the community a chance to express any objections. In effect, the community briefings are used to obtain consent.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lumothe
Business Manager Peter Foundos
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eagleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagnese
Front Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorensen
Assistant Operations Josh Kaggins
Assistant Front Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Heath
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Asst. Sports Mike Marnelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the fall and spring semesters of the University of Massachusetts Amherst. The Collegian is independently owned and operated. Advertising revenue is the only source of support for the paper. Issues are archived on microfilm at the Library. Second class postage paid at Amherst, MA 01004. The Weekly Collegian was published from 1907 to 1909. The Collegian has been published since January 1, 1890. For classified and display advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 A.M. and 5:30 P.M.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN
www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Perspectives

By Scott Eldridge II

What do you think about the international student fee?

sophomore
Undecided

"I'm here on scholarship so it doesn't hurt me much, but it's really unfair."
Alassane Kouyate

junior
Marketing major

"We pay a lot more than what the international students pay [for fees] every semester when they raise them."
Ann Choi

senior
History major

"I think it's totally unfair. I certainly don't have to pay a domestic student fee."
Chris Drexler

senior
Plant and Soil Science major

"I think that it's totally unfair to stereotype all the interntional students as terrorists. We should be a little less afraid of people of different backgrounds and cultures."
Clinton Racine

junior
English/Classics major

"I totally agree that it's ridiculous. It's sad that it would have to come to something like this."
Lindsay Sauviageau

senior
Computer Science major

"It doesn't make a whole lot of sense."
Michael B. Croci

Students rally to say they won't pay international fee

SEVIS from page 1

er Emnu Laing, freshman member of the Radical Student Union. Laing, whose stepmother was an international student herself, sees the fee as an unnecessary taxation to students who are already burdened with life in a foreign country.

"International students do so much for us already," she said. "It's completely unjust to tax them more. The effort they put in just to be here is incredible."

"[Everyone] should join the revolution," said speaker Rene Gonzalez, a member of the Office of ALANA Affairs. "Chancellor Lombardi, Mr. Gargano, hear me when I say, I'm not going to pay [the fee]," he said, drawing applause from the crowd.

Although the representatives from the student groups all denounced the fee, no single solution has been decided upon. Lasade-Piano, who spoke for GSS, said that spreading the fee to the student population, like the approach of the University of Chicago, would not be an acceptable solution.

"I can't speak for everyone, but GEO is not focused on how the chancellor chooses to get rid of the fee. There might be different ways of handling it, but they may not be the perfect solution," said Dahlstrom-Hakki. "I think the protest went well. Hopefully our message will be heard by administration."

"I think it was a tremendous and huge success," said Eduardo Bustamante, Student Government Association senator and ALANA member, who participated in the rally. "Hopefully it sent a clear message to administration. We expect more of them."

Chancellor Lombardi was unavailable for comment at press time.

THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Bremer: U.S. will give Iraqis power by June

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — U.S. administrator L. Paul Bremer insisted Thursday that the United States will hand power to Iraqis by June 30 and won support from the United Nations for moving ahead without immediate elections. The favored U.S. option is to expand the existing 25-member Iraqi Governing Council.

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan backed Washington's claims that a direct vote before the June 30 deadline is impossible. But he did not offer alternatives to help resolve the debate on how to transfer sovereignty among Americans, Iraq's Governing Council and powerful Shiite Muslim clerics, who derailed U.S. plans by demanding an early direct vote.

The Bush administration is under pressure from its Iraqi partners and international allies to yield power and end the military occupation as soon as possible. It is also eager to establish a working government and give Iraqi security forces a frontline role against guerrilla violence well ahead of November presidential elections.

Iraqi leaders have largely turned against the original American plan to use regional caucuses as the basis for the new government. The Bush administration hopes Annan will now endorse an alternative that would expand the Governing Council and hand it power to rule until elections, a U.S. official told The Associated Press.

US urges Americans to leave Haiti

WASHINGTON (AP) — All non-government Americans in Haiti should leave while transportation is still available, the State Department said Thursday, citing the violent uprising.

Peace Corps personnel are being withdrawn, and the government has authorized the departure of family members and non-emergency employees of the U.S. Embassy on a voluntary basis, the department said.

Separately, the government said it was sending a military team to assess the security of the embassy in light of the uprising against President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

The embassy has imposed a curfew from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. on its staff and their family members. Thursday's warning said the curfew hours may change.

It added that the embassy's ability to provide emergency services to American citizens outside the capital city was limited.

Former Enron CEO indicted

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Enron Corp. chief executive Jeffrey Skilling was brought to court in handcuffs Thursday, charged with fraud, insider trading and other crimes in the highest-reaching indictment yet stemming from the energy trader's colossal collapse.

Skilling is accused of participating in widespread schemes to mislead government regulators and investors about the company's earnings. He pleaded not guilty to all 35 federal counts against him, and posted his $5 million bond with a cashier's check.

Skilling's indictment leaves former chairman Kenneth Lay as the only major Enron executive not charged.

The indictment, handed up Wednesday and unsealed Thursday, accuses Skilling, 50, and Richard Causey, Enron's former chief accounting officer, of taking part in the schemes to mislead regulators and investors. Causey, 44, was first indicted a month ago and is free on $500,000 bond.

Ten of the counts accuse Skilling of insider trading that generated $62.6 million from stock sold from April 2000 throughout September 2001, about a month after he quit Houston-based Enron.

—Associated Press

WHAT DID YOU DO IN COLLEGE?
Join Amherst Fire Department's Student Force!
Recruiting NOW for the Fall.
Stop by our table in the Campus Center this week: February 17 - 20
Or call us at 549.5419
Open House at North Fire Station:
Friday, February 27 5:00 - 7:00 pm
10 am - 2 pm
This Week: Tuesday-Friday
Campus Center Concourse
ENGINE COMPANY 3
50 YEARS OF SERVICE
Amherst Fire Department
www.afde3.com

Chicago Pizzaria
FREE DELIVERY!
549-6073
160 Fearing St., located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
Special of the week:
Thurs/Fri/Sat
Any small Calzone $4.75
Open:
Sun.-Wed.: 11AM-1AM
Thurs.-Sat.:11AM-3AM
We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!

How would you score?
LSAT GRE MCAT DAT
Take a FREE practice test at Kaplan's Test Drive and find out.
GRE Feb. 27th!
LSAT, MCAT and DAT, Feb. 29th!
call for details and to register
To register, call or visit us online today!
KAPLAN 1-800-KAP-TEST kaptest.com/testdrive
Test Prep and Admissions

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Friday, February 20, 2004 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Increased fines offer travelers wake-up call

People flying on airplanes have likely had understandable reservations about safety since the Sept. 11, 2001 hijackings. Thanks to a vicious terrorist network, paranola looms large on the minds of those trying to get to far-away destinations.

On Wednesday, the Transportation Security Administratlon issued new guidelines for fines applied to anyone trying to board airplanes with banned items.

A passenger trying to sneak a knife onto an airplane could be fined $250 and passengers with explosives could get the maximum fine of $10,000 under the guidelines.

Thousands of banned items such as cuticle scissors, box cutters and guns make their way onto airplanes every year. According to Tom Blank, assistant administrator for transportation security policy, TSA has found more than 1,650 firearms, more than 3 million knives and more than 57,000 incendiary devices since Sept. 11.

The new measures put in place should send out a resounding message to airplane passengers who failed to take the measures seriously before.

"Fines may help awaken a sleeping population here," said David Stempler, president of the Air Travelers Association.

The majority of people who bring banned items with them to airports mean no harm. Fines won't be enforced on everyone who has inadvertently packed cuticle scissors or cigarette lighters. Children and inexperienced flyers are some of the people who will be able to be excused from the fines.

Unfortunately, these fines are necessary. It only takes one person smuggling a gun or knife to hijack an airplane and kill hundreds in the process. The Sept. 11 attacks serve as a reminder that airport security personnel can never be lax when screening passengers and their belongings.

The Homeland Security Department, developed by Congress last year, has done a fine job of increasing safety for U.S. citizens and creating an environment where people will be able to carry on their daily lives with peace of mind.

Congress and the Homeland Security Department should continue to think up ways for safeguarding the United States and its citizens. Although procedures like inspecting one's belongings at airport checkpoints may be a nuisance and may slow thing's down for people who are in a rush, it is a must.

These measures are an essential part to continuing the war on terror and making the nation safer. Signs of a recovering economy should not overshadow the fact that the U.S. is a target for terrorist activities.

We cannot let our guard down.

For the sake of those who have died fighting for the safety of our country, Homeland Security measures deserve the support of everyone.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

UMass' great danger zone

Gilad Skolnick

There is a danger on campus, a threat to us all, a problem that has to be dealt with, an issue that the UMass administration has ignored for far too long. I speak of the campus pond, a hazard to all who wish to study in peace and tranquility at our fine institute of higher education.

During the winter the pond is especially dangerous as the water freezes when temperatures dip below freezing for several days in a row. With only one hard-to-see sign warning of thin ice, people can accidentally walk on the pond and fall into the freezing cold water, leading to anything from hypothermia, to frostbite or worse. I propose that we drain the campus pond and fill it in with concrete. A nice concrete surface would eliminate this threat.

In the summer this pond is a breeding ground for mosquitoes and other such insects. These mosquitoes suck the blood out of those walking on the University of Massachusetts campus, every drop of which is needed for UMass' frequent blood drives in the campus center.

In addition, mosquitoes carry the deadly West Nile virus, and who knows what else they might be carrying. There's no reason to take unnecessary risks; by eliminating the pond we eliminate the threat.

Dangerous swans and overpopulated geese infest this region as well. These swans are overly aggressive and have even occasionally threatened to bite students who have come too close.

There are far too many Canadian geese that make UMass their home every fall and I have had enough of their squawking and the feces that they leave behind on the lawns surrounding the pond. Just imagine the look on the faces of those geese when they come by next fall and can't find their pond. Priceless.

Furthermore the pond takes away all the attention from our beautiful Fine Arts Center that sits beside it. Made of beautiful slabs of gray concrete, the FAC is said to look like a grand piano from above. This building is perhaps the most stunning thing I've ever seen.

One of the paintings that line the Campus Center of UMass shows a tug of war game being played in the campus pond, but this pond is no longer even tug of war friendly as the water is so polluted.

Only on CNN, when they show scenes of downtown Baghdad, have I seen nicer concrete buildings, all of which I assume are also supposed to look like pianos from the air.

The pond takes away from the FAC's glory, and thus unfair natural competition must be eliminated to restore dignity to our university's buildings. Of course, the FAC is given a hard time for its architecture. But imagine if someone plopped a pond right outside Herter, Whitmore or Lederle. All of a sudden these buildings would look "ugly" too.

This pond is also severely hurting the US economy, which needs all the help it can get after four years of Bush or eight years of Clinton, depending on what side of the spectrum you lie.

Often, guys get away on cheap dates by taking a girl out duck feeding instead of on a real date. I have a friend who is notorious for doing this. Instead of pumping money into our wailing economy by taking a girl to a movie, dinner and who knows what else, he'll make a sandwich and go duck feeding. An easily accessible pond not only contributes to the duck overpopulation problem but it deprives many areas that have been hit hard by the recession of much needed revenue.

One of the paintings that line the Campus Center of UMass shows a tug of war game being played in the campus pond, but this pond is no longer even tug of war friendly as the water is so polluted.

One cannot go for a swim or a dip in this water, and drinking it could lead to spending many months at home.

First made by a stream that ran through campus, it was later plugged up to artificially create a pond, this water could be drained and used to water the lawns of UMass, further saving the school much needed money. The pond was not even supposed to be there, as nature only intended for a small stream to be in that location.

The pond is a threat to us all; it must end.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

A wolf in sheep's clothing

Paige Cram

This is not another column about gay marriage ... OK, maybe it is. But this is an issue that is not going away anytime soon, so for those of you who are tired of hearing it or uncomfortable hearing it, get used to it.

I don't know how many of you realize how lucky we are to be living in a time when history is being made. I would imagine that the atmosphere in the country right now is not unlike it has been prior to every other historic, groundbreaking decision.

Just like when the women's suffrage movement was going on, or the civil rights movement, or the movement to legalize abortion, the country is filled with passionate conflict — conflict between those of us that believe in moving the country forward and those that would rather continue living in the past.

If you think I'm exaggerating, you are blind. The movement to legalize gay marriage is about to get even bigger, and we can no longer brush it aside, saying that we simply don't want to think about it. The time to think about it has come; it's time to pick a side.

For me, the choice is clear.

The argument over legalizing gay marriage is an empty one. Bottom line: we are discussing human beings and citizens of the United States of America. In a country where all men are created equal, what's to dispute?

Women were at one time at a disadvantage, and we, as a country, determined that practice unconstitutional. There was also a time when African-Americans were not being given an equal opportunity, and we left that time in the past because we acknowledged that it was extremely unfair. Why is this situation any different?

The reason it is different is because this time it involves religion. No matter what anyone tries to say, the reasons behind the opposition to gay marriage are based solely on religion, and religion should have no place in what our government decides is fair for humanity.

No matter what anyone tries to say, the reasons behind the opposition of gay marriage are based solely on religion, and religion should have no place in what our government decides is fair for humanity.

The church is worried about the "sanctity of marriage" being destroyed. Well I don't think the scandal that exposed many of the churches' leaders as criminals did anything to help the sanctity of the church. So why are they so worried now? And furthermore, I don't see how two people who love each other and want to commit their lives to each other is destroying anything at all. If anything, I think it is highly commendable, especially in this day in age when even if people get married, there's a 50 percent chance they'll get divorced.

Celebrities have turned marriage into a publicity stunt. They are frequently marrying each other only to have dramatic, newsworthy break-ups four months later. I don't think that does any good for the institution of marriage, and yet no one is trying to put a ban on that.

This whole situation is a wolf in sheep's clothing. It is blatant discrimination disguised as a religious crusade, and a majority of the country is having the wool pulled right over its eyes.

Luckily, we are living in a time where the country is on the brink of drastic change. All it needs is that little extra push. We have a duty to get involved and make our voices heard.

We live in Massachusetts, supposedly one of the most liberal states in the country. And we're allowing a Republican governor (not to mention a Republican president) to try anything he can to ban something that has already been ruled as the only acceptable solution.

We have the potential to be the leaders in a nationwide movement; we could be the first state in the entire country to legalize gay marriage, and we cannot let the opportunity slip through our fingers.

Now, I'm not saying that we should force this legalization on every state immediately. I'm sure in certain parts of the country, there are states that are unanimously opposed to it. And in those cases, we have to give them some time to open their minds and join the rest of us in the 21st century. We have to take it one step at a time, and we are in the midst of the first and most important battle of what could potentially be a long, bloody conflict. But I have a terrible feeling that if we, in the state of Massachusetts, lose this battle, there will be no chance for us to win the war.

Paige Cram is a Collegian columnist.

Those awkward greetings

Matt Elder

You know the feeling. You've been in the situation once, and you'll surely be in it again.

You're on the bus, or at the gym, or at Stop & Shop. All of a sudden you look up and you see that person you went to school with, but were never close with. You haven't been friends with this person ever, and you try to plan your escape route; but you realize you need to wait in the deli line for the turkey, and therefore there's no place to go.

So you wait and you look up and there it is: the most awkward eye contact possible. You see in the person's eyes that they didn't want to make eye contact with you either, but neither of you have a choice. Now here it begins.

You need to smile and say "hi." Unfortunately, if the other person gets ambitious, he asks the question that everyone knows no one cares what the answer is.

"What's up?"

That question is the most generic, thoughtless question on the planet. My roommate pointed that out to me last year and I didn't agree at the time. However, after getting asked that stupid question, I must now agree.

If the question isn't bad enough, the answer I'm forced to give is even worse.

"Nothing," I will say as I purposely avoid all conversation.

That's right. The last time you and I spoke, we were both in diapers, and since then not one thing has happened to me that is worth mentioning.

Of course nothing is new. Didn't you know that since we last talked I have been under a rock with my fingers in my ears while humming to make sure I hear nothing?

Yeah, I've lived a pretty boring life if you couldn't tell. OK, since the last time this person and I talked, plenty has actually happened.

We've gone through four presidents, even though two of them have the same name.

I got the unfortunate news that there is in fact no Santa Claus. Of course, this was disputed greatly on the playground, and the news made me go crying to my mom on more than one occasion. But it's better I found out at 14 than at 20, right?

I got the even worse news that girls have cooties and I had to administer the cootie shot anytime I came into contact with one. I spent a lot of my childhood reciting, "circle, circle, dot, dot ... "

Unlike what many people think, it's better to be truthful than to be fake. Some people have a lot to learn.

I had plenty of burials in front of my house for various hamsters, gerbils and guinea pigs. After seeing "Pet Semetary," I didn't sleep for a month. You would think my parents would've warned me not to see that movie.

Since we last exchanged words I got my first kiss, my first slow dance and I finally reached second base. What a year that was!

And after the turmoil over girls, since you and I last spoke I finally found out that girls do not in fact have cooties after all. What a glorious day that was.

Flash forward to the present. Even though you went through half of elementary school, all of middle school and all of high school, we must say hi to each other even though we both know we don't want to.

There were certain people in high school who ignored you like you have Ebola or worse, liked Michael Jackson. Then there are these same people who will flash you the most awkward, thoughtless smile and ask you, "what's up?"

Well, "person I haven't talked to since Mookie Wilson hit a grounder through Buckner's legs" (yes, I was three at the time), I have no interest in talking to you now. You ignored me then, so why don't you do us both a favor and ignore me now?

Unlike what many people think, it's better to be truthful than to be fake. Some people have a lot to learn.

Of course, it's a lot easier to say hi to these people at parties. I know people (no names mentioned) who after having a few beers inserted into them, will have a full conversation with a trashcan thinking it's my roommate. So after a six-pack, we can talk. At Stop & Shop, not so much.

But hey, at least it isn't awkward or anything ...

Matt Elder is Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

JACKSON FOLLY UNDERSCORES BIGGER ISSUES

Concerning Rachel Smith's column titled "We've got a bigger problem:"

While I will almost always appreciate a good sarcastic skewering of the absurdity of media coverage in this country, I am concerned that we are missing an important lesson in "Nipplegate" for all of the journalistic folly of CNN and crew. If the clips I have seen are accurate, then the Jackson/Timberlake affair should be sparking a discussion worthy of great national attention. How do our machines of cultural production contribute to men's violence against women?

Yes, it's silly to get upset over the public display of a boob. What would not be silly would be a conversation about how seeing Justin Timberlake rip off the clothing of Janet Jackson in a context that says, "this is pure entertainment" is problematic. Is it part of that male sexual aggression fantasy that gets played out over and over again in our media?

Having a younger sister has made me very wary of any story that says she, as a woman, should just stand there and be oogled, touched or otherwise treated like an object. Let us start thinking more critically about all the stories we tell ourselves, and let us stop letting corporate media dictate that conversation.

Ian Callahan
UMass student

SHAPING THE POLITICAL FUTURE

In a democracy, you don't have to vote for people you know are going to screw you. No democracy in its right mind allows 20 million of its best jobs to be shipped out of the country or makes its citizens the target of terrorist attacks by setting up dictatorships all over the world.

It is clear that the Democratic and Republican parties represent some group other than us. A 1980 Senate report said the Rockefeller-Morgan gang is the dominant force in the U.S. economy. They also have worldwide investments (read "Rule By Secrecy" by Jim Marrs).

You could see students could get enough independents elected to Congress to impeach Bush (or the democrat) if your candidates told the voters they were going to arrest the leaders of the R-M gang and redistribute the wealth they stole from American workers.

There are 1,200 colleges in the United States.

John Harrigan
Springfield

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, FEBURARY 20, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rockstar takes stab at death row life in disturbing new game

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

Video game publisher Rockstar Games is quickly becoming the most controversial gaming company ever.

The popular gaming giant has been on the list of troublemakers since it released "Grand Theft Auto III" and with each action game released after, it has stirred up more and more problems. The latest release, "Manhunt," is now causing some questions about how far video games should go.

The company first started to take heat from parents when it released "Grand Theft Auto III" a few years ago due to the violent content of the game and the same can be said about the game "State of Emergency." Both games enabled gamers to kill massive amounts of people, both good and bad, and rewarded players for stealing and killing. Despite being under pressure to tone down "GTA III," the company never did. "State of Emergency" was a flop in sales so the heat on that game eventually went away as well.

'Manhunt'
Playstation 2
Rockstar Games
Rockstar Games
Action

Late last year the company was once again in the news as Haitians protested a level in "Grand Theft Auto: Vice City" in which the player was told to, "Kill all Haitians." It spawned large protests by Haitian-Americans that wanted to point their fingers at Rockstar because it caused violence towards the Haitian community. Although this accusation is far from being the sole reason why there is Haitian violence currently going on, Rockstar Games agreed to take the mission out of the game, but they have yet to release the new version.

The latest release from Rockstar is stirring up as much controversy in the gaming world as Janet Jackson's bare breast stirred up in the entertainment world. The game "Manhunt" is a game where the player controls a murderer who escapes death in the electric chair. Your missions are all based on how good a kill you can pull off on your enemies, as some strange guy videotapes every kill for his own twisted pleasure. The people you kill are just as disturbing as the kills you can pull off.

You will face gangs that wear creepy masks and at points their reactions and looks get downright disturbing. But, nothing is as disturbing as the murders you are able to perform because these aren't simple shoot-to-kill deaths.

That would be too plain; too boring. Instead you can choke people with plastic bags, slice open their chests with glass shards, and take off 75 percent of their heads with baseball bats. If that sounds disturbing in writing, then you should try seeing it onscreen.

The sick and twisted "Manhunt" has already been completely banned in New Zealand due to the explicit content and graphic language. It will only be a matter of time before parents become outspoken on video game content as Rockstar looks to release the game on PC and X-Box sometime this year. There is a chance the game will get a major face lift so Rockstar doesn't take too much heat on the release of "Manhunt" to other platforms. But, according to Gamespot.com's talk with Rockstar, "Manhunt" will most likely stay the same.

Rockstar's controversial game "Manhunt" is now available on the Playstation 2 and is expected to be released for PC and X-Box later this year. It's rated M for mature and runs around $49.99.

Information from GameSpot.com was used in this column.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist. "Press Start to Play" can be read every Friday in Arts & Living.

OURS IN PARADISE

Art-rock band plays Boston

Ours
Paradise Rock Club
Boston
Feb. 13

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — When the slightly revamped, now-sextet, Ours took the stage to a packed crowd at the Paradise Rock Club in Boston last Friday the audience was buzzing with excitement. The New Jersey art-rockers brought their new lineup, which featured two new guitarists Locke and Vinny as replacements for ex-guitarist Dave Milone, to Boston for the first time as part of a very short tour to prelude their third album recording sessions.

In an interview a few weeks before the show, the band's creator and frontman, Jimmy Gnecco, explained the process of replacing Milone, who had been with the band since shortly after "Distorted Lullabies," before leaving in late 2003.

"We actually played with [Vinny] during the first record," Gnecco explained. "He was gonna be the guitar player that toured with us after the first record ... but he had his own sound; we loved it...we were blown away by it ... but the problem was the record was already finished. [His sound] represented where we wanted to be but, by the time the record came out we were already in a different space."

Gnecco also connects the story of how Vinny came into the band to how Locke was found.

"Locke was a guy from around our area ... we opened [auditions] up to people around the country, we looked at video tapes. I got maybe 20 videos in and I said, 'Oh my god, let me call Vin again and see what he's doing' and he came down and immediately it was right and we thought 'well that takes care of that'. But now we needed someone to play guitar like I play guitar. That was the issue after the first record I didn't want to play guitar live, so we needed someone who could play guitar like me. So that was how I found Dave, because I played with Dave for years ... he could at least copy parts."

Gnecco's quest to find someone to replace Milone, someone who could play guitar like him, eventually lead him to Locke.

Both guitarists made their presence clear, helping to create a full sounding band, rounded out by Gnecco's brother, Pit, on the drums, Raoe, the longtime bassist, and Anthony Damazzo, who plays keyboards. As Gnecco discussed, both players had a unique style. Vinny would often use an E-bow, a device that when held up to a string causes a tuntann, and makes his lead parts more distinctive. Locke occasionally brought out a bow to play his guitar with, which makes for a very distinct sound.

The band got the show started with perhaps its most intense rocker and fan favorite, "Miserybead", a track from the 2001 debut "Distorted Lullabies" before segueing into many new songs from the band's upcoming album. "Mechanical Lovers" was a hard-rocking song that had a bit of a new-wave vibe. "I Ran Away To Tell The World" was a more slower paced song but no less intense. Other new tracks, such as "God Only Wants You," and "I Heard You Singing" were other standouts of the show, especially the latter, which easily ranks amongst Ours' best.

"Fallen Souls," from "Distorted Lullabies," was one of the best moments of the night, as Gnecco stunned the crowd with his amazing, anguished, scream that is both chilling and beautiful. Gnecco's voice is the band's not-so-secret weapon and he was given plenty of opportunities to highlight it.

Another highlight of the show was the track "Sometimes" which is Ours' only truly successful single. The song was followed by "Realize," a song from the band's 2002 follow-up "Precious." While "Precious" is held in great regard by the band's fans, and the hard-hitting and passionate "Realize" is undoubtedly one of the band's greatest accomplishments, putting it next to "Sometimes" was bittersweet, as Gnecco envisioned the track as the band's next big single.

"When I wrote ['Realize'] I handed in the record and I said 'this is our first single, it's very important to

See OURS on page 5

Rhode Island nightclub tragedy: one year later

By Brooke Donald
Associated Press

WEST WARWICK, R.I. (AP) — They included schoolteachers and business professionals, waiters and disc jockeys, musicians and tattoo artists. And when their lives were cut short by a fire that consumed a nightclub, the loss left just about everyone in the state reeling.

Much has happened in the year since The Station fire, which killed 100 people and injured about 200 others after a band's pyrotechnics set the club ablaze.

The club's owners and a band tour manager were charged criminally, the General Assembly enacted stringent fire safety measures, lawsuits were filed, and the band Great White went on tour to raise money for victims.

Fire survivors and the friends and family members left behind by those who perished are all still coping with the sudden loss of loved ones.

"We continue to be in the grieving process," said Sarah Mancini, who lost her 34-year-old son, Keith. "I don't want any of these kids to be forgotten."

Rhode Island is the smallest state in the country, a compact space easily traveled in under an hour, and its communities are tight knit.

Nearly everyone seemed to know at least one person affected by the fire: the concertgoers, the firefighters and emergency responders, the doctors who treated the burn victims, the dentists who were asked to produce patients' records to help identify bodies and the schoolchildren who were told their teacher wouldn't be returning to class.

"They say there are six degrees of separation in this world. In Rhode Island, there's a degree and a half," Attorney General Patrick Lynch said after the fire.

Thousands have flocked to the site of the fire. The scene has been transformed from ashes to a makeshift memorial, where prayer services take place on the 20th of every month and crosses — made from charred remains of the club — form a circle around what was once the perimeter of the night spot.

Mancini said she rarely visits the site because it is too painful, but she attended a recent court proceeding to make sure her son's memory lives on. She planned to mark the fire's anniversary with a quiet dinner, and would attend a memorial service.

John Richmond said the pain of losing his daughter, 40-year-old Kelly Vieira, of West Warwick, is still hard to bear. He misses their regular lunch dates at Wendy's, where they would sit and talk.

"It was basically the only time I could talk to her alone and find out what was going on" in her life, said Richmond, adding that he tears up every time he drives past the fast-food restaurant.

The event gripped the rest of the state as well. Businesses scrambled to make sure they met fire code requirements — many requested variances when they realized they could not. Funds were set up to help victims' families and survivors pay for mounting medical bills, funeral costs, rent and other and basic needs. More than $3.2 million was collected by various funds.

Mental health workers donated time to help families. Restaurant and tourism associations arranged training seminars for businesses updating their fire safety measures. Fire departments revamped how they communicate with each other.

"They're trained to treat every job like the real McCoy, but the fire did heighten awareness," said East Providence Fire Chief Joseph Castro of the firefighters.

Gov. Don Carcieri — in office less than two months when the fire happened — ordered inspections of all nightclubs, and within five months of the blaze, the General Assembly had passed stringent fire-safety measures that included tougher sprinkler requirements for nightclubs and other businesses and a ban on pyrotechnics in nightclubs like The Station.

By that time, Great White, the 1980s rock band whose pyrotechnics started the fire, went on the road to raise money for victims' families and survivors, angering some people who said the move was insincere.

Lead singer Jack Russell said a benefit tour was the only thing the band — which lost their guitarist, Ty Longley, in the fire — could do to help. The tour eventually raised nearly $65,000.

The fire started after 11 p.m. on Feb. 20, 2003, within moments of Great White taking the stage, seconds into the first song. A shower of pyrotechnics lit up the club, igniting highly flammable foam placed around the stage as soundproofing. Thick smoke billowed from the one-story wooden building, and when concertgoers couldn't make it to the exits, they bashed through windows, struggling to escape as their lungs burned with toxic smoke and stifling heat.

Rescue workers arrived three minutes after they received the first of a string of emergency calls, and found the building engulfed. Images and sounds of people scrambling to get out were broadcast around the world, all caught by a television cameraman who had coincidentally been at the club that night for a story on safety in public places.

In December, a grand jury indicted the club's owners, brothers Jeffrey and Michael Derderian, and Great White's former tour manager, Dan Biechele, on 200 counts each of involuntary manslaughter. All three pleaded innocent.

The Derderians also were fined $1.07 million for failing to carry workers' compensation insurance for their employees, four of whom died in the disaster.

Victims' families and survivors have filed lawsuits naming the Derderians, Biechele, town officials, the state fire marshal and others, alleging the parties neglected to make the nightclub the safest it could be. At least six lawsuits have been filed.

"It's all had an impact on the way we do business. We double check everything now," said Richard Lupo, who owns Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel nightclub in Providence.

For family members, it was a year of missed birthdays, emptiness and anger. Many, like Raymond Mattera of Providence, are frustrated that West Warwick's fire and building inspectors weren't charged for failing to note the flammable foam on inspection reports.

"This is a long healing process," said Raymond Mattera of Providence, whose daughter Tammy Mattera-Housa, 29, died in the fire. He and his wife, Diane, are now taking care of one of Mattera-Housa's two children. "This isn't something you get over right away."

One year ago today, The Station nightclub in West Warwick, R.I. caught fire after pyrotechnics set the club ablaze during a Great White show.

New Jersey rockers, Ours, perform with two new guitarists lead the record off with this single,' " Gnecco recalled. "[DreamWorks, the band's label] completely ignored me and they released 'Leaves.' And I said, 'you're going to submarine this record, you're fing us, because there's no way we can come out of the gate that passive."

OURS from page 4

Gnecco was right, as the single didn't pick up the momentum that "Sometimes" had and promotion for the album was quickly cancelled by DreamWorks.

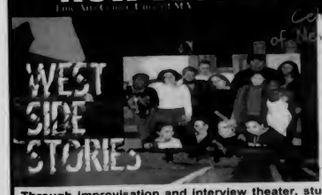
"For the entire year of 2003 we just sat," Gnecco explained. "So in that time they were supposed to make a video for 'Realize,' they pulled our budget on that so we said 'f you, we'll do it ourselves' and that video cost, I think it was like $18 or something, just the cost of tape." The video was a huge statement featuring, amongst other things, Gnecco in blackface — a symbol for how artists are treated in the industry today.

"I told them it was a huge fup to release 'Leaves' first," Gnecco continued. "They didn't listen to me and we were fed because of it, and that was my way of saying 'fk you ... I told you it was gonna fing fail, now we did our own video for $18 or something and ... f you, now we're gonna do this on our own.' "

Despite the lack of promotion and Gnecco's slight unease the band is still with the label.

"They're gonna have to fall in line with the vision at this point because otherwise what good are they to us?" Gnecco asked rhetorically. "In their defense, what happens is they want it to happen so badly that they don't know how to control themselves from micromanaging the situation and we can't be in a position again where its micromanaged to the point of sucking the life out of it."

Given Gnecco's feelings toward the album it was no surprise that the set featured only four songs from "Precious"



Toward the end, Gnecco led the crowd in a surprisingly good sing-a-long, which made for one of the show's highlights. After that, the set came to an end with reworked song "Use Me" which was originally featured on the records "Sour" — a pre-DreamWorks disc that was made by an early incarnation of the band.

The new song is a journey; it starts out slowly before picking up pace and finally building into an all-out jam. Gnecco began to beat, if not massacre, a tom-tom drum and literally throw himself at it so hard it looked like he was either going to pass out from exhaustion, break the drum, or explode — thankfully none of these things happened.

After the encore break the band came back, one by one, for another extended jam that led into one of the most rousing renditions of "Kill The Band," a "Precious" track, that the band has done, at least before a Boston crowd.

The only negative thing about the entire show was that after an evening of being treated to amazing previews of the new songs, fans will now have to wait an indefinite amount of time to hear them again. No fan left the Paradise disappointed as Ours once again proved that their dark-rock, which seems to have been inspired by artists as disparate as The Cure, Jeff Buckley and Radiohead as well as Gnecco's own distinct muse, was one of the most exciting things happening in the music scene today.

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Featuring "Bud & Bud Light" $19.50 30/pk
Busch & Busch Light $14.99 $/pk
Newcastle Brown Ale $11.99 12/pk btl.
Heineken $10.99 12/pk cans or btls.
Absolut Vanilla $15.99 750 ml.
Vodka 80 $5.99 Liter
Vodka 80 everyday price $9.99 1.75 ml.
Check out Russell's indoor wine specials!
Belhaven Pub Cans $4.99 4/pk
Jacobs Creek (all flavors) $5.99 750 ml.
Wild Turkey 80 $15.99 750 ml.
Seagrams Gin (your choice) $8.99 750 ml.
Jameson Irish Whiskey $17.99 750 ml.
Open 9:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. • Sun. 12:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. • Visa/Discover/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit

New WORLD Theater
Celebrating 25 Years of New WORLD Theater

West Side Stories
New WORLD Theater presents a Pioneer Valley Performing Arts High School production. In association with the UMass Department of Theater.
Feb. 21@ 8 pm &
Feb. 22 @ 2 pm
Bowker Aud.
Students $5 ext. 2511
Through improvisation and interview theater, students from Amherst Regional High School, the Pioneer Valley Performing Arts, and Project 2050 collaborate in a multi-dimensional exploration of race and place through music, dance, sketch comedy, satire, and drama.

A Revolutionary Convening: The Vision of June Jordan Feb.27 & 28 -FREE-
Presented by the UMass Women's Studies Department in association with New WORLD Theater, the Student Activities Center, the Black Student Union, WOCLN of EWC and the Office of ALANA Affairs
Friday, Feb. 27 - 7:30 pm, SUB - Keynote Address by Sonia Sanchez.
Saturday, Feb. 28 - 9 am - 5 pm, CC101 - Round table discussions
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium - BLUEPRINTS FOR REVOLUTION: A PERFORMANCE, featuring Sonia Sanchez, Kate Rigg, Letta Neely, Jane Sapp and the Voices of Today, Magdalena Gomez, Evelyn Harris, and Project 2050. For Conference info call Linda Hiltenbrand 545-1922
www.newworldtheater.org
The Ford Foundation

He made $31,263 last summer, is graduating with $70K+ job offers & Fortune 500 connections
Want an eXtreme summer internship?

Noah Goldstein—UMASS Senior
CWP is a nationally acclaimed, highly selective & paid internship; open to all majors & all years. If you are a leader, driven & think outside the box, immediately call or email your name & phone number to:
413-695-5101 — UMASS@collegeworks.com
Hiring Ends in 3 Weeks!!!

COURTESY ROCKSTAR GAMES

As evident above, in Rockstar's newest game, "Manhunt," there is an abundance of violence.

Rock 'n' roll legend inspires Noho

Leon Russell shows he still can do it at age 62

By Seth Glick
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — To most people under 35, the name Leon Russell might cause one to vaguely remember an old friend or that guy who once played on that old sports team.

Leon Russell
Iron Horse
Northampton
Feb. 18

But to musicians and students of rock music, the name conjures up the session man and solo artist who was never seen without his hair spilling out of his trademark top hat. Not only did Russell arrange and conduct the bands for the immensely popular Mad Dogs and Englishmen tour in 1970 with singer Joe Cocker, as well as at the mythical, star-studded Concert for Bangladesh in 1972, but he has also made four solo albums that have been certified gold.

However to today's generation, Russell is a forgotten man.

Even though he played on virtually every hit Phil Spector ever produced as well as songs by the Beach Boys and the Rolling Stones, Russell remains an obscure figure.

On Wednesday night, rock's "most anonymous big shot" sat atop the stage at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton and performed with a timeless soulfulness that always seems to be missing in today's popular music.

With his long white beard and hair owing more to Gandalf than Garfunkel, the singer/ songwriter/ jack-of-all-trades amazed the crowd in his 80-minute set. Running through his staples, as well as a slew of covers, Russell and his band (bassist, guitarist, drummer and his daughter on backup vocals) kept the crowd's heads bobbing and their feet tapping throughout the show.

The solid drumming along with the plodding, thumping bass provided a sturdy backbone for the guitar and piano soloing.

Even though Russell is best known as being one of the foremost pioneers and champions of the rock 'n' roll piano, it was his singing that stood out. Passionate renditions of his classics "Hummingbird" and "Tight Rope" garnered the most applause. His rough, authentically southern delivery garnered the most applause for his classics "Hummingbird" and "Tight Rope."

The most interesting song of the night was his upbeat take of the Rolling Stones' classic "Wild Horses." Treated as an optimistic ode to future love by Russell and his band, the song had originally gained popularity as the Stones' slow, yearning tune of loss from their seminal 1971 album "Sticky Fingers."

Russell was constantly paying homage to his gospel roots through vocal interplay with his daughter. Using call and response, a church-inspired musical conversation, Russell and his daughter traded lines as effortlessly as a father-daughter combination should. Russell ended the show with a four-song medley including a verse each from the Stones' "Jumpin' Jack Flash" and the Temptations hit "Papa Was A Rolling Stone."

After receiving a well-earned applause, Russell politely thanked the crowd and retreated to his tour bus as methodically as when he came in.

Even at 62, the man who looks like Santa Clause in a cowboy hat still knows how to please a crowd.

Going to the Dogs

HOCKEY from page 8

has allowed the third-highest goals-per-game (2.93) in the conference this season, though that's hardly the fault of standout netminder Sean Fields. The Beanpot Tournament MVP made 50 saves in the Terriers' 2-1 overtime loss to BC in the final of the tournament.

Fields became the first MVP in the Beanpot's 52-year history to come from the loser of the championship game.

Fields doesn't rank near the top of any major statistical categories in Hockey East, but does face an average of 28 shots a night, and has turned in remarkable performances in the past, such as his work in the Beanpot final this year, or his 46-save job in the Hockey East final last year.

Last weekend, Umass faced a team that had locked up home-ice advantage, and had just been crowned No. 1 in the country.

Tonight, they face a team that has to finish strong in order to hold on to the last playoff spot — hardly something anyone would have expected from the Terriers at the start of the season.

"I think you have to go right back at them, because you know they're going to come out hard," Mauldin said. "They have to do what it takes to get in the playoffs, with Northeastern right there. I think if we go right at them, and go hard, they might start questioning themselves and just collapse.

"I think if we lay back and give them an opening, they're a team that can take it to us as much as any other team can take it to us."

After getting drubbed 6-1 last Saturday by BC, UMass coach Don Cahoon vowed that his team wouldn't forget the game. This week, he's subjected his troops to plenty of reflection on last weekend. Usually, each forward line and defensive pair will break off to watch video of past games. This week, Cahoon has gotten the entire team together to watch tape, specifically focusing on each of the 11 goals the Eagles scored on them.

"We've got to decide if that was bottoming out, or if we're going to let this thing linger a little bit longer," said Cahoon, who may be making his final trip to Walter Brown Arena as a participant. The arena, which has served as the Terriers' home since 1971, is being replaced by the state-of-the-art Harry Agganis arena, although the changeover isn't expected to happen until the second half of next season.

"Hopefully, we go there with some energy and conviction. I just want to play well, I want to play well over the course of the weekend."

Leading by example

Minutemen guard Anthony Anderson is second on the team in scoring with 13.9 points per game, and is shooting above 40 percent from three-point territory. UMass takes on Fordham tomorrow in the Bronx for a 1 p.m. tip-off.

NCAA disciplines SBU for three years

BONNIES from page 8

Solomon.

St. Bonaventure officials welcomed the NCAA findings, noting that all the sanctions — except for the postseason ban — were ones the school was already willing to impose upon itself.

"We have no intention to appeal any of the NCAA sanctions and any of the Atlantic 10 sanctions that may come," said athletic director Ronald Zwierlein, who is in the first month on the job. "We feel that it was a fair and just process. We're going to accept our responsibilities and move forward."

Coach Solomon broke the news of the NCAA sanctions to his players earlier in the day during a 15-minute meeting.

"I went down the list of the penalties, and then I asked if there were any questions and at that time there weren't any questions," he said.

Solomon said his team's immediate future as far as the A-10 playoffs are out of his control and hoped to know as soon as possible.

The school did not make any of its players available for comment.

If barred from the A-10 tournament, it would mark the abrupt end of senior star point guard Marques Green's college career.

St. Bonaventure spokesman David Ferguson said the school would not comment on anyone named in the NCAA report, including Wickenheiser.

Last April, the school dismissed coach Jan van Breda Kolff, now an assistant coach with the NBA New Orleans Hornets, and sought and received the resignation of athletic director Gothard Lane. Bonnies assistant coach Kort Wickenheiser, the president's son, also resigned.

The school also eventually stripped the team of all victories in which Terrell played, leaving the Bonnies record at 1-26.

The NCAA noted that the school provided Terrell with an extra benefit, changing an incomplete grade to a withdrawal, a move that allowed Terrell to remain part of the team.

Men's track sprint toward A-10s

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The season hasn't been easy for the Massachusetts men's indoor track squad, and there certainly won't be any rest for the weary this Saturday at the Atlantic 10 Indoor Championships in Kingston, R.I.

Although the Minutemen carry an advantage over some teams, coming back to a surface they competed on just three weeks ago, coach Ken O'Brien assures there will be no easy breaks.

"For us to be successful, we have to be letter perfect," O'Brien said, "we don't have room for error in many events ... and we have to have some things fall where one team beats up on another team a little bit. Someone's got to steal points from other people."

Senior sprinter Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng should have no problem being punctual on Saturday. Having won every race in the 55-meter dash this season, including preliminary and final rounds, Frimpong-Boateng is a textbook example of how to be "letter perfect". The former A-10 Male Track and Field Performer of the Week should be the odds-on favorite to take first in the 55 dash.

Junior jumper Henry Smith has been coming along strong lately for the Minutemen, coming off an exceptional eighth place finish at the FasTrack Invitational in Boston last weekend.

One of the most consistent performers this season, Smith currently holds the Minutemen's best mark in the triple jump for the 2004 season. On Jan. 31 he came up fifth in the event at the Adidas Boston Indoor Games with a leap of 45-5.

But the Maroon and White will need a strong performance from their distance team to stay in the hunt with the likes of favorites Rhode Island, LaSalle and St. Joseph's.

Sophomore Ryan Corbett and junior Jon Korhonen are coming off of a day at the FasTrack where they finished 33rd and 34th, respectively, in the 3000. Junior Matt Clark took 17th in the 1000 at the same event.

The Maroon and White will also be depending on the tandem of sophomore James Godinho and junior Joseph McCormack to have another strong performance in the 500 this Saturday Last weekend at the FasTrack, Godinho and McCormack took a sound sixth and eighth, respectively, in the 500. Senior multi-event runner John O'Neil will also be relied on in the event.

The URI Rams are the favorite to win the meet, competing on their home turf. They will be led by senior Colin Aina, the defending A-10 Champion in both the 55 hurdles and long jump. A serious threat in each of his events, the multi-event runner should look to repeat as 55-hurdle champion. His 7.3 time in the 55 hurdles and 7.9 in the 60 hurdles are both URI records.

The LaSalle Explorers will have a strong showing Saturday, in the form of distance runner Ryan Fennelly. A three-time A-10 Performer of the Week this season, the junior set a school record in the 3000 earlier this season with an NCAA-qualifying time of 8:05.45. The Explorers will also be relying on two-time A-10 Rookie of the Week Adam Breitsch to stir things up in the middle distance events.

The St. Joseph's Hawks should give the Explorers plenty of worry in the middle distance events in the form of sophomore Andre Laboy. Last weekend at the New Balance Armory Collegiate Invitational in Bronx, N.Y., Laboy took first in the 3000 with 8:18.07.

Panda East
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi Bar!
*OCMP accepted
*Delivery available!
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

UMASS AMHERST STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995 or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars • Passenger Vans • Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS Auto & Truck Rentals
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
79 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

QUEEN OF JEAN
THE ONE YOU WANT
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
jeans by citizens of humanity
ZANNA

SUBWAY
FREE DELIVERY!
11 am - 2 pm
4 pm - Midnight
7 days a week!
We Accept OCMP!
Call 582.0066
Located on Rt. 9 next to the Registry

Skills For Living With Early Mother Loss
An education and discussion group for women who experienced the death of their mother before their adult years.
Tuesday Evenings 5:30 - 7:00 PM For Six Weeks
Beginning March 2, 2004
Learn to: Provide Better Self-Care, Build Healthy Relationships, Manage Anxiety and Fear of Loss
For more information call EWC Counseling Services 577-0077

Tired of the Dorms?
"It's never too early to look for an apartment with Lincoln Real Estate"
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.

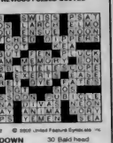
1 IN 40 BILLION • By Mike Ross

MR. GNU • By Travis Dischner

ELSIE HOOPER • By Robert D. Ketcham

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

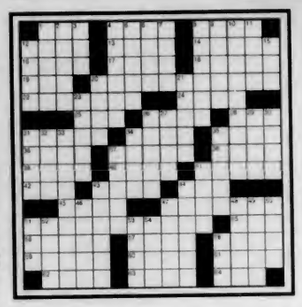
JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Vietard



QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Everybody gets so much information all day long that they lose their common sense."

-Gertrude Stein



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Scratch or dent
4 Roast cooker
8 Glimmering
12 Hay unit
13 Singer — Tanaka
14 Prairie
16 Like some fans
17 Kerr or Lena of film
18 Returns as debt
19 Soldier in gray
20 Snowboarder's cousin (2 wds.)
22 Cracker shapes
24 Knowing look
25 All-purpose truck
28 Unusual sightings
29 Hold gently
31 Championship
34 Mountain pass info.
35 — matter
36 Arthur — of tennis
37 Get this suds out
38 Corp. section
39 Taxis
40 Some CDs
43 Outlaw pursuers
45 Hemingway's "— Hour"
49 Hazy portraits
44 It's flown
Bobby —
46 Maid
47 Wild horses
51 Reunion attender (hyph.)
55 One, in combos
56 Mideast country
57 Milk, to vets
58 Move like a butterfly
59 Ask urgently
60 Finish a jacket
61 Medicinal plant
62 Finds the sum
63 Stockbrd
64 9 digit ID

DOWN
1 E-spert
2 Suspect's need
3 Rainbow band
4 Lawrence of Arabian affair
5 Bullfighting units
6 Tennyson heroine
7 Balcarune loungelizer
8 Spring blooms
9 — Schoen!
10 Birds
11 Flu symptom
12 Bridge base
15 Be smug
20 Can't stomach
21 Mill
23 Wagon train team
26 Hazh companions
27 Actor — Parker
29 Out callers
30 Bald head
31 Diplomat's need
32 Writer Nin
33 Chicago
34 Limerick locale
35 Make pretty
37 Less green
41 Front of a boat
43 Corrects
44 Gave a speech
46 Yet to come
48 Pizza cookers
49 High graduate
48 Pizza topping
50 Venue
51 Chert
52 Clay plot
53 Misfortunes
54 Clutch
red-handed 58 Scale notes

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
M DESIGN
Flyer • Newsletter • Poster
• Banner • Business Cards •
And other layout platforms
Phone: 413-545-3647 Fax: 413-545-3699
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish & Chips
- Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)
- Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Parmesan
- Salmon Miso
- Tofu Fajita (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 30

SATURDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 27

SUNDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 16

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Scott Eldridge II
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Oliver Chong, Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't worry about watching your back; you're on fire today!

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You have wronged a good friend. Don't let tiny things ruin a tight friendship.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't make funny faces at people.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Eat as many candy bars as you like, especially in front of Libras.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Take a nap after your first class. The sleep will do you good.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't be a grump.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Today you will find something you have been missing for a long time.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Make sure you don't have anything stuck in your teeth.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stay away from candy bars!

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Keep your head up; don't let the little things bog you down.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The only risks in life you should regret are the ones you didn't take.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
What goes around comes around.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Happy Birthday, Laura Amero!!!!

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus Fundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Stylin' Spaces! Sugarloaf Estates Modern 2 Bedroom Apartment homes! Get a sweet deal when you move in: FREE Dell Laptop Computer or 1/2 off 1st month's rent & 1/2 off security deposit! Open Saturdays. Move in TODAY! Telephone: (413)665-3856 www.sugarloaf_estates@aspensquare.com

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Fast! One Owner Car 5Speed Ford Probe SE 1996 Well cared for Must Sell $1495.00 413-687-7510

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Ciera, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

Express Warehouse Sale Temporary help needed. Massive inventory blow-out sale to be held February 23rd-26th in the Student Union Ballroom. Women's and Men's first quality EXPRESS CLOTHING at savings up to 90% off mall store retail. We need men and women to help with all aspects of the sale including receiving truck, setup, marketing, and sales. Contact Kathleensprag@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer nanny position caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall full-time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272 www.aroundcampus.com

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

EMPLOYMENT

Entry level food testers open schedule up to $80 per assignment email address required Call 1-888-327-4842 department number call e-344

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

FOR RENT

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 BDRM House on Main St. Bus Line Heat Include. 1800/Mo. Call Aaron 413-256-8747

SERVICES

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional And Customized Offering to marketing your skills. Affordable prices, Timely Service By Email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida! Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com for more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$ Elpnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airline What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800 426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800 234-7007 www.endless summertours.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED. Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32 For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781 769-6900 or visit www.robertmichelsen.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Men's hockey to face BU

UMass takes on streaky Terriers

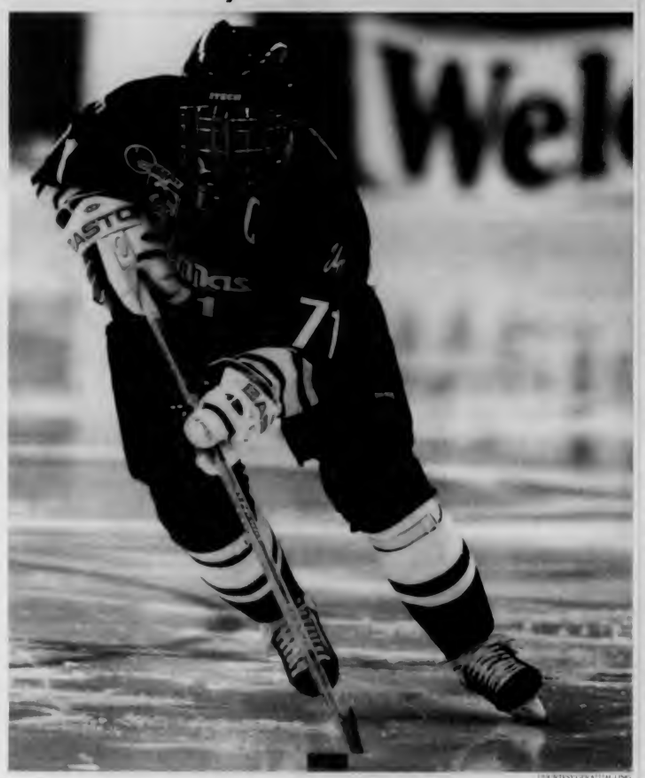
By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It has been a week of introspection for the Massachusetts hockey team.

After surrendering two games to No. 1 Boston College by scores of 5-2 and 6-1 last weekend, the No. 14 Minutemen (16-8-5, 12-6-2 Hockey East) have spent much of the past few days looking at tape and practicing some of the game situations they saw during their home-and-home series with the Eagles.

They'll get a shot at redemption tonight, when they open up a home-and-home set with Boston University (8-14-6, 4-12-2 Hockey East) at Walter Brown Arena in Boston. Tomorrow night, they will welcome the Terriers to the Mullins Center for the final regular-season matchup between the two teams.

The Terriers are mired in eighth place in Hockey East, and are fighting for their playoff lives. Last-place Northeastern, who faces Merrimack tonight and New Hampshire on Sunday, is only a point behind.



For the first time in possibly forever, the Minutemen are favored heading into a game against BU, but they might not think so.

"I didn't know we were the favorite, to tell you the truth," junior forward Greg Mauldin said. "Standings-wise, I guess we are, but it's a tough team, a team you wouldn't want to see in the playoffs. After playing BC at the FleetCenter in the Beanpot, they're obviously a good team. Standings don't mean a thing, it's just how we'll be seeded in the playoffs."

UMass has some unattended business as well. The Minutemen are in search of home-ice advantage in the Hockey East playoffs, the first time the program would host a playoff game since joining the conference in 1994. They could use some help from Maine, who hosts fifth-place Providence this weekend. The Friars have 17 points to the Minutemen's 26, with five games left on their conference slate. UMass has four Hockey East games remaining.

As for the task at hand, they'll face a Terrier team that's been on the ropes for much of the season. Jack Parker's crew

See HOCKEY on page 6

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Senior Thomas Pock leads the UMass hockey team in points this season with 33. The Minutemen will battle Boston University in a home-and-home series beginning tonight in Boston.

St. Bonnies suspended

By John Wawrow
Associated Press

OLEAN, N.Y. (AP) — St. Bonaventure's men's basketball team was put on three years' probation Thursday and barred from the 2004 NCAA postseason for last year's player eligibility scandal.

Citing "a lack of institutional control," the NCAA pinned most of the blame on former St. Bonaventure president Robert Wickenheiser for ignoring athletic officials and approving junior forward Jamil Terrell's transfer. Terrell was ruled ineligible last February for violating junior college transfer guidelines, a decision that led to the abrupt end of the Bonnies' season.

"The culpability ran to the ultimate decision-maker, which was the former president," said Thomas Yeager, chairman of the NCAA's committee on infractions, who issued his findings in a telephone conference call. "This is probably the most involved we've seen a president in a long time. If the president simply said, 'No,' we wouldn't be here today."

Wickenheiser, who had taken full responsibility for allowing Terrell's transfer, resigned last March at the university trustees' request.

Wickenheiser did not immediately respond to a call to his home.

As part of its findings, the NCAA also cut two of the team's scholarships for 2004 and one for 2005. In addition, recruiting visits by coaches and players were reduced.

The three-year probation period is retroactive to last July 15, when St. Bonaventure submitted its report to the NCAA.

The postseason ban is limited only to the Bonnies competing in the NCAA or NIT tournament this year. The Atlantic 10 Conference must decide whether to allow the Bonnies to participate in its tournament at Dayton, Ohio next month.

A-10 commissioner Linda Bruno said she will conduct a conference call with member school officials to discuss the Bonnies' status.

Last year, in response to Terrell's ineligibility, the A-10 barred St. Bonaventure from its tournament, which led to the players' decision to boycott their final two games.

This season, St. Bonaventure is 6-16 under first-year coach Anthony

See BONNIES on page 6

UMass Weekend Schedule

Friday, Feb. 20

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Ski	at Middlebury	9:00 a.m.
Women's Ski	at Middlebury	9:00 p.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	at BU	7:00 p.m.
Women's Tennis	vs. Temple	7:30 p.m.
Men's Swimming	at Buffalo, NY	All Day
Women's Swimming	at Buffalo, NY	All Day

Saturday, Feb. 21

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Basketball	at Fordham	1:00 p.m.
Men's Ski	at Middlebury	9:00 a.m.
Women's Ski	at Middlebury	9:00 a.m.
Women's Track	at Kingston, RI	9:30 a.m.
Men's Track	at Kingston, RI	2:15 p.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	vs. BU	7:00 p.m.
Men's Swimming	at Buffalo, NY	All Day
Women's Swimming	at Buffalo, NY	All Day

Sunday, Feb. 22

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Basketball	at Richmond	2:00 p.m.
Women's Ski	at Waterville Valley	9:00 a.m.
Men's Ski	at Waterville Valley	9:00 p.m.
Women's Tennis	at Brown	12:00 p.m.

Minutewomen hit road

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Tamara Tatham scored 14 points in her last game. The Minutewomen take on St. Bonaventure and Richmond this weekend.

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

In its last road trip of the season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team is looking to come home with some momentum.

On tap for the Minutewomen are conference rivals St. Bonaventure and Richmond. St. Bonaventure beat UMass in their last meeting on Jan. 18, at the Mullins Center 70-58.

The Minutewomen have yet to play Richmond this season.

St. Bonaventure has been struggling recently, due to the loss of their leading scorer and point guard, Stef Collins. Collins broke her ankle in the first quarter against Rhode Island on Feb. 8.

Collins paced the Bonnies in their victory over the Minutewomen, scoring 20 points on the night going 6-of-7 from the field.

St. Bonnaventure suffered another big loss Thursday night with the suspension of Tory Vyborny, Shannon Bodamer and Tamica Barnett. Vyborny is third on the team in scoring with 7.7 points per game.

The Bonnies have lost their last two games, including a 68-36 dismantling at the hands of Temple, who is currently in first place in the Atlantic 10 West.

"Temple played them without her and they came here and played us really tough, they were really emotional, and they came in without a win," UMass head coach Marnie Dacko said, "they are going to be very physical, they have a good inside-outside game and they are going to pressure us into making mistakes."

If the Minutewomen pull off the victory they will move ahead of the Bonnies and out of last place in the conference. UMass won't try to attack the point with its point guard duo of Monique Govan and Cleo Foster because neither player is known for their offensive ability.

With this, the Minutewomen will need to contain Lyndsey Maurer and who is averaging 8.3 points per contest.

"She's just one of them, I think that we're going to have to keep our same look because Cleo and Mo aren't great scorers, so we're going to play them the same as we play everyone, to win," Dacko said.

Richmond has been one of the better teams in the conference this season and is vying for a top spot in the upcoming A-10 tournament. The Lady Spiders are currently on a two-game winning streak and have a 9-1 record in the confines of the Robins Center.

Leading the way for Richmond has been Kate Flavin who is scoring 18.7 points per game. Flavin is also leading the A-10 in rebounds per game with 9.4 per contest. Assisting Flavin has been the all-around play of sophomore guard Saona Chapman, who is averaging 13.6 points, 5.3 assists, and 4.8 rebounds per game.

UMass assistant coach Mary Ciuk has been preparing for the fast paced Richmond offense, which has put on a shooting clinic all season. The Lady Spiders have averaged a conference best .465 shooting percentage inside the arch this season.

"Richmond is a smart team, they run it out and several of their players are shooting over 40 percent this year," Ciuk said, "they are tough in that regard, because they are smart, they push the ball if they don't have anything they stop and pop it out."

One weakness for Richmond has been its play in the paint. Aside from Flavin, the Lady Spiders haven't had much of a post presence this season. Freshman forward Alison Mitchell is the only other player on the squad with significant size, standing at 6-foot 3, but has yet to start a game for Richmond this season.

Ciuk hopes that the athletic trio of Joyce Massey, Edris Bailey, and Tamara Tatham will be able to attack the post for the Minutewomen. In UMass's 52-40 loss against St. Josephs, the trio scored all but four of its team's points.

"They don't have a post player and I would hope to think that they would have trouble with us playing with Edris and Tamara because of their size and quickness, I'm optimistic we can attack them inside," Ciuk said, "I think Joyce has been picking up the scoring slack and Edris has been performing the last couple of games, and Tamara came up big in the last game. So hopefully the three of those can work together to get us some points."

The Minutewomen will play at Richmond on Sunday for a 2 p.m. tip-off.

'Against the Ropes' doesn't quite make the 12th round
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Minutemen clinch home ice, salvage 2-2 tie with BU
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 87

UMass students help out in Springfield

By Megan Daley
Collegian Correspondent

SPRINGFIELD — Ten University of Massachusetts students traveled on Saturday to Loaves and Fishes, a Springfield soup kitchen to help prepare and serve food for the less fortunate.

The Webster House Council organized the trip to encourage community service, said Jen Kirmes, the trip's coordinator and secretary of the House Council.

"I was very excited to be planning an event like this because college students don't usually get an opportunity like this," Kirmes said. "It was also an opportunity for Webster students to get to know one another."

Jon Galanis, president of the House Council, also helped plan and attended the trip.

The soup kitchen is located at Old First Church on Courtyard Square. It is open everyday and is staffed by church and outside volunteers. The kitchen serves food donated by local food providers.

About 75 people came to the church in search of a meal. As soon as the student volunteers arrived at the church, they were set to work, mixing large bowls of pasta over the stove, cutting up desserts and setting up the trays and plates. Before the meal, one of the veteran volunteers led the needy in prayer. The students served pasta, bread, salad and dessert.

One veteran volunteer told students that the people who come to Loaves and Fishes usually just get pasta for their main meal. In Saturday's pasta there was meat, and several people came with their empty plates requesting "just a few more meatballs if there's enough." Toward the end of the meal, one man came forward with a plastic bag asking if he could bring some of the pasta home.

Some students were whistled at as they came into the kitchen, said Katie May, but most of the student volunteers said the people they served were very polite.

"They seemed genuinely grateful," said student Yaicha Peters, a sophomore animal science major.

The students agreed that the trip was a wonderful experience.

"Thank you, family," said one man to student Jocelyn Scheintaub, a sophomore chemistry and English major, as she passed him a full plate of food.

"I thought that was great," said Scheintaub. "We should do this again some time.

Other students agreed.

UMass students Tom Stacks and Yaicha Peters stir pasta at Loaves and Fishes, a Springfield soup kitchen, late Saturday morning.

"Now that we know where we're going, we could definitely come back here again. It was fun," said Mike O'Malley.

Kirmes said that because other students were also interested in traveling to the soup kitchen, a second trip is being planned.

Folbre to speak on benefits of education

Today at 4 p.m., Nancy Folbre, chair of the economics department, will give a lecture titled, "Our Children, Our Students, Ourselves: Public Education and the Production of Human Capabilities."

The lecture is the third of this year's Distinguished Faculty Lecture Series and will take place in the Massachusetts Room of the Mullins Center.

Primarily, Folbre's lecture will focus on the costs and benefits incurred in parenthood with education as a key point. While Folbre will present the monetary denominations through a balance sheet, she also admits that some of the benefits and costs gleaned from raising a child are nearly impossible to quantify. Folbre will emphasize the fact that children are essentially human capital, and that educating them is to the advantage of society as a whole. Consequently, when a parent puts its child through college, the result is not only a college graduate but a skilled worker in the workforce. By stressing the concept of students as human capital, Folbre hopes to garner more public support in the effort to educate America's children.

Besides being a lecturer for the University's Distinguished Faculty Series, Folbre is involved in many prestigious undertakings. She is the author of several books, such as "Who Pays for Kids? Gender and the Structures of Constraint," and more recently, "The Invisible Heart: Economics and Family Values." As an employee of the Center for Popular Economics she has also co-authored three books. Currently, she is in the progress of writing a book, titled "Our Children, Ourselves: The Production of Human Capabilities." After the lecture, Folbre will be receiving a Chancellor's Medal, given to individuals who have provided commendable service to the University.

— Sara Clark

SGA nominations begin

By Melissa Blankstein
Collegian Correspondent

Student government nominations for president, student trustee and area government open today at noon. They will close Monday, March 8 at noon.

Four positions are open to students in the area government for each campus residential area and the commuter area: governor, lieutenant governor, secretary and treasurer. While these positions and the office of President are eligible only to undergraduates, any fee-paying graduate student may run for student trustee as well.

Official job descriptions are available at the SGA website.

"Area Government is one of the most fun things at UMass that I have ever been involved in," said Steve Hoeschele, student government chancellor of elections. "It offers two great chances – a chance for service to the community, and a chance for crazy programming. I like Southwest Week and Bowl Weekend."

Hoeschele hopes to see at least four people each running for the president and trustee position. As for area government, it depends on the activeness of the living area, Hoeschele said. He hopes to see every seat contested.

Interested candidates for area government must obtain 100 nomination signatures from residents of their area. Those interested in the position of president or trustee must obtain 250 signatures from fee-paying undergraduates.

Students may pick up nomination forms at the SGA office in room 422 of the Student Union during normal business hours.

Also, any student may petition for a referendum question to be placed on the spring ballot. This needs 900 undergraduate signatures. Petition forms for are also available in the SGA office.

Elections will be held March 24 and 25 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. each day. Ballot locations will be in the dining commons and the Campus Center.

Currently, Hoeschele has ten elections commissioners to assist him run with the elections. There is one open commissioner position.

Rebels seize Cap-Haitien; little resistance

By Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

CAP-HAITIEN, Haiti (AP) — Rebels captured Haiti's second-largest city with little resistance yesterday, claiming Cap-Haitien as their biggest prize in a two-week uprising that has driven government forces from half the country.

The fighters fired celebratory rounds as people looted and torched the police station and other buildings. A pall of black smoke hung over the city of 500,000.

Flush with victory after the takeover of Cap-Haitien, rebel leader Guy Philippe said he was setting his sights on the capital, Port-au-Prince.

"I think that in less than 15 days we will control all of Haiti," Philippe said in an interview with two foreign reporters in a Cap-Haitien hotel room as he swigged from a bottle of Prestige beer.

As Philippe spoke, his fighters, clad in camouflage uniforms and black flak jackets, sat by the hotel pool in lounge chairs, drinking beer and eating dishes of goat, chicken, rice and beans. President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, wildly popular when he became Haiti's first freely elected leader in 1990, has lost support since flawed legislative elections in 2000 that led international donors to freeze millions of dollars in aid.

Opponents accuse him of breaking promises to help the poor, allowing corruption fueled by drug-trafficking and mastermind attacks on opponents by armed gangs — charges the president denies.

The rebels say they have no political agenda beyond ousting Aristide, but the man who started the rebellion, Gonaives gang leader Buteur Metayer, on Thursday declared himself the president of liberated Haiti. The rebels have made no effort to install any kind of control, beyond halting a near-riot as people rushed to get food aid in Gonaives on Thursday.

In taking Cap-Haitien yesterday, rebels said their force of about 200 fighters only met resistance at the city's airport, where Philippe said eight militant civilians loyal to Aristide were killed in a gunbattle.

In addition, four bodies were

See HAITI on page 3

192 killed, dozens wounded in attack on Uganda refugee camp

By Geoffrey Muleme
Associated Press

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Scores of rebels armed with assault rifles, mortars and rocket-propelled grenades attacked a refugee camp in northern Uganda and torched huts, killing 192 people and wounding dozens more, a local legislator said yesterday.

Saturday evening's attack on Barloonyo camp in Lira district was one of the worst in recent years by the Lord's Resistance Army, a shadowy rebel group that has been fighting the Ugandan government for 17 years.

As the insurgents surrounded the camp from three sides, many people ran to their mud-and-grass huts instead of trying to escape, and were burned to death when the insurgents set fire to the homes, legislator Charles Anjiro said.

"It's a hopeless situation, we went there this morning with the Lira district police commander and physically counted 192 bodies," Anjiro told The Associated Press by telephone from Lira town, 16 miles south of the camp. "The scene is terrible."

Dr. Jane Aceng, head of Lira hospital, said 56 people were taken to the hospital with burns and shrapnel and gunshot wounds.

The camp was home to about 5,000 people displaced by the insurgency, which has forced more than one million people to flee their homes.

The camp was being guarded by members of a local defense force, who were outnumbered and outgunned, Army spokesman Maj. Shaban Bantariza said, confirming the attack.

It was not possible to contact the Lord's Resistance Army, which is led by Joseph Kony, who claims to have spiritual powers. Estimates of the group's size range from hundreds to a few thousand.

After the Sept. 11 attacks in the United States, President Bush put the group, which rarely makes contact with the outside world, on a list of organizations suspected of having links to terrorism.

Ugandans walk around the burnt remains of houses in a displaced persons' camp in Barloonyo camp, northern Uganda yesterday after a rebel attack. The attack killed at least 192 people, according to a local legislator.

Anjiro said the rebels were armed with "sophisticated guns ... and grenades" when they attacked the camp at about 5:30 p.m. from the north, south and east. The western side was used for their exit.

"They bombed the camp ... and overpowered the local defense forces and then started burning the huts," Anjiro said.

The Rev. Sebhat Ayele, who visited the camp yesterday, said from Lira, "I saw one hut with seven family members still burning and three (people) in the next hut were also still burning."

Lira is 155 miles north of Kampala.

An army spokesman in the region, 2nd Lt. Chris Magezi, said government forces were pursuing the rebels.

Magezi, also speaking from Lira, could not confirm the death toll but said the attack appeared to be one of the worst rebel assaults in recent years. In 1995, the rebels rounded up more than 300 villagers in Gulu district and killed them, he said.

The Lord's Resistance Army, which has wreaked havoc across Uganda's north and northeast, rose from the remnants of a revolt by soldiers from the Acholi tribe after President Yoweri Museveni, a southerner, seized power in 1986 after leading a five-year bush war. The Acholi tribe is the dominant one in northern Uganda.

Most of the rebels had given up by 1988, but those who did not coalesced into Lord's Resistance Army.

The group replenishes its ranks with children it kidnaps to serve as fighters, porters or concubines.

The rebels used to launch attacks into northern Uganda from neighboring Sudan, mainly raiding villages and attacking military posts. But in March 2002, the Sudanese government — which Museveni accused of supporting the insurgents — agreed to allow Ugandan troops to cross the border to destroy rebel bases in "Operation Iron Fist."

Rebels seize second-largest Haitian city

HAITI from page 1

seen on the streets, for a known total death toll of 12 after the day's fighting and mayhem in Cap-Haitien. At least one rebel was wounded.

Aristide supporters commandeered a plane from the airport, and witnesses said those who fled on it included seven police officers and former Aristide lawmaker Nawoum Marcellus, whose Radio Africa had been inciting violence against opponents.

"We came in today and we took Cap-Haitien; tomorrow we take Port-au-Prince," the capital, boasted Lucien Estime, a 19-year-old who joined the popular rebellion from the hamlet of Saint Raphael, south of Cap-Haitien.

"Our mission is to liberate Haiti," he said.

The victory leaves more than half of Haiti beyond control of the central government. As that reality set in, panic began spreading Sunday in Port-au-Prince.

Sources close to the government told The Associated Press that several Cabinet ministers were asking friends for places to hide in case the capital is attacked.

On the highway leading into Port-au-Prince from the north, Aristide partisans set up flaming barricades Sunday to block any rebel advance.

In Cap-Haitien, thousands shouting "Aristide fini!" — Aristide is finished — marched along with about 40 rebels in commandeered cars.

"We're free!" people shouted, ripping Aristide posters off walls.

Some looted Marcellus' radio station. Then rebels shot up a building and set it ablaze, to applause from the crowd.

Reporters saw three bodies on the streets, and doctors said a 12-year-old-girl also was shot and killed. At least one rebel was wounded.

Earlier, about 10 armed men stormed the police station and freed about 250 prisoners. The police fled and the prisoners armed themselves, witness Ordil Jean said.

Haiti's ill-equipped and demoralized police force of less than 4,000 has been the main target of the insurgents, who have torched a score of police stations since the rebellion erupted Feb. 5. At least 40 officers are among the 70 people killed since then. In the past week, officers have been deserting their posts with no rebels in sight.

In Cap-Haitien, police had barricaded themselves behind their walled compound, telling reporters they were frightened and had neither the manpower nor the firepower to repel a rebel attack.

As the police headquarters burned on Sunday, teenagers paraded in police hats and body armor. Rebels swigging from beer bottles handed over the keys of cars to residents. People hauled away weapons, typewriters, mattresses, even doors.

Thousands of people then converged on the port in a mad scene of looting. People pushed away cars for which they did not have keys and loaded goods onto hand carts. One man packed sacks of rice onto a looted La-Z-Boy reclining chair and trundled it down the street.

"We're all hungry," said Jean Luc, an 11-year-old who somehow had strapped four 110-pound sacks of rice to a child's bicycle and was precariously trying to pedal it home.

Away from the euphoric scene around the rebels, people bolted their doors and fearfully peered out from balconies onto streets littered with bullet casings.

Rebel commander Jean-Baptiste Joseph, formerly head of an association of ex-soldiers, declared Haiti's disbanded army had liberated Cap-Haitien.

"It's the army that's in charge here. It's the army that will free Haiti."

He confirmed the attackers were led by Philippe, a former police chief who has threatened for days to attack Cap-Haitien.

Also in town was Louis-Jodel Chamblain, co-leader of an army death squad that killed hundreds.

Philippe also was an officer in the army when it ousted Aristide in 1991 and instigated a reign of terror until the United States sent 20,000 troops in 1994 to end the military dictatorship and halt an exodus of boat people to Florida.

The United States, which blames Aristide for the crisis, has made clear it has no appetite for a new military adventure in Haiti.

Instead, diplomats on Saturday presented a U.S.-backed peace plan that was accepted by the beleaguered Aristide but resisted by the opposition coalition Democratic Platform, which says any plan must include Aristide's resignation.

Nader announces run for presidency as an independent

By Sam Hananel
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer advocate Ralph Nader announced yesterday he is running again for president, this time as an independent, and rejected claims that a longshot candidacy would merely siphon enough votes from the Democrats to ensure President Bush's re-election.

But Nader's decision was greeted with a chorus of condemnation from Democrats, longtime friends and former supporters who blame him for Al Gore's loss four years ago. They suggested that Nader would not pull close to the 2.7 percent of the vote he won before without the backing of an established party and some of his past supporters.

Republicans resisted the temptation to gloat as party chairman Ed Gillespie proclaimed that Bush would win a second term no matter who runs. Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour, a former Republican National Committee chairman, said, "It will make less difference than the Democrats fear, but I know they're very nervous about it."

In getting into the White House sweepstakes, Nader declared that Washington has become "corporate occupied territory" and he accused both Democrats and Republicans of being dominated by corporate lobbyists who "care little" about the needs of ordinary Americans.

"It's a question between both parties flunking," Nader said on NBC's "Meet the Press," where he chose to make his announcement. He asserted that "it's time to change the equation and bring millions of American people into the political arena."

Nader said he will mount a national campaign as an independent to highlight issues he claims the major parties are ignoring, including universal health care, rising poverty and environmental concerns.

Democratic National Committee chairman Terry McAuliffe, who personally urged Nader not to run, called the decision "unfortunate."

"You know, he's had a whole distinguished career, fighting for working families, and I would hate to see part of his legacy being that he got us eight years of George Bush," McAuliffe said on CBS's "Face the Nation."

Gov. Bill Richardson of New Mexico minced no words. "It's a total act of ego," he said.

Liberal Vermont Rep. Bernie Sanders, the only independent in the House and a longtime Nader friend, called Nader's decision "counterproductive." Even the Green Party, whose banner Nader carried four years ago, chose to focus on its own priorities.

"Our midterm goal is the creation of a multiparty political system and the participation of a strong Green Party in that system," said Ben Manski, the party's co-chairman.

But Nader dismissed his critics among "the liberal intelligentsia," and called the spoiler moniker "contemptuous."

"It shows how hostage they are to the antiquated electoral system and how unwilling they are to oppose and change it," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. "I would urge them to calm down, start reflecting, be tolerant of democracy and freedom and watch events unfold since we're all on the same page of wanting to retire our supremely elected president, George W. Bush."

Nader predicted he would get more net votes from conservatives and liberal Republicans dissatisfied with Bush's record than from registered Democrats.

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader announces his candidacy for the presidency in the 2004 election yesterday as he is interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press" in Washington.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagutic
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kagona
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Graphics Assistant Charlie Higgins
Asst Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' academic semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life and the Index. Since 1947, the Weekly Collegian in 1974 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1976. Published daily since 1987. The Collegian welcomes comments, questions and complaints. For advertising rates and information, see www.dailycollegian.com/ads/ or call 545-3500.

dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com

NEW ON TUESDAY!
MONA LISA SMILE
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Longmeadow priest permanently suspended

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest has been placed on permanent suspension after allegations of sexual abuse made against him were ruled credible by a review board for the Springfield Diocese.

The Rev. Francis Lavelle, who stepped down as pastor of St. Mary's Church in Longmeadow when abuse allegations first surfaced in 2002, may not function as a priest in any capacity and cannot present himself as a priest, diocese spokesman Mark Dupont said yesterday.

Lavelle, ordained in 1970, was informed of the decision last week, Dupont said. Lavelle has denied the accusations, and his lawyer, C.J. Moriarty II, had no comment on the suspension.

Former Bishop Thomas Dupre, who stepped down on Feb. 10, approved of the board's decision to suspend Lavelle before he retired.

John Stobierski, a lawyer who represents one of the men who complained about Lavelle to the review board, said he was surprised it took so long for the diocese to take action.

"I am curious about how long Bishop Dupre had these recommendations," he said.

Stobierski represents two clients who are suing Lavelle. One, known only as John Doe in court papers, went to the review board, Stobierski said. Doe claims he was abused by Lavelle and another priest who worked at the chancery in Springfield in the 1980s when he was thinking of becoming a priest himself.

Another Stobierski client, Chris Kane, who did not complain to the review board but filed a civil suit, alleges he was abused by Lavelle as a teenager in the 1970s when Lavelle was at Holy Trinity church in Greenfield.

Lavelle was also named in a suit brought by four brothers, all formerly of Greenfield, who claimed they were abused on numerous occasions between 1967 and 1983. Two other priests were also named in that suit. The brothers, whose real names are not being used in court papers, also complained to the review board, Dupont said.

A phone number for Lavelle could not be located. A call to St. Mary's parish in Longmeadow was not immediately returned.

Lavelle will still receive health benefits and a stipend of about $1,000 a month even while suspended, Dupont said. To receive those, he must also agree to a clergy monitoring program.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Presented by: Nobody's Perfect
EXPRESS
From the mall store you love.....
Women's & Men's
Warehouse Clothing Sale
VISA MasterCard
GOT CLOTHES?
Prices starting at
Tops.....$6.99
Jeans.....$12.99
Blazers.....$19.99
Shorts.....$9.99
4 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
1st QUALITY MERCHANDISE
in the
Student Union Ballroom
Feb 23rd thru Feb 26th
Mon, Tues & Wed 10am-8pm Thur 10am-??
WAREHOUSE SALE

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Nader candidacy already controversial

The presidential election took an interesting turn yesterday as consumer advocate Ralph Nader announced his intent to run for U.S. president.

The decision has drawn a backlash of criticism from numerous sources, including many former Nader supporters and key members in the Democratic Party who say a Nader candidacy could help incumbent George W. Bush by siphoning votes away from the Democratic Party.

"You know he's had a whole distinguished career, fighting for working families, and I would hate to see part of his legacy being that he got us eight years of George Bush," said Terry McAuliffe, Democratic National Committee chairman on CBS's "Face the Nation."

The criticism from the Democratic Party is predictable, but the basis for its argument could prove to be a formidable obstacle for Nader's campaign. It remains to be seen if Nader retains liberal voters left with a bitter taste in their mouth after Bush's win in the 2000 election, particularly with many former supporters criticizing the campaign as misguided. Also of note is that the Green Party that supported Nader four years ago has other plans now.

"Our midterm goal is the creation of a multiparty political system and the participation of a strong Green Party in that system," said Ben Manski, the party's co-chairman.

While all of the criticism and concern among liberals will make it more difficult for Nader to duplicate his 2.7 percent showing in the 2000 election, he also cannot be discounted as a factor in 2004, either. It is precisely this reason that has many Democrats up and arms about his candidacy.

As anyone on campus in 2000 remembers, Nader has the ability to captivate many with his anti-corporate establishment message. While The Massachusetts Daily Collegian doubts that alone would ever translate into any major campaign victory, it does mean he could play a factor this time around, too.

Nader's appeal, as it was in 2000, is that he offers voters an alternative to the two mainstream options that exist as he rails on about both parties failing the American people. His concern isn't keeping Bush out of office, it's making points on the U.S. two-party system and electoral process.

While The Collegian does not support Ralph Nader for president, we do feel that he should have every opportunity to run — it's a right he has as an American citizen. His candidacy could make things more difficult for the Democratic Party, but that is an obstacle they will have to overcome if they are going to win in November.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Bridge over troubled waters

Matthew Burke

If marijuana use is bad enough for someone to be deported from this country, then it should also bar you from running for president of this country.

This year we have the privilege to watch John Edwards and John Kerry wind down their campaigns in the democratic process we all cherish so dearly. They are feverishly vying for the Democratic nomination and a chance to dethrone George W. Bush as president. At the same time, a great travesty is taking place in Western Massachusetts. A friend of mine, "David," is losing the privilege of education and happiness that was afforded to him when he moved here five years ago from Scotland (on a student visa with British citizenship).

David is a UMass student and also a great friend. He has graduated from the Stockbridge School and is working diligently toward a four-year degree. For years, he has sought a head start in the world through his education. He is the kindest and most helpful friend I have. Since he has been in this state, and called it home, he has been arrested two times for misdemeanor marijuana possession. The government has recently given him two weeks to vacate the country and terminate his studies here at the University. With his student visa terminated, he must say goodbye to numerous friends, his girlfriend of more than two years, and the life he has created for himself here in Western Massachusetts. Presidential hopefuls Edwards, Dean, and Kerry are on the record saying that they all have used marijuana in the past.

I draw this parallel without saying whether I believe smoking marijuana is wrong or should be illegal. Also, it's not important whether you think that smoking marijuana is acceptable and should subsequently be tolerated. This issue is bigger than the politics and the debate over marijuana. This issue is about common sense.

Art Garfunkel, of Simon and Garfunkel fame, has recently pleaded guilty to the offense. Even Whitney Houston could not escape being charged. She later had the charges dropped but admitted to using the drug to Diane Sawyer. Perhaps the most daunting example is the fact that the son of former Vice President Al Gore was arrested for the same thing in recent weeks, with the outcome still pending. He is attending Harvard University and also has a drunk driving arrest at the hands of military police in Virginia two years ago, which I think we all agree is far worse than marijuana possession.

My friend will be the first to admit he's made errors and that he's not perfect, but his looming deportation is a stirring example of a double standard developing in this country.

Countless professional athletes, musicians, and film stars either fail drug tests, or get arrested while using marijuana. On television it's even deemed acceptable for comedians to joke about using. Who could forget all the people in the country who aren't famous and have been arrested?

I guess the message we want to convey is that if you're former Vice President Gore's son, you shouldn't worry about driving drunk. He got off on that charge, and will probably beat the marijuana rap too, despite a police officer pulling it off of his person after being pulled over while driving with no headlights on. He'll be back at Harvard, I assure you. Will David be able to continue his schooling at UMass?

My friend will be the first to admit he's made errors and that he's not perfect, but his looming deportation is a stirring example of a double standard developing in this country. It involves nationality and class.

It involves heads turning away and slaps on the wrist. Musicians, politicians, film stars, athletes, and a lot of average citizens have faced the same music but not deportation.

David should be allowed to stay in this country, at least until his degree is complete. He's an outstanding human being, something that he demonstrates on a daily basis. Maybe in a perfect world he wouldn't have been caught, or if he had, then it would be quickly swept under a rug and out of sight because his dad is somebody special.

Someday, perhaps, he could go on to fight, and eventually overturn the law restricting people born on foreign soil, but are citizens, from being president. He might be a Democratic hopeful, and in admitting marijuana use, finally be safe in this beautiful country I call home. He must stay because if he goes, then the fairness and integrity of our beautiful nation will most certainly follow. I am angry because diversity is what this school and nation are supposed to be founded on.

David is not going to be president, but if he stays he will definitely positively impact this country. With his flight to Scotland just around the corner, I wonder if it's not too late, whether you believe in marijuana prohibition or not, to send a drunk driving Harvard student in his place. The only difference is privilege and a question of citizenship.

Matthew Burke is a Collegian staff member.

A campaign of trivialities

Jeffrey Napolitano

Observant students will have noticed a set of new flyers on the bulletin boards put up in the last week. The flyers, ranging from benign tourist information to antagonistic propaganda, have been put up by the UMass Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI) in the hopes of promoting a more positive image of Israel. Such a new campaign leads to the obvious question: Why does Israel require a public relations effort?

The reason, left completely unaddressed by every flyer put up by SAFI, is that the state of Israel has engendered a "bad image" largely because of the 35-year occupation of the Palestinian people. Virtually everywhere else in the world, Israel is criticized, correctly, for its brutal treatment of Palestinians and its refusal to comply with international law. A poll of citizens in 15 countries of the European Union a few months ago found 60 percent felt that Israel was the greatest threat to world peace. The countries surrounding it, and even those not, are justifiably terrified of Israel's illegal possession of hundreds of nuclear weapons, and the possibility that it will use them.

Perhaps an opposing campaign could be initiated which would include flyers next to those put up by SAFI. I imagine such a campaign would have a picture of David Ben-Gurion, the first Israeli prime minister, and a quote of what he said in 1938: "Let us not ignore the truth among ourselves ... politically we are the aggressors and they [Palestinian Arabs] defend themselves ... The country is theirs, because they inhabit it, whereas we want to come here and settle down, and in their view we want to take away from them their country." Or perhaps, instead of the first prime minister, one could use a quote from the latest prime minister, Ariel Sharon, when he said in 1998, "The first of these [facts] is that there is no Zionism, colonialization, or Jewish State without the eviction of the Arabs and the expropriation of their lands." There is, unfortunately, no shortage of such frightfully honest comments from numerous other leading Israeli politicians.

No one really gives a damn that Israel helped create MMX technology ten years ago—that's not why the people of the world take issue with Israel.

Or one could put up a flyer every month, listing the casualties and deaths on both sides of the conflict. From Feb. 1 to yesterday's suicide bombing, such a poster would list eight Israeli deaths and 60 wounded (according to the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs). In the same time period, there were between 41 and 44 Palestinian deaths, and around 140 injured (slightly varying figures from the Red Crescent and Al-Jazeera coverage). It would be also be prudent to note on these monthly bulletins that Israeli casualties are caused by singular acts of terrorism by a small group of individuals, whereas Israel inflicts its revenge upon the Palestinian population with one of the most advanced militaries in the world, complete with jet fighters, attack helicopters, and tanks.

Instead of confronting the truth of the matter, SAFI has chosen to ignore the greatest cause of criticism of Israel, and instead tout meaningless facts and provocative claims about Israel. No one really gives a damn that Israel helped create MMX technology ten years ago – that's not why the people of the world take issue with Israel. If North Korea were to try to improve its image by heralding itself as the "leading manufacturer of shower curtains" or the makers of an extended-life laptop battery, people wouldn't even bother laughing. The reason is because North Korea's image can't be improved by such trivialities; the only real way for North Korea to win over the hearts of people is to stop carrying on its injustices and reduce the threat it poses to the world.

And the same goes for Israel.

There is no reasonable, humane counter-argument to those who oppose Israel's ongoing attempts to cleanse the region of the Palestinian people. So perhaps it is understandable that instead of focusing on the undeniable crimes of the state of Israel, all proponents of Israeli occupation are left with are mild claims to fame, like "creators of AOL Instant Messenger."

SAFI should not waste time and energy on such banal aspects of Israel in order to enhance its image. Instead, it should become more interested in the real, compelling reasons why Israel has such a negative image and focus on ways of truly addressing those issues.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

A bloodwork revolution

Allison Edles

A new chemical solution created by Northfield Laboratories in Evanston, Ill. called PolyHeme has been the center of many emergency medical studies recently. The studies are being conducted all over the United States and involve trauma patients experiencing severe blood loss. The solution itself is revolutionary in the sense that it will provide an oxygenated blood-like substance to a patient that may be in hemorrhagic shock. Hemorrhagic shock is when the body experiences massive blood loss which may also include dangerously low blood pressure, lack of oxygen to internal organs compromising their ability to function correctly, and possible death.

The idea behind PolyHeme is that it can be administered to patients in place of blood or a saline solution and will prolong the life of the patient. PolyHeme is extremely controversial because those patients that participate in the study and are given the solution may not know they were part of the study until after the solution has been administered due to lack of consciousness or medical stability. PolyHeme is a remarkable new step in the field of emergency medicine and conducting a study where the patient is unable to give their consent in a medical emergency is regrettable but necessary, both for the patient and for medical science.

PolyHeme can infuse up to two times a person's entire blood volume and carries just as much oxygen as blood, without causing any organ damage.

Dr. David Hoyt, M.D., Professor of Surgery at the University of California, San Diego (UCSD) Health Sciences and Director of the UCSD Healthcare Trauma Unit is one of the many individuals conducting a survey on the new chemical solution. According to the information mentioned in Dr. Hoyt's published project proposal, the research in this form is necessary for many reasons. First, the current available treatments are unsatisfactory, resulting in trauma as the leading cause of death among Americans under the age of 45. Second, the participation in the study could provide the patient with direct benefits through survival with reasonable risks. However, the needed research could not be conducted without an exemption of federal informed consent regulations.

PolyHeme successfully helps the patient because it is an oxygen-carrying blood substitute made directly from existing human blood. The solution is ready to use without any sort of cross-matching, enabling it to be compatible with all blood types. In addition, it has a longer shelf life than human blood by over 12 months and is purified to prevent viral infections. PolyHeme can infuse up to two times a person's entire blood volume and carries just as much oxygen as blood without causing any organ damage.

Because of the nature and severity of many of the patients' injuries that would be eligible to participate in the research survey, the patients may not be able to give their consent. As is such, according to federal regulations, exemption from informed consent is allowable in emergency situations and research can be carried out without the immediate consent of the patient if consent is not possible due to the nature and extent of the patient's injuries. Further specified information regarding exemption from informed consent is found in 21 Code of Federal Regulations 50.24.

This new chemical solution can only improve the current emergency medical treatments available to the public. The present procedures for dealing with severe trauma injuries performed by emergency medical personnel involve giving the patient a saline solution (salt water) intravenously to help keep the veins open and ready to receive any injections that may be administered. This is usually performed in the back of an ambulance en route to the hospital. Once the patient has reached the hospital, they are given blood after cross-matching and blood typing have been performed. Being able to administer PolyHeme on scene would provide much-needed oxygen to the body faster after it was depleted than current treatments are able to, thus increasing the survival rate of the patient.

In concurrence with federal regulations, one such survey as this is only allowed to be conducted once there has been sufficient consultation with community leaders to judge whether the research is consistent with the ethical views and values of those people that would be involved. Consequently, the neighborhood where the research is being conducted is informed prior to its participation.

PolyHeme is a significant step in medical science and enables the victims of severe trauma injuries to receive more oxygen faster to the places in the body that need it the most. It is hardly questionable whether or not someone, if given the choice ahead of time, would refuse such treatment if they knew the positive effects, including an increase in survival rate, of PolyHeme. In the medical field, the first hour after an accident occurs is known as the "golden hour," because that is the window of opportunity where emergency medical efforts will be most effective in saving a patient. By allowing research to be conducted using PolyHeme to further gather information about its effectiveness, medical science is saving more lives than current treatments allow.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass V-Day production a real liberating pleasure

By Kate Walsh
Collegian Staff

The letter V isn't just for Valentine anymore.

For the past six years, during the month of February, Eve Ensler's V-Day organization, along with thousands of college students and volunteers, has worked to transform the letter V. It's coming to stand for something more, something huge. It stands for Victory. It stands for Vagina.

The Vagina Monologues
FAC
UMass
Feb. 19 & 20

This past Thursday and Friday, a group of about twenty UMass females took part in that enormous movement with their performance of "The Vagina Monologues" at the UMass Fine Arts Center.

Ensler wrote her award-winning play based on her interviews with more than 200 women about their bodies, sexuality, and stories of violence and abuse. The very serious topics of rape, battery, and female genital mutilation, and the wittier topics of what vaginas would wear, and what vaginas would say if they could speak, were touched upon.

It gave vaginas a voice. It gave the women onstage performing a voice. It gave a voice to the audience members and women everywhere. It gave them a chance to speak up and to speak out about things that are otherwise considered taboo by society.

"I think that female sexuality is something that is so rarely discussed compared to male sexuality," said sophomore Jessi Duston, a performer in the monologues. "Some of the topics are fun and also educational and I think they're things that are important to talk openly about."

Using productions of "The Vagina Monologues" as a fundraising tool, Ensler's V-Day campaign, a global movement to stop violence against women and girls, has been able to raise more than $20 million to support anti-violence programs worldwide since its creation in 1998.

UMass is one of 630 colleges from around the world that was given the opportunity this year to produce, direct, and act in a performance of "The Vagina Monologues" while simultaneously raising funds for local charities and anti-violence groups.

Local benefits this year include The Everywomen's Center, Planned Parenthood of Western Massachusetts and the Amherst Survival Center. In addition to these local charities, 10% of the profits that UMass receives will go to the V-Day organization, which each year chooses a spotlight charity. This year's "V-spot" is the city of Juarez, Mexico, where over 300 women have been declared missing or dead in the last decade.

"It's for an amazing cause," said junior performer Meghan Fraser. "I don't have a lot of time to go around and help organizations, but I can take two weeks and partake in this show, and hopefully bring in a large audience and the proceeds go to a good cause."

On Thursday night, the concert hall stage was simple, void of any elaborate backdrop or scenery: just a few white banners shaded by shining lights of varied pink and red hues were visible. The plainness worked; it directed the focus to the women performing. Each of the monologues touched on different aspects of women, their sexuality, and themselves. Some were comical, some were serious, and some were both. Any way you look at it, The Fine Arts Center this weekend was a safe place for all women and girls, a small piece of the world where women were given the opportunity to talk about vaginas, to articulate their angers, their fears, their hopes, and their secrets. It was a place where it was acceptable to express themselves as women.

"'The Vagina Monologues' isn't just about women getting on stage and ranting about men and ranting about how much it sucks to be a woman and why we're sexually repressed," said junior co-director Lauren D'Arminio. "It's about being proud of being a woman; it's about raising money for women who are never given the opportunity because of their class or their race.

"It's about giving women a reason to be proud of who they are."

From Juliana Leal's sampling of the many different orgasm moans and groans, facial expressions, and body movements as "The Woman Who Loved To Make Vaginas Happy," and Ashleigh Reisner's frustration with wads of cotton (tampons) and rain scented douches in "My Angry Vagina," to the more serious topics of rape and battery presented by Midori Harris in "My Vagina Was My Village," and "The Memory Of Her Face," (Maureen Fleming and Heather Lee Crocker) each monologue was poetic and performed beautifully. They spoke of fears and the unknown. They talked about sexual and personal exploration and of female celebration.

"The elements of the vagina are always there, but it goes way beyond that," said Leal. "It talks about women and all sides, good and bad."

In between the separate monologues and throughout the show, bits of information and statistics were presented to the audience. Some were uplift-

See V-DAY on page 6

New boxing film a bit weak

"Against the Ropes" distortes the true story with sex appeal

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

"Against the Ropes" has been in a fixed state of pre-release for long over a year now. It was first scheduled to open in theaters in April 2003, then it was bumped back to October, and it finally came out this past weekend. There is mixed hearsay as to why this happened. It seems most probable that the producers were afraid to let the cat out of the bag and have the cat scratch them in the face. In other words, this movie is pretty poor and perhaps the hope was that the longer it was marketed before distribution, the larger the initial curious crowds would be, despite its lack of theater staying power.

Hollywood moguls like to make a quick buck up front, and then move on. If the film reaches that "no show" state, where it fails to continue bringing an audience, the sooner it disappears to DVD and VHS-land. Unfortunately "Against the Ropes" seemed to have reached this state long before the theater reels were spliced. Perhaps the intended audience for this film got sick of waiting and when it was finally time for the show, unmet high expectations were the source of unfriendly reviews and criticism.

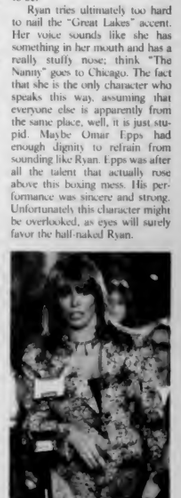
'Against the Ropes'
Directed by Charles Dutton
Starring Meg Ryan Omar Epps
Paramount Pictures
Rated PG-13
116 mins
Grade C-

Nonetheless, "Ropes" isn't pulling in the high-roller numbers that Meg Ryan films can usually bank on. It ranked last among the four national releases in theaters this weekend. Films like "Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen," "Welcome to Mooseport," and "Eurotrip" averaged $2.5 million. "Against the Ropes" grossed a measly $1.4 million. It is almost unfathomable that TV personality Ray Romano should win the bulk of the middle-aged audience over heavyweight Meg Ryan. But it happened and with good reason.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT

Meg Ryan plays a distorted verson of Jackie Kallan.

"Ropes" is loosely based on the life story of Detroit native Jackie Kallan. According to jackiekallan.com, in real life Kallan was an entertainment journalist who developed her own public relations firm in the 1970s to represent professional athletes. At this time she was the representative of Thomas "Hitman" Hearns. In 1988, she started managing her own fighters and by the early 90s she had managed four world champs, was the commissioner of female boxing and had her first book "Hit Me With Your Best Shot" in publication. This was an unprecedented rise to the top for a female in the boxing industry. She was the first female to infiltrate this male-based world.



The movie, as movies based on real life often do, took major liberties in rewriting Kallan's story for the silver screen. Meg Ryan's version of Jackie Kallan was a girl who grew up ringside at her father's gym in Detroit. Her uncle Ray Ray was an up and coming middle weight champ and influenced her decision to follow her dreams and work as close to the excitement of the ring as possible. Kallan buys her first fighter, the crack head Devon, for a dollar from her archenemy, the sexist "made man" Larocca (Tony Shalhoub).

This cheap deal is testimony that the successful men in the business don't think she has a shot at success. It also waters down the impact that this film could have had on independent young women. Instead of putting a spin on some of the real issues a woman like Kallan must have faced in the business, real women won't feel any closer to figuring out how to make it in the male-dominated world. It is not typical that one can buy a fighter for a buck.

Kallan discovers talent in streetfighter/drug dealer Luther Shaw (Omar Epps) who beats up Devon in a rather humorous, though stereotypical scene, and convinces him to be her fighter. The bar is then set for social commentary, including a female living in a man's world, a poor black man entering the world of the wealthy white moguls, a white woman being insensitive to the black man's back story, etc. A lot of this commentary is warranted, but the majority of it is heavy-handed fluff.

Ryan parades through the screen wearing lingerie/stripper clothes. In this day and age it would be nice if a story about an independent woman rising to the top wasn't marred by the subliminal implication that she was as successful as her ho; body allowed her to be.

Ryan tries ultimately too hard to nail the "Great Lakes" accent. Her voice sounds like she has something in her mouth and has a really stuffy nose; think "The Nanny" goes to Chicago. The fact that she is the only character who speaks this way, assuming that everyone else is apparently from the same place, well, it is just stupid. Maybe Omar Epps had enough dignity to refrain from sounding like Ryan. Epps was after all the talent that actually rose above this boxing mess. His performance was sincere and strong. Unfortunately this character might be overlooked, as eyes will surely favor the half-naked Ryan.

COURTESY SHOWTIME

Jackie Kallan was a pioneer for women in the field of boxing.

Luther Shaw (Omar Epps) is the first succuessful boxer managed by Jackie Kallan (Meg Ryan) in this adaptation based on Kallan's life as a female boxing pioneer.

Not everybody loves Raymond in 'Mooseport'

COURTESY 20TH CENTURY FOX

"Everybody Loves Raymond" star, Ray Romano, makes his filmic debut as a handy-man from a small town who ends up running for mayor against a former United States President (Gene Hackman).

By Ryan Aubert
Collegian Staff

In a small town in Maine, a local plumber ends up running for mayor against the former president of the United States. That's the short and simple version of "Welcome to Mooseport." Mooseport is a place where anything can happen (such as an old man running around naked), but everything turns out to be dull and induces very few laughs.

'Welcome to Mooseport'
Directed by Donald Petrie
Starring Gene Hackman Ray Romano
20th Century Fox
Rated PG-13
115 mins
Grade C-

Ray Romano stars as simpleton Handy Harrison. Handy is handy to all of the residents of Mooseport, except his girlfriend (Maura Tierney) of six years. So, what is a girl to do? Why not go out with the president (Gene Hackman) and make your ex-boyfriend jealous? Yes, this is one of the many ridiculous storylines of the movie. Many movies can pull off absurdity and make the audience roar with laughter. However with Mooseport, the audience develops a "who cares?" kind of attitude. The movie comes off as cheesy, and acts like a PG movie aimed for the young'uns. This movie isn't a romantic comedy, although the romantic storyline plays a huge part of the movie. Nor is this movie a comedy, since laughs are few and far between. The movie just sort of sits there, waiting to go to home video.

On screen, Romano seems like he is trying way too hard to act. His character at times appears so implausible that it seems like a bad audition tape. Romano only manages one or two chuckles throughout the movie, which is sad because he is the main character.

Hackman as the ex-president isn't much better, either. Hackman seems to have the potential to pull off the president in another movie, but not this one. It is so far fetched that the president would run for mayor in a small town anyway that anything that comes out of Hackman's mouth seems silly.

The redeeming factor of the movie and that, which makes the film tolerable, is the hilarious supporting characters. This is very similar to the comedic ailment of his sitcom, "Everybody Loves Raymond," where every character is hilariously funny, except for Romano.

Romano's girlfriend Sally is convincingly played by Tierney, who finds that subtle balance between quirkiness and cute. Perhaps if Romano's character were played by another

See MOOSEPORT on page 6

the source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

ThursdayFebruary26

DANCE

For the enjoyment of those who love alternative forms of entertainment, the 15-strong all-male dancers of Les Ballets Trockadero de Monte Carlo have brought a new spin to classical ballet, with works such as Swan Lake, The Dying Swan and Paquita, parodied and performed like no other company. Their 28-year history of interpreting classical roles has no rival on the international stage. With dazzling technique and outrageous humor, the "Trocks" appeal to anyone who has ever been confused about the plot of Swan Lake. All the glory of the traditional world of dance is here; the glamour of the costumes and the nostalgia for the past is too, but it's sent up in hilarious style.

The event will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center concert hall. Tickets are on sale through the FAC box office and are $7-$35.

MUSIC

Joe Fonda and "From the Source" will perform at the Bezanson Recital Hall starting at 8 p.m. Fonda's "From the Source" is an interdisciplinary music-performance sextet that blurs the boundaries between music, dance and healing by engaging the unusual vocal apparitions of body healer Vicki Dodd with the percussive cadence of a tap dancer (Brenda Bufalino). Also featuring Herb Roberson, trumpet, Gebhard Ullmann, reeds, Rudy Walker, drums and Fonda, bass.

FridayFebruary27

PERFORMANCE

The Asian Arts & Culture Program presents, "The Silken Phoenix" at the Bowker Auditorium. "The Silken Phoenix" is a chamber music theater work for actress and trio (cello, piano, and percussion). It celebrates the life, times, and works of three of Asia's greatest women poets: Ho Xuan Huong of Vietnam, Izumi Shikibu of Japan, and Li Qingzhao of China. The text, written by Shanghai native Wang Ping, contradicts the stereotype of passive demure Asian womanhood. This performance uses comedy, narrative drama, and evocative poetry to wed a wide-ranging collection of chamber and solo music (by various composers: Kui Dong, Melissa Hui, P.Q. Phan, Chinary Ung, Somei Satoh, Keiko Abe, Bun-Ching Lam, Lei Liang, Tan Dun and Chou-Wen-Chung).

The show will begin at 8 p.m. and tickets are on sale through the Bowker box office for $7-$15.

MUSIC

Paul Brady, an Irish singer/songwriter and multi-instrumentalist, swings through Northampton to play one show at the Iron Horse Music Hall. Tickets are $20 in advance and $23 at the door. The show begins at 7 p.m.

SundayFebruary29

MUSIC

The Amherst Brewing Company presents jazz artist Jon Weeks. Patrons of the ABC will be treated to Weeks' jazz styling free of charge. The performance will begin at 9 p.m.

PERFORMANCE

The Northampton Arts Council presents annual variety show, entitled "The Really Big Show," starting at 2 p.m. The event will be held at the Academy of Music, Northampton. Admission is $6 in advance; $8 at door. For information call 587-1269.

weekly pinup

REVOLUTIONS AND POETRY

Join in celebration of poet and activist June Jordan. Events will run from Friday thru Saturday starting with a talk by Sonja Sanchez in the Student Union Ballroom at 7:30 p.m. on Friday.

Truth of V-day revealed

V-DAY from page 5

ing, some not, some shocking, and some outrageous. On the uplifting side, we were told that there are more nerves concentrated in the female clitoris than there are spread throughout the entire male penis. On the shocking side, there are still laws in some states where it is perfectly legal to purchase and own a gun, where the sale of sex toys is prohibited. On the downside, the audience heard horrifying statistics on female genital mutilation, rape in Bosnia and Kosovo during wartime, and violence against women of Pakistan.

Thursday's performance was interpreted by the Association Of Sign Language for the deaf and the hearing impaired, and co-director Kai Ravelson contributed by doing her monologue "Hair" entirely in sign language, while it was read aloud by one of the interpreters. Co-director Lauren D'Arminio's monologue, "My Short Skirt," celebrated the expression of female sexuality and rejected male entitlement. She proclaimed that wearing tight clothes or short skirts does not give men the right to gawk, stare, assault, harass, or rape. "Believe it or not," she said, "but my short skirt has nothing to do with you."

Ravelson and D'Arminio certainly had their work cut out for them directing, acting in, and producing "The Vagina Monologues." D'Arminio took part in the monologues when they came to UMass in 2002, and when no one picked it up in 2003, she decided that this year it needed to be brought back to the campus. She signed up on the V-Day website, sent a resume, and was chosen. Ravelson and D'Arminio decided to co-direct, and got some financial help from the Jewish Student Union, who sponsored the event. That process was fairly simple, but the process for putting it all together was not. All casting was done over winter break via email and they only had two full cast rehearsals prior to opening night to make it all come together.

Come together it did. On Saturday afternoon, after two flawless performances, Ravelson and D'Arminio were both exhausted but thrilled.

"The girls loved it. We all bonded as a cast and as a group of women," said D'Arminio. "We all feel proud to be able to stand up for a group we belong to."

"I'm glad I got to know these girls and they got to know each other," said Ravelson. "It was important for everyone to know who was involved in this amazing project, and that's something I'm incredibly grateful for."

Their feelings were echoed by audience members.

"They did an amazing job," said junior Samantha Payette. "You come out of there knowing a lot more, feeling uplifted and empowered."

Vaginas aren't just for women though. They're for men too.

While the audience was primarily female, the faces of men did dot the crowd. Senior Chad Vaughn said he didn't know what to expect prior to seeing the show, but he was pleased.

"I was very impressed," he said. "These are extremely talented women, and it takes a lot of courage to stand up there and talk about what you believe in, and I admire all of them for doing that."

There is no doubt that "The Vagina Monologues" was a success at UMass, and the message and the feelings behind it are two things that students who acted in, and students who witnessed, the performance are going to remember.

"I'm incredibly proud of it," said Ravelson. "It's an experience that I'm going to keep with me long after I leave UMass."

Comedy lacks in laughs

Supporting cast keeps film chuckle-worthy

COURTESY OF THE CENTURY FILM

Gene Hackman (left) in "Welcome to Mooseport."

MOOSEPORT from page 5

actor, Tierney would have shined. That said, she does a good job given the circumstances.

Christine Baranski plays the former first lady, who is a self-centered woman bent on milking the money from her ex-husband. Baranski is perfect for this role, and provides many of the more laughable moments in the film. In one scene where Romano and Hackman are golfing, she triumphantly arrives in a golf cart and with her antics, laughter soon ensues.

Marcia Gay Harden and Fred Savage are presidential aides who also provide much-needed giggles. One scene is especially funny in which Harden and Tierney get wasted after they lose their loves, and they attempt to make an indoor putting green.

In the end though, these supporting characters do not make up for the huge faults that the storyline exudes. Romano is decidedly the worst element though. He is trying to set himself up for a career after his sitcom, but with a movie like this, he may have to settle for stand-up comedy.

Defending Nextel Cup champion Matt Kenseth leads a pack of cars into turn one during the early laps of yesterday's Subway 400 NASCAR Nextel Cup Series race at North Carolina Speedway. Kenseth went on to edge Kasey Kahne for his first victory of the season.

Kenseth takes Subway

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — Take that, NASCAR.

Matt Kenseth shrugged off NASCAR's new points system — partially designed because he won just one race last season en route to the series championship — by nipping rookie Kasey Kahne at the finish line of North Carolina Speedway on Sunday to win the Subway 400, his first victory in nearly a year.

Kenseth led a race-high 259 laps, but had to fight furious charges from Kahne and Jamie McMurray over the final 10 laps before edging Kahne by .010 seconds — the nose of the No. 17 Ford.

It was yet another thrilling finish at what could be the final race at "The Rock." The tiny track has already lost one of its races under NASCAR's realignment plan and poor attendance could ultimately cost it its remaining date.

There were only about 30,000 fans in attendance at a track that seats 60,115, and those who stayed home missed the usually conservative Kenseth use aggressive moves to dominate the middle of the race then have to hang on tightly to win it.

Robby Gordon wrecked with 42 laps to go to bring out the final caution and several cars were already on pit road, including Kenseth. But he inexplicably stayed in front during a confusing exchange of stops that left just nine cars on the lead lap.

Kenseth was listed as the leader on the restart with just 30 laps to go, followed by Kahne, McMurray, Sterling Marlin, Dale Earnhardt Jr., Rusty Wallace, Ryan Newman, Kurt Busch and Ward Burton.

Kenseth opened up a large lead on the restart as he pulled away while everyone behind him had to deal with traffic. But after Kahne and McMurray flopped spots, they set their sights on running down Kenseth.

The three ran nose-to-tail over the final laps, with Kenseth often taking the high line as Kahne tried to sweep below him in the No. 9 Dodge and into the lead. McMurray went even lower, but could never get past either in his Dodge.

It set up a battle between Kenseth and Kahne on the final lap, with Kahne pulling even down the final stretch before getting nosed out at the line.

Kahne, who took over for Bill Elliott this season in the car Elliott drove to victory here last November, finished second in his second Nextel Cup series event.

McMurray, who won the Busch series race on Saturday, finished third right behind them. Marlin, his Chip Ganassi Racing teammate, was fourth.

But it was Kenseth who drove off to Victory Lane, his first trip there since March 2 of last season at Las Vegas. It had to be a sweet feeling for the reigning champion, whose run to the title and personality were considered too boring for the new NASCAR.

Although Kenseth led the point standings for 33 straight weeks last season, that Vegas victory was his only win of the year and created heavy criticism on a points system that rewarded consistency over wins.

Women's tennis soars past Temple

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

The date was April 19, 2003. The place was College Park, Md.

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team was seeded fourth in the Atlantic 10 Women's Tennis Championship at The Tennis Center. Its opponent was Temple University, the only obstacle standing between the Minutewomen and an A-10 Championship. But in the finals, Temple defeated UMass in four singles positions, the lone UMass win from then-freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz.

With the Owls on their schedule early in the spring season, UMass coach Judy Dixon was originally apprehensive about the team playing its rival so early in the season.

But last Friday night all that changed when the Minutewomen took down the defending A-10 Champions 4-3 at the Bay Road Tennis Center in Amherst. The women got off to a jump-start in the doubles matches, sweeping all three to take the first point.

The No. 1 team of Jenny Munroe and Stephanie Price and the No. 2 team of Christine Liehr and Iwanowicz each won by a score of 8-5. Co-captains Susan Hyams and Sasha Edelstein gave the team a final boost with a winning score of 8-1 in the No. 3 doubles position.

However, the singles points didn't come quite as easily, as Price lost her No. 1 singles match, 6-1, 6-3. Iwanowicz won the No. 4 singles match, but with Jana Bartoloni's loss the match was tied at 2-2. Hyams won the No. 6 position to bring to score to 3-2 in favor of the Minutewomen.

When Edelstein fell by a score of 6-4, 6-2, the pressure mounted as the teams entered the final set, tied 3-3. Liehr was defeated in the first set, but rebounded in the second, 6-3. With the entire match hanging on the deciding set, Liehr more than proved her ability to perform under pressure, leaving the court victorious with a 7-5 win.

With its rivals out of the way, the Maroon and White will travel to Providence, R.I. to compete against Brown University Sunday at noon.

Although she's keeping the team's goal of winning the Atlantic 10 championship in mind, Dixon's primary concern now is with keeping the team at full strength.

"The biggest problem with the season is the length," Dixon said, "but if we try our best to stay healthy and uninjured, we have an extremely good chance."

The perfect gift

GARDEN from page 10

Right as the final Frisbee-catching dog scampered off the court I sat back in my seat and waited for the second half to start. Just then I looked up at the Jumbotron and saw a message to me: "Bob McGovern, happy 21st birthday."

I took a double-take, a triple-take, it just couldn't register that my name was up there for all to see. I looked around as if anyone besides my date knew me, but of course no one did. It didn't matter; it was one of the happiest moments of my life.

The rest of the game was filled with angry New York fans booing their team, chanting for Keith Van Horn to come back, and scoffing at Marbury's pathetic percentage from the charity stripe. I was tearing myself up, it wasn't the storybook first game that I wanted, and thought I deserved.

Then it hit me; maybe this is what I deserve. It was the side I had never witnessed before, I couldn't just change the channel or throw the remote control across the room. The new Knicks were blowing it right in front of me, led by a lackluster performance by newly acquired Tim Thomas.

When the game was far enough out of reach, people began to hit the exits and I was getting mad at the mass exodus. I had waited my whole life for this and the group of three tourists in front of me decided to leave with 10 minutes left. And for what, to take a few more pictures of the Empire State Building?

On the drive home, we got stuck in some token New York traffic and I listened to WFAN, where callers were ripping up the Knicks. I sat and listened with images of the debacle fresh in my mind.

My allegiances never faltered and I've always backed the Orange and Blue through thick and thin. Somewhere between New Haven and Hartford everything hit me, and I realized that staying true to my team made the experience that much more amazing.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian columnist.

Most nurses spend their entire careers in the same hospital. In the United States Air Force, it's unlikely you'll even spend it in the same state or country. You'll have the opportunity to practice nursing in as many as 20 different fields in a variety of nursing environments. And you'll feel a greater sense of shared responsibility when you have the opportunity to actually lead your team. Sound like the kind of career you'd like to have? Then call 1-800-423-USAF.

AIRFORCE.COM • 1-800-423-USAF

Let everything that has breath praise the Lord !

Gospel Concert 2004

Saturday, Feb. 28th

Bartlett Auditorium

Rm. 65

7 pm

Free Admissions

BROUGHT TO YOU BY

413-545-2789/UMASS_BASIZ@HOTMAIL.COM

MARDI GRAS 2004

Sponsored by the Newman Student Association

Tuesday, February 24
7:00pm
Newman Café

Come gorge yourself for "Fat Tuesday" in anticipation of the beginning of the Lenten Season!

LOTS of food! Music! Fun! Good times!

UNDERGRADS AND GRADS ALL WELCOME!

Ash Wednesday services the next day (Feb. 25) at 8, 12:15, 5:15, 7 and 9.

Newman Catholic Center 472 N. Pleasant St. 549-0300 x11.

Skills For Living With Early Mother Loss

An education and discussion group for women who experienced the death of their mother before their adult years

Tuesday Evenings 5:30 - 7:00 PM For Six Weeks Beginning March 2, 2004

Learn to: Provide Better Self-Care; Build Healthy Relationships; Manage Anxiety and Fear of Loss

For more information call EWC Counseling Services 577-0077

Free & Open to all students

Win Airline Ticket(s)!

Win Basketball Shootoff

2-Person Shooting Competition

Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed

ATLANTIC 10 SHOOTOUT

$10,000

Register at www.atlantic10.org

OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS

QUALIFYING ROUND
Thursday, February 26
7 PM - Curry Hicks Cage

GMAC

Pontiac

Free Samples From Aerie, Coast, Nestle Crunch, TicTac and UltraMax

Seniors GET A JOB!

Get "The Edge" for your career transition:

- The Edge – The Inside scoop from hiring managers
- The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
- Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun

Get The Edge – It's your future!

The Deal: All 3 for $24.95

Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!

Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

SUBWAY

FREE DELIVERY!

11 am - 2 pm
4 pm - Midnight

7 days a week!

We Accept OCMP!

Call 582.0066

Located on Rt. 9 next to the Registry

Millennium Hair and Spa Co.

Manicure/Pedicure Special
$39.00
March 1 - April 30

We offer full body waxing, from brow to Brazilian.

Walk-ins Welcome!

Open:
Monday thru Friday
9-8
Saturday
9-3

Located on Rt. 9 on the bus route in the Registry building

585.1500

How would you score?

LSAT
GRE
MCAT
DAT

Take a FREE practice test at Kaplan's Test Drive and find out.

GRE Feb. 27th!
LSAT, MCAT and DAT, Feb. 29th!

call for details and to register

To register, call or visit us online today!

KAPLAN 1-800-KAP-TEST kaptest.com/testdrive

Test Prep and Admissions

Minutemen finish strong

HOCKEY from page 10

and Mauldin trailed through center ice. Capraro slid the puck to Vitek in the right wing slot, and he nimbly kicked it over to Mauldin, who one-timed it through BU goaltender Sean Fields (27 saves), making it 1-0.

Friday night, the Minutemen clinched home-ice advantage in the Hockey East quarterfinals, but it wasn't their fault. The Terriers blew them out of the building, 6-1.

Meanwhile, roughly 250 miles away, the Maine Black Bears downed fifth-place Providence 3-2, ensuring the Minutemen no lower than fourth place in the conference, and setting up a playoff series at the Mullins Center March 11-13.

The Minutemen came into the weekend on a three-game losing streak, and things didn't get much better on Friday night. Although they scored the game's first goal and played well during the early part of the first period, they soon fell apart as the Terriers put six pucks past goaltender Gabe Winer (22 saves), who was pulled in favor of junior Tim Warner with 14 minutes remaining.

UMass coach Don Cahoon said that his reason for replacing Winer wasn't to punish the sophomore, who performed admirably but was the recipient of a few unlucky bounces.

For the second straight game, the Minutemen gave an opposing player his first career hat trick. Brian McConnell scored three goals by the end of the second period, including two on the power play. The cap-flinger came with UMass' Marvin Degon in the box for interference with just 17 seconds to go in the middle frame. McConnell put back a loose rebound to Winer's left to make it 4-1 in favor of the Terriers.

Prior to Friday night's game, the Terriers hadn't scored more than one goal in their last four games, including one shutout.

They took care of that plague quickly, because after Garrett Summerfield scored at 8:02 of the first for the Minutemen, BU returned fire quickly, scoring a pair of goals in the next three minutes, including McConnell's first of the night.

UMass bit by the Spiders

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team attended Richmond's clinic Sunday on how to play team basketball. The Minutewomen's 77-49 loss to Richmond was due to the Spiders' accurate shooting and ability to force them into poor decisions.

The Maroon and White (6-19, 2-12 Atlantic 10) committed 25 turnovers, 10 more than its opponent, Richmond took advantage of every turnover, scoring 28 points off turnovers while UMass could only manage 12.

UMass	49
Richmond	77

The Spiders (17-8, 9-5 A-10) amassed 18 steals, with three different Richmond players recording at least three, including seven steals from senior Amber Goppert, tying her career-high.

"Richmond just simply killed us," head coach Marnie Dacko said. "They simply put on a clinic and beat us at every aspect of the game especially in turnovers. They looked like a team looking for an NCAA berth."

Goppert had a career night for the Spiders. Along with her seven steals, the senior guard scored a career-high 21 points while dishing out seven assists.

Freshman Christina Campion recorded her first collegiate double-double with 10 points and 13 rebounds. Junior Kate Flavin was another post presence for the Spiders, connecting on 9-of-15 shots for 19 points. She also collected six rebounds and three steals.

Every Richmond player scored in the contest, and four Spiders reached double figures. Richmond was also perfect from the line, going 8-for-8.

Two UMass players were able to score in double digits. Junior Edris Bailey had 12 points, but struggled from the floor, going only 4-for-13. Freshman Tamara Tatham had a solid game with 12 points, and was one rebound shy of a double-double. Tatham was the only Minutewoman to hit over 50 percent of her shots, finishing at 55 percent (6-for-11).

Though Goppert was the driving offensive force, the Spiders shot a high percentage from the field at 53.2 percent, while the Minutewomen struggled, shooting only 38.5. The numbers tell the offensive productivity, as the Minutewomen had trouble finding the open option, losing the assist category 23-11.

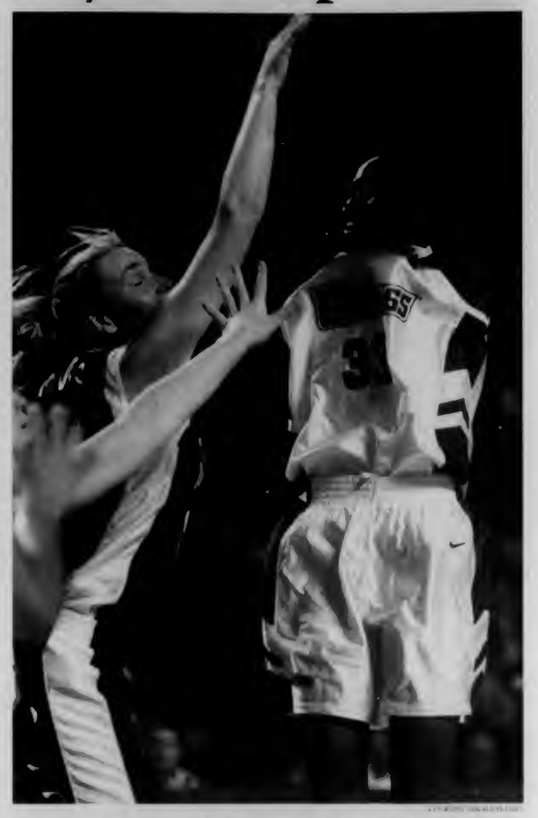
The victory gives Richmond a 10-1 record at the Robins Center.

"Richmond played well as a team," Dacko said. "They came right from the start and took it to us. We had no aggression on either end. Some of the kids didn't play as hard they could, but some kids played hard out there for us."

Richmond was in command from the beginning, building a double-digit lead, 14-4, just five minutes into the game. UMass scored only six points in the first nine minutes.

Flavin hit a lay-up with 5:30 left to give Richmond their first 20-point lead. The Spiders went into halftime with a 21-point lead, 43-22. Richmond's biggest lead was at 36 points with 4:50 left in the second half.

The loss to Richmond came after a heartbreaking overtime defeat in Olean, N.Y. on Thursday. St. Bonaventure won 82-76 in OT with four players out due to injury or suspension, including their two top scorers.



With four seconds left, the Minutewomen were holding on to a three-point lead. Senior Lyndsey Maurer shot a contested three-pointer, falling well short.

The Bonnies' Audrey Latendresse crashed the boards, catching the ball in mid-air and hit the lay-up while being fouled. Latendresse hit the free throw to convert the three-point play to force the overtime.

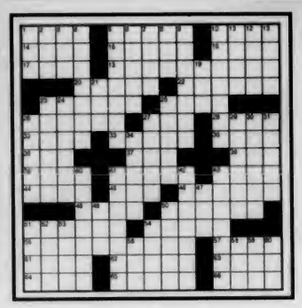
SBU (8-17, 4-10 A-10) went on to outscore the Maroon and White 10-4 in OT. All 10 of their points came from the free throw stripe, shooting 10-for-12 in the extra session.

St. Bonaventure's foul shooting was one of the key stats in the victory. The Bonnies' 81.3 percent from the line was far superior to UMass' 54.5 percent.

Maurer led the books with 26 points, and freshman guard Joyce Massey led the Maroon and White with a career-high 22 points.

Tamara Tatham scored 12 points in the Minutewomen's 77-49 loss to Richmond. UMass takes on George Washington on Thursday at the Mullins Center with a 7 p.m. tip-off.

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Alternative
5 Frisk
10 Kind of bus
14 Off in the distance
15 Tolerate
16 Hot — oven
17 Tiny particle
18 Shivery feeling (2 wds.)
20 Tycoon
22 Unisex garment
23 Genre
25 Bangkok native
26 Felt sorry for
27 Unhatched fish
28 Salad veggie
32 Early garden?
33 Many months
34 Caleb ruler
36 Like most nordic skiing
37 Photo
38 Tire pressure meas.
39 Not so much
41 Ten percent
43 Part of CD
44 Dance move
45 Play a part
46 Errands
47 Pop-tasteé-colored drug
50 Fast food
51 Giraffe habitat
54 New-car option
55 Power vacation (2 wds.)
57 Part of A.M.
61 Author — Grey
62 Sharpshooter's interest
63 Uprising
64 Joule fractions
65 Aquatic mammal
66 Tart plum

DOWN
1 Floss hastily
2 Alien craft
3 "Mona Lisa" singer
4 Troublemaker
5 — Ann dull
6 Considering
7 Cut off
8 Kosch and Wynter
9 Freeloaders
10 Chevalier of "Gigi"
11 Talents
12 Ponytail site
13 Technicolor itch
18 Feather wrap
21 Pamplona cry
23 Bikini
24 Comfortable (2 wds.)
26 London flashlight
28 Bell sounds
27 "Nick of Time" singer
29 Refineé a sin
30 Face, familiarly
31 Bewitched and Heckler
34 Heroic tales
40 Joins
41 Jack-tapper Nicole
42 Andes country
43 Turns down a page (hyph.)
47 Time dive
49 Make a hole in one
50 Debutantes
51 Timber
52 Mapping
53 Ladder step
54 Cheerful tone
56 Hose down
58 Not even one
59 As well as
60 Summer in France

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cavatelli Supreme
- Battered Fish
- Soy Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Mamou
- Roast Beef
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 39
- Low: 15

TUESDAY
- High: 37
- Low: 13

WEDNESDAY
- High: 34
- Low: 17

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Caitlin Ott

COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Diana Mogilevsky/ Russell Silva

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Sign up for a credit card, you get a free T-shirt!

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't be shallow, everyone hates shallow people.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You're on FIRE, baby!

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Remember that first impressions do count.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Fashion tip: tapered pants are NOT flattering.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Nobody needs to know your mother's maiden name.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Just give in to your freakish cravings for Jello.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Credit card companies are evil, don't sign any thing.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Get your hair out of your face.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Get some super thick socks from New Jersey.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't believe anything just because you heard it. Find out the facts for yourself.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
When you're bored, time passes very slowly. Find a way to entertain yourself.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"So we raise her up every morning, take her down every night. We don't let her touch the ground and we fold her up right. On second thought, I do like to brag, 'cause I'm mighty proud of the Ragged Old Flag."

-Johnny Cash, "Ragged Old Flag"

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

AUTO FOR SALE

Toyota Tercel Hatchback '89, 69K, original owner, new brakes, reliable, asking $1,450. (413) 665-2492

1987 BMWE 5SPD 268K miles Runs great Must sell $1,000.00 413-531-7580

Fast! One Owner Car 5Speed Ford Probe SE 1996 Well cared for Must Sell $1495.00 413-687-7510

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Cierra, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line Entry Level on board positions available, great benefits. Seasonal or Year round. 941-329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

Summer nanny position caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall full-time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.around-campus.com

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

FOR RENT

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 BDRM House on Main St. Bus Line Heat Include. 1800/Mo. Call Aaron 413-256-8747

SERVICES

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional And Customized Offering to marketing your skills. Affordable prices, Timely Service By Email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines

TRAVEL

What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED; Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertmicholsesq.com

Selling something? Need a roommate for next year? Advertise in the Collegian Classifieds today! Call 545-3500.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen are just good enough

Men's hockey takes home ice

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

After four straight losses, including three trouncings, the Massachusetts hockey team needed a little pick-me-up Saturday night.

The Minutemen got one, in the form of freshman Mark Matheson's blistering slap shot with less than two minutes to go, giving them a 2-2 tie with Boston University.

UMass is now 16-9-6 overall, and 12-7-3 in Hockey East. That gives them 27 points, good for third place and a four-point lead on New Hampshire. The Wildcats have two games in hand on the Minutemen, who clinched home-ice advantage in the Hockey East quarterfinals this weekend.

Entering Saturday's game at the Mullins Center, the Minutemen were mired in their first losing streak of the season, and their second winless streak of at least three games. They went 0-2-4 during a six game stretch beginning at the end of November, and hadn't lost two games in a row all year.

UMass	1
BU	6
BU	2
UMass	2

Even worse, the power play entered the game with a meager 17% success rate, with no goals in the last 20 chances.

Matheson's goal did well to reverse that trend, though, as it came with BU's Mark Mullen in the penalty box for a hooking call.

"Coach [Cahoon] wanted us to pressure on the power play, and we got the puck," Matheson said. "It gives us a lot of confidence, because we've been getting chances, but it's a big boost to get [the tying goal] on the power play."

"We're happy that we played as hard as we did tonight," said Cahoon, whose Minutemen could end up squaring off with the Terriers in the opening round of the Hockey East playoffs at the Mullins Center in three weeks. "We stayed with the battle at hand."

"I really liked how hard UMass played," said BU coach Jack Parker, whose team (9-14-7, 5-12-3 HEA) came just 1:49 short of notching its first two-game winning streak of the season.

After being mostly shut down in the first period, the Terriers made their mark at 6:41 of the second, when Kenny Roche one-timed a Sean Sullivan feed in the high slot to tie the game 1-1. BU then took the lead when Ryan Whitney, mimicking his goal from Friday night's 6-1 Terrier win, fired a slapshot from the point that zipped past Winer at 13:42 of the middle frame.

Greg Mauldin opened up the scoring for the Minutemen, with a big help from Tim Vitek. With Chris Capraro charging down the right wing, Vitek

See HOCKEY on page 8

COURTESY GERALD M. LING

Mark Matheson's power-play goal late in the third period helped the Minutemen to a 2-2 tie with Boston University. UMass, who clinced home ice in the Hockey East tournament, is in third place in the conference and takes on Northeastern March 5 at Matthews Arena.

UMass falls to Rams

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

BRONX, N.Y. — On Saturday afternoon, the Massachusetts men's basketball team delved further into ineptitude than ever before, and it was not a pretty sight.

UMass	61
Fordham	75

Before 2,232 at the historic Rose Hill Gymnasium, the Minutemen fell 75-61 to a lowly Fordham squad that had been losers of nine in a row.

Amidst questions of which direction the program is truly heading, UMass (9-15, 2-3 Atlantic 10) coach Steve Lappas tried to remain upbeat.

"I'm disappointed, but I'm not discouraged," Lappas said. "I still feel our young kids have a lot left in their tanks.

COURTESY GERALD M. LING

Anthony Anderson scored six points in the Minutemen's loss to Fordham. UMass takes on St. Joseph's on Wednesday at 2 p.m.

"We didn't play well, especially defensively in the first half. We dug a big hole, and it was certainly a tough one to get out of."

Now losers of four in a row, the Minutemen face the daunting task of hosting undefeated No. 2 St. Joseph's on Wednesday night at the Mullins Center. It is the first of four remaining games for UMass, which is now guaranteed a losing record both in the Atlantic 10 and overall for the third consecutive season. The frustration is beginning to mount.

"I don't think anyone's going through the motions," junior captain Anthony Anderson said. "The effort is there, we just aren't getting it done and it isn't getting any easier."

"I knew we'd have ups and downs," freshman guard Art Bowers added. "But I never expected anything like this."

The Rams (5-18, 2-4 A-10), who had lost their last nine contests by an average of 19 points prior to yesterday, beat UMass for the second consecutive year at Rose Hill — the oldest facility in Division I.

Fordham, which shot 65.4 percent in the first half and 53.8 percent on the game, was led by leading scorer Michael Haynes' 18 points. Point guard Drew Williamson — inserted into the starting lineup in place of injured starter Jermaine Anderson — chipped in with 15 while backcourt mate Derrick Breyland added 14 points and five assists.

The lone bright spots for the Minutemen included a team-high 15 points from freshman Maurice Maxwell, along with 11 points each from guard Chris Chadwick and sophomore forward Jeff Viggiano.

Another area of concern for Lappas, however, is the play of five-time A-10 Rookie of the Week Rashaun Freeman. The sophomore forward scored just four points and eight rebounds, and was benched in favor of Stephane Lasme for all but six minutes of the second half.

Freeman has shot just 8-for-27 in his last four games.

"I'm very concerned about [Freeman]," said Lappas, who did not seem opposed to the possibility of removing his leading scorer from the starting lineup. "Obviously, [opponents] are watching tape and doing things defensively on him, and he's struggling."

The Rams took it to the Maroon and White from the outset, repeatedly slicing through UMass' man-to-man defense to turn an early 10-9 advantage at the 15:13 mark into a commanding lead with a 17-4 run.

The Minutemen eventually shifted to a zone, but Fordham was able to alter its focus to the perimeter and connect on five of nine attempts from beyond the arc in the first half to jump out to a 39-20 lead at intermission.

The Rams took their largest lead of the game with 35 seconds remaining in the opening frame, when a Haynes 3-pointer made the score 39-18.

"Our defense in the first half was awful," Lappas said. "Our man-to-man has taken a hit in the last month, because we've been practicing five or six defenses, rather than one or two."

UMass attempted to make a go of it to begin the second half, as five points from Viggiano sparked a 7-0 run. However, Fordham responded with an 11-2 run that pushed its lead to 50-29 with just over 14 minutes remaining, and did not look back.

"We tried to make a big comeback, but it's tough when you dig that big of a hole for yourself on the road," Lappas said. "This is a tough one to swallow, but we have to pick ourselves up and go from here."

A fan's first visit to Madison Square

Bob McGovern

For any sports fan, the greatest feeling is watching your favorite team play, the experience of actually seeing your beloved players in a surreal setting of lights, music, and fans that are your equal in passion.

Now imagine waiting nearly 21 years to see it happen.

For most of my life I have lived in Vero Beach, Fla. If you haven't heard of it, I'm not surprised. If you have, I'll say hi to your grandparents for you. The only problem with living in this tropical paradise is that it's hundreds of miles from my favorite teams, most of which play in New York.

I've seen the Giants play a couple of times, but over the course of my life I had never seen the Knicks. So when my girlfriend told me she was getting me tickets for my birthday, needless to say I was slightly excited.

Living in a family of New Yorkers, I was brought up to love the Knicks and was never given the option to switch my allegiances. My dad and I would sit in our living room during playoff time and watch Ewing, Starks, Mason, and the rest of the crew from the mid-90s, him reminiscing, me asking questions.

Going to school the next day, I would deal with the Miami Heat fans giving me grief about how ugly Ewing was, how obnoxious New Yorkers are, and how ridiculous it was that I was actually a member of the Knickerbockers fan club.

All of this was going through my mind as I walked up Seventh Avenue with the mecca of sporting arenas standing majestically to my right. I thought of all the hours in front of the tube, all the grief from stupid Floridians, and all the times I wished that I were actually there.

The hustle and bustle of New York is personified in that slim separation between Penn Station and Madison Square Garden. That sweet stench of gas, cigarettes, and that strange urine-esque smell which oozes from the streets of New York was thick in the air, and one could almost feel the energy coming from the arena.

When I first stepped inside there were life-sized photos of Stephon Marbury, Penny Hardaway, and Dikembe Mutombo lining the walls. My only wish at that moment was that instead of Mutombo, his Georgetown predecessor Ewing was still around.

We found our seats among the New York proud, of course ridiculously early because I was incredibly anxious. I settled in and watched the players warm up, checking the countdown, second by drawn out second.

An entire gospel group came out and sang the national anthem; as I always do, I stood hat over chest and let my mind wander. I thought of how surreal it was to be there.

The player introductions were exciting, but I was the only one in my section that was going ballistic. I must have really looked like a first-timer as my eyes never left the court and the smallest no-call evoked a series of profanity that would have made Spike Lee proud. After a first half which saw the Knicks score only 28 points against the always-bland Jazz, I was a little distraught. It didn't register that my team was playing this bad while I was there; didn't they know I was coming?

Then my attitude did a full 180.

See GARDEN on page 7

Guster swings through the Calvin Theater in Northampton
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

UMass runners hit rough road at Atlantic 10 Championships
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 88

Distinguished lecturer assesses market value

ANDREW TAMILIA/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Nancy Folbre speaks on market value and non-market work in yesterday's Distinguished Faculty Lecture.

Raising children discussed in light of economics

By Sara Clark
Collegian Correspondent

The Distinguished Faculty Lecture series began yesterday with Nancy Folbre, who analyzed the function of money in society.

"There is no strict dividing line between love and money," Folbre said. "There is instead a kind of continuum."

In support of this conclusion, Folbre showed two slides of currency depicting human relationships. One currency was an altered one that showed a familial bond. The other currency was circulated in the United States in 1896 as a part of the educational series entitled "History Instructing Youth." Both currencies demonstrated that historically there has been a link between love and money.

Nevertheless, Folbre suggested the futility in depending simply on money for love: "Money after all is but a promise," she said. Moreover, Folbre noted the instability inherent in money through inflation and deflation.

In her lecture Folbre addressed the issue of assessing the worth of services that aren't typically considered business practices.

"How can we assign a 'market value' to 'non-market work'?" she asked.

Folbre's example was childrearing.

In the beginning, Folbre emphasized that she was not trying to examine the motives behind childrearing but rather the consequences. To Folbre, one of the major issues with childrearing is the benefit that others get from the product — the children.

"Conventional microeconomic theory models childrearing in terms of family decisions to maximize utility," she said. "My approach looks at consequences, not motives. Yes, par-

See FOLBRE on page 2

University opens new library

Library merger brings updated facilities, technology to campus

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

Students, professors and faculty alike were on hand yesterday as a new Integrated Sciences and Engineering Library opened in the Lederle Graduate Research Center, combining the two older science libraries that existed on campus.

The ceremony was a celebration of many years of hard work by many different people, and even though it was the library's first day open to the public, many students were studying throughout the day.

The biological sciences library used to be in Morrill, while the other was in Lederle. The Lederle site, which was the physical sciences library, was renovated into the new integrated one.

Director of Libraries Jay Schafer said that the process started about eight years ago, but the actual physical planning began about a year and a half ago.

"It was a big moving process," Schafer said.

Former Director of Libraries Margo Crist said the new library in the second floor of Lederle is a combination of two older ones, neither of which had the resources and technology needed in today's science field.

"Neither of the old libraries [was] the future of science," said Crist, who recently retired. She said that the most important parts of the new library were the large amount of study space, as well as wireless capabilities that extend throughout almost all of Lederle.

Crist said that even though there's the new technology of the Internet, there are still paper resources for students to fall back on. One side of the library is primarily made up of reference, or paper, materials, while the other side consists largely of current periodicals. Both sides have an abundance of study space.

"The old libraries were let go physically," Crist said.

Chancellor John V. Lombardi said the biggest hurdle the library had to overcome was the location, because no one wanted to move a library across campus.

"Everyone had to recognize that there would be better services here," Lombardi said.

Lombardi said people had to be convinced that having one library would be easier than two.

"This one is much more student friendly," he said.

Schafer agreed that the process was a tough one, but believes it was well worth it. "We had several tough years," he said. "This facility symbolizes the rebirth of the library."

Financially, it was difficult to get such a huge project up and running with the school and the state in the financial situation that it was in, Schafer said. He added that it took many people to help get this project where it is today.

"It was a ton of people who helped us out," he said.

ANDREW TAMILIA/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Chancellor John V. Lombardi cuts the ribbon with Director of Libraries Jay Schafer and Margo Crist, former director of libraries, in yesterday's ceremony.

Schafer opened the festivities with a speech, discussing the financial problems that the school was going through and the difficulties that everyone went through to make this possible. He emphasized that the students needed a library that was open full time and a library that had better resources than the older ones. Schafer also noted how many people it took to get the project done.

After Schafer finished, Provost Charlena Seymour gave a very enthusiastic speech that sent plenty of laughter through the crowd of several dozen people.

"This would not have happened without the help of many people," Seymour said.

Although this is a place for learning, Seymour said she could do plenty of other things at the new library.

"I look forward to coming here and lounging in one of those big chairs," she said, referring to the couches set up in one wing of the library.

Lombardi spoke after Seymour, and he also made the crowd laugh numerous times. He said he was excited about the new library and said that it is very good for the school.

"This is a triumph," Lombardi said.

Exchange now includes other UMass campuses

By Kimberly Seymour
Collegian Correspondent

The first formalized student exchange program between the Amherst, Boston, Lowell and Dartmouth University of Massachusetts campuses is now offered through the National Student Exchange.

Students from the four UMass campuses may now take classes for up to two semesters at the school of their choice, while paying their home school tuition and keeping their financial aid.

Sheila Brenan, coordinator of the NSE, said previously students could take place in an exchange between the campuses, but until now there hasn't been a formalized program. Each UMass campus will have their own exchange program coordinator available to assist participating students.

"The program was created because the schools needed an organized way to let students move between UMass campuses," said Brenan. "It was instigated by student demand and put in action by the president's office."

Ken Burnham, director of financial aid at UMass Amherst, said this program was established because there is a need for a simple, user-friendly, single policy.

"Before this program was established, there were different rules for different schools and when a student would organize the program on their own, mistakes could be made," Burnham said.

A student on an exchange program at another campus would pay their home school tuition, but their host school's room and board. For Amherst, Lowell and Dartmouth, on campus housing is available. There is no housing available for the Boston campus, but Burnham said many students choose to commute.

A student would retain his financial aid because all of the billing takes place at the student's home school.

"A student from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst will keep their financial aid, but it will be applied to UMass Amherst rather than to their host school," Burnham said. "That way all of the billing, aid, and bookkeeping stays at the home school for simplicity."

Brenan said participating students need to be in good academic standing, with a minimum of a 2.0 GPA. Students can apply as early as freshman year to participate in the exchange program during their sophomore, junior or senior year. Students must also remain full-time while on exchange. All credits earned are transferable to the student's home school.

Students wishing to apply should pick up an application in the Domestic Student Exchange office located in 614 Goodell. There is an application fee of $130, but there is no program fee. The application deadline for the fall 2004 semester is Mar. 1st. The spring 2005 semester deadline is Oct. 1.

Presidential hopeful set to make tour stop on campus

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

Democratic presidential candidate Dennis Kucinich will hold a rally at the University of Massachusetts, tomorrow morning at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center Ballroom.

The Ohio congressman is stopping at the University as a part of his Northeast tour. The speech is expected to last about ninety minutes. He is expected to speak on a number of campaign issues important to college students.

"We can expect Dennis to speak about his support of decriminalization of marijuana, free college tuition, and a withdrawal from [the North American Free Trade Agreement] and the [World Trade Organization] — all issues unique to the Kucinich platform and of utmost importance to college students," said Robert Blasiak, a volunteer of the Kucinich presidential campaign.

The repealing of NAFTA and the WTO are major campaign issues for this candidate. Although many of the former Democratic candidates have showed dislike for the global trade agreements, Kucinich is the only candidate who has called for a complete cancellation of the trade agreements.

He posted his problem with NAFTA and the WTO prominently on his Web site. Citing Sunday's Akron Beacon Journal, he claimed that over 240,000 jobs have been lost in the state of Ohio as a result of NAFTA and the WTO.

"You can't tinker with it and fix NAFTA. Canceling it is the only way out," said Kucinich during an interview with Carl Chancellor of the Akron Beacon Journal.

A key part of Kucinich's platform is his stance on the opposition of American forces in Iraq. His plan to remove troops from the war-torn nation is by far the most drastic plan of action compared to those of any other candidate.

"An extremely important focus of the Kucinich platform is the Iraq War. If it was wrong to go in, why is it right to stay? [At the rally] we will hear about Kucinich's plan for getting the United Nations into Iraq and the U.S. out within 90 days," Blasiak said.

Kucinich is calling himself the "progressive" candidate in this election. He is the only candidate who is proposing a plan for free college tuition, decriminalization of marijuana and repealing the U.S. Patriot Act. The Kucinich campaign stated their opposition of the bill on their Web site, saying: "The government must not be allowed, without probable cause or warrant, to snoop on our communications, medical records, library records, and student records."

Although Kucinich has been consistently last or second-to-last in the polls, he has still conducted a strong campaign, making stops all around the country and participating in the Democratic debates. He does not appear to deny the fact that he will probably lose this election. He is sending out a message to voters on how to "vote strategically," claiming that there is still a chance to gain delegates in an unpredictable race.

In addition to speaking at UMass on Wednesday, Kucinich will also hold a rally tonight at Smith College in Northampton. The event will be held in John M. Greene Hall from 7 to 9 p.m.

Chomsky will address recent Iraq issue

By Yousef Munayyer
Collegian Staff

"The United States is unusual among the industrial democracies in the rigidity of the system of ideological control — 'indoctrination,' we might say — exercised through the mass media."

This may be something similar to what the audience will here tonight in an event that is expected to fill Bowker Auditorium. This evening, controversial professor, Noam Chomsky, will give a lecture entitled "Iraq and Beyond" at 7 p.m.

The lecture is the first in a series of lectures hosted by the Political Economy Research Institute.

Chomsky, who currently holds the Ferrari P. Ward Chair of Modern Language and Linguistics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has made a reputation for himself in linguistics. However, he is probably known to most for his political criticism. Chomsky has been at MIT since 1955 and has greatly influenced the field of linguistics.

Tonight however, the topic of discussion will not be linguistics. Rather the focus will be on another one of Chomsky's passions: politics.

Since the war in Vietnam, Chomsky has been a well-known critic of American foreign policy and has been branded by many as

See CHOMSKY on page 2

Marines stream into Haiti's capital to protect embassy

By Michael Norton
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Fifty U.S. Marines streamed into the capital yesterday to protect the U.S. Embassy and its staff, while government loyalists set flaming barricades to block the road from rebels threatening to move on Port-au-Prince.

Frightened Cabinet ministers were asking friends for places to hide, senior government sources said, a day after the rebels attacked two police stations outside the capital and seized Haiti's second-largest city, Cap-Haitien, with little resistance.

In Cap-Haitien, rebels hunted down militants loyal to President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, accusing them of terrorizing the population in the days before the fall of the northern port city of 500,000.

"I am a brick mason, I didn't do anything wrong," Jean-Bernard Prevalis, 33, pleaded as he was dragged away, head bleeding.

"We're going to clean the city of all 'chimeres,'" said rebel Dieusauver Magustin, 26. Chimere, which means ghost, is used to describe hardcore Aristide militants.

It was not clear what would happen to those detained. One rebel said they were saving them from lynching. But another, Claudy Philippe, said "The people show us the (chimere) houses. If they are there, we execute them."

Thousands of people in Cap-Haitien demonstrated in favor of the rebellion Monday, chanting "Aristide get out!" and "Goodbye Aristide."

Residents went on a rampage of reprisals and looting that began after the insurgents seized the city. Looters stole the 800 tons of food from the U.N. World Food Program warehouse, according to the agency's Andrea Bagnoli, and people torched the colonial mansion of Mayor Wilmar Innocent, who supports Aristide.

Rebel leader Guy Philippe said his men could do nothing to stop the looting.

See HAITI on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3693 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
News Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Assistant Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Supervisor Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eggleston
Design Editor Matthew Reid
Features Editor S.J. Port
News Editor Ferron Salstiker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Supervisor Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Logistic
Faculty Manager Greg Stanton
Online Manager Renee Brand
Associate Editor Linda Wallack
Assistant Arts Editor David Bor
Assistant News Editor JoAnna Sorenson
Assistant Photo Editor Josh Riggins
Assistant Features Editor Richard Pacheco
Assistant Sports Editor Lisa Lynch
Columnist Editor Charlie Higgins
Arts Asst. Copy Editor Meghan Healy
Arts Asst. Copy Editor Cameron J. Woods
Engineer Liaison Paige Crum
Assistant News Editor Erika Loxley
Assistant News Editor Morris Singer
Assistant Sports Editor Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Editor Mike Martirelli
Assistant Sports Editor Robert McGovern

Distinguished professor speaks on economics

Compares childrearing to job; humans to androids

FOLBRE from page 1

ents are altruistic, but their altruism benefits not only their children but also [members of society]."

In an effort to demonstrate her thoughts fully, Folbre compared humans to androids.

"Wages are batteries that you use to fuel the androids," she said.

Folbre also speculated what the costs would be to have supplement childcare, in terms of androids.

"What would it cost to hire replacement services of comparable quality?" she asked. "What would happen if parents went on strike?"

In an attempt to answer this question, Folbre researched and found a lower bound estimate of the time dedicated toward childrearing.

First, Folbre broke down time into passive care time and active care time. Passive care time, or what Folbre also called "supervisory care time" is described as the time one adult may spend on activities such as supervising a child watching television.

Through the 1997 Panel Study of Income Dynamics Child Development Supplement, which used a sample space of 2,900 children from 0 to 11 years of age, Folbre was able to determine a rough ratio between a child worker and parents.

Next, Folbre presented her findings regarding the annual average parental expenditures. Through the Department of Agriculture, it was found that the outright cost of childrearing was $8,915. Another $13,662 was attributed to the imputed value of parental time. Thus, the total expenditure was $22,577. Surprisingly, the figures that the Department of Agriculture assessed are used as benchmarks for foster care and absent parents.

"[The expenditure figures] are far too low," Folbre said. "They assign no value to parents' time."

Folbre postulated that the low estimates of childcare point to the poor state of foster care in the nation.

Because the figures that Folbre found on childcare were based on the age bracket of 0 to 11 years old, another essential expenditure, public higher education, was necessary to calculate.

In conjunction with the Congressional Budget Office, Folbre found that the average expenditure on a year of undergraduate education at a public four-year university in 2001 was about $20,000 per year, including all costs. In general, both parents and students paid a quarter each of the $20,000 with the remaining costs being put upon the taxpayers.

Folbre noted that Ron Lee of UC Berkeley determined that there was a fiscal externality between college-educated students and the public of $250,000. In other words, during their lifetime, students pay an excess of $250,000 in taxes more than is publicly given to them.

In terms of the students, Folbre brought it back to the androids: "People are not androids. What I mean by that is that they are very hard to program."

Folbre observed that it is difficult to monitor the efforts of students and measure their performance. She described the existence of an incomplete contract, meaning that extrinsic rewards do not provide efficient incentives for students.

In response to the motivation crisis that she saw in students, Folbre developed a five-point plan of attack. Her first strategy is to improve the quality of academic advisors. The second strategy is to develop "better instruments for monitoring the quality of average class size, characteristics of faculty, opportunities for individualized instruction in writing, laboratory research, and etc. The third strategy consists of giving the student body more of a voice and encouraging their participation. The fourth strategy is to increase alumni involvement to the extent where they would advocate for the quality of programs.

The last strategy was described in her words: "We really need to improve participation and voice of adjunct and part-time faculty members who play an increasingly important role in teaching UMass students."

Folbre summarized the problems in the University as a "tacit bargain" where professors and students alike hold the mentality "don't bother me too much and I won't bother you too much."

Her thoughts on education are best described in her words: "Knowledge is infinite and knowledge is cheap. Knowledge is there. Knowledge is easy. What's hard is motivation. What's hard is a desire to learn."

Folbre believes that It's the University's task to spark the motivation in students.

"Education has to be a dialogue," she said.

At the end of the lecture, Folbre voiced her favorite slogan: "Students First."

Chomsky will speak on Iraq

CHOMSKY from page 1

anti-American. Still many others gather to hear Chomsky speak whether they choose to agree with him or not. He has always been outspoken and never afraid to speak against the government if he finds them at fault.

Still what is more amazing about the 75-year old professor Is his work ethic and near photographic memory. He has proven he has a broad knowledge of many political issues and histories from across the globe. He is also one of the most active authors of political criticism in recent years.

Chomsky has spoken to college students on many occasions and his book "9-11" is regarded by many on the left end of the political spectrum as an important interpretation of the world after the terror attacks of 2001.

The MIT professor has spoken against the war in Iraq and in tonight's lecture he will speak on the future of that situation and likely the future American foreign policy in the Middle East.

Ticket holders will be permitted to enter Bowker Auditorium at 6:30 p.m. The lecture is open to the public.

For the Record

Correction Due to an editing error, a column in today's Op/Ed section incorrectly states that Dennis Kucinich is speaking today in the Campus Center Auditorium. Kucinich will be speaking tomorrow.

Correction Due to a reporting error, a Page One article on the international student fee protest on Friday quotes quotes Rene Gonzalez of the Office of ALANA Affairs as saying, "[Everyone] should join the revolution." It should read, "[Everyone] should join the rebellion."

U.N. makes progress on black market nuclear case

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — The head of the U.N. atomic watchdog agency said Monday that meetings with Libyan officials were producing more names and companies involved in supplying renegade nations with the technology for their nuclear arms programs.

Mohamed ElBaradei, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency, also said key elements of Libya's nuclear weapons program remain in place three months after its government pledged to scrap them, though Tripoli is committed to their elimination.

ElBaradei did not elaborate, but another delegation member said centrifuge equipment that can enrich uranium still remains assembled and in Libya. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

ElBaradei arrived in Tripoli on Monday to oversee what needs to be scrapped or removed before Libya's nuclear program is stripped of all weapons applications. After meeting with Libyan officials, he said he was confident that stage would be reached by June.

"I think it is going very smoothly, very well, and the Libyans have confirmed again their full cooperation, their readiness to settle all the questions we have," ElBaradei told reporters after meeting with Deputy Prime Minister Matoug M. Matoug.

- Associated Press

Bush goes sour on Kerry campaign

By Scott Lindlaw
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush took the offensive on his re-election campaign Monday, casting Sen. John Kerry as a waffler and warning that the Democrats would raise taxes, expand the government and fail to lead decisively on national security.

Previewing his principal re-election theme, Bush made national security the centerpiece of his revamped re-election speech, explicitly invoking the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. He questioned the credentials of the Democrats who want his job.

"The action we take and the decisions we make in this decade will have consequences far into this century," Bush told 1,400 people at a fund-raiser for Republican governors. "If America shows weakness and uncertainty, the world will drift toward tragedy. That will not happen on my watch."

In his 40-minute address, Bush mentioned none of the Democratic presidential candidates by name, but some of his sharpest criticism was unmistakably intended for Kerry, the frontrunner.

"The other party's nomination battle is still playing out. The candidates are an interesting group with diverse opinions," Bush said. "They're for tax cuts and against them. They're for NAFTA and against NAFTA. They're for the Patriot Act and against the Patriot Act. They're in favor of liberating Iraq, and opposed to it. And that's just one senator from Massachusetts." His supportive audience erupted in laughter and applause.

Kerry spokeswoman Stephanie Cutter disputed Bush's list of purported flip-flops. Kerry opposed Bush's tax cuts for the richest Americans and stands by that; voted for NAFTA and stands by it; voted for the Patriot Act, but believes the Justice Department is using it to trample civil liberties; and stands by his vote to authorize force for Iraq, but believes Bush's prosecution of the war "created a breeding ground for terror" and alienated allies, Cutter said.

We the People

...insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common ...and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution ...

Article. I

Don't Put Discrimination into Our Constitution

On March 11, the legislature is expected to vote on a constitutional amendment that would take away important legal rights from gay couples who live, work and raise families across Massachusetts.

Join the
UMass Coalition For Marriage Equality

Organizing Meeting
Thur. February 26th 12PM
Campus Center Room 162
Or Call 545-4824 to Volunteer Time

Same Sex Marriage Forum
Tue. March 2nd 7PM
Campus Center Room 917

CONTACT YOUR STATE SENATOR & REPRESENTATIVE
Go to: www.massequality.org and tell them to VOTE NO on ANY Constitutional Amendment!

U.S. Marines sent off to Haiti

HAITI from page 1

and blamed Aristide's government for leaving most of Haiti's 8 million people hungry and desperate. However, some rebels later fired shots into the air to scatter looters at Cap-Haitien's seaport. At least two looters were hit by rebel gunfire and taken to a hospital.

Philippe said more than 30 residents have volunteered to fight with the rebels, who have started to replace officials in Cap-Haitien with rebel sympathizers. He said in an interview Monday that he hopes to take Port-au-Prince by Sunday, his 36th birthday.

Remissainthe Ravix, another rebel leader, told The Associated Press there was no turning back.

"We have the weapons and the expertise to take the country," he said. "Nothing can stop us."

The rebels cut cellular telephone service in the city, saying they wanted no communication with Port-au-Prince.

Cap-Haitien is just 90 miles north of Port-au-Prince, but is a grueling seven-hour drive over potholed roads sometimes reduced to bedrock.

Aid agencies have warned a humanitarian catastrophe is brewing, with 268,000 people who depended on food aid in northern Haiti being the most vulnerable. The International Committee of the Red Cross sent medical supplies and a four-person team.

Aristide's Premier Yvon Neptune said the international community must help save Haiti from "terrorists that are sowing violence and death," but he did not go so far as to ask for peacekeepers.

Neptune appealed to the political opposition coalition to agree to a U.S.-backed international peace plan.

The opposition had said it would formally respond by Monday afternoon to the plan, but leaders later Indicated they would not agree to any proposal that does not require Aristide to step down.

Evans Paul, a leading opposition politician once allied with Aristide, said Secretary of State Colin Powell telephoned opposition politicians Monday, asking them to wait another 24 hours before announcing their official position on the peace plan.

But Paul said the coalition remained firm in its demand, describing "Mr. Aristide's departure as an essential part to resolving this crisis."

Aristide on Saturday accepted the plan, which would allow him to remain president with diminished powers, sharing with political rivals a government that would organize elections.

With violence rising both from Aristide supporters and the insurgents, France urged its citizens Monday to leave its former colony. The United States and Mexico told their citizens to get out last week. There are about 30,000 foreigners in Haiti, including about 20,000 Americans, 2,000 French and 1,000 Canadians.

Rifles at the ready, about 24 Marines in combat gear and helmets rushed off the U.S. Air Force transport plane at Toussaint Louverture International Airport on Monday and ran to make a secure a perimeter around the aircraft before another 30 Marines got off a second plane. Some Haitians stood on cars or high walls to peer at the Marines at the airport.

Western diplomats and a Defense Department official said the Marines would protect the U.S. Embassy in Port-au-Prince and its staff..

ANDREW TARANTOVA/COLLEGIAN

Take a number

Students wait in line to purchase some new clothes for spring at the Express warehouse sale in the Campus Center Auditorium yesterday. The sale goes on until Thursday.

DVD duplication software limited

By Anick Jesdanun
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — The maker of DVD-duplication software ruled in violation of copyright law is nevertheless pledging to keep selling it — but without a built-in tool for descrambling movies.

In order for the popular DVD Copy Plus and DVD X Copy programs to successfully make copies of DVDs, users will now need to obtain a separate descrambler that is widely available on the Internet, said Robert Moore, founder and president of 321 Studios Inc.

"It's a hollow victory" for movie studios, Moore said.

On Friday, U.S. District Judge Susan Illston in San Francisco gave 321 Studios a week to stop making, distributing "or otherwise trafficking in any type of DVD circumvention software."

She agreed with the Hollywood studios' contention that 321's DVD-copying products violate the 1998 Digital Millennium Copyright Act, which prohibits the circumvention of anti-piracy measures such as the Content Scramble System, or CSS, that is used to protect DVDs.

Makers of DVD players license keys to descramble CSS-protected DVDs, and Illston deemed 321's use of those keys unauthorized.

The ruling does not affect 321's other software for copying computer games or creating DVDs from home videos, PowerPoint presentations and digital photos. It also does not cover the scores of DVD-copy products available elsewhere online, often for free.

Moore said 321 would fully comply while it appeals the ruling. Retailers are also encouraged to return unsold copies to the company, he said, though the judge did not specifically order that.

Russell Frackman, a lawyer for the movie studios that brought the lawsuit, questioned whether 321's response was consistent with the spirit of Illston's order.

"You can't sell the product with a wink and a nod and then tell your users, What you need to do is get the ripper [descrambling] component ... from another source," Frackman said. "The law generally does not permit one to do indirectly what they can't do directly."

The Chesterfield, Mo.-based 321 had argued that its products merely give consumers fair use of the movies they've purchased, including backing up expensive copies of children's movies in case the originals get scratched.

Jack Valenti, head of the Motion Picture Association of America, has suggested that consumers have no legitimate need for such software, telling The Associated Press in November, "If you buy a DVD you have a copy. If you want a backup copy you buy another one."

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
• The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
• The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
• Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

SUBWAY
FREE DELIVERY!
11 am - 2 pm 7 days a
4 pm - Midnight week!
We Accept OCMP!
Call 582.0066
Located on Rt. 9 next to the Registry

MDC DESIGN
NEW THIS WEEK!
MATCHSTICK MEN
MY LIFE WITHOUT ME
PIECES OF APRIL
SPY KIDS 3-D
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Let everything that has breath praise the Lord!
Gospel Concert 2004
Saturday, Feb. 28th
Bartlett Auditorium
Rm.65
7 pm
Free Admissions
BROUGHT TO YOU BY
413-545-2789/UMASS_BASIE@HOTMAIL.COM

Presented by: Nobody's Perfect
EXPRESS
From the mall store you love.....
Women's & Men's
Warehouse Clothing Sale
VISA MasterCard
GOT CLOTHES?
Prices starting at
Tops.....$6.99
Jeans.....$12.99
Blazers.....$19.99
Shorts.....$9.99
4 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
1st QUALITY MERCHANDISE
in the Student Union Ballroom
Feb 23rd thru Feb 26th
Mon, Tues & Wed 10am-8pm Thur 10am-??
WAREHOUSE SALE

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Should foreign-born citizens be president?

California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger told NBC's "Meet the Press" recently that U.S. citizens born outside of the country should be eligible to run for the office of president. The Austrian-born Republican said he did not have specific plans to run for president himself, but that other foreign-born citizens should not be restricted based solely on their country of birth.

Schwarzenegger's comments are the first of any kind regarding a proposal by Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch. The bill put forth by Hatch would allow anyone who has been a citizen of the United States for at least 20 years to run for president. Schwarzenegger has been a citizen for 21 years.

Schwarzenegger was vehement in his claim that he is not seeking a presidential nomination. "I have no idea," he said. "I haven't thought about that at all." Schwarzenegger says he is too busy dealing with California to entertain notions of the White House.

The governor did point out several other possible candidates who, according to Schwarzenegger, would make "great choices" for president. Schwarzenegger used two former secretaries of state — Madeleine Albright, a native of Czechoslovakia, and Henry Kissinger, a native of Germany — as prime examples.

"I mean, there's many, many, many people here that have worked within a government and have done an extraordinary job and not have been born in America," added Schwarzenegger.

With a senator already proposing an amendment to the Constitution, Schwarzenegger's statement cannot be ignored. With the changing world that we live in, hearing the phrase "President Schwarzenegger" is not as far-fetched as it once was.

However, we at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian also take Schwarzenegger's comments with a grain of salt. Given the governor's hasty rise to political prominence and history of being in the limelight, it is only logical for Schwarzenegger to back Hatch's proposal.

That's not to say that the proposal is invalid, or that Albright or Kissinger would not make strong candidates for president, but the bill will need a much wider backing before it can be considered.

It seems rather discriminatory to prevent someone from running for president based solely on his or her country of origin. Foreign-born citizens are allowed to vote, participate on American Olympic teams, and even hold high-ranking government positions. Just as African Americans and women fought for their rights as free and equal citizens, foreigners are now fighting for rights of their own. However, the office of the president is a profound, almost sacred position, and proposing an amendment to the Constitution will require serious thought from all sides.

The support of Gov. Schwarzenegger is an important first step in passing Sen. Hatch's bill, but it is important to keep in mind where the support is coming from. Schwarzenegger has been friends with Hatch for some time, and being a foreign-born politician himself, would naturally back the bill. If Schwarzenegger is serious in his claim not to run for president, it further emphasizes the point that the debate may merit consideration.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The unknown candidate

John Pearson

Dennis Kucinich is the candidate for president the media doesn't want you to know about. Now, you may be thinking, why would the media want to alter the democratic race for the presidency and why would they target Kucinich?

Here are just a few reasons:

Dennis Kucinich, as a member of the House of Representatives, voted against the Iraq war and rallied opposition to it. He also voted against the Patriot Act (which he would cancel with the Benjamin Franklin True Patriot Act). He would also, if elected, withdraw the U.S. from Iraq in 90 days and go back to the U.N. to handle Iraq's reconstruction. Not only that, but he would withdraw from the World Trade Organization and The North American Free Trade Agreement, sign the Kyoto and Nuclear Non Proliferation treaties, cut the bloated defense budget by 15 percent (which is $400 billion and also has over $1 trillion missing), legalize gay marriage, work for a Universal "Medicare for All" healthcare system, break up the media and corporate monopolies, start a "Global Green Deal" for the environment and decriminalize marijuana.

No other candidate currently seeking the presidency, except for Al Sharpton, stands for any of those positions.

You may be thinking that a lot of people who run for president, especially Democrats, make all sorts of promises to get people's votes. Why should you believe Kucinich?

Here are just a few reasons:

Kucinich was elected Mayor of Cleveland in 1977. At age 31 he was the youngest person ever elected mayor of a major city. At the time the city was in a financial crisis and he campaigned not to sell the city's municipal power plant to pay off debt. When he took office, an Enron-like power company was trying to take over the power plant and Kucinich bravely said "No." So, not to be outdone, the private power company teamed up with the city bankers and told Kucinich that he would either sell the power plant or they would throw the city into default.

Forced into a corner, what did Kucinich do? He did what he promised to do and didn't sell the power plant. The city went into default.

Kucinich barely survived a recall and lost re-election in 1979. For years he was out of politics and could barely find a job.

If enough delegates represent Kucinich there is a chance that some of these issues will make it into the party platform going against Bush.

About 15 years later the people of Cleveland thanked him for not selling the power plant and saving the city over $150 million. He was then elected to the state senate and then to Congress.

Today he uses a light bulb for his slogan.

If that doesn't have you convinced, then consider his recent actions concerning Diebold. In case you don't know, Diebold is a voting machine company over which there has been a big controversy, also not covered much in the media, over their touch-screen electronic voting machines, which have NO paper ballot. A copy of internal memos from the company was given to Internet dissident Bev Harris, who then posted them on her website. Bev Harris' Web site (www.blackboxvoting.com) was shut down (hacked) during the California Recall Election in which the aforementioned touch-screen machines were used in several counties.

These memos detail internal corruption and awareness that the vote machines can be easily altered without detection (the CEO of the company promised to "deliver Ohio to Bush in 2004"). In the fall of 2003, a group of students at Swarthmore College posted the memos on their website. Embarrassed and wary of these facts getting around, Diebold sued. When it looked like the college was going to cave in to Diebold, in stepped Dennis Kucinich.

Kucinich bravely posted the memos on his website (http://www.kucinich.us/e-voting/intro.php) and raised the issue in congress. Diebold backed down.

Though the race for the Democratic nomination may seem to be in Kerry's hands, the platform of the party is decided upon at the nomination. If enough delegates represent Kucinich there is a chance that some of these issues will make it into the party platform going against Bush. Another factor to consider is now that Howard Dean has dropped out much of his support could go to Kucinich. In any case, the race is far from over.

You have a chance to see Dennis Kucinich and decide if he is the president you want in the White House. He will speak today from 10 to 11:30 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Information for this column was taken from kucinich.us, tvnewslies.org and blackboxvoting.com

John Pearson is a UMass student.

Thank you, Israel

Yousef Munayyer

Walking through the halls of the Student Union you will see all kinds of flyers. Usually I dismiss many of these immediately because, honestly, there are just so many of them that my head begins to hurt if I try to look at them when I walk by. However, early in the week there aren't many flyers up yet. That's how some of them caught my eye.

I have to say that I would like to thank the student groups responsible for putting up the flyers that "promote Israel's image." I hadn't laughed so hard in quite some time.

However, since the cosmic balance of propaganda versus truth has been once again tipped to the Israeli side, I will use the remainder of this column to highlight some facts about Israel that are more important to consider than the number of trees they plant or instant messaging programs they may be responsible for.

Only in Israel do we see the longest standing illegal occupation. The occupation has been ongoing since 1967. Thank you, Israel.

I have to say that I would like to thank the student groups responsible for putting up the flyers that "promote Israel's image." I hadn't laughed so hard in quite some time.

Only in Israel do they continually disregard international opinion and international law more than any other country in the Middle East and in the world. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel do the Israeli "defense" forces actively patrol and operate in land, which is internationally recognized as non-Israeli. Maybe it's time to reconsider the name of that group. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel to they uproot countless olive groves. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel do bulldozers knock down the homes of Palestinians. Maybe this is to make room for some of the many trees they want to plant. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel did a bulldozer brutally kill a young American activist standing 25 feet in front of it dressed in bright orange. Only in Israel will they claim it was an accident. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel do they choose to build walls in and around Palestinian towns to cut the West Bank into Bantustans, chocking away their livelihood. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel is a 20 percent minority of Arabs treated as second-class citizens in a so-called democracy. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel will they call themselves democratic when they directly rule over the lives of 4 million non-citizens. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel will you find the largest nuclear weapons program in the Middle East. Only in Israel will they refuse to acknowledge these weapons. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel will you consistently see political leaders with much blood on their hands. Only in Israel are these candidates considered to be frontrunners. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel will they completely destroy towns like Jenin. Only in Israel will they then not permit press to see the crimes they have committed for weeks. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel will you hear talk of peace while they are busy building even more settlements on land that internationally recognized as non-Israeli. Thank you, Israel.

Only in Israel would the current prime minister be guilty of saying the following in an address to the right-wing Tsomet party, "Everybody has to move, run and grab as many hilltops as they can to enlarge the settlements because everything we take now will stay ours." And Kol Yisrael radio reported in 2001 that he also said, "Every time we do something you tell me America will do this and will do that . . . I want to tell you something very clear: Don't worry about American pressure on Israel. We, the Jewish people, control America, and the Americans know it." Thank you, Israel.

Only outside of Israel would Israeli supporters find it necessary to "promote Israel's image."

The list goes on and on. Look, if you have read this far, chances are you have learned something about good ol' Israel that you hadn't known before. I would be wrong to suggest that there is no wrong on the Palestinian side and I'm sure there are plenty of people out there who will remind us of that.

The main point here is not to buy into the propaganda that is being spread. Sure, Israel may plant lots of trees, make some great medical breakthroughs and computer programs, but is that how we are to judge a nation? I'm not asking you to disregard all that wonderful stuff. I'm asking you to question why the Israeli groups felt it was necessary to launch a campaign to "promote Israel's image." It's because the reality is that more and more people are finding out that Israel is not the innocent, helpless, ally of ours that it has been made out to be. It's because Israel's image needs to be promoted because it's loosing more and more support here in the United States.

For now, the cosmic balance has been restored.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

A reality check

Molly Eggleston

I love to party. On a weekend, there is nothing better than going to a house party with my friends and getting loaded. By three in the morning everybody is totally hammered — everybody but one person. There is always that one person who nursed one beer all night, the one who laughs along with everyone and plays cards but never seems to finish that beer.

You know whom I'm talking about — the one who has the keys. As corny as it sounds, the designated driver is so important. You've heard it before, but unfortunately, many need to hear it again.

A friend of mine told me a story yesterday, a story I wish I hadn't heard because I wish it had never happened. My friend told me of a friend of hers, "Roger." I've met Roger. He seemed like your average college student. He liked to party and loved to drink. This weekend Roger went to a party; he drank a few beers and should not have been driving. We all wish he hadn't decided to.

As he was driving home on the highway he lost control of his car and swerved into the breakdown lane. Two young men were pulled over because one of their trucks had been having engine trouble. Roger swerved right where the two men were standing.

His car struck and killed both men.

They were both young, neither older than 24. They hadn't done anything wrong. It was just a tragic case of being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Roger's life is now ruined. He has to forever hold the guilt of leaving parents childless, friends friendless and one little girl fatherless. He is facing vehicular manslaughter charges, among others. He will probably go to jail for a very long time. Three men's lives are over because of one awful decision.

The responsibility of other people's lives in my hands is frightening enough sober, much less drunk.

Even if Roger is found innocent and does not have to go to jail, he will forever be affected by this weekend's events. Not only will he always feel responsible for those deaths, but Roger may never walk again. In the accident he was badly injured, and his legs may never regain their function.

I have always been a firm believer in the importance of having a "DD." Everyone always hears horror stories about drunk driving accidents. I always believed it wouldn't happen to anyone I knew.

Well, even though I was never close with Roger, this has affected me. I have seen my friend distraught and terrified for her friend. Roger was your average college student; it could have been any of us.

It is a reality check of the worst kind.

I took my turn as DD this weekend. I hadn't even heard my friend's story at the time, but I'm glad I was able to safely take all of my friend's home. As much as I hate being designated driver, I take the job very seriously. I have gotten into countless cars with drunk drivers and haven't even realized the danger I had put myself in until I woke up the next morning. The responsibility of other people's lives in my hands is frightening enough sober, much less drunk. I don't think I would ever be able to live with myself if I killed anyone, whether it was my best friend or some innocent person I had never met just because I couldn't give up one night of drinking.

I have never been a part of a drunk driving accident. I never want to be. I do my best to stay out of them. I take my turn as DD, I try to plan out who my driver is ahead of time, and if I end up without a sober ride, I walk or crash at the party. It's pretty easy, and for those of you who are laughing at me and my maternal lecture, I hope you remain as lucky as I have been. But you never know what will happen on your way home from that next party, so be careful. It's not just your own life that you can ruin.

Molly Eggleston is a Collegian columnist.

Attention all Collegian staff writers and columnists:
The first Editor In Chief debate is scheduled for Thurs. 2/26
@ 7 p.m. in the newsroom. Mandatory.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Guster 'keeps it together' at Calvin

Trio dazzles Northampton with new songs and a more mature style

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — With cooperation from Mother Nature, pop-rockers Guster finally made their way to Northampton's Calvin Theatre on Thursday to play to a sold out crowd.

Guster
Calvin Theatre
Northampton
Feb. 19

The performance, rescheduled from its original Dec. 14th date due to snow, was well worth the two-month wait. Although the atmosphere of the show was somewhat different from the usual Guster experience, this time around the musically gifted trio seemed more focused on making the music than making the crowd laugh. The end result was a solid performance with a little something for both new and old Guster fans alike.

As Guster took the stage, they wasted no time in getting right to the music. Opening with "Happier," a track off of 1999's album "Lost & Gone Forever," the crowd seemed immediately willing to get into the show, and likewise, so did the band.

After greeting the audience, Adam Gardner, Brian Rosenworcel and Ryan Miller broke out into "Homecoming King," a song from their latest release, "Keep it Together." The song probably receives its greatest welcome from Bay State crowds, as the refrain triumphantly declares "back in Massachusetts"; the Calvin crowd was no exception as they erupted in cheers the first time the words crossed Ryan's lips.

"Homecoming King" was not alone in the set list as a new track, in fact most of the tracks off of "Keep It Together" made their way to the Calvin stage at some point. "Careful," "Mona Lisa," "Come Downstairs and Say Hello" and "Ramona" were among the newer tracks played. For many in the audience this was the first chance they had to hear the new material and the songs' translation from disc to stage was flawless. The energy the tunes got from the live performance lent the tracks, as well as the musicians, a sort of musical maturity that Guster fans may not be used to seeing, but devotedly welcomed.

The show was highlighted by the primer of a new song, which Ryan said they had "never played in front of anybody" before. "Two at a Time" made an impressive debut, the song seems to be following suit with Guster's continued maturation, musically speaking at least.

The dreary "I Spy" and "Demons" brought the audience down, but songs like last summer's anthem "Amsterdam" and the band's first radio track, the eerily chipper "Fa Fa" were there to bring the crowd right back up again. The rendition of fan-favorite "Barrel of a Gun" was by far one of the best the band has performed to date and reinventions on songs like "What You Wish For" and "Airport Song" added to the power of these tunes, which have always been hailed by fans as among the best Guster has to offer.

Although Adam and Ryan shone at Thursday night's performance, the true star of the evening was percussionist, Brian Rosenworcel. Hypnotic to watch, with each movement the drummer seemed not only to be keeping the beat, but to be the beat himself. The "Thunder God" as he has affectionately been called, stole the show with his extraordinary beats and uncanny sense of rhythm.

An unplugged performance of the

See GUSTER on page 6

Brian Rosenworcel, percussionist, stole Thursday night's show at the Calvin.

From left: Ryan Miller, Brian Rosenworcel, Adam Gardner.

Badfish swims through Pearl Street

Tribute band keeps the music of Sublime alive at Noho show

By Nadia Munson
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Concertgoers who attended Saturday's Badfish show at Northampton's Pearl Street Nightclub were transported to the sunny shores of Long Beach, California within the first few notes played by the Sublime tribute band.

The heat from the red lights warmed the fans and made everybody move to the lines of the bass. The faces of all present were lit up and girls were reaching out their hands to Dave and Joel. The music brought the room to the LBC, but it was Badfish who kept the fans traveling on and brought the true spirit of Sublime to life once more.

Badfish, hailing from Rhode Island, cover all of the revolutionary songs that 90s ska/punk/hip-hop band Sublime played and inadvertently created an entirely new musical culture playing.

If an audience member was to close his or her eyes or turn a back to the stage, it would be all too easy to believe it was Bradley Nowell, Eric Wilson and Bud Gaugh on stage, filling the club with music and making fans tap their feet to some clever, catchy hip-hop/ska tune. But with eyes on the stage, it was made apparent that these were not the Californians that created a music revolution a decade ago. Badfish is comprised of Joel on bass guitar, Dave on guitar and vocals, Scott on drums and Tyler on the keyboard. They looked like a punk rock band mostly because of Dave's mohawk and their sneakers, but they played like Sublime and had the reggae influence vibrating through all of the songs.

Badfish
Pearl Street
Northampton
Feb. 21

COURTESY SKUNKFM.COM

Dave and Joel of Badfish, pictured here playing to a crowd in Baltimore, gave Pearl Street fans a chance to experience a Sublime concert Saturday night.

The sold-out concert brought around 300 people together, singing the songs that they've made love or drank or smoked to. The bar downstairs assisted with the intoxicated eyes; the crowd seemed to believe they were really watching Bradley play his guitar. Their music was very smooth and created an atmosphere people dream of — feeling like you're watching people sing about stuff that matters or about something you've felt and make it beautiful.

After they finished and started to pack their stuff everyone in the crowd started screaming "ONE MORE SONG!" and the band members all looked at each other and returned to stage to play "What I Got," a song ultimately known by everyone who has ever heard of Sublime. A group of girls got on stage and shared a microphone singing "Early in the morning, risin' to the street Light me up that cigarette and I strap shoes on my feet/ Got to find a reason, a reason things went wrong Got to find a reason why my money's all gone" Everyone's body started to rock to the drum kit bellowing beats and the lights started to make bodies sweat and glisten in the bright blues and reds that splayed out around the room.

After Bradley Nowell passed away in 1996 and the band split up, the music definitely lived on. The opportunity to hear those words from a group of guys so driven by Sublime was extremely awe-inspiring. When Dave, the lead singer of Badfish, was asked what he had to say to fans all he said was "Keep Sublime alive!"

COURTESY SKUNKFM.COM

The orginals: Eric Wilson, Brad Nowell and Bud Gaugh of Sublime.

'West Side Stories' tells a different tale

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Staff

"Among all the controversy is anybody listening?"

Had this question been posed five years ago, during the dramatic debate at Amherst Regional High School over whether the "controversial" play "West Side Story" should be produced, chances are the town would have fallen silent. Opposition quickly rose from the Puerto Rican community and counter-strikes were soon to follow. Among the incessant verbal arguing many voices were never heard. In the end authorities ruled that the outdated play used cultural stereotyping and was causing more harm to the community than good.

But how did this decision affect the students?

The hysteria that brewed years ago received national news attention and raised questions of how this decision reflected racial issues in our society. These matters were given the opportunity were open for discussion, rather than debate, for the first time Saturday and Sunday at Bowker Auditorium in "West Side Stories," a presentation by New WORLD Theater. A talented group of high school writers and actors from Pioneer Valley Performing Arts Charter High School interview theater workshop finally performed the truth uncensored.

West Side Stories
Bowker Auditorium
UMass
Feb. 21, 22

With 13 short scenes, feedback from interviews conducted with Amherst community members was reenacted. Stories from students, teachers, and parents of different ethnicities and sexual orientations were told through the young actors. Combined with songs from Bernstein and Laurents' Broadway hit and some original choreography and comedy, and this alternative production of "West Side Story" finally got spotlight attention.

Each scene was influenced by the original play "West Side Story," including the musical outbreaks to the scene titled "The Audition." Casting a show like West Side Story inevitably forces a director to use stereotypes in order to replicate the 1957 production — but what happens when the Puerto Rican actor desires the role of Polish descent, American-born lead Tony?

The parody that ensued on stage forced the high school student to forget all ambitions of the white man's role and instead work on his "machismo" and put his efforts towards the part of Bernardo, the Puerto Rican. The audience could see in this scene how easily the public forgets where stereotyping stems.

The original "West Side Story" is a classic piece of theater that is at the same time a historical interpretation. "West Side Stories" contends that it is when we try to recreate the show forcing people into a

See WEST SIDE on page 6

COURTESY UMASS-EDU

"West Side Stories" examines the public's reaction to racial and social issues that arose when a local high school tried to perform the play.

Chris rocks the Orpheum

By Stephanie Fougy
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON — For hardcore fans of black comedy such as the show "Comic View," seeing Chris Rock live in concert is akin to Tupac Shakur and Biggie Smalls coming back from the dead and doing a tour together. For many hardcore comedy fans, to see Chris Rock was an opportunity to induce a foot stomping, seizure-driven laughter.

Chris Rock
Orpheum
Boston
Feb. 20

In Boston's Orpheum Theater, the lack of diversity in the crowd was troubling, with most of the audience not members of Rock's target audience. Out of the nearly 2,000 people attending the event, maybe only 15 were minorities. Would Chris Rock hold back, or would he adhere to his normal policy of a "no holds barred" comedic routine, given the makeup of the audience? How would Rock respond to an audience filled with people who were likely not who he had in mind when scripting his act?

The curtains went up and the man, the myth, the legend himself — Chris Rock — came out to a chaotic, wild standing ovation. He started off saying how much he loved Boston and even had a summer-house in South Boston. To many in the audience, the comment held a humorous implication and cut some of the tension in the crowd. Yet within the Orpheum there seemed to be a vibe throughout Rock's set that the audience wished him to not to go too far. The comedian seemed to be very aware that he was walking a thin line and seemed somewhat restrained when performing his routine.

Overall, his performance was outstanding, with Rock making cracks about racial issues in the U.S.

"The difference between white people and black people is there are no wealthy black people. There's a difference. Shaq is rich, the white man that signs his check is wealthy."

Exotic dancers were also mentioned in the routine. "When did clear shoes become a stripper thing?" Rock questioned.

The comedian spent sometime exploring relationships, but in one bit, proved no one was safe from his comedic eye. Michael Jackson, the topic of conversation for many in America, didn't escape Rock's wit.

"Another kid? Another kid?" he exclaimed. "That's like another dead white girl showing up at O.J.'s house."

Even magician Roy Horn and rapper Biggie made it into the act; Roy's tiger attack ("That tiger didn't go crazy, that tiger went tiger.") and lack of effort on the government's part to find killers of rap artists ("It shouldn't be that hard, Biggie weighed about 400 pounds, so they had to shoot him for a while.")

Chris Rock ended his show leaving his core audience satisfied. A few, such as an old stuffy male leaning against a stairwell being consoled by an usher as he murmured in disbelief over the usage of the word "cracker" and other obscenities in the show, seemed surprised.

The show opened with a former writer for the Chris Rock show, Mario Joyner, taking the stage. He set the mood for what the show would be like by saying, "If you're offended by the word 'cracker' leave now, because you're gonna hear it a lot tonight!"

Mario Joyner is your mediocre, run-of-the-mill black comedian with nothing special about his act to separate him from the hundreds of others out there, doing the same thing. He seems destined to fall into comedian obscurity, most likely sooner than later.

Courtesy of Wide World Entertainment

Comedian Chris Rock performed at Boston's Orpheum Theater Friday.

Guster makes triumphant return to Calvin band's bluegrass inspired song "Jesus on the Radio," brought the show to a fitting end, as the audience fell silent to hear the vocals and were left awed by the range and power of Guster's talent.

GUSTER from page 5

Opening the show was the Graham Colton Band, who seemed to have some of their own faithful fans in the crowd. After having opened for John Mayer and Counting Crows this summer, the guys seemed right at home on the stage of the Calvin. At times lead singer and guitarist Graham Colton's vocals were reminiscent of Oasis, but the band itself has a unique sound that cannot really be pinned down. The quintet were impressive, and although their sound was a bit more hard rock than the bongo beats of Guster, Graham Colton Band served as a more than suitable opener for the show.

Students examine local scandal in play specific identity based on their culture do we recreate racial segregation and, ultimately, controversy.

WEST SIDE from page 5

Using satire, the students played-out a mock Amherst town meeting. In the scene a woman blurts out, in the middle of a debate about a parking garage being erected, that ARHS will be performing "West Side Story." Community members raising opposition to every issue proved how easily protests arose in that environment.

One monologue pointed out that flags in Amherst were restricted at one time. Even patriotism, before Sept. 11, was protested. Then on the day of the tragedy everyone suddenly became patriotic and the flags were seen again.

Classic depictions of how the media reacted or overreacted with their exclusive coverage of Amherst during the scandal were presented. The news anchors interrupting between scenes added an effective comical element to lighten the aftershock of some of the least expected dialogues.

With its eclectic scenes, "West Side Stories" constantly challenged the reactions of the audience. While promising not to choose sides in telling their stories, instead they wished to mirror real life problems of youth and let people come to their own conclusions. The high school students realized that the problems of our past transcend time and trying to find solutions start with finding a channel for open dialogue. Every few scenes, the confident actors would ask if anyone in the audience was offended by their words or actions. These kids didn't need any reassurance that what they produced was honest.

"West Side Stories" defends art and recognizes its existence is to be questioned. If we are offended by its representations we need to ask each other, and ourselves, why we feel this way. "Art is a catalyst," repeated the ambitious actors, and it shouldn't be censored.

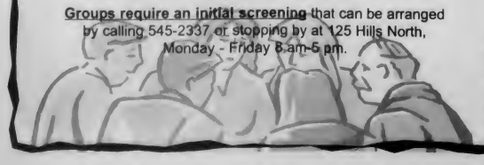
University Health Services
Mental Health Groups Spring 2004

COED SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS
Tuesdays, 2:30-4:00 pm
OR Wednesdays, 3:30-5:00 pm
For college men and women who experience difficulties in interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships.

WOMEN'S EATING ISSUES GROUP
Tuesdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
This is a group for women who are interested in changing negative eating patterns, decreasing food and weight concerns and enhancing self-acceptance. Members will have an opportunity to learn about the underlying dynamics contributing to eating issues and to develop coping strategies.

WOMEN'S SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP
Thursdays, 9:00-10:30 am
This is a group for older undergraduates, graduate students, student dependents, and covered employees. The group provides an opportunity for women to explore personal relationships, work, studies, family of origin, health, acculturation, and other relevant concerns. The group is ongoing with members added as space permits.

ANGER ISSUES GROUP
Thursdays, 1:00-2:30 pm
This group is open to any students who would like to learn how to better manage and understand their anger. Meetings will focus on identifying emotions, memories, and situations that trigger anger, as well as strategies to manage it.



COED SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS
Thursdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
For graduate men and women who experience difficulties with interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Members will have an opportunity to explore personal relationships, work, studies, and other relevant concerns.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Thursdays, 5:15-6:30 pm
Mindfulness is a particular way of paying attention:
- with mindful intention
- in the moment
- without judgment

Although MBSR embraces the acceptance of things as they are without striving, research has shown that, with regular practice, it has the potential to lower stress, anxiety, and depression. It can promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness, and enhance the immune system. Referrals and inquiries may be made to Kathryn Proulx @ 545-2337.

Groups are conducted by Mental Health Division staff.
Payment is deducted from your UHS Basic Plan, Student Health Insurance Plan, GIC, or Health New England plan subject to plan limitation and co-pays.

Groups require an initial screening that can be arranged by calling 545-2337 or stopping by at 125 Hills North, Monday - Friday 8 a.m-5 p.m.

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?

Boston Bartenders School of America
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888

The Catholic Community at the Newman Center invites you to begin the 40 days of the Lenten journey on

Ash Wednesday
February 25, 2004

Distribution of ashes at Masses and at the Prayer Services

8am, 12:15pm, and 7pm Masses
5:15pm and 9pm Prayer Services

The Newman Catholic Center
472 N. Pleasant St.
(Next to Mahar and FAC)
(413) 549-0300
www.umass.edu/catholic

Free & Open to all students
Win Airline Ticketsll
Win Basketball Shoesll
2-Person Shooting Competition
Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed
Shoot Out
$10,000
Register at www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS
QUALIFYING ROUND
Thursday, February 26
7pm - Curry Hicks Cage
CAMPUS FINALS
Saturday, February 28
2pm - Mullins Center
GMAC
Halls Fruit Breezers
new balance basketball
Pontiac
US Airways Caribbean
XBOX
Free Samples From Arrid, Coast, Nestle Crunch, TicTac and UltraMax
Bruno Y Sano
Collegian
kinko's odwalla
wmua

Richard Drew/Associated Press

Crack of the bat
Kazuo Matsui breaks his bat as he takes batting practice at Tradition Field in Port St. Lucie, Fla., yesterday. The 28-year-old Japanese product is beginning his rookie season as the New York Mets' shortstop.

Ortiz: Don't worry about Manny

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — David Ortiz has emerged as one of the AL's most productive hitters and unofficial spokesman for Manny Ramirez.

The second job may be tougher.

Ortiz dresses next to Ramirez in the Fenway Park clubhouse and is friendly with him, but they've spoken to each other just once this offseason.

That's once more than Boston general manager Theo Epstein and manager Terry Francona have talked with Ramirez after leaving several messages, but neither is upset.

The happy-go-lucky slugger will be heard from in his usual spot this season — the No. 4 slot in the Red Sox batting order — despite publicized efforts to unload his $20 million annual salary through waivers and a trade for Alex Rodriguez.

"I had a good relationship with Manny and Manny doesn't talk much," Ortiz said Monday. "I don't know what he's got on his mind right now. Manny's a bagful of news and I just hope everything works out the way everybody expects."

Ortiz worked out for the first time in spring training Monday. Ramirez and all the other position players are expected at Wednesday's first full-squad workout.

Ortiz is good friends with the player who did get traded for Rodriguez. Alfonso Soriano went to Texas when the New York Yankees got A-Rod last week.

"He was kind of disappointed," said Ortiz, who saw Soriano in the Dominican Republic this month. "He just has to keep on going. That's part of the business."

Boston's designated hitter is one of seven key Red Sox players who can become free agents after this season. Epstein has said it's not financially feasible to bring all of them back.

"I always say that it's good to love the game but it's not good to get in love with the team that you play for because things happen," Ortiz said.

He enjoyed playing in Boston last season when he was the biggest surprise in baseball's most productive lineup. Playing in just 128 games, he had 31 homers with 101 RBIs and led the team with 16 game-winning RBIs, one less than AL leaders Hideki Matsui and Eric Chavez.

He was third in the AL in slugging percentage and fifth in MVP balloting. But that was only the third season in which he didn't play in the minors. In 2002 he hit 20 homers and .272 in 125 games with Minnesota.

"Everybody has something to prove every year," Ortiz said.

He also became a key member of a close team, lighting up the clubhouse with his smile and jokes. New manager Terry Francona said some players could be hurt by the pressure of playing before Boston's passionate fans.

"He looked like he just jumped into it and enjoyed every minute of it," Francona said. "He became a better player, a real clutch player."

Ortiz made $1.25 million last year and avoided arbitration this year by agreeing to a $4,587,500 contract. He asked for $5 million and the team offered $4.2 million.

"Boston is a great place to be," Ortiz said, "but tomorrow you don't know where you're going to be."

First base would be a good spot to start.

The lefthanded hitting Ortiz would like to play more there than the 45 games he spent there last season. Righty Kevin Millar is expected to get most of the time at that position and Boston added righthanded DH Ellis Burks in the offseason.

"I'm just 28 years old," Ortiz said. "I don't want to be a full-time DH. I want to have fun in the field."

Francona said it's too early to say how playing time at first base would be divided.

Ortiz doesn't think Ramirez will be affected by Boston's efforts to send him elsewhere.

"He called me one time. He told me, 'Hey, I had nine toes in Texas and one in Boston. What's up with that?'" Ortiz said. "All his toes are still in Boston so right now he's a pro, and I know he's going to come back ready to play."

Coming to terms with Clemens

MERRITT from page 10

come out and fling that ball like he was mad at it.

All of this should suffice as proof that Dec. 13, 1996 was the day Clemens broke my heart. Saying he wanted to play for a contender, he joined the Blue Jays. I'm sure most baseball fans had a good laugh at the lie Clemens was able to spin, but for me, knowing that he'd leave Boston, that he'd change his allegiance so quickly for money, well, maybe that was the day I stopped being a kid.

And then, the unthinkable. Not only was Clemens no longer a Sox pitcher, he moved on to play for the Devil's team. Clemens in pinstripes was enough to make me question my love for baseball. Coming to grips with seeing him applauded in Yankee Stadium took a long, long time, and there's still a hole in my heart left from when he fled Boston for greener pastures.

Today, however, I forgive him. I won't ever forget what Clemens did to me, and to Boston, but I am ready to come to terms with him. You can thank (or blame) Tom Verducci for this. In the latest issue of Sports Illustrated — yes, the one with A-Rod beaming in a Yankee uniform, the latest superstar to scar us all — Verducci covers the relationship between Clemens and fellow Yankee-turned-Astro Andy Pettitte. Turns out, Clemens has a soul after all. He just left it in Texas this whole time. He enjoyed playing in New York, and there's hardly a mention of Boston. But it's clear that he's home now.

As a result of the story, I don't see Clemens as just another face on New York's Mount Rushmore of evil. He's a man. He's a father, and a friend, and a teammate, and most of all, he's a tremendous baseball player. Reading about how he coaxed himself into playing for Houston after Pettitte landed there, learning how important his wife, kids, and fellow Texan's input have been, it's clear that he's not the menacing jackass we all thought he was. In fact, he's very human, a superstar at the end of his career, enjoying another few moments in the spotlight.

But it's not because he's a glory hound. It's because he's a competitor. He's the guy you want on your team, taking the ball in the biggest game of the year. He's a player first and foremost, and although he is a turncoat, although he left me and many others who proudly wear the red 'B' high and dry, for him it's not about money completely. Oh sure, he wants his millions, and yes, he wants that bronze bust in Cooperstown. But right now, it's about putting on the uniform every day, picking up the spheroid, and seeing if he can throw it by another stick-waving behemoth.

I will say that this official fan pardon is likely a direct result of the fact that it's late February, and a few hundred miles south of here, my Red Sox are gearing up for another thrilling season. Hope indeed springs eternal, with Pedro, Nomar, Manny, D-Lowe, and V-Tek returning to take another shot at downing those awful, awful Yankees on the way to the impossible dream, with the help of another certain power pitcher who cuts a similar silhouette to Clemens, only with slightly more intense loyalty.

Mr. Clemens, I'd probably never forgive you if it weren't for the fact that the Sox have a good chance this year. Spring training tends to color my glasses in a rose hue just like I suspect it does for many. So I do forgive you. I wish you the best of luck in Houston, and don't be surprised if a small tear emerges from my eye when you do take your place up there with the immortals among the cow pastures of Northern New York.

I still hope, for the record, that if the Sox meet up with your 'Stros in the series, that my boys kick your butt.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com. Be gentle.

EDITOR IN CHIEF DEBATES THURSDAY AT 7 P.M. IN THE COLLEGIAN NEWSROOM. ATTENDANCE IS MANDATORY FOR COLLEGIAN STAFF.

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Party at
The Blue Wall Pub!

21+ To Drink
18+ To Party

Every Wednesday Open Mic
Come perform for your friends and classmates
First come, first serve
sign-up sheet goes out at 6:00PM every Wednesday
Weekly winners will be awarded a full set Friday night in April!

Every Friday Live Local Music
Friday 2/13 at 7:00PM
Special Guests Pacifica Quartet
in a special intimate encore appearance following their morning performance at the Fine Arts Center.
Friday 2/20 at 7:00PM
Stay Behind and The Skeptics
Friday 2/27 at 7:00PM
Rudy Brown and Natural Descent

Admission to all events is free
Never a cover at the Blue Wall

UMass is shaky at A-10's

TRACK from page 10

the back 50 meters, Budd made her move, accelerating forward, daring anyone to stay with her. No one could.

LaFreniere was excited by Budd's performance.

"She wasn't ranked first in the event, that was a pretty nice upset for UMass," LaFreniere said. "It just goes to show, no one pushes [Elisabeth] Budd around."

LaFreniere cited the distance medley relay as the next highlight of the event. Alexis Anzelone was the lead, running the 1200-meter leg, taking a significant amount of time off of her personal best in the event with a 3:43. Budd was back in action for the 400-meter leg, but showed no sign of fatigue in an excellent time of 59 seconds. Kristen Ford took the baton next for the 800-meter leg, running her second impressive 2:19 for the day, and Kate Markopoulos anchored the relay with a 5:11 mile, her best of the season so far. She took the lead, but in the end fell to anchor Jenna Darcy from La Salle, a notoriously strong miler.

"Markopoulos went out fast, taking the lead and coming through the first half mile in 2:27, which is pretty fast," LaFreniere said. "Unfortunately, [Darcy] caught up to us, but it was still very exciting."

Two members of the relay, Ford and Budd, had already run the 800-meter and the 500-meter, respectively, but LaFreniere saved Markopoulos and Anzelone for only the relay. The team ran 12:15.81, the second best performance overall from the team, according to LaFreniere, who was generally pleased with the team's effort.

"We only had a couple people who didn't reach their potential, probably from nerves, but for the most part I think we stepped up," LaFreniere said.

She does, however, cite the early season training as a setback. The first two weeks were difficult because the women were unable to train at Smith College as they have done in the past, and the turf they usually practice on was frozen solid. Then the team encountered a week of subzero temperatures that prevented outdoor training.

"Because of those first two weeks, I think the team is essentially two weeks behind in their training," LaFreniere said. "I believe the attitudes of the athletes have been very good, we've done the best that we can do with who we have."

Both teams will compete in the New England Indoor Championships starting on Saturday in Boston at 10 a.m.

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Down the stretch

Edris Bailey and the Minutewomen finish off their season hosting George Washington (Thursday) and Rhode Island (Sunday).

Swimmers take A-10 title for fourth time

SWIMMING from page 10

Leonard, the team's freshman sprinter, was a part of all three winning relay teams.

"Having a group of freshmen being so successful in their tournament debut really bodes well for the future," Yarworth said. "Zelmetz and the freshmen are proving to be a key addition to a team that lost ten seniors to graduation last year."

Despite the efforts of sophomore Adrian Blaszczak, the A-10 Outstanding Performer of the Year, the Bonnies could not compete with a Minuteman team (4-1) that ended the weekend with six individual titles and two relay victories.

Blaszazak earned a conference-high 60 individual points, and qualified for the NCAA B qualifiers in the 200-yard back, which he won with a time of 2:00.87. Teammate Randy Kozlowski, last year's A-10 Most Outstanding Diving Performer, also made the NCAA B cut with a score of 480.55 in the three-meter diving competition.

Kozlowski forfeited his diving crown to La Salle freshman Karo Isajan, who lifted a struggling Explorer team to a third place conference finish, with wins in both the one and three-meter events. Isajan's scores earned him an invite to the NCAA B Championships. With two individual titles, Isajan and teammates Eric Limbach and Sean Connors-McBride set a team record for individual victories in the A-10's.

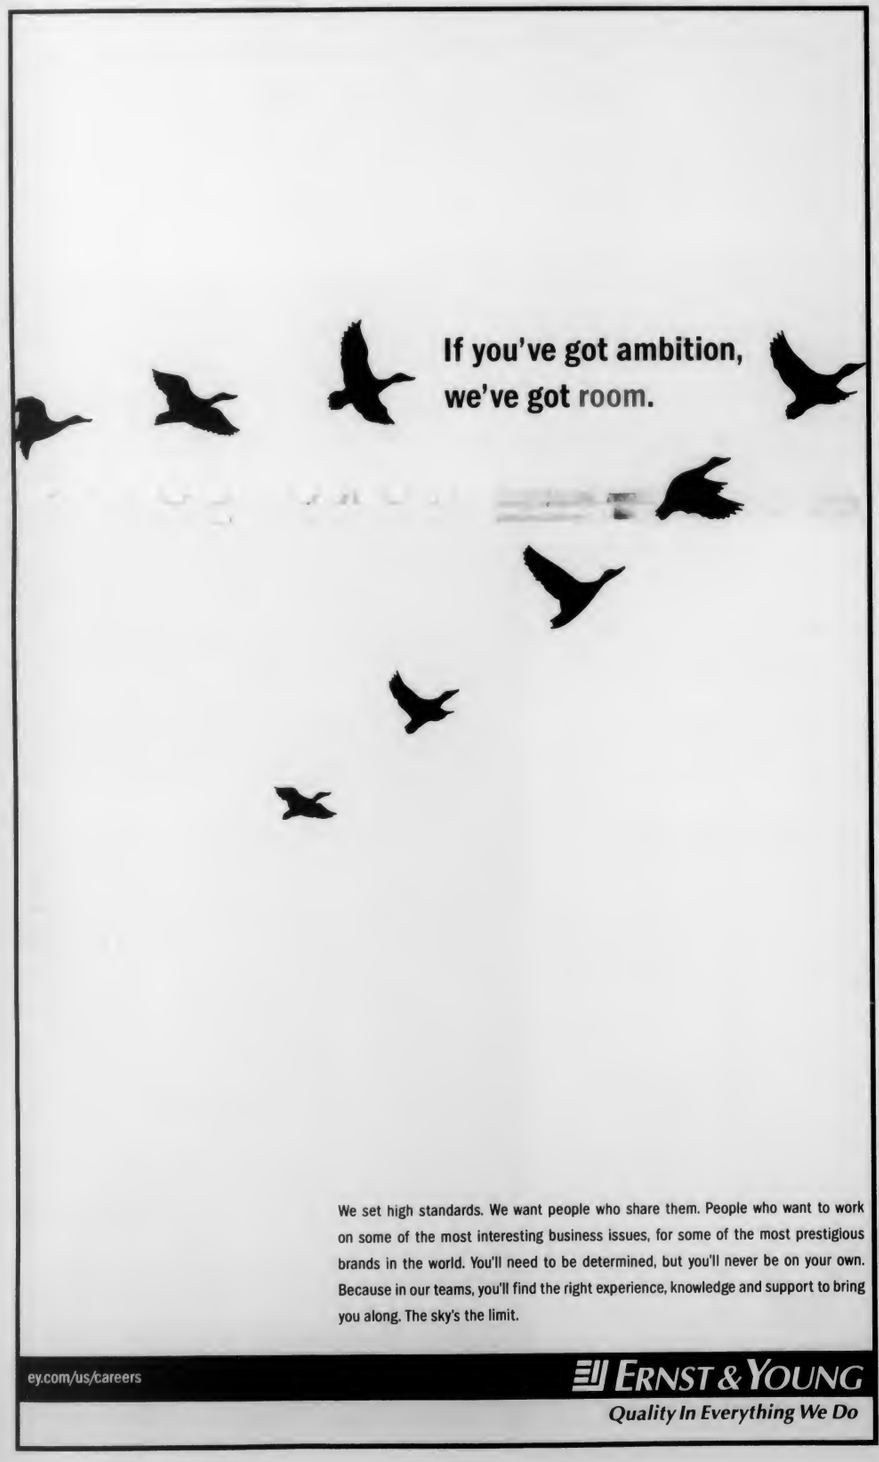
UMass had considerable success on the boards as well, mainly from freshman Mary Jenkins, who took home gold in the one-meter dive on Sunday, with a score of 232.10.

"As a team we did great," UMass diving coach Mandy Hixon said. "We scored as a group, finishing with two men and two women in the top eight in both the one and three-meter events."

Even with a first-place finish in the 1,650-yard free, and 53 total points throughout the weekend, George Washington freshman Sean Flaherty could do little to lift his Colonials above fourth place. Falling to George Washington by a mere 10 points (408-398) was Xavier, a squad that ended the tournament fourth in the swimming-only category. Fordham finished sixth among the eight teams, helped by freshman Niko Felix, who took fourth in the 200-yard breast (2:06.60). Duquesne and Rhode Island repeated as this year's cellar dwellers, finishing with 257.5 and 240.5 points, respectively.

On the women's side, Richmond captured their third straight title in convincing fashion, finishing 442.5 points ahead of second-place St. Bonaventure (447). One individual victory by Elise Gaillard in the 100-yard breast (1:0474) was nowhere near enough to keep the Bonnies close to Richmond.

The Spiders were led by sophomore Brooke Boncher, who earned the honor of A-10 Outstanding Performer after finishing first in the 100-yard free (50.25). Boucher's time set a pool record, and combined with a weekend total of 60 individual points, qualified her for the NCAA B Championships.



Xavier made a strong showing in the swimming events, breaking four school records on the final day. The team would have finished second instead of fourth if it hadn't been for diving points. Senior Molly Moeller and junior Janet Heil set the two individual school records. Both finished fourth overall in the 200-yard back and 200-yard fly, with times of 2:05.98 and 2:07.11, respectively.

Massachusetts finished the weekend in fifth, slipping to Xavier on the tournaments last relay race. Senior captain Diana Alberti, the team's butterfly specialist, led UMass scorers with a second-place finish in the 200-yard fly, one of three events she was a finalist for over the weekend.

"This year's meet was much faster than last year's, all the teams stepped up their times," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "Alberti dropped a few seconds off her fly, and she just missed setting a school record." She is currently second all-time in the 200-yard butterfly.

Senior tri-captains Lauren Rowell, Alberti, and Christen Dexter concluded their collegiate careers on a high note, with a second-place finish in the 200-yard medley relay.

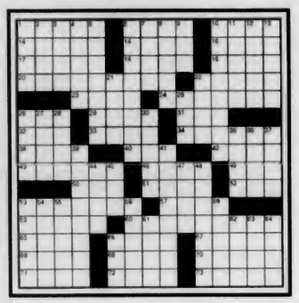
"We scored thirty points more than we did last year, and we easily could have finished fourth," Newcomb said. "But the team put in a terrific effort and the camaraderie helped create a great team atmosphere."

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Quote for the Day

"Your heart is free. Have the courage to follow it."

- "Braveheart"



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Down most
6 Silo companion
10 Keeper, briefly
14 Ragtime's ___ Baker
15 Young horse
16 Pull apart
17 Put on guard
18 Hit dead-center
19 Thunder god
20 Freight hauler of yore (2 wds.)
22 Opera tunes
23 Unhearing
24 Easily mixed
25 Film adds
26 Tony-winning heroine
31 "Vive ___!"
32 Work the soil
33 Flank
34 Orchard unit
38 Longest arm bone
40 Recede
42 Buffy cousin
43 Actor Howards
46 Dots in the Seine
49 Play bumper cars
50 Juice-based drink
51 Disconnect screens
52 Cause a blister
53 Many TV dinners
57 Greenish blue
58 Was meticulous
60 Computer popular (2 wds.)
65 H.H. Munro
66 Rooster Jon Bon ___
67 Pedro's pal
68 Lasso on
69 Undo
70 Earth
71 Fatigued
72 Ice floe
73 Toddler perches

DOWN
1 Smile broadly
2 Fuel
3 Film director ___ Ferrara
4 Brought on board
5 Parlor lunchmeat
6 Rival (2 wds.)
7 Eurasian range
8 Cloudbursts
9 Packers' org.
10 Large
11 Neediness
11 Bovine, in India
12 "Bottoms up!"
13 Condensed
21 Pepsi's concern
22 Fallow or Mostly
26 Moon, poetically
27 Rope (rhym.)
28 Subway junction
29 "Storm Weather" singer
30 Ledger entry
38 Wordsworth or Barrett
39 Nicholson's son
37 Gentle person
39 Getting used to
41 Parting dry
44 Pop singer Adams
45 Putty or Sandra
48 Now, overseas
47 Navy helicopter
53 Pass and vote
54 Prairie tribe
55 Keepsake
56 Range or select
58 Dust
61 Declare
62 Your highness
63 Prefix
64 Looks sleepy
66 Position

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
February Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Beans & Rice (vegan)
- Gardenburger Riblets (vegan)

DINNER
MARDI GRAS
- Chicken, Shrimp & Andouille Gumbo
- Catfish Lafitte
- Southern Fried Steak
- Dirty Rice with Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 38
- Low: 13

WEDNESDAY
- High: 36
- Low: 11

FRIDAY
- High: 39
- Low: 19

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Katie Dwan
PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub/ Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Get yourself together. Now is not the time to fall apart.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Put your money in your pocket, not where your mouth is. Money is dirty.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
What are you doing? Put your pants back on, nobody needs to see that.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Nobody likes your pink sweater. Stop wearing it.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Forget the pain and remember the pleasure.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Save the trees!

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Surprise! There is someone who wants you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You need to move away. People want you far away from them.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Video games are fun. Play them more often.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
No. I'm watching you!

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
I think it's funny when you trip over your shoelaces.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
There are a lot of more important things in life then Cheetos.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 BMWE 5SPD 268K miles Runs great Must sell $1,000.00 413-531-7580

Fast! One Owner Car 5Speed Ford Probe SE 1996 Well cared for Must Sell $1495.00 413-687-7510

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Cierra, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc.

AUTO FOR SALE

For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

500 Camp Jobs. NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 4,5,6 + March 18,19,20. Check out our website at www.wychmerchatbor.com + Call Amy at 508-432-1000 x129 for details.

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272 www.aroundcampus.com

Summer nanny position caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall full-time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

FOR RENT

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 BDRM House on Main St. Bus Line Heat Include. 1800/Mo. Call Aaron 413-256-8747

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004: Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertmicholsesq.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sox will still be plenty of fun in 2004

Dan Duggan

Sports fans in general, and Red Sox fans in particular, are prone to making knee-jerk reactions. Such was the case when the news of the Alex Rodriguez trade broke. Fans from every corner of Red Sox Nation lamented about the one that got away, and the Yankees were all but sized for their World Series rings.

Now that the trade has been finalized, and the focus now turns to sunnier locations for the start of spring training, it is time for Red Sox fans to come back in off their ledges. Things truly are not as bad as many initially thought. First, the Sox will be trotting out a pretty strong team when they take the field on opening day in Baltimore. Second, one could still argue that the moves the Sox made this winter are better than those the Yankees made. And finally, simply acquiring the highest-paid athlete in the history of sports does not guarantee a championship (see: Texas Rangers).

For much of the off-season, the Red Sox front office had been commended for its deals that landed the team both the best starting pitcher available, Curt Schilling, and the best relief pitcher available, Keith Foulke. But now because of the failure to get A-Rod, the Sox brass has been widely criticized. The Sox made a decision that the amount of money they would lose wouldn't be worth the addition of Rodriguez. With the money saved from the Rodriguez deal, Boston was able to resign Trot Nixon, David Ortiz and Byung-Hyun Kim, all core players on last year's team. Also, the front office had next year in mind when not completing the deal, as Pedro Martinez, Derek Lowe, Jason Varitek, Scott Williamson, Nomar Garciaparra, and Ortiz all are set to become free agents. The Sox would have lost a considerable amount of financial flexibility if they tied up all of their money in A-Rod.

Ultimately the Sox have managed to improve a team that was only five outs away from a berth in last year's series. The only impact player they lost was second baseman Todd Walker. Boston filled that hole with Pokey Reese, a speedier and better defensive player, and managed to sure up the only weak spots their roster had. Starting pitching has been a problem for the Sox in recent years behind Pedro Martinez, Derek Lowe, and Tim Wakefield. G.M. Theo Epstein made it his personal mission to fix this problem and he landed the Sox a top-of-the-line starter in Curt Schilling. A rotation of Martinez, Schilling, Lowe, Wakefield, and Kim is easily the best and deepest the Sox have fielded in quite some time.

The other major problem last year's team had was its shaky bullpen, as neither the infamous bullpen-by-committee nor Kim was the answer. The addition of Keith Foulke as the closer immediately solidifies the bullpen. All of the other additions to this year's team have a Belichick-esque feel to them, as the final roster spots have been filled out by solid veterans, such as Ellis Burks and Tony Womack.

A look at the Yankees roster shows that this team is not quite a lock to win the World Series. There are many questions surrounding this team, mainly how manager Joe Torre will handle all of the egos he has been given by George Steinbrenner. This probably won't turn out to be as big of a problem as some suspect because Torre has shown in his tenure that he is excellent at dealing with big-name players, as well as handling the spotlight of N.Y. and the constant meddling of Steinbrenner.

The bigger question in New York is whether or not the Yanks truly improved over last year's team. Clearly, Rodriguez is an upgrade over just about anyone, but if a player is close to him, it is the player the Yankees gave up in the deal, Alfonso Soriano. Also, A-Rod may not prove to be much of a defensive upgrade, as he has only played third base for one inning in his entire career.

The other major offensive additions the Bronx Bombers made were Gary Sheffield and Kenny Lofton. Lofton, who is now on his sixth team in four years, simply is not the threat he once was. Sheffield is, no doubt, an outstanding offensive player, but at 35 is due to make $39 million over the next three seasons. It's safe to say most Sox fans let out a sigh of relief when Steinbrenner pulled the trigger on this deal rather than waiting and signing the more talented, and much younger, Vladimir Guerrero.

The biggest change to the Yankees came in the starting rotation. Reliable veterans Andy Pettitte, David Wells, and Roger Clemens, have all relocated. Their spots have been filled by: Kevin Brown, never known for his durability or work ethic; Javier Vazquez, a pitcher with great potential but one that has never pitched outside of the baseball wasteland of Montreal; and Jon Lieber, who hasn't pitched in two years due to an elbow injury. Certainly New York will make a move to improve its rotation before the trading deadline, but this still is the weakest the Yanks' pitching staff has been going into a season under Joe Torre.

This season is shaping up to be one of the best ever. There are huge expectations all over the league, as almost every contender made moves to improve their club. But most of the focus will be on the rivalry between the Sox and Yankees, which has grown to unprecedented heights. It is most likely that both teams will battle all season, but that the Yankees will come out on top in the AL East.

The Sox should grab the Wild Card and have another tough first round series with whoever wins the West. The Yanks figure to roll over whatever patsy limps out of the Central and then engage in another classic duel with the Sox in the ALCS. As for what will happen then, it's far too early for that type of prediction, but this much is certain: new manager Terry Francona better not hesitate to hand the ball over to Foulke if the Sox have the lead late in Game 7.

Dan Duggan is a Collegian columnist.

Entertaining greatness

Anthony Anderson and the Minutemen will host No. 2 St. Joseph's Wednesday night at the Mullins Center, as the Hawks bring their pristine 24-0 record to Amherst. Tipoff is at 7 p.m.

Forgiving the Rocket

Andrew Merritt

This might be the hardest thing I've ever written. I've done hours upon hours of soul-searching, considering the options, and trying to understand exactly what I'm saying in this column. It's a painful thing to write, but I'm hoping it will simply be the sting of ripping off the bandage. I forgive you, Roger Clemens.

For those of you who aren't already scanning to the bottom of this piece to copy down my email address — and feel free, I understand the criticism — I'll go on.

I'm sure my memories of Roger Clemens echo those of many Sox fans. I was the kid who made sure to keep buying baseball card packs until I finally got the card with his image, the quintessential power-pitcher blowing a little smoke by some unlucky unseen batter. I curved the brim of my cap the same way — not too flat, not too bent. When we had to do a presentation on our role model in fourth grade, I went with none other than No. 21 himself, dressing up in full baseball attire, from my Red Sox cap, to my replica jersey, to my little league baseball pants, even all the way down to my black cleats. I recanted the thrilling moments of Roger's first 20-strikeout performance, boring my classmates to death with descriptions of all the pitches that beat Seattle's Phil Bradley.

A look at any rare tape of me pitching in my high school days will also reveal that my delivery is intended to be a carbon copy of his, right up to the glove held just below my eyes before I begin the motion.

I have loved the Red Sox for longer than I've been able to speak. Even more rare is the baby picture that shows me in a Red Sox outfit, still at an age you would count by months. And while any trip to Fenway was — and still is — thrilling for me, the best ones were when I got to see Roger pitch. When I'm on my deathbed, and my life is flashing before my eyes, I'm absolutely sure that one of the most vivid images will be of Fenway, sitting under the roof at the bandbox, listening to Elton John's "Rocket Man," waiting for my hero to

See MERRITT on page 7

Mark of excellence

Fourth straight A-10 title for Minutemen

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The top six swimming and diving teams in the Atlantic 10 Conference finished the season in the same order as last year — good news for the Massachusetts men, who captured their fourth consecutive A-10 title over the weekend.

Unlike last year's come-from-behind victory over St. Bonaventure on the last day of the tournament, The Maroon and White led throughout the weekend, en route to becoming the second team in conference history to win four straight titles. UMass finished 254.5 points ahead of second-place St. Bonaventure, with 840 points.

Missouri transfer Justin Zeimetz led the Minutemen from start to finish in his A-10 tournament debut, winning the 50-yard freestyle on Thursday with a career-best time of 20.84. His mark was the sixth fastest in UMass history. On Friday, Zeimetz won the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 51.99, and on Saturday he took gold in the 100-yard free (45.31).

"What Justin did was very impressive, to be able to win three individual titles and then be part of both winning relay teams, really shows the kind of condition [Zeimetz] is in," said UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth, who was named the A-10 Coach of the Year for the fifth consecutive season.

Zeimetz teamed up with senior Sean Collins, junior Ryan Matthews, and freshman Gordon Leonard on Thursday, to capture the team's first relay victory, in the 200-yard free relay (1:22.84). On Saturday, junior Owen Scollan stepped in for Collins as Zeimetz's relay team took top honors in the 400-yard free relay.

Captain Connor Townsend, part of a senior core of swimmers who finished their collegiate careers with a perfect 4-0 record at the A-10's, swam the 200-yard butterfly in 1:51.10, earning him a top spot in on the final day of racing.

Several other UMass swimmers finished the meet with individual titles, including freshman Evan Swisher and Greg Chartier, who won the 200-yard back and 400-yard individual medley, with times of 1:51.68, and 3:59.7, respectively.

See SWIMMING on page 8

Rough road for UMass

By Brendan Hall and Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's indoor track squads encountered some turbulence this week at the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Going into Saturday's meet at the University of Rhode Island, coach Ken O'Brien said his men would have to be "letter perfect" if they were to hang with the likes of A-10 powerhouses URI, LaSalle and St. Joseph's.

"Letter perfect we weren't," O'Brien said. "It wasn't a disaster, but I left the meet saying we should have done better. I was happy with the way the kids competed, but I think we left a little on the track."

The Minutemen totaled 66 points on the day, good enough for fifth out of seven teams, on a day that saw six New England Indoor Championships-qualifying performances for the Maroon and White.

Sprinter Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng.

Senior Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng retained his title as the A-10 Champion in the 55-meter dash, clocking in at 6.34 seconds. Winning both the preliminary and final rounds, Frimpong-Boateng maintains his season-long streak of first-place finishes in the 55, now standing at five. The run also qualified him for New Englands as well as the IC4A Championships.

"Kwesi likes the Rhode Island track; he runs well down there," O'Brien said. "He runs well any place, but he's had his best time down there, and he came a hundredth of a second off [Saturday]. You can't even hear a hundredth of a second. It was a nice day for him."

Freshman Steve Gamble was the biggest surprise on the day, taking third in the shot put with a toss of 43-11 3/4 and fifth in the weight throw with 33-8 1/2. All in all, Gamble and Frimpong-Boateng tied for a team-high 10 points each, nearly one-third of the team's total.

"We need to build up our strength in the throwing area, but Steve gives us a nice, young person who can do several events. He needs to get a little stronger and pick up some technique, and he'll be great, as he's done already [for us]," O'Brien said.

The mile relay foursome of Dave Falvey, James Godinho, John O'Neil and Joseph McCormack punched their ticket to the New Englands with a second-place performance of 3:20.31. Godinho and O'Neil will also be heading to the Championships in the 500, finishing fourth and fifth in the event, respectively.

The two-mile relay set of John Jacobsen, Dave McMenamy, Matt Clark, and Jon Korhonen will also be heading to Boston, as they qualified for New Englands with a third place finish of 7:56.62. Korhonen also qualified for the meet in the mile, taking fourth with a season-best 4:18.29.

Senior Glenn Opie was back on top of things in the high jump, placing fourth with a leap of 6-3 1/4. Fellow jumper Henry Smith was also a high finisher, keeping consistent with a fifth-place performance in the triple jump of 45-1 1/2.

The Rhode Island Rams repeated as A-10 Champions Saturday with 199 points. The LaSalle Explorers came close behind in second with 173.

The UMass women scored 41 points overall, placing eighth out of nine teams in the A-10 Championship meet last weekend. The highlight of the meet by far for the Minutewomen was A-10 Champion Elisabeth Budd, who ran what Coach Julie LaFreniere referred to as 'the race of her life.'

Though she was caught behind a tight pack for most of the race, on the first straightaway of the last lap, Budd pulled forward. The pack was running wide, so she pushed up through the inside. In

See TRACK on page 8

Lady Dukes catch fire from 3-point land

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The Duquesne women's basketball team could not miss from downtown last week.

Led by sophomore Aiga Bautre's 4-for-4 effort from 3-point land, the Dukes hit 12 3-pointers, tying the program's single-game record, on route to a 74-58 victory at Dayton Thursday. Seniors Candice Futrell and Shiri Sharon had three treys each on the record-setting day.

The record only lasted a few more days, as the Lady Dukes went on to knock down 13 3-point attempts at home, breaking the single-game mark. The 13 3-pointers paced Duquesne to a 77-60 victory over A-10 West leader George Washington and its ninth-straight win at home. Bautre matched her previous shooting display, sinking four 3-point attempts, as Futrell connected on 5-of-10 attempts.

Futrell has been on fire lately with back-to-back 28-point games and a double-double (28 points, 11 rebounds) against GW.

Tournament Time

The regular season is winding down and each team will be looking to finish strong before heading to Philadelphia for the A-10 tournament. Only 10 days away from the first round, there are still a few spots up in the air, but the top seeds are out of reach.

The reigning A-10 champion, George Washington, is again the favorite to win the tournament as No. 1 out of the West. This Sunday could also be a preview of the eventual A-10 final with GW slated to face Temple, No. 1 out of the East.

The best spot open for the taking is the No. 2 West slot. The Dukes' shooting display this past week helped them to a slight lead over Richmond for No. 2. It all comes down when these two teams meet on Thursday at Duquesne. Richmond won the last time the teams met, 81-62, at Richmond. The winner will clinch the No. 2 spot in the West and earn a bye through the first round.

For the East, St. Joseph's and Rhode Island will be the No. 2 and No. 3 teams out of the East. The No. 4 and 5 seeds come down to who wins on Thursday, when Fordham and St. Bonaventure clash. If Fordham wins, it will clinch the spot. Should Fordham lose and then get beat by the Hawks, St. Bonaventure will sneak into the No. 4 slot. Rounding out the East will be UMass at No. 6.

The No. 4 and 5 in West are up for grabs as Xavier and La Salle have identical A-10 records. The Musketeers have a good chance at No. 4 with their last game slated against the worst team in the West, Dayton, Thursday. But if they lose, the Explorers can snag the fourth spot with a win over Temple on Thursday.

Notebook

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 89

'Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen' bombs
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

Minutemen to host undefeated No. 2 St. Joseph's
SPORTS, PAGE 10

Bracey addresses racial inequality in U.S. school systems

By Amanda Bossi
Collegian Correspondent

"We had segregation for 100 years. Why don't we have affirmative action for the next 100 years?" said Professor John H. Bracey Jr. yesterday afternoon.

In his discussion, titled "Du Bois & Bond: Black Education in the Age of Jim Crow," Bracey explained W.E.B. Du Bois' and Horace Mann Bond's feelings toward education for blacks during their time as civil rights leaders, as well as the current state of education in the United States.

Bracey said that the United States is in the same place today as it was 50 years ago when dealing with inequality in schooling between races.

"Segregation in education is tied to residential segregation as much now as it was in 1954. The notion that people aren't debating about what it means to have separate schools is false," he said.

Using the Washington D.C. public school system as an example, Bracey said that currently, there is no chance for integration in schools, simply because the majority of children attending the schools are either black or Latino. There are no Caucasian residents living in the area to integrate themselves in the schools. During 1954 attempts at integration made in the Washington D.C. public schools failed as they do today.

"As fast as we were coming in they were running out," said Bracey.

Bracey said that Du Bois and Bond would feel that in order to fix the wrongs in today's education system, the problems with economic and social maldistribution must be changed first. This would in turn change schools.

The type of education one receives has "nothing to do with anything except where you're born," said Bracey.

He gave examples of school systems in the area and how they were different from one another in educational resources and funding.

He chastised the United States for their inconsistency in curriculums throughout public schools in comparison to Europe. Bracey feels that schools in European nations have much more uniform curriculums.

When an audience member asked whether Bracey supported integrated schools or segregated schools, Bracey said that he does not strongly support either because they are both different choices that cannot be compared. He said that it's most important for students "to be somewhere where the teachers understand your needs."

He explained that moving to a new location for better schooling is a viable solution for an individual, but it does not solve the problem in the population as a whole.

Bracey's speech commemorated the 165th birthday of W.E.B. Du Bois and the 50th anniversary of the famous United States Supreme Court case Brown vs. Board of Education.

On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court made the decision to end racial segregation in public schools.

Du Bois' birthday was Feb. 22. The speech was held at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library on the UMass campus yesterday.

Professor Bracey has been a member of the UMass Department of Afro-American Studies since 1972. He is the author of numerous books on the African American experience, with focus on African American social history. He also was editor of the microfilm version of the Horace Mann Bond papers. Currently, he is working on two separate as-yet-untitled monographs. The University of Massachusetts Amherst Libraries and the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of Afro-American Studies sponsored the talk.

Prof. John H. Bracey Jr. of the University of Massachusetts Afro-American Studies department gave the lecture "Du Bois & Bond: Black Education in the Age of Jim Crow" yesterday at the W.E.B Du Bois library.

MIT professor Noam Chomsky criticizes American foreign policy

Noam Chomsky, MIT linguistics professor and author, speaks to a packed auditorium last night in Bowker Auditorium on the topics of Third World democracy and American foreign policy.

By Yousef Munayyer
Collegian Staff

"We like [the Third World] to have democracy," said Professor Noam Chomsky, referring to the United States government. "As long as the do what we say."

The controversial Massachusetts Institute of Technology linguistics professor and accomplished author took the stage to give the lecture entitled "Iraq and Beyond" at 7 p.m. last night.

A crowded Bowker Auditorium erupted in applause as the professor took the stage.

With the auditorium packed to its 704-seat capacity with students, professors, and faculty members, hundreds of spectators were not permitted entry. The room was packed 40 minutes before Professor Chomsky took the stage.

His lecture last evening was supposed to focus on Iraq; however, the general issue addressed by Chomsky was American foreign policy.

"One fundamental truism we must answer to is, are we or are we not going to apply the standards we apply to others to ourselves?" Chomsky said, referring to how the rhetoric of American foreign policy does not always match its actions.

Chomsky is known as an outspoken critic of American foreign policy. Having gained much recognition in the Vietnam War years, his name resurfaced in the headlines and his books became popular sellers again after the events of Sept. 11.

Chomsky highlighted what he believes to be the hypocritical nature of American foreign policy. The 75-year-old professor attached brief history lessons to all the points he emphasized. He likened modern American foreign policy to the writings of Adam Smith, an author who Chomsky says we are "trained to worship but not to read."

He explained that the world through the prism of American foreign policy today is similar to the world Adam Smith was analyzing earlier in the century except the manufacturers and merchants of then are the International Monetary Fund and international corporations of today.

He used Smith's theory's to shed light on the current situation in Iraq and the prospects of American corporations in line to control the Iraqi economy.

"Forced imposition of market principles in countries that are militarily controlled is basically what created the Third World," he said referring to Iraq today and many other nations in the past.

Chomsky, who has been a critic of international corporations and their influence on the third world, explained how these corporations are a driving force in the policy planning of today.

The professor expressed his analysis of the Bush Doctrines and the "visions" of the Bush administration. He called the National Security Strategy, the policy of the Bush administration announced in Sept., 2002, "an open call for global domination" and he also likened "Kissengerian Realism" to Nazism.

Chomsky explained that this policy was the outcome of theories that had been in the works for years before the Bush Administration. He talked about how this has always been the foreign policy of the United States since the presidency of Theodore Roosevelt but also noted that the Bush Administration was the first to bluntly "slam it in your face"

Speaking on the second Bush doctrine, which he identified as the policy of attacking nations that harbor terrorists, he exploited instances in history in which he claims the United States was guilty of violating that very doctrine. He pointed out that the United States has offered pardons and safe haven to known terrorists and criminals.

One example used was Emmanuel Constant, who was wanted in Haiti for committing atrocities but never turned over. Chomsky also spoke about Shiekh Omar Abdul Rahman, who was wanted by Egyptian authorities but never turned over. Shiekh Omar was later indicted for masterminding the bombing of the World Trade Center in 1993.

"Well, that worked out well didn't it," said Chomsky.

Concerning the Bush Administrations "vision" of bringing democracy to the Middle East and the world, Chomsky believes that the real candid motives of the administration are resources and the interests of corporations.

Chomsky's speech ended with an immediate standing ovation and he entertained questions for a half an hour.

The lecture was sponsored by the Political Economy Research Institute and is the first in an inaugural lecture series. The next lecture is on March 31 and will be on Economics and Consumer Culture.

Earthquake strikes in Morocco yesterday

By Ali Naji
Associated Press

AL HOCEIMA, Morocco (AP) — A powerful earthquake devastated an isolated, picturesque region of northern Morocco on yesterday, killing more than 560 people as they slept, injuring hundreds more and laying ruin to villages that suffered for decades under government neglect.

Rescuers with pick axes and sniffer dogs were searching for survivors trapped under the rubble of their fragile mud-and-stone homes, which crumbled easily in the 6.5-magnitude temblor. Victims were most likely women, children and the elderly because men in the region tend to emigrate to the Netherlands and Germany in search of work, said Mohammed Ziane, a former human rights minister.

The quake, which rattled apartment buildings as far away as southern Spain, destroyed rural communities near the coastal city of Al Hoceima, a hideaway tucked between the Rif Mountains and the Mediterranean Sea that draws European tourists with its sandy beaches.

The death toll climbed steadily throughout the day as rescuers began reaching the hard-hit areas and finding corpses, officials said. The official MAP news agency said

See QUAKE on page 1

SOE encourages minority students to pursue jobs in the teaching profession

By Ikaika C. Arnaiz
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts School of Education is holding a minority recruitment initiative in hopes of encouraging students of color to pursue professions in elementary and secondary education, through the school's master degree licensing program.

In the United States, the number of public school children from various ethnic backgrounds is growing, but the ethnic range among teachers does not meet the same eclectic. At UMass, the SOE has embarked on a campaign to change the teacher demographic.

"The public school student population continues to have a more and more diverse student body, higher percentages of color in our public schools, and if you look at some numbers by 2010 there's going to be 40 per cent students of color, but the teacher population is losing teachers of color," said Ray Sherick, certification officer at the SOE.

The SOE is focusing the minority recruitment initiative particularly toward elementary and secondary education because grade school and middle school is the principal time when children form their ideas about social identity and culture.

"We're particularly targeting recruitment into elementary and secondary teaching because they are such strategically important positions as in terms of . . . their role models," said Andrew Effrat, dean of the SOE. "[They have] a lot of visible impact."

The minority recruitment initiative task force, at this time, has not enrolled as many colored students in its program as wanted.

"The success has been limited so far, I don't think we recruited a very diverse student population, yet we're hoping to change that in terms of changing people's awareness," said Effrat.

The students of the SOE have helped to motivate the efforts by recruiting undergraduate seniors at the Campus Center and finding other ways to convey information about the program.

"Recently our efforts have [really been] spearheaded by a couple of graduate students, Mala Pandya and Audilia Deandradeau, they have really taken initiative themselves and help stimulate us as a school, and we've really focused on spreading the word and recruiting students into our one year masters program," said Sherick.

Students of the SOE have also felt the need to recruit more colored students to help reach their goal.

"I felt the only way to really meet that objective is to recruit a more diverse teacher applicant pool," said Pandya.

The SOE is also reaching out to underclassmen to spark their interest in pursuing a career in teaching.

"We're going to continue through the rest of the semester to actively recruit undergraduates here who are freshman, sophomores, juniors who aren't ready for master degree programs," said Sherick. "Then also reach out to public school guidance counselors."

Students should be aware that job openings in the teaching field are going to increase in the next few years.

"People should have the sense that job openings are there and coming even more so as the current profession retires," said Effrat. "Probably close to half the present teaching force is likely to retire across the country. In this region the demographics are such that there will be a lot of openings, a lot of opportunities."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

February 25 - March2 2004

Today

University of Massachusetts — Dennis Kucinich, Democratic National Candidate, will deliver a speech and answer questions at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. This event is co-sponsored by Students and Teachers for Dennis Kucinich, University Dems, PRIDE Alliance, and OAA.

University of Massachusetts — At 5 p.m., "Take Back the Night" will have having a general meeting at 5 p.m. in the Campus Center Room rooms 167 through 175. This is a meeting seeking to organize bringing "Take Back the Night", an event designed to educate the public about sexual violence, back to campus. The public is invited to attend.

Hampshire College — In honor of Black History Month, Project Concern youth Dance Company, a hip-hop dance company from Boston, will perform African jazz movements mixed with gymnastics and street freestyle to pop and rap music in an interactive performance at 7 p.m. in the Main Dance Studio of the Music and Dance Building.

Tomorrow

Smith College — John J. Collins, Holmes Professor of Old Testament Criticism and Interpretation at Yale University, will give a lecture entitled, "Before the Fall: Adam and Eve in the Jewish Wisdom Literature" at 5 p.m. in Seelye 201. A reception will follow the lecture.

University of Massachusetts — Trockadero de Monte Carlo, the Big Ballet Boys Parody with Sass, will perform at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets cost $7 to $15 for students, $10 to $35 for the general public and are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office. More information is available at www.trockadero.org.

Friday 27

University of Massachusetts — The Student Union Craft Center will host an Open Mic night at 7:30 p.m. Sign-ups to perform will begin at 7 p.m. Feature Literary, comedy, music and art performances are welcome.

Hampshire College — The Renowned Chancel Choir of Harlem's Abyssinian Baptist Church will perform an original concert of gospel music titled, "Somebody's Calling My Name: A History of Worship Through Song" in the Roberts Crown Center .The choir was founded by the Reverend Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. and has a global reputation and attracts thousands of worshipers and visitors to the historic Abyssinian Baptist Church in New York City each year. Admission is free but tickets should be reserved in advance by calling 559-5301.

University of Massachusetts — ALANA will host the event "A Revolutionary Convening: The Vision of June Jordan" which will begin at 7:30 p.m. with a keynote address by Sonia Sanchez in the Student Union Ballroom. On Saturday, there will be a roundtable discussion from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. on various subjects including: Art and Politics, Revolutionary Pedagogy, US Anti-racism and Anti-sexism, and anti-imperialist Struggles.

At 8 p.m., local wind musicians led by Christopher Raphael, oboe, will perform "Music for Piano and Winds" at the South Congregational Church. South Congregational Church is located at 1066 South East Street, Amherst. Music included in the concert will be a Sonata for Oboe and Piano by Pierre deBreville, Sonata for Bassoon and Piano by Hindemith, quintet for Piano and Winds by Muzart and a Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano by Francis Poulenc.

Saturday 28

University of Massachusetts — At 8 p.m., ALANA will host a performance event entitled, "Blueprints for Revolution" featuring Sonia Sanchez, Kate Rigg, Leeta Neely, Jane Sapp and the Voices of Today, Magdalena Gomes, Evelyna Harris, and NWT's Project 2050 in Bowker Auditorium.

University of Massachusetts — David Holland Big Band, 2003 Grammy Award Winner for best large jazz ensemble album, will perform at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets ranges from $7 to $15 for Five College students, $10 to $35 for the general public and are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Sunday 29

Mount Holyoke College — Dave Anderson, world-raveled climber and NOLS instructor, will lead a worship entitled, "How to Plan, Fund and Complete your Dream Adventure" at 8:30 a.m. in 306 Clapp Hall. This is a day-long workshop and admission is free.

At 2 p.m., Amherst Books will host a party in celebration of the publication of "KnitLit Too: Stories from Sheep to Shawl... and More Writing About Knitting," edited by Molly Wolf and Linda Roghaar, an Amherst resident. Many local contributors to the publication will be reading from their contributions. Bring your knitting.

Easthampton's Old Crow Review hosts a night of readings by its contributors at 7 p.m. in Amherst Books. Join for an evening of poetry and fiction readings.

Monday 1

Belchertown High School — The American Red Cross will have a blood drive from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at

Smith College — From 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., open auditions will be hosted for Smith's Spring Festival of One-Act plays at the Mendelhall Center for Performing Arts. Plays are to be announced. Callbacks will occur on Tuesday, Mar 2 from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Smith College - Jonathan Lipman, professor of history and chair of Asian studies at Mount Holyoke College, will lecture on, "Jews Living in a Confucian Culture: Being Jewish and Being Chinese" at 7:30 p.m. in the Neilson Library Browsing Room. The lecture will explore the contribution of the Jews in the Middle Kingdom since the seventh century A.D.

Tuesday 2

Smith College — Sulak Sivaraksa, noted Thai Buddhist peace and environmental activist and scholar, will speak on, "Buddhist Identity in the Modern World" at 4:30 p.m. in Graham Hall of Hillyer in the Brown Fine Arts Center. This lecture is sponsored by the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute project for 2003-04, "TransBuddhism: Transmission, Translation, and Transformation."

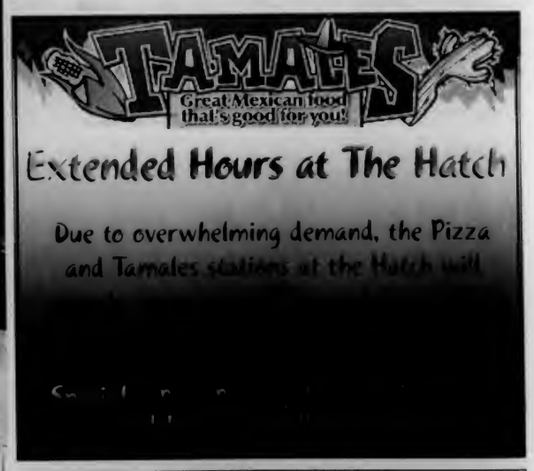
Edu. secrectary calls teachers' union a 'terrorist organization'

By Ben Feller
Associated Press

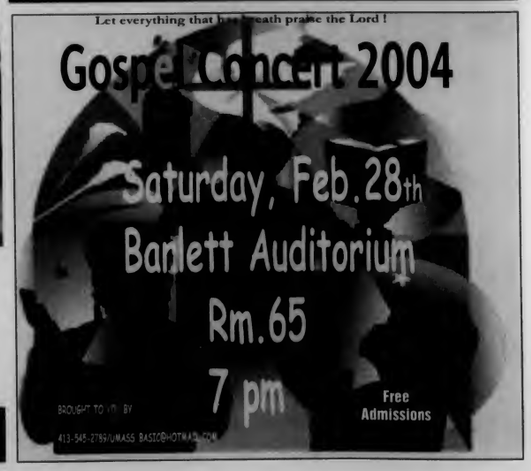
WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Education Association asked President Bush on Tuesday to fire Education Secretary Rod Paige for calling the union a "terrorist organization."

The White House said Paige's job was safe.

Paige, who made his comment in a private meeting with governors Monday, later apologized for his choice of words but maintained the union uses "obstructionist scare tactics" in its fight over the nation's education law.



Reg Weaver, president of the union of 2.7 million teachers and other school workers, said Tuesday that those members deserve more than "unfair labels and mean-spirited apologies."



"Our members say that once again this national leader has insulted them, this time beyond repair, with words filled with hatred and merely because they raised legitimate concerns about the president's so-called 'No Child Left Behind' law," Weaver asked Bush "to express his regret to the nation's educators and demand that Secretary Paige step down."

Paige said he is not leaving.

"I have a job to do and that is to make sure that we remain steadfast in our efforts to provide a quality education to all our children – every single one," Paige said. "I remain committed to ensuring that the promise of No Child Left Behind — getting all of our nation's students reading and doing math at grade level — is fulfilled."

Bush backs amendment to prohibit same-sex partners

Civil unions are acceptable alternative

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jumping into a volatile election-year debate on same-sex weddings, President Bush yesterday backed a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage — a move he said was needed to stop judges from changing the definition of the "most enduring human institution."

"After more than two centuries of American jurisprudence and millennia of human experience, a few judges and local authorities are presuming to change the most fundamental institution of civilization," the president said in urging Congress to approve such an amendment. "Their action has created confusion on an issue that requires clarity."

Bush, who has cast himself as a "compassionate conservative," left the door open for civil unions as an alternative to same-sex marriages.

Criticism was immediate for his call for amending the Constitution.

Democrats accused Bush of tinkering with a document that is the bedrock of American democracy to divert election-year attention from his record _ an allegation the White House denied. Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., who hopes to run against Bush in this year's presidential election, said: "I believe President Bush is wrong."

"All Americans should be concerned when a president who is in political trouble tries to tamper with the Constitution of the United States at the start of his re-election campaign," said Kerry, who opposes gay marriage but will oppose the amendment if it reaches the Senate floor. Bush is "looking for a wedge issue to divide the American people," Kerry said.

Campaigning in Georgia, where the state legislature is debating its own ban on gay marriage, Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., said he was against the president's idea of a constitutional amendment. "I don't personally support gay marriage myself," he said. "My position has always been that it's for the states to decide."

A major gay Republican group, the Log Cabin Republicans, accused Bush of "pandering to the radical right" and "writing discrimination into the Constitution."

The American Center for Law and Justice, which focuses on family and religious issues, applauded Bush's announcement, saying it "serves as a critical catalyst to energize and organize those who will work diligently to ensure that marriage remains an institution between one man and one woman."

Bush noted actions in Massachusetts where four judges on the highest court have indicated they will order the issuance of marriage licenses to applicants of the same gender in May of this year. In San Francisco, city officials have issued thousands of marriage licenses, to people of the same sex. This, Bush said, is contrary to state law. A county in New Mexico also has issued same-sex marriage licenses, Bush said.

"Unless action is taken, we can expect more arbitrary court decisions, more litigation, more defiance of the law by local officials — all of which adds to uncertainty," Bush said.

House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas, said he appreciated Bush's "moral leadership" on the issue, but expressed caution about moving too quickly toward a constitutional solution, and never directly supported one. "This is so important we're not going to take a knee-jerk reaction to this," Delay said. "We are going to look at our options and we are going to be deliberative about what solutions we may suggest."

However, California Republican Reps. David Dreier and Jerry Lewis said a constitutional amendment might not be necessary.

"I will say that I'm not supportive of amending the Constitution on this issue," said Dreier, a co-chairman of Bush's campaign in California in 2000. "I believe that this should go through the courts, and I think that we're at a point where it's not necessary." Lewis said, "At this moment I feel changing the Constitution should be a last resort on almost any issue."

President Bush makes an announcement in the Roosevelt Room of the White House, yesterday, that he will back a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage in an attempt to halt same-sex unions.

The conservative wing of his party has been anxious for Bush to follow up his rhetoric on the issue with action. In recent weeks, Bush has repeatedly said he was "troubled" by recent rulings on the issue, but stopped short of endorsing a constitutional amendment.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court recently ruled that it is unconstitutional to bar gay couples from marriage. Gay and lesbian couples from Europe and more than 20 states have flocked to San Francisco City Hall since city officials decided to begin marrying same-sex couples.

Death toll in Morocco climbs to 564, 300 injured after quake late Tuesday at least 564 people were dead and 300 injured. Of those, 80 people were hospitalized, the agency said. Officials earlier had put the injury toll at 600.

QUAKE from page 1

Selaam Bennaissa, a farmer who lives in Ait Daoud, 12 miles from Al Hoceima, said he was home when the quake struck at 2:27 a.m., and barely escaped before his house came crashing down.

"Fortunately it didn't fall on me," he said. He estimated about 90 percent of the houses in his village collapsed.

Authorities were scrambling to reach about a half-dozen remote villages, including Ait Kamara. Tamassint and Imzourn, where 36,000 people live.

Josephine Shields of the International Committee of the Red Cross, citing civil defense officials in Al Hoceima, said she heard reports that Ait Kamara — a village of 6,000 — was destroyed.

Rescuers reported difficulties getting to the stricken area in mountain foothills and served by narrow, poor roads. As they arrived, they found corpses: some families already had buried their dead.

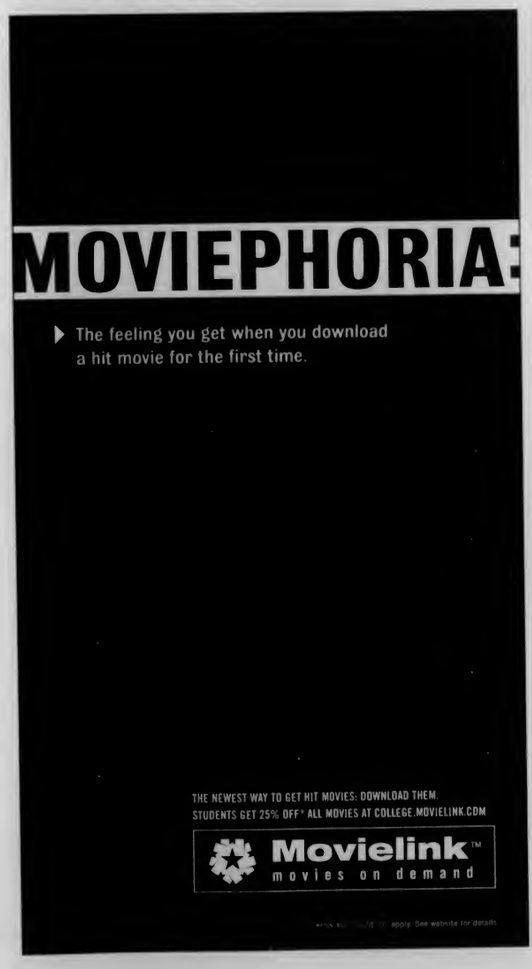
French LCI television showed men with pick axes chipping their way through debris left by flattened buildings — while others used their bare hands — to try to reach trapped victims.

More than 200 relief workers from the Moroccan Red Crescent were at the scene, along with helicopters filled with emergency supplies.

"The most urgent priority is to search for survivors and give them proper medical attention," Baddredine Bensaoud, secretary-general of the Moroccan Red Crescent, said in a statement.

Ambulances pulled up to Mohammed V hospital in Al Hoceima in a steady stream. On the edge of town, those left homeless by the quake began erecting tents of plastic sheeting to protect against the chills night.

With only light structural damage in some places, Al Hoceima itself was largely spared.



An aftershock with a magnitude of 4.1 was felt outside Al Hoceima at 11:04 a.m., according to the official MAP news agency, citing the geophysical laboratory of the National Scientific and Technical Research Center.

Although a tourist destination because of its Mediterranean beaches, the region largely suffers from extreme poverty and underdevelopment because of government neglect following a Berber rebellion in 1958. The local economy is sustained by fishing and by farmers who grow cannabis.

However, King Mohammed VI has taken steps to integrate the north more fully into his Muslim kingdom. In 2002, he issued his annual Throne Speech from Tangiers, then traveled east to Tetouan, where Berber chiefs assembled on horseback in full regalia to pay him homage. He was planning to travel to the quake zone late Tuesday or early Wednesday.

The temblor reverberated across the Strait of Gibraltar and was centered 100 miles northeast of Fez, about one mile underground in the Mediterranean, according to the U.S. Geological Survey. The quake was felt across much of southern Spain, but no damage or injuries were reported there. News reports said it was most noticed in tall apartment blocks of southern Andalusia and southeast Murcia.

Morocco's deadliest earthquake was in 1960, when 12,000 people were killed after a devastating quake destroyed the southern city of Agadir.

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

President Bush backs new amendment

Yesterday afternoon the leader of the free world stated that he was in support of a proposed constitutional amendment that would limit the freedom of the expression of love. As Mr. Bush stood behind the podium of the Roosevelt Room of the White House he finally put into words what many had expected: a supposition highlighting his stance on possibly the biggest issue heading into this year's election.

"Decisive and democratic action is needed because attempts to redefine marriage in a single state or city could have serious consequences throughout the country," Bush said.

Despite this bold assertion, he also confirmed his belief that states should retain their power to define "civil unions" for themselves.

The Democrats showed immediate disapproval with Bush's statements including a written statement by Democratic National Committee Chairman Terry McAuliffe that showed discontent toward the President's seemingly diversionary tactic.

"It is wrong to write discrimination into the U.S. Constitution, and it is shameful to use attacks against gay and lesbian families as an election strategy," McAuliffe said. "It appears that the conservative compassion he [Bush] promised to deliver in 2000 has now officially run out."

U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy also had something to say on the subject. "[Bush will] go down in history as the first president to try to write discrimination back into the Constitution," he said. In his written statement he also added, "We have amended the Constitution only 17 times ...[It] has often been amended to expand and protect people's rights, never to take away or restrict their rights."

Sen. Kennedy raises a good point. Our Constitution has been a staple of our country's openness to diversity. It has always embraced the rights of an individual and this sudden infringement upon these rights should not be taken lightly.

The very essence of the Constitution is that all men are created equal. There have been debates in the past: women's suffrage, civil rights, and others that have caused a national debate to end close-mindedness on issues that subvert one minority or another.

So now our country is faced with another dilemma in regards to a group without the power to defend itself politically. Homosexuals in our nation are simply craving their "inalienable" rights.

Bush is concerned about the, "serious consequences," that will face our nation with the legalization of same-sex marriages. The only consequence that will occur is that our collective ideology will have to change.

There is the presence of the majority that may not want to see such a liberal-minded mandate in favor of gay marriages, but this is not what the premise of American liberty stands for.

As John Stuart Mill, a Classical Liberalist in the late 1800's said in his book On Liberty:

"Like other tyrannies, the tyranny of the majority was at first, and is still vulgarly, held in dread, chiefly as operating through the acts of public authorities."

Information from cnn.com was used for this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

UNSAFE AT ANY SCREED

A reality television meltdown

Elizabeth Carter

I've grown very tired of late. Although my sleep has been peaceful, and I suffer from no malady, an incessant exhaustion creeps at me throughout all my waking hours. No coffee can assuage my fatigue, no slumber can ward off this unrest, and it's as if my soul is being drained from my body so slowly that it has almost gone unnoticed — until now.

I've looked at my life, and tried to find a culprit, tried to find the incubus who has stolen my former vigor and after some serious thought and contemplation, I believe the malefactor has been found. This cruel and formidable adversary has crept thought every iota of my being, draining me slowly. But now that I have located him, this parasite will be done away with. Who could it be? What dastardly creation is causing my anguish and giving me no reprieve? The scoundrel is reality television, and I've had it with him.

Granted I'm taking a dramatic stance on the effect reality television is having on my life, but seriously take a step back and think about all the time you spend in front of the tube. All those times you swore you were going to start writing that paper ahead of time, but instead you were sucked in, forced to watch some horrible smut like "Celebrities Uncensored" or "The Fabulous Life of INSERT LAME CELEBRITY HERE." Those are shows I like to call "train wreck TV" because they're so horrible that you simply cannot turn away, even though you know your IQ is probably being significantly reduced by merely tuning into them.

While there are some quality shows on television, such as "Family Guy" or the entire lineup of the HBO network, most of TV has become a toilet of which spews petulance of the foulest kind. Seeping with the stench of reality programming, so much of television has gone the way of the sewer, and I can't take it anymore. It's like visual manure; it's cheap, and it stinks, but it tends to cultivate the baser human emotions, our enjoyment of cruelty, our delight at the embarrassment of others and even in a very shallow sense our hope for love.

But what do we gain from this excrement on parade? Unlike real manure, we gain nothing at all.

While there are some quality shows on television, such as 'Family Guy' or the entire lineup of the HBO network, most of TV has become a toilet from which spews petulance of the foulest kind.

To those of you who are thinking, "Oh, how dramatic! She's being far too harsh," I say that if you want some reality, why not try going outside and living life? Is this what we've been reduced to? Fools who prefer to watch even bigger fools pathetically pretend to live "real life" in front of cameras, drones who sit in front of the idiot box searching for reality instead of creating some of their own. Last time I checked, life wasn't led by a bunch of models in an all-expenses-paid chateau/mansion/island/RV. But hey, maybe it's just my life that's different from all that.

So right about now you're probably thinking, "Alright, so its crap, we all know that. But what's the harm? I think some of it is pretty funny." I have to admit, some of it is pretty amusing. But look what we have lost. Once, a well-written, well-acted television show was seen as a form of human expression. While there are still shows that fall into that category ("Sex and the City," for example) the demand for them seems to be what is waning. It's gotten to the point of thinking that we will settle for cost effective reality television in place of shows with artistic worth, and what a sad place that is to settle.

It seems that with so many of the major cable networks, in the end, it always boils down to the almighty dollar. In the name of saving a few dollars and cents, the networks give us shallow dramality TV, or shows about stalking celebrities. While some of it is amusing, it doesn't change the fact it is the antithesis of all that art is, and the antithesis of depth and meaning.

It's quite possible that you're OK living without these things. If you are then that's fine, go on and diligently watch your reality TV, I'm sure it's all you deserve anyway. Yet for those of us who still value the artistic expression that once was inherent in a good show, it is time to realize that if we keep feeding into reality television, it's only going to grow. Who knows, maybe in time there will nothing but reality shows on TV, and what a sad time that will be.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

A possible cause to the tragedies of human history

Johnny Donaldson

It began as a good idea. An honorable one. An idea worth celebrating. Religion. It sounds like a spectacular idea – gather those of a like-minded belief system into a community to celebrate their faith. Religion will be used to preach tolerance and love and respect and instill a sense of pride, of inclusiveness, of belief. It will help us to deal with the worst aspects of life and to celebrate the best. It will make us strong within are own selves and supportive of our family, friends and basically everyone else.

So what the hell went wrong?

Religion is nowhere near what it has set out to be. It's not about love, respect and faith. It's about hatred, discrimination and intolerance. It causes more problems than it solves, advocates the willful disrespect of others and basically has made a fundamentalist shambles of the world.

I'm not talking about one religion, but all – Christianity, Judaism, Islam, Mormonism, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Religions are by and large egotistical, selfish, greedy and self-centered. And what's worse, they disguise their deficits in the sheep's clothing of kindness and goodwill. As long as you're blindly following the dogma of the Church then you will never see the troubles that it causes.

The biggest tragedies of human history have been the direct result of religious fervor. The Salem Witch trials. The Crusades. The holocaust. Sept. 11. They are the results of fundamentalism and the hatred of one belief by another. These all result from one religion attacking another.

Most religions preach that they are the only true religion, and that all other beliefs are nothing more than empty idolatry. There is no room for acceptance of other belief systems; you are either right or wrong. They make great strides in controlling their constituents, brandishing the followers with rules that tell them the correct way to live. If you don't follow the ironclad guidelines, then you are wrong and you aren't beneath contempt.

Look at the controversy surrounding the attempts by gays to have marriage benefits in Massachusetts. Look at the uproar that Catholics caused after the state legislature decreed that a ban on gay marriage was illegal. It's a manifestation of hatred and discrimination inherent in the Catholic Church (a church I must confess that I am technically part of, though it shames me to say so.) The disgusting level of homophobia rampant in the Catholic religion turns homosexuals into second-class citizens, and preaches intolerance for those who happen to fall in love with those of the same sex. And this a religion that says love thy neighbor?

Who are we to think that our set of beliefs is more important than another person's? Who are we to say that the Catholic, Jewish or Mormon religions are the ultimate religion to practice? How do we know that when we die and get to even that we won't find that the Hindus, Buddhists, Pagans, or any other were right all along. Maybe there's nothing up there. Or maybe we'll run into Zeus and discover that the Greek stories we consider myths were actually the truth.

All I am saying is that religion is in the eye of the believer. Who's to say that in 1,000 years our own religions will be anything more than folklore, studied by anthropologists picking through the bones of the past. We don't even know if God really exists.

And the Bible, Koran and every other holy book? Stories written down after generations of oral tradition. Not exactly the most trustworthy source of material (anyone out there play the game Telephone? Then you'll know what I mean.)

But still we have millions upon millions of people who assume that they are right. And what does it cause? Racism. Sexism. Homophobia. Anti-Semitism. Conflict. Hatred. If there was no religion there would not be any abuse of woman in Islamic countries. If there was no Christianity there would be no murder of Matthew Shephard, for his lifestyle would not come under a moral signifier. Religion began with the best of intentions, but even the best of intentions are wrought with the worst of disappointments. Though I believe abolishing religion worldwide would help to hinder much of the hatred in the world and bring about some semblance of peace, I also believe that people should be able to believe what they want. So I just leave by wishing that people realize that beliefs are individual to each person and not worth the hate that stems from the conflicts of religion.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

HIGH HOPES FOR COLLEGE HOOPS

This is a wonderful time to be a student and college basketball fan. The early season games are over and conference championships are right around the corner.

The Atlantic 10 Conference has always prided itself on providing the very best in intercollegiate athletics. Not just on a basketball court, not just on a baseball or softball field, but all fields of play and in all aspects of the event. That includes the behavior of our fans. When you go to Atlantic 10 venues, you see the finest that sport has to offer: a great event and a great atmosphere. That is one of the many reasons why attending events at Atlantic 10 institutions is always fun and exciting.

Last season, we had an unfortunate incident regarding the men's basketball team at St. Bonaventure University. We can all agree that what happened does not reflect the spirit of competition of Atlantic 10 institutions. Despite everything that occurred, it is time for all of us to move forward and enjoy the season.

I hope that the spirit of athletic competition will continue as it has in the past. As I mentioned earlier, one of the reasons I enjoy attending games on our campuses is the excitement generated by our fans and the civility in which this excitement is expressed. I ask that you continue to root with passion for your school and to conduct yourselves in a manner in which we can all be proud.

Best of luck to you and your teams.

Linda Bruno
Atlantic 10 Commissioner

QUESTIONING PRO-ISRAEL POSTERS

As a Jewish American graduate student, I am disgusted and embarrassed by the "pro-Israel" posters that I have recently seen around campus. While I sat in a class in Herter today, I read their slogans: "There's only one nation in the Middle East that protects your rights: Israel." "Which of the Middle East nations protects and encourages freedom of the press? Only Israel." "Where in the Middle East can an Arab woman vote? Israel."

I am not going to attempt to address the misleading and inaccurate nature of these statements (except to say that Arab women can also vote in Lebanon, Jordan, and Egypt, and they voted in Palestine in 1996.) What bothers me most is the concept and tone behind this public relations effort. How arrogant must we be if we are—like the bully on the playground—building up our own reputation by putting down others? And how lazy must we be if we are trying to change people's view of Israel by advertisements rather than action?

My real question is this: if you are Jewish and you care about making Israel a better, safer place, why not work to make Israel a place that doesn't need a PR campaign? If you care about the kind of justice and democracy and freedom that those posters profess, why not put your time, money, and energy toward helping impoverished Bedouin communities in Israel?

Toward protecting Israel's environment? Toward putting a stop to rising Israeli poverty (according to recent statistics, nearly 40 precent of Israel's children live in poverty)? Toward coexistence projects between Arabs and Jews? Toward helping Arab citizens of Israel achieve true equality with Jews? Toward finding a just and peaceful solution to the conflict with the Palestinians?

I think that Israel would have a better reputation in the international community if more "pro-Israel" activists spoke as loudly and forcefully about these issues as they do about how great Israel is.

Why not improve Israel's image by taking action—commit yourself to working for peace and justice for all people—rather than by hanging up propaganda posters?

Lesley Yalen
English Graduate student

FREEDOM AND HONESTY

In his Feb. 5 article, "The price to pay for freedom," Gilad Skoinick told a story about Elhanan Tennenbaum, an Israeli man who was captured by the terrorist group Hezbollah and imprisoned for more than three years. It is apparent that Skolnick has great concern for Israel and is proud of some of its noble aspects. Israel should be praised for these aspects but one cannot ignore the egregious crimes committed toward the indigenous population.

Skolnick cites the Israeli newspaper, Haaretz, in characterizing the story of Tennenbaum. Strangely, he leaves a few details out. Skolnick writes that Tennenbaum was kidnapped "while on a trip to Europe." Haaretz reported on Jan. 29 that Elhanan Tennenbaum, a Colonel in the Israeli Defense Forces, entered Lebanon illegally more than three years ago when Lebanese militia captured him. Haaretz reports that Tennenbaum claims he was searching for information on missing Forces Captain Ron Arad. According to United Press International, Captain Arad was flying over Lebanon when his "plane was hit by its own bomb over southern Lebanon in October 1986" and was captured by enemy forces.

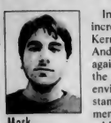
However, Haaretz reports that Tennenbaum "didn't deny trying to make some money" when he illegally entered Lebanon and people are questioning his initial claim. Haaretz reports, "Shin Bet [Israel's Security Agency] and police intend to charge Tennenbaum with various felonies and say he is suspected of both criminal and security transgressions, including alleged drug trafficking."

Aside from the aforementioned omissions, Skolnick also creates some interesting details. Skolnick writes that Tennenbaum was "frequently tortured" and denied necessary medication. Haaretz reports that Tennenbaum said his "captors were 'more humanitarian' than he had anticipated, giving him food on time and taking care of his medical problems."

Skolnick also writes, "Until recently, no one knew anything of Tennenbaum's whereabouts." But in a previous paragraph he writes that Tennenbaum's captors "denied (him) the medication that his family had sent him." How can the family provide medication when no one knows his whereabouts? Haaretz reports that Israel agreed to release "430 Arab prisoners, most of them Palestinians" but Skolnick labels the released prisoners as "400 arrested terrorists."

Skolnick quotes Victims of Arab Terror International as saying Israel released "hundreds of dangerous terrorists, Including ones with blood on their hands." This organization is quite simply an outlet for Israeli propaganda. One can go to their Web site to determine the group's objectivity.

Skolnick attributes "Israelis compassion for its citizens that are locked away and tortured somewhere" as the reason for the Israeli government releasing "400 terrorists."



After reading Haaretz it appeared to me that the Israeli citizenry's compassion did not reach as high as its government officials who seemed more concerned with "whether he gave away secrets and if Iranian or Syrian officers took part in his interrogation In addition to Hezbollah men."

All of this Is really missing the big picture. Why were Ron Arad and Israeli Defense Forces In Lebanon?

Ethan Burke
UMass student

In depth: Election '04

Reforming the college voter

Mark Ostroff

S.J. Port

You can say what you want about our government, our so called democratic system, the people who run for office and American voters, but I for one am excited; excited to watch, excited to vote. This year we've witnessed and will continue to watch as democrats try to decide who they are, and what they stand for, and who in turn should stand for all of us, one nation, under (one) president, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all – or so we presume.

The nine democrats who made a run for the national democratic ticket this year came from a myriad of places, and showcased the diversity of the presidential hopefuls, one unseen in former years. Not only did a black man choose to run, but also a black woman. A governor from Vermont who everyone said would not be unable to raise the money to run his campaign anywhere outside of his cow-strewn state became the first candidate to use the Internet's power. Dean may rant at high decibels, but he ran the first campaign funded on the power of the World Wide Web. Infiltrating students and radicals human-contact starved, computer aided existences through the Web he financed his crusade for candidacy on the five and 10 dollar donations of those same politically unlikely students and starving radicals. The Democratic Party is as diverse as this nation, and although this is to some their Achilles heel; it is in fact their strength – as it is our nations.

Diversity has come to define the Democratic Party and the democracy in which we live. Furthermore, regardless of how undefined the Democratic Party may currently seem, especially in comparison to the easily identifiable stereotypical homogenous republican image, one undeniable driving factor of unity for democrats in 2004 is our undying hatred of the aforementioned republicans – specifically the Bush administration.

Democratic nominees, for the first time since John F. Kennedy ran for office, are directing their messages to students. To unseat an incumbent republican president with visible ties to powerful American industry leaders, and intensely loyal supporters across state-lines, the Democratic Party must be ready to flood the polls with votes. Votes must be won, states seduced and all votes counted –including absentee voter ballots.

Massachusetts, the state with more students enrolled in higher educational institutions than any other, remains unenlightened to reforms for absentee voters. Elections, both federal and state, are conducted at the municipal level. There are 351 municipalities within Massachusetts that each conducts elections. For towns, the local official responsible for conducting elections is the town clerk, and for cities, the city clerk or an election commissioner, as the responsible official, generally conducts elections. This means that Massachusetts, as does each state, has the right to decide how they want to handle absentee voters.

Some states, such as Indiana have progressed beyond the tedious absentee ballot votes for enrolled college students. Indiana allows in-state students, registered to vote, to cast their votes (for federal and state elections, but not town or county) on their college campus regardless of whether it is in their precinct or not. Students who take advantage of this option, one which has increased student voter turnout according to a press release from the Indiana State Secretary's office, mark off on their ballot the district in which they are actually registered to vote so as not to screw with census statistics.

Massachusetts residents registered to vote may only do so in their home-precinct regardless of whether that precinct is a permanent address with a guardian far from the student's residence at school.

To apply as an absentee voter, and have a ballot mailed to you at an alternative address from that which you are registered under, students must download a request off the State Secretary's Web site (www.state.ma.us/sec/ele/eleidx.htm) to receive the absentee voter ballot.

It is a confusing, and often annoying task, to request an absentee voter ballot in Massachusetts. Enlisting voters means not deterring them for any reason – even something as seemingly small as requesting an absentee voter ballot. Students have the power to vote and aren't using it. One reason why is the inconvenience of the absentee-voter ballot – and the question of whether or not these votes are counted at all. This could easily be remedied, and democracy further revitalized, by state legislation allowing students to vote on campus for federal and state elections.

If you wish to vote by absentee ballot for more than one election in a year you may make one application and request that ballots for all elections during that calendar year be sent to you.

If you vote by mail, make certain the application arrives at your local election office early. Remember, the ballot will be mailed to you. You may mail or hand-deliver it back to the election office but must arrive before the close of the polls on election day (8:00 p.m. for state elections).

If you cast your ballot at the clerk's office before election day, plan to visit the office two or three weeks before the election. You can make your application and cast your vote in one visit. Call the clerk's office to make certain that the absentee ballots are available. Absentee ballots should be available three weeks before an election.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

Editor-in-chief debate
Thursday 2/26 at 7 p.m.
in the newsroom.
This is mandatory for all Collegian staff.

Some bones to pick with Kerry

Mark Ostroff

In recent weeks it has become increasingly apparent that John Kerry will win the primaries. And with that, he'll be going up against President Bush in what the mainstream left are already envisioning as a Battle Royale: a standoff of fate rather than of men.

Ideology or the American way? War or peace? Special interests or the will of the people? These are the questions that both the left and right-wing voters are looking for. And I'm here to say that they won't find them.

I'm here to tell you that this election is going to be the opossum in the road of American history — a farce; yet another compromise for those who want change in the next four years. With no foreseeable decent candidates for the 2004 election, it's enough to consider saving the ink I cast my vote with.

When will the republicans and the democrats finally give in to the mutual attraction and go with the one-party system? Because that's what it seems like we're doing. During election time, no one should have to feel like they're voting in Cuba.

Behind the filler "progressive" policy points that every democrat owns (abortion, gay marriage, etc.), Kerry's politics are a ludicrous matchup to the slash-and-burn policies of Bush. For the past three years, Kerry has been nothing more than a lapdog for corporate interests, all to theä benefit of the Bushian ideologues — we might as well run the Olsen twins against each other. Lets's take a glance, shall we?

One interesting aspect of this year's election is that Bush and Kerry make up two of the 800 living members of Skull and Bones, a secret society established at Yale. According to the New York Times, the 2004 election "will represent the first skull-to-skull match-up of Bonesmen in history."

The Skull and Bones Society has been at Yale since 1832 and has been home to some of the most powerful men in America since that time. Many men have climbed the steps of the "Tomb," their official ceremonial hall, including the elite names of Taft, Bundy, Harriman, Rockefeller, Goodyear, Stimson, Pillsbury, and Kellogg.

Along with these names, Bush and Kerry went through the order's highly unorthodox rites of initiation. Only 15 men a year are "tapped" to join the society. The Boston Herald reports, "new members must spend an evening before a roaring fire in the Tomb recounting details of their sexual history to fellow members."

Although generally denied, some of the members are known Nazi collaborators, including Prescott Bush, the president's grandfather. The group is also said to adhere to an ideology that is known as "synarchy," in which Hegel's "final end" is reached when the state is to eventually replace God.

Of course, if I were to judge these two candidates based solely on their past memberships to elite Nazi-affiliated secret societies, I'd be labeled a conspiracy theorist. So let's look at their most recent political records too.

With Bush now president for almost a full term, it goes without saying how poor a job he has done. Sept. 11-based freedom-rants only take you so far when you're caught stonewalling at least three separate commissions to investigate why your administration screwed up on three separate occasions. Million dollar PR stunts only go so far when you send 100,000 troops to go and find things that don't exist. I've said plenty more in previous columns.

But what about Kerry? Polls suggest that over half of America is fed up with Bush, but is Kerry going to come in and make good on his rallying cries for change? You have a better chance of finding all those stockpiles of weapons that Cheney still waves his cane about.

According to LA Weekly, Kerry "has taken more money from lobbyists in the last 15 years than any other senator." And on top of that, the same article reports that Kerry has, in fact, come through for all those high-rollers.

When it comes down to it, he seems to be a 2000 version of Bush —before the Patriot Act, the military adventurism, the bloated bureaucracy, and the corporate debauchery. And by the way, what do all those issues have in common? Well, Bush may have proposed them, but Kerry had no problem rubber-stamping them.

For starters, John Kerry voted in favor of the Patriot Act — some of the most constitutionally buckling legislation ever written. Kerry can't say he didn't know who would be in charge of carrying out this act. He probably can't even say that he read it. Does this sound like responsible government to you?

Oh yes, he's against the war in Iraq now, but that was well after he stuck his head out of the sand to make sure the coast was clear—well after he signed a blank check for war to President Bush. And if the intelligence flaws are good enough to put Bush on the hot seat, Kerry is next in line.

Kerry also had no problem signing President Clinton's Telecommunications Deregulation Act, which limited radio and television broadcasting exclusively to corporate influence.

When it comes down to it, neither Bush nor Kerry is a "man of the people" as they claim to be. Kerry is a man who has kept his career alive by the same step-on-your-head politics that Bush has used. To think that either of these men would be a benevolent, or even a benign head of state, is a naive fantasy.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

Torn between liberal values and reality

Scott Eldridge II

Let me preface all of the following with a few things. I voted for Ralph Nader in 2000. I still have my Nader/LaDuke button and it even traveled with me to Anchorage where he was slightly less heard of. I voted for a candidate who I admired then and had no misgivings about putting an X next to his name on the ballot.

I did not consider the consumer-advocate-turned-political-headline a spoiler when Gore was not selected for the Oval Office, and maybe I was naïve, but instead of making the move to Canada. I hoped for the best.

"Did I expect George Bush to f it up as badly as he did? I don't think anybody did," John Kerry said in November to Rolling Stone magazine.

I couldn't agree more. Perhaps it was the naiveté of a college freshman, but when Bush won I was not expecting jobs, stocks, security, global image, taxes and general responsibility for the country to be totally disregarded.

But I knew, as I now realize day in and day out, that there is always an opportunity to expose the emperors who wear no clothes, and I knew, or hoped, that whatever bastardization of a democratic process still existed would help root out the ill-fitting president. Aligning myself off to the left, I voted Nader as an independent, and still consider myself unaffiliated.

Dead set in the pursuit of the goal of no more Bush are also some strong Democrats. For many months now they have picked up, dropped out, surged and withered all the while under some of the most intense media and personal scrutiny.

So in theory I should be happy that another voice is speaking out against the admigistration I have despised (if that's a strong enough word) since that fateful day when Bush took office. But I am not.

Instead, I am incredibly uneasy.

I guess I see Nader as more likely to send shivers through this election. From what I've heard on Public Radio, from what I am imagining running through Nader's head, he is standing for what he believes in, getting more voices for more than two parties into the fray, opposing corporate owners of candidates. And this is tearing up my political conscience.

With nine months left until the election, the Nader campaign can give birth to a grassroots-propelled candidate who, if he gets 2.7 percent of the vote, can potentially set off a country.

I agreed then and now with Nader's politics and message. I voted with the vision of a 5 percent green party victory (as it would have provided a little more access for a third party) and was upset when only 2.7 came in.

I knew then that Gore would not lose Massachusetts and even now I can't see Bush winning the Commonwealth. But it isn't so far when you're caught stonewalling at least Massachusetts that I am worried about. Of all the bad tastes Gov. Mitt Romney and his predecessor Jane Swift leave, they are not as connected as Jeb Bush, they did not, and likely will not, have a state counting specks of paper; they did not help swindle a nation and probably won't do too much damage this time around. I don't think Romney's perfected coif will adorn national news come November.

While elections are won and lost in any number of states, the Bay State is not typically worrisome in elections. You can pretty much jump to a conclusion about where the Northeast will land before Wolf Blitzer can rest his laurels on it.

But Nader poses a national shakedown that is both admirable and upsetting. He can get on more ballots than naysayers predict, he can get written in where he doesn't get printed and in the hot spots of the country where candidates walk the edge of a knife, Nader could (dare I say it) spoil something.

Were the election today, I really wouldn't worry. Nader has had three days to build support and make his name known. But with nine months left until the election, the Nader campaign can give birth to a grassroots-propelled candidate who, if he gets 2.7 percent of the vote, can potentially set off a country.

It should be said here, as I timidly place my support behind Democrats and not the Independent, that the fact that Nader poses an obstacle is a shame to the liberal ideals Kerry et al. should be embracing.

Nader is tireless and principled. He does not see himself as a spoiler, a president (I don't think) or a national celebrity. But he is an advocate who is unbending for what he believes in. Politically spotless and staunchly liberal, he was a conscience vote for many in 2000 and rests easier on the mind than most in 2004. He has called into check the only opposition to this point of Bush's.

Meanwhile, I will hope things work out and that the ultimate goal of "no more Bush" is realized. And if Kerry, Kucinich, Edwards and Sharpton are worried about losing to a more-liberal liberal, maybe they should look further left and see why that grass-is growing greener.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian Columnist.

Critical thinking skills not just for homework

Stephanie O'Shea

After creating a stench in the primaries and pulling a Dukakis by substituting a dinosaur growl for a working knowledge of the relationship between self-image and the media, Howard Dean last week finally dropped out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

(Sidebar: In 1988, Dukakis was running against Bush senior for president and broke himself by posing for pictures in a tank with a huge helmet on his head that made him look like Rick Moranis in "Spaceballs.")

With Dean's experience in Vermont, the state that brought the nation both Phish Food ice cream and a case study on civil unions, coupled with his tagline of M.D., a synonym for smart, he was well on his way to pleasing left-of-center America through the next presidential cycle, or at the very least, until this November. Unfortunately, the candidate peaked prematurely, and although his followers swore it was no big deal, it really was. To everyone who rocked "Dean for America" hyperlinks in your profiles during the last few months, I say to you, "Take that, your beliefs!"

I am not bashing the Dean camp, per se, but there is an adage that says people are liberal in college but become more conservative when they grow up and raise a family. If Weird Al were commissioned to generate school spirit at the University of Massachusetts through song, he would be on the phone with Olivia Newton John asking for permission to change "Let's Get Physical" to "Let's Get Liberal." Many young people come to this school without refined political beliefs, and it is safe to say that most become more liberal as the semesters and the discussion sections go on. I am a liberal lady, and I think that it's time for Bush to go, but at the same time, I consider liberal to be a dirtier word than republican.

Many young people come to this school without refined political beliefs, and it is safe to say that most become more liberal as the semesters and the discussion sections go on.

At UMass, it seems that people are compelled to take the liberal side of every issue, or in the case of the nomination race, stand behind Dean simply because his campaign manager told him that college students enjoy

Internet blogs and bumper stickers. To me, when a person equates republican with evil, he is ignoring the tool of examining an issue from multiple sides. When I went to the registry last summer to get my horizontal license, I registered to vote. Although I usually fall in line with democratic views, I checked the Independent box. I want my opinions to be formed by obsessive CNN.com checking, not the official stances of one party or the majority of kids in my classes.

Many former Dean supporters and non-republicans in general have pledged to vote for the candidate that is most likely to beat Bush in the presidential election. This philosophy comes from the fact that if everyone who voted for Nader in either New Hampshire or Florida voted for Gore instead, then Gore would have won the election. John Kerry and John Edwards are now in a cage match for the nomination, and I encourage everyone to pay attention, instead of letting their eyes glaze over during the next few months now that Dean has bowed out.

As added entertainment bonuses, Kerry is married to Teresa Heinz, as in the ketchup, and John Edwards refuses to badmouth anyone by name. Nader, defying conventional reason, announced Sunday that he is back in the saddle again.

If you are not registered to vote, wipe the crumbs off your shirt and go do it. As Nader and the state of Florida both proved last time, one vote does count for something. If you are not as well versed in current events as other people, don't be intimidated. With issues such as the war, the economy, gay marriage and public education, this election is heated, and there is something for everyone to care about. Give yourself a base knowledge by googling candidates to find their official sites, and visit the Special Reports section of CNN.com, which is good for overviews.

I started reading the news from scratch a couple of years ago, and I now have a sick, yet enjoyable addiction to it. Browse the headlines every day, and you may gain an appreciation for the absurdity and relevance of what other people do with their lives everyday. At the very least, you'll start getting political cartoons and jokes on late-night talk shows.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Folk legends give Northampton fans an extraordinary show

By John Ciampa
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON – A tremendous crowd gathered at the Iron Horse Thursday evening to indulge in a healthy slice of feminist testimony and reflection. They convened to see legendary Canadian singer/songwriter Ferron teamed up with the ever-feisty Pamela Means to deliver an incisive and moving show.

Through contrasting sets, each performer served to complement the other through their distinct styles: Means utilized her frenetic strumming to drive detailed lyrics that were laden with cutting commentary, while Ferron's subtle acoustic textures and mellifluous arpeggios allowed her complex tales of love and self-discovery to step out to the foreground and capture the attention of the crowd.

Ferron with Pamela Means
Iron Horse
Northampton
Feb. 19

Adding an air of urgency to the performance was the current political atmosphere concerning gay marriage. As outspoken lesbians, Ferron and especially Means refracted much of their material and dialogue through the veil of the issue's controversy. Playing to a highly allied audience, allowed their songs to exact an uncommon force and resonance, despite the inherent lack of risk involved. Never the less, the show had a bold urgency to it, serving as a call to arms for the attendees.

Means opened the show with a barnstorming five-song set that examined issues of female and racial identity. Wielding a strafed Martin guitar with a hole worn through its soundboard ala Willie Nelson, she set the evening's tone with "Maybe You Should," a blistering rocker that confronts male ambivalence toward women's societal fears.

Similarly, the scathing "Two Halves," combined images of corporate corruption and racial profiling to incense the singer's own independent muse, no doubt the product of her bi-racial ethnicity.

Somewhat akin to Ani DiFranco in her stance and style, Means' playing is more ribald and her voice is stronger, if not quite as polished, as her formidable contemporary's. In "Augusta," an achingly benutiful plea for love and courage. Means displayed her soulful roots and her ability to reach

See FERRON on page 7

COURTESY MONTHAYMAG.COM

Pamela Means punctuated the night's performance with her fiesty folk tunes.

New film fails to shine

LINDSAY LOHAN FALLS DRAMATICALLY SHORT OF FAN EXPECTATIONS

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

It's a sign of contemporary society's accelerated capitalist-consumption culture that those with disposable income are force fed the newest Next Big Thing before the last one's even lapsed into overexposure. It's only been a year since Hilary Duff, that blonde, chipmunk-cheeked teen-queen was packaged and butled and hard-sold to the pre-teen masses in that glossy YM magazine add known as "The Lizzie McGuire Movie." Now Lindsay Lohan, so appealing in last summer's hit "Freaky Friday" has been given honey-blonde highlights in order to be sold as the apparent heir – or rival – to Duff's lip-gloss throne.

Lohan's own marketing tool is called "Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen" and it's one of the lousiest pictures to come out of the Walt Disney factory in a long while. It manages the mean feat of making "Lizzie McGuire" look like a decent movie, and it does so by being at least five times as annoying, shrill and vapid as that bit of stale bubblegum.

Though the movie isn't quite beneath contempt, it's still contemptible because it aims itself directly at the giggling 9-14 year old girl market, and proceeds to instill the worst, most shallow Cosmo-girl ideals. The relentlessly upbeat message mongering cannot conceal that the pathetic, pitiful superficiality found within. Sure, us unaware adults may condescendingly think this is what little girls want to hear, but do we really need to breed a generation who think's the greatest accomplishment is to be an American Idol?

Perhaps my loathing of "Drama Queen" wouldn't be so complete, so bilious as it is, if the central character was someone sympathetic we could root for. Try as she might, the admittedly spunky and likable Lohan can't make her teenybopper caricature anything more than exasperatingly selfish. (Blame it on Gail Parent's phony script.)

Lohan's theatrical Mary, rechristened Lola by her own whim, is moved out of her big city New York enclave to the boring New Jersey suburbs, where her proudly bohemian stylings are at odds with the slit-eyed, fashionista cool of vicious popular girl Carla (Megan Fox.) We are meant to be charmed by Mary/Lola's penchant for exaggerated, fanciful lies and her extravagant, epically dramatic behavior, but the girl is little more than an attention-starved, self-

See CONFESSIONS on page 7

Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen
Directed by Sara Sugarman
Starring Lindsay Lohan, Alison Pill
Disney
Rated PG
96 mins.
Grade D

PHOTO COURTESY OF DISNEY.COM

Indie films reeling at UMass

Annual multicultural movie festival underway

For the past two weeks the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies at the University of Massachusetts has been holding its annual "Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival" and for the 11th installment entitled "the global lens," independent films from such countries as Russia, Brazil, Turkey, Israel, India, the U.K. and the U.S. have been presented.

Today the festival continues and in celebration of Black History Month, there will be a showing and discussion of the new 30th anniversary release of "Wattstax: The Special Edition" – the documentary of the 1972 Watts Summer Festival concert which has been affectionately dubbed 'the Black Woodstock.' The screening will be in the Isenberg School of Management room 137 at 7:30 p.m.

"Wattstax" tells the story of one of the prominent entertainment and social events in African-American history. Set in Watts, Calif. – a large Black community of Los Angeles – the movie creators captured one of best gatherings of African-American music artists in concert history. Some of the mind-blowing performances on stage and shown in the film include soul legend Issac Hayes, blues master Albert King legendary and Stax Records artists Rufus and Carla Thomas.

Director Mel Stuart also got lucky enough to give the general public its first look at one the finest comedians of all-time, Richard Pryor. The crew filmed the charismatic funnyman when he was pretty much an unknown in a small club in L.A.

The film also details personal accounts of many members of the Watts community with rare interviews and revealing commentary of the concert, the neighborhood, "Black Los Angeles," and the post-civil rights movement period in the Unites States.

In the midst of South Central Los Angeles' race riots and police concerns about large gatherings and the film showcases how Stax – the legendary Memphis soul music label – made this concert event a social, political, and musical triumph.

Preceding tonight's screening there will be an introduction by Ernest Allen, co-chair of African-American studies at UMass.

This event is free and open to the public.

Information in this article was used from wattstax.com.

- Glen Straub

Musicians not toying around

Vice Dolls come out kicking and screaming but lack experience

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

In need of an angry anthem to reek havoc to? The Vice Dolls may just be able to fill such a need. Right from the start they assault the listener with music so layered and loud that it barely qualifies as music at all. In fact one would be within reasonable limits if they deemed their work nothing more than noise.

Vice Dolls
"Die Trying"
Crosscheck

The five members of the band may look like the stock image of jaded suburban teenage angst gone to seed, but their music holds messages and emotions that lack from much of the industry today.

Lead vocalist Carrie Nance belts out her lyrics at a speed that transcends comprehension, as well as most grammatical rules. Though she is trying her best to convey feelings of anger, rage, abandonment, Nance's voice comes out far to juvenile sounding to be taken seriously. It may take a few listens to grab hold of what Nance is screaming, but if one can set aside her childish sound and translate the fragmentary lyrics one may find a wealth of adrenaline supplying emotion.

Their drums however are in need of some fine-tuning and perhaps some Aderol. Noticeably their favored instrument, as it is the only thing that ever drowns out their vocals, the Dolls seem to lack a needed focus for their percussion heavy tunes. Drummer Cody Fruitt shows skill in his ability to, within a single song, completely change styles a dozen times. If Fruitt could find and stick to a rhythm for more than two seconds it would improve the sound of the Vice Dolls greatly. Honestly, listeners need a steady beat, even if, all they're going to do with it is mosh.

COURTESY OF VICEDOLLS.COM

From left: Kyle White, Kyle Scott, Greg Jaeger, Cody Fruitt, Carrie Nanace make up the youthful Vice Dolls.

The Danville, Ill. natives play very fast hardcore music with just the slightest bit of metal and even some garage punk to make their cacophonous tunes.

"Die Trying" is the Dolls first major record release and it shows. Not every band can hit the ground running and has a debut album that makes them a household name, for a few seconds anyway. Fortunately though the Dolls don't completely flop, they do have a surplus of energy and perhaps it will be this spirit that will drive them to evolve out of their freshmen shortcomings.

This album may not be worthy of the "Best New Artist of the Year" award, but it presents a band that has all the raw materials needed to become something noteworthy. Fortunately, or unfortunately depending on taste, the disc runs just short of an hour, making it an experience similar to a band-aid removal.

Peal away at your own discretion.

Brass band ready to tune up winter blues

By Bradley Farberman
Collegian Staff

Care to escape the New England tundra for an evening? Look no further than Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall for a dose of New Orleans heat when The Dirty Dozen Brass Band set up shop tonight at 7 p.m.

The NOLA-based octet has made crowds across the globe stand up and get funky for more than 25 years, and when they bring their potent gumbo of jazz, blues and traditional Crescent City fare to Noho tonight, you can be sure to leave your worries behind.

Touring in support of their recent Ropeadope release, "We Got Robbed! — Live in New Orleans," the ensemble has been spreading the gospel up and down the East Coast as of late, converting disbelievers along the way.

The Dozen, comprised of six horns, a guitarist, drummer and a bass player have made the road theirs over the past quarter century, blazing a trail devoid of conventional instrumentation.

Dirty Dozen Brass Band
Feb. 25
Iron Horse
Northampton
$14- $17

If you were wondering where the deep bass was coming from, check out Dozen member Julius McKee. McKee's soulful sousaphone, a variation on the tuba, holds down the low end, wrapping its grooves around drummer Terence Higgins' second-line magic.

And magic is not a noun limited to the ensemble's drummer; it's a good way to describe the Dirty Dozen experience. You are invited to watch them transport an Iron Horse audience to Mardi Gras or the French Quarter. You are invited to watch trumpets; trombone and saxophones lift the spirits of a packed New England house and liven up its inhabitants. The syncopated majesty of the Dozen is not something to be taken lightly; it is to be taken deep, and straight to the soul.

But then again, as one of their trademark tunes might advise, "ain't nothin' but a party." Look out for their new record later this year, and check out their work on Dave Matthews' solo release, "Some Devil."

Ferron and Means entertain Noho

Legendary folk musicians play to a full house at Iron Horse

FERRON from page 6

beyond conventional folk trappings. The ballad "If I Were," which showcased her strength as a writer, extended this approach, deepening the singer's ability to offset raw power with subtle precision. For the closer, the martial, defiant "Amen," Means reinforced the shows political posturing, and made for an intriguing transition to Ferron's headlining set.

Ferron, a mainstay on the folk scene for nearly three decades, began her performance with some minor technical difficulties. Ever the seasoned performer, she took the opportunity to spoof on her age and "declining" abilities. Humor abounded throughout the set, providing needed respite from her rapturous songs.

Like Tom Waits, Ferron is the rare songwriter that has the ability to inject striking images of intimacy into her work, so much so as to make the listener feel as if they are intruding on the singer's (or the character's) thoughts. Often, she will weave her vignettes through biographical-like landscapes of self-discovery – even if they are about someone else, their universal longing eventually envelopes the listener as well.

For over three decades Ferron has made folk music.

"Girl on a Road," the pensive opener, chronicled the singer's never-ending foray into the unknown, seeking an ever-elusive sense of self as found through her music. The austerity of the line, "Let the life be something what settled with the life that song has made," speaks not only to the artist's work, but also our own.

Alternately, "Higher wisdom," and "Snowin' in Brooklyn," both addressed the unknowable nature of another's commitment and the blues tinged "Shadows on a Dime," perhaps the night's finest moment, exquisitely detailed the singer's fear of loss and regret as channeled through the metaphor of her life's journey.

Not to be outdone by the upstart Means, Ferron offered her own revolutionary speak in "It Won't Take Long," a terse statement of purpose with rolling verses that built to a heady climax. The song sought to challenge future generations to make a stand for what they believe in.

There were also moments of buoyancy reflected in songs such as the affirming "Willow Tree," and "Harmless Love," which concluded the night with an apropos folk-show sing-a-long. The tune brought an evening of laughter and connection to a fulfilling close.

Teen-actress fails to satisfy audience

CONFESSIONS from page 6

centered and egotistical brat who fails to understand that the universe does not revolve around "Planet Lola."

But the girl somehow can still attract satellites into her orbit, such as the uptight good girl Ella (Alison Pill) whom she befriends and the personality-deficient boy (Eli Marienthal) awkwardly shoehorned into the movie to present something akin to a love interest. These relationships come a distant second and third (or is it second and fifth) place to Lola's quest to be Britney Spears.

That quest begins with her landing the lead in the school play (a "hip" urbanized update of "Pygmalion" titled, sigh, "Eliza Rocks!") and gaining entry to a VIP party thrown by her favorite band, Sidarthur. Thankfully, we're never given a chance to bask in Sidarthur's genius poesy, but we do get glimpses of "Eliza Rocks!" Needless to say, it's not the kind of play to put most high school shows to shame. Nope, it would be far more to shame most high schools to put on such cheesy, cornball drivel. It disgraces both Stevie Wonder and David Bowie (and, well, George Bernard Shaw, too) but it does give Lohan the chance to show off her wannabe pop star skills, which are considerably stronger than those of Duff.

But, I'm sorry, this "Drama Queen" ain't so cute. It's a stilted, superficial and comedy-free assemblage of teen girl cliches that even a demographically appropriate audience member (say, my 13-year-old niece) would have been bored with. Lohan may charm, but she may be a charmer bereft of a career should she continue with roles like Lola Cep. I could barely stand 90 odd minutes with this insincere little girl. How could anyone stand to live a lifetime with her?

Adam Garcia plays Stu, the token love interest in this film.

NEW THIS WEEK!
MATCHSTICK MEN
MY LIFE WITHOUT ME
PIECES OF APRIL
SPY KIDS 3-D
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator
JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2004
LAST MINUTE DISCOUNTS!
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Free & Open to all students
Win Airline Tickets!
Win Basketball Shoes!!
ATLANTIC 10 Shoot-Out
2-Person Basketball Competition
Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed
$10,000
Register at www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS
QUALIFYING ROUND
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26
7PM - DOORS OPEN 6PM
FREE SAMPLES FROM ADIDAS, COAST, NESTLE CRUNCH, TETLEY AND ULTIMA
GMAC
Yum Brands
Pontiac

Summer Employment
Glacier National Park
Montana
Apply Today!
The Resort at Glacier, St. Mary Lodge
For information call:
1-800-368-3689
Apply Online at www.glaciernationalparkjobs.com

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

D.P. Dough
THE PIZZA ALTERNATIVE!
Coupons Online @ dpdough.com
256-1616

How would you score?
LSAT
GRE
MCAT
DAT
Take a FREE practice test at Kaplan's Test Drive and find out.
GRE Feb. 27th!
LSAT, MCAT and DAT, Feb. 29th!
call for details and to register
To register, call or visit us online today!
KAPLAN 1-800-KAP-TEST
kaptest.com/testdrive
Test Prep and Admissions

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
256-7878
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2003

HIPPODROME
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
How far will you go?
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
Indecent proposals and scandalous behavior where only...
TOP COLLEGE NIGHT

STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
Backpacks? Hostels?
3 Cities in 4 Days?
This ain't your parents' travel agency it's yours.
London.....$245
Amsterdam.....$245
Rome.....$245
Brussels.....$245
Miami From $740
» 6 nights
Vegas From $646
» 6 nights
Fares to round trip from Boston and prices are per person. Subject to change and availability. Package accommodations based on double occupancy. Taxes not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply. Fares are valid for students and youth under 26.
BOOK IT BEFORE THE THRILL IS GONE.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
44 Main Street
(413) 256.1261
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

SUBWAY
FREE DELIVERY!
11 am - 2 pm
4 pm - Midnight
7 days a week!
We Accept OCMP!
Call 582.0066
Located on Rt. 9 next to the Registry

Swimming wins Atlantic 10 title

By MATT BARSTOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With 10 out of 25 Massachusetts men's swimmers finishing first or second in this weekend's Atlantic 10 Championships, the Minutemen became the second team in conference history to win four consecutive titles.

The men swam to a 840-585.5 victory over second-place St. Bonaventure, 840-585.5. Also UMass diver Mary Jenkins took home gold in the one-vmeter dive, with a score of 232.10.

Freshman Greg Chartier was named First-Team All-Conference for his victory in the 400-yard individual medley (3:59.77). Fellow freshman Gordon Leonard was honored likewise, after swimming a leg on all three winning relay teams. Even Swisher, the team's backstroke specialist, was named First-Team for his winning effort in the 200-yard back (1:51.68).

"The freshmen were a huge addition to the team. Last season we lost eight seniors who scored in last year's A-10's, but the young guys were able to come trough for us," said coach Russ Yarworth, who was named Coach of the Year for the fifth consecutive season.

Junior Missouri transfer Justin Zeimetz was named First-Team All-Conference, after claiming three individual titles. Zeimetz, who won an event on all three days, captured gold in the 100-yard back (51.99) and 100-yard free (45.31). His career-best time of 20.84 in the 50-yard free became the sixth fastest in UMass history. Senior Sean Collins and junior Ryan Matthews teamed up with Zeimetz and Leonard on the winning 200-yard free relay team (1:22.84).

All those involved in winning relay teams were named to the First-Team All-Conference, including Owen Scollan, who anchored the winning 400-yard free relay.

Senior captain Connor Townsend spent Sunday celebrating a four-year stint as A-10 Champion, after helping the cause with a victory in the 200-yard fly (1:51.10).

UMass junior Dylan Smith took first in the 100-yard fly, earning him a spot on the First-Team, contributing to Massachusetts' six individual titles. During last year's tournament Smith won the 200-yard fly with a time of 1:51.20.

"Between Zeimetz and the freshmen, we had several new additions contribute," Yarworth said. I knew the guys had talent but I wasn't sure that they could fill the hole left by 10 graduating seniors."

On the women's side, Massachusetts came in fifth out of nine competing teams. The Minutewomen were in contention for fourth-place until loosing out to Xavier by less than 10 points on the season's last relay race (378.5-386).

Tri-captains Diana Alberti, Christen Dexter and Lauren Rowell, were named Second-Team All-Conference for their success in the women's 200-yard medley relay. Joining the seniors on the winning relay team was freshman sprinter Nicole LeBarge. Alberti also led UMass scorers with a second-place finish in the 200-yard fly.

The butterfly specialist graduates second all-time among UM swimmers in the 100 and 200-yard fly.

Results you can feel... without the side effects

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician

Participating provider for most insurance, including auto, student insurance & GIC

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
229 Triangle Street, Amherst
(next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Hawks take team approach

ST. JOE'S from page 10

ing win against Gonzaga. Jones has heard all season about how the Hawks' weakness inside – they've been outrebounded 869-786 – could hurt them in the NCAA tournament.

"I take notice to it, I take everything kind of personal," Jones said. "I played with a chip on my shoulder."

So did Carroll after he started the season so slowly that Martelli briefly considered a lineup change. Instead, his faith was rewarded when Carroll went 22-for-30 from 3-point range over a five-game stretch early in the A-10 season.

Carroll is shooting 47 percent from 3-point range and is the only other Hawk averaging double digits (10.1 points). His long-ball presence takes pressure off the other guards.

"Had we had to keep going with just Jameer and Delonte, I don't know if we'd still be undefeated," Martelli said. "We had to make sure that he understood that we weren't calling it a slump. The shots were going to come."

They have all bailed out the Hawks at times.

Saint Joseph's trailed by one midway through the first half against Boston College until consecutive 3-pointers from Carroll and Barley started a 10-0 run. When the Eagles pulled within three, Barley and Carroll again hit consecutive 3s, helping the Hawks to a 10-point win.

When Nelson had what he described as one of the worst games of his career against Delaware, Jones responded with 14 points and 11 rebounds in a 21-point win.

After a sluggish performance in a win against Rhode Island, Martelli criticized his team's effort, except for Barley. "Barley gave us maximum effort. The rest of them went through the motions," Martelli said.

Starters Nelson, West, Jones and Bryant are all shooting over 50 percent from the floor, with Carroll close behind at 46 percent.

Stachitas is shooting 53 percent from the floor, including 47 percent from 3-point range (29-for-62). He made four 3s in a 3 1/2-minute span as the Hawks' lead ballooned from three to 21 against Drexel.

Still, as valuable as their contributions are, the Hawks know their postseason run will go as far as Nelson and West take them.

"They deserve all the recognition they get," Carroll said. Without them, this team wouldn't be where we're at right now. Those are the two main guys that really make this team go."

Nelson said the Hawks couldn't be thinking about a No. 1 seed without his teammates.

"Everybody contributes, everybody brings something to the table," he said. "We understand we're all in it together."

Patience is the key with Lappas

MARZELLI from page 10

grotesque levels of ineptitude.

Without a marquee win of this degree, the 2003-04 season will once again be considered a failure by any standards, let alone the nearly-unreachable ones set by maroon and white-clad hopers and dreamers pining for the glory days. With the fan base that once filled the 9,493-seat Mullins Center nightly having either graduated or vacated the Pioneer Valley with Calipari, those remaining are left to take their frustrations out on an undeserving target: Lappas.

The fact remains, what the Minutemen accomplished in the early 90s was a pure example of catching lightning – a.k.a. Marcus Camby – in a bottle. Prior to Camby's arrival, Calipari worked to build the Minutemen into perennial national contenders and A-10 dominants. With the arrival of No. 21, UMass crossed the threshold into the national elite, setting the stage for an epic season and an epic decline.

Now, as St. Joe's attempts to better UMass' record unbeaten streak, the Hawks have similarly trapped natural electricity. Prior to National Player of the Year candidate Jameer Nelson's arrival on Hawk Hill, SJU was a perennial national contender atop the A-10. Now, with Nelson's tenure nearing a close, the Hawks are making their run at becoming the first wire-to-wire unbeaten since UNLV.

As Boston Globe columnist Michael Holley pointed out in a recent piece, luring a dominant, immediate-impact player like Camby to a place like UMass is a thing of the past. With the evolution of the Internet, players like Camby don't sneak from Hartford, Connecticut to anywhere but the cream of the D-I basketball crop, they sneak up on you, like Nelson.

Point being? Continue to give Steve Lappas and these Minutenen some time. Through the frustration of three painful seasons, Lappas has managed to lure some quality, young impact players to Amherst. In some instances, he's been more successful than his predecessor, Bruiser Flint. However luck (i.e. Stephen Briggs, Michael Lasme) has not been on his side.

Whether or not St. Joe's runs the table and captures a national title or not, all should remain well in Philly. Head coach Phil Martelli and his system are entrenched on Hawk Hill and with Hawk fans, and serve as an ideal model for what Lappas could become: recruiting solid talent with each passing year, always just one big break away from a magical season and a dance with destiny.

For Lappas, the same could be true if he is provided with similar faith that Calipari was in the late 1980s, and is not asked to recreate the impossible that many feel he needs to in order to keep his job. Regardless of what many believe, his program and its young talent is on the upswing, and may be just two years away from legitimacy and one big break beyond that from a return to national prominence.

Whether or not St. Joe's surreal season comes to a fitting end tonight or not, the Hawks should serve as a reminder of what could be. Give Steve Lappas the time, the confidence and the resources, and a perennial A-10 contender with national aspirations he will soon produce. Fire Lappas if he does not accomplish the unthinkable tonight, and February 24, 1996 will never again be possible.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com.

UMass to battle St. Joe's

MEN'S HOOP from page 10

before every game you're not going to score as much as you usually do because you're thinking about scoring," Freeman said. "At the beginning of the season I was focusing on rebounding and things like that and that led to me scoring and I think that's my problem right now. I just think I have to go to day one and just pay attention to rebounding and just play defense and focus on that and the points will come."

When asked about the quality of the St. Joe team in comparison to other top schools, Viggiano – who sprained his thumb in Monday's practice – Freeman and junior captain Anthony Anderson all agreed that the Hawks backcourt is the best there is. Guards Jameer Nelson, a Pre-Season First Team All American and National Player of the Year candidate, and Delonte West are the go-to-men for the Hawks, as well as the players the Minutemen will have to stay close to in order to stay in the game.

"Anybody that's considered a great player, I love to go up against," Anderson said of Nelson, "but we don't really cover each other that much. They push every screen, we push every screen ... but it definitely makes me elevate my game."

Nelson is averaging 20 points per game and has been named a finalist for the Naismith Award, the Adolph Rupp Award, and the inaugural Bob Cousy Point Guard of the Year Award. He is also closing in on St. Joe's scoring record of 1,985 points held by Bernard Blunt. With just three regular season games remaining and what looks like a promising post-season campaign, Nelson is just 71 points from breaking Blunt's record.

Like UMass, the Hawks have been playing four-out, limiting their production under the hoop and focusing on guard play. Aside from closing the middle, Lappas believes that the key to containing St. Joe's is to limit their shooting from 3-point land and, of course, stopping Nelson.

"He definitely, without a doubt, means the most to his team," Lappas said when questioned about Nelson on Jan. 20. "He might be the best player e country."

Presented by: Nobody's Perfect
EXPRESS
From the mall store you love.....
Women's & Men's Warehouse

VISA MasterCard

GOT CLOTHES?

Prices starting at
Tops.....$6.99
Jeans.....$12.99
Blazers.....$19.99
Shorts.....$9.99

4 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
in the
Student Union Ballroom
Feb 23rd thru Feb 26th
Mon, Tues & Wed 10am-8pm Thur 10am-??
WAREHOUSE SALE

win a trip to europe! contiki.com/campus
>save $150 to europe
>looking for a good time?
>8 day berlin/prague getaway
explore the czech republic and germany!
>10 day london/paris getaway
experience the best of england and france!
>13 day simply italy
florence, venice, rome, pisa and more!
>14 day european discovery
explore eight european countires!
must mention "save $150" at time of booking. valid on all new bookings for contiki europe "fly in, tours" 10 days or longer. trips must be booked and paid in full by march 31, 2004. for travel from april 1, 2004 to october 31, 2004. flights must be confirmed on select airlines in select class of service from all u.s. gateways to select european gateways. tickets are non-refundable and non-changeable. offer subject to availability. other restrictions apply.
contiki VACATIONS for 18-35 year olds
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com europe australia new zealand

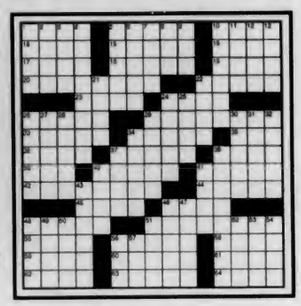
QUOTE FOR THE DAY



"Even the President of the United States sometimes has to stand naked."

-Bob Dylan

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. •Reggae Night dance party
THU. •Special Brew house rockers
FRI. •Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. •The Johnny Stevens Band
February Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Beans & Rice (vegan)
- Gardenburger Riblets (vegan)

DINNER
- Turkey Cutlet
- Scrod with Herb Crumbs
- Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 37
- Low: 11

THURSDAY
- High: 37
- Low: 14

FRIDAY
- High: 41
- Low: 22

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln

COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg

PRODUCTION STAFF
Jen DeMeglio/ Molly Eggleston/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Revive your happy nature with a trip to the day spa.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Lessons learned the hard way are lessons well remembered.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Be careful of the mistakes in your past, they will come back to haunt you.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Tie the paper from your straw in a knot and pull.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Make friends in high places you never know what connections you'll make.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Quit playing games with their heart. Don't lead people on.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Clean up your room, you may be getting some unexpected visitors.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't forget your old friends.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You are not cool. You will never be cool. You're cooler than cool. You're ice cold.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Be a proud autumn lover, the leaves are so pretty.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Don't fool around with badgers, they are always looking for trouble.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Shake hands with a firm grip. No one likes a floppy fish.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 BMWE 5SPD 268K miles Runs great Must sell $1,000.00 413-531-7580

1993 Oldsmobile Cutlas Cierra, 168K. Reliable, new parts, $650 or best offer 413-253-6861

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

500 Camp Jobs. NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

EMPLOYMENT

Live-in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

Cruise Line Entry Level on board positions available, great benefits. Seasonal or Year round. 941-329-6434 www.cruiseca-reers.com

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272 www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring. Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hausprmotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Summer nanny position caring for 2 boys 5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall full-time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

FOR RENT

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 BDRM House on Main St. Bus Line Heat Include. 1800/Mo. Call Aaron 413-256-8747

SERVICES

Math/physics tutor available; $30/hour; $20/hour (travel); call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 It's here...book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

EGG DONORS WANTED! Fee for donation. Women must be 18-30 Call for application. Steven Litz, Attorney (317) 996-2000 lic#10328-49

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Unbeatable?

No. 2 St. Joe's brings its perfect record to Amherst

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

The only place to go is up.

Tonight, the Massachusetts men's basketball team will face undefeated No. 2 St. Joseph's in a game that means more for its pride than its record. The Hawks, winners of 24 consecutive games to start the season, are one of only two remaining unbeatens on the Division I level, and with a win over UMass will pull within a win of matching the Minutemen's Atlantic 10 record of 26 wins to begin a season, set in 1996-97.

"We have expectations of ourselves," UMass coach Steve Lappas said. "We want to show well and play well, but as far as outside people expecting us to win, I'm sure nobody does."

After an ugly 16-point loss to Fordham last Saturday, the Minutemen (9-15, 3-9 Atlantic 10) are on a four game losing streak and looking to step up against the No. 2 Hawks (24-0, 13-0 A-10).

"We're just going to give it our best," sophomore forward Jeff Viggiano said. "We have nothing to lose. If we win great, if not we'll hopefully play hard. I don't think we can play much worse then we did against Fordham, so I hope we can finish the season off strong, and anything can happen in the A-10 tournament."

Sophomore Rashaun Freeman agrees.

"We have nothing to lose but we have a lot to prove," he said. "We're definitely going out there tomorrow tenacious, just trying to play the best that we can and try to focus on the things that we know that we can do."

The teams met Jan. 21 in Philadelphia where St. Joes defeated UMass 92-67. Three Minutemen were in double figures, while Viggiano and sophomore Rashaun Freeman registered double-doubles.

Freeman scored 17 points and pulled down 12 rebounds in his first meeting with the Hawks, but he's been off his game lately, unable to finish and in some cases unable to get shots off. As has been true throughout the season, Freeman has been talking to his coach about how to improve and stay on his game.

"After competition Lappas said that I put it on myself to be the leading scorer and he says that if you have that in mind

See MEN'S HOOP on page 8

Key contributors to St. Joseph's 24-game winning streak include clockwise from top left: Senior guard Jameer Nelson, the legendary St. Joseph's Hawk, head coach Phil Martelli and Junior guard Delonte West.

Crucial one for Lappas

Mike Marzelli

February 24, 1996 – a day that will live in infamy.

For Massachusetts' men's basketball fans, the memory is a painful one. It was then, on that cold, New England afternoon that George Washington, led by old nemesis Mike Jarvis, posted the single greatest victory in the history of its men's basketball program when the Colonials defeated top-ranked, undefeated Massachusetts 86-76 at the Mullins Center.

From there, UMass went on to win another nine games in a row and captured its fifth consecutive Atlantic 10 title, but eventually fell to National Champion Kentucky in the NCAA Final Four. However, riding the coattails of such amazing success, head coach John Calipari bolted Amherst following the season to take a multi-million dollar contract with the NBA's New Jersey Nets, and Minuteman basketball has suffered because of it ever since.

Now, eight years and one day later, it's the Maroon and White who will try to play spoiler in the cruelest way for No. 2 St. Joseph's and their legion of fans, when the Hawks put their 24-game winning streak on the line at the Mullins Center.

For beleaguered coach Steve Lappas and the Minutemen, the opportunity – like it was for Jarvis and the Colonials in '96 – is there for the taking. Reduce the number of unbeaten teams in the nation to one – Stanford – and UMass will become the talk of the college basketball world, much like GW was when it knocked off the team that 'Refused to Lose.'

However unlike Jarvis, Lappas is seemingly on his last legs at UMass, and may be coaching to save his job tonight. Coming off an unbelievably ugly loss at lowly Fordham on Saturday, the Minutemen are once again suffering through a losing season, and have seen fan support plummet to

See MARZELLI on page 8

Unbeaten Hawks have more than just a great backcourt

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA – Saint Joseph's is more than a two-man team.

When the Hawks need a defensive stop, Tyrone Barley gets the assignment. A 3-pointer? Look for Pat Carroll or Chet Stachitas to take the shot. Dwayne Jones and John Bryant have been steady in the front-court.

Turns out there are more contributors to this special season than the dynamic backcourt of Jameer Nelson and Delonte West. All have been needed at some point to help keep the second-ranked Hawks undefeated (24-0, 13-0 Atlantic 10) going into tonight's game at the Mullins Center.

"I think people think that this is the Jameer Nelson and the Delonte West story," coach Phil Martelli said. "Our greatest strength is the group and what each guy brings to the group. They all bring that special ingredient."

The other Hawks don't mind if they're underestimated. They wouldn't want it any other way. "A lot of people think if they shut down our guards, they can beat us," Barley said. "We have so many other ways of beating you. If one of them has an off night, we'll get it done."

Barley, a 6-foot-1 guard and a career reserve, had his chance to move into the starting lineup evaporate when Nelson decided to return for his senior season.

The Hawks, though, often use a four-guard lineup, leaving Barley on the other team's best shooter. Against Temple on Saturday, Barley and West double-teamed and frustrated David Hawkins, holding the nation's third-leading scorer to only 13 points on 5-for-21 shooting.

"I take a lot of pride on defense. If someone scores on me, I feel like I let the team down," Barley said.

Martelli credited Barley with making Nelson into a better player with stout defense in practice.

"Barley makes him better everyday," Martelli said. "Tyrone has a such a fierceness about him that he never wants to get beat. If Jameer can beat Barley, he can beat anyone in games."

Should anyone slip by, he runs into Jones, a 6-11 center, or Bryant, a 6-7 forward. Jones and Bryant each only average seven points a game because Saint Joe's is so dependent on guard play, but both are the only beef the Hawks have inside.

Jones had three straight double-doubles in the middle of the season, and recorded six blocked shots in a season-open-

See ST. JOE'S on page 8

St. Joseph's John Bryant, left, Jameer Nelson and Delonte West, right, have had 24 consecutive reasons to celebrate this season. The Hawks are two wins away from equalling Massachusetts' Atlantic 10 record for consecutive wins to begin a season.

Ziggy Marley set to make melodies at Calvin
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

UMass fails to withstand undefeated No. 2 St. Joe's
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 90

Fire shuts down Lederle Graduate Tower

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

A fire broke out at 12:46 p.m. yesterday in the University of Massachusetts Lederle Graduate Research Center Tower, causing the building to lose power and possibly remain closed for several days.

The fire was caused by electrical arcing in the main electrical room of Tower B. According to the Amherst Fire Department, the fire had self-extinguished by the time the first crews arrived at the scene.

Two electricians had been working in the room prior to the fire, the department said. Both suffered mild smoke inhalation, according to multiple sources, including the department and Patrick Callahan of the UMass News Office.

The department also said the electricians complained of minor burns. The workers were examined by paramedics and refused transport to area hospitals.

About 10 students were trapped in elevator two on the 15th floor, due to the power loss. With the help of elevator technicians already on the scene, the occupants were freed, the department said.

About 37 firefighters, four pumpers, the ladder truck, three support vehicles, two ambulances and a chief officer responded to the incident.

One firefighter said he had difficulty breathing and was transported to Cooley Dickenson Hospital. He was treated and later released.

UMass police officers quickly arrived at the building to control the accumulating crowd of onlookers. The police precautions included stringing caution tape around the area, deploying two mounted patrol officers and at least one officer on a bicycle.

According to Callahan, the arc damaged power delivery within the building. The Physical Plant then shut off power to the main switch of the building, and has been working on bypassing the problem area, he said.

Environmental Health and Safety initiated a plan at around 2:15 p.m. to save experimentation that could be lost during the power outage. Researchers were instructed to move to the second floor of the Lederle low-rise and wait to be escorted in small groups to their offices in the tower.

At 2:50 p.m., 44 people waited in the low-rise to return to their research. They expressed concerns about shutting down their experiments or getting them on back-up power.

Peter A. Bryngelson, a doctoral chemistry student, said that without electricity to power his freezer, a sample he has worked on for about a week could go bad.

"Then again, there's months of work and years of work in the freezers," he said.

"They contain our life's work," said Associate Professor Jennifer Normanly.

Normanly, who works in the biochemistry and molecular biology departments, said researchers are prepared for this

See FIRE on page 3

A firefighter stands in the Lederle-Goessman bridge.

Former student pleads guilty to manslaughter

By Amanda Kobck
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Jennifer Paluseo, 21, of Plymouth, a former University of Massachusetts student, pled guilty to manslaughter at Hampshire Superior Court yesterday.

Paluseo also pled guilty to removing or conveying a body. She previously had pleaded innocent.

Paluseo's dead infant was found at James Hall Dormitory at UMass, on May 2, 2002. Paluseo faces up to 12 years in state prison or two and a half years in the house of corrections, according to Judge Judd J. Carhart, superior court justice. Paluseo is being held on $25,000 bail.

Her defense lawyers were seeking to suppress statements allegedly given under duress during interrogation, making the conducted search of her dorm room illegal, according to court papers filed at the Hampshire Superior Court on Dec. 16, 2002.

Now that Paluseo has changed her plea, the motion to suppress her statements will be discarded.

Paluseo's defense lawyers filed an Alford plea, which means that the person, while in a state of confusion, remembered being present at the time of the crime, but not committing it.

"I remember taking the things from the bathroom and putting them in the trash," said Paluseo during her court hearing yesterday.

Judge Carhart then asked her if she remembered putting the baby in the trash. Paluseo denied this action.

The prosecutor, Renee Steese, requested a recess because the Alford plea was not negotiated before yesterday's court date. After lawyers and Paluseo returned from the recess, Paluseo stated that she did remember giving birth to the baby and putting it in a trash bag.

Paluseo cried as the prosecutor explained the background of the case to the judge.

According to the court papers, Paluseo, who was 19-years-old at the time, was not presented with a Miranda waiver form to sign, nor was there evidence of a recording or written version of an interview that took place between Paluseo and the police.

Paluseo's lawyers, Terry Nagel and Frederic Bartmon of Amherst, argued that failure to record the interrogation and the use of involuntary statements by Paluseo was unconstitutional.

In his affidavit, a written declaration made under oath before an authorized officer, Dr. Ira Holtzman, the psychiatrist who examined Paluseo the day after the interrogation, determined that she had been in a dissociated state and therefore was not stable to talk about her situation with police.

According to an affidavit signed by State Trooper Sgt. Robin Whitney, Paluseo allegedly acknowledged her rights and was willing to talk to police.

The affidavit states that Paluseo started the birth control pill in September, but by December she thought it was more than likely she was pregnant.

The affidavit also states that Paluseo allegedly said that when she went home to Plymouth for Christmas, her mother,

See PALUSEO on page 3

A wave of hope

A brief history of the first black republic

By Adamma Udokwu
Collegian Correspondent

The beautiful island of Haiti, roughly smaller than Maryland state, is located in the Caribbean ocean. As sited from Encarta Encyclopedia, the Republic of Haiti, the first European colony of the New World, is bounded on the north by the Atlantic Ocean, and the east by the Dominican Republic. Christopher Columbus, upon landing, christened the entire Island "Hispaniola." The main inhabitants of the Island were Caribs and Arwaks who called the island "Ayiti."

The western part of the Island was ceded to the French in 1697, which went on to become the most prosperous colony of the New World. Its chief exports were Indigo, cocoa, sugar and cotton. In 1791, a civilian slave revolt resulted in the abolition of slavery under the command of General Toussaint Louverture, who was a former slave.

France attempted in 1802 to restore its hegemony over Haiti by sending an expeditionary

See HISTORY on page 3

Unrest in Haiti incites Haitian student reaction

By Adamma Udokwu
Collegian Correspondent

The current uprisings in Haiti are not unprecedented occurrences. However, for the members of the University of Massachusetts' Haitian student body, the uprisings are painful and unnecessary occurrences in a country that has been through years of political unrest.

"When I was there, I wasn't unaware of the issue. The problems were not as bad. But now, it has deteriorated to the point that kids don't go to school," said Hanania Pierre-Louis, a freshman pre-med major.

Pierre-Louis, who immigrated to the United States at age 15, is just one of the many Haitian students on campus concerned about their home country.

"The Haitian people are scared but are used to the attempts to overthrown the government," said Vonel Lamour, a sophomore pre-engineering major.

Many Haitian students agreed that the current issues are the result of the Haitian government's inability to devote all their energy and resources to the people.

Quasim "Q" Laroche, a junior electrical engineering major, said the

See REACTIONS on page 3

Democratic candidate, Dennis Kucinich, speaks yesterday to a standing-room only crowd in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Presidential hopeful Kucinich speaks out against war in Iraq

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

"We woke up to great news today; we won thirty percent of the vote in Hawaii," Democratic presidential candidate Dennis Kucinich proclaimed to a standing-room only crowd at the University of Massachusetts' Campus Center Ballroom yesterday.

The Ohio congressman put UMass on a list of campaign stops through Western Massachusetts, which have included Smith College and Springfield City Hall.

The candidate spoke on a range of issues at the UMass rally, but the focus of his speech was the on-going war in Iraq. In 2002, Kucinich voted against the war resolution in Congress.

"If there's a one-word reason why we went into Iraq, what is it?" Kucinich asked the audience.

"Oil!" the audience responded.

"This administration lied to lead this country into war, which is why they should be kicked out of the White House," Kucinich said.

Kucinich spoke out against privatizing the military contracts for rebuilding Iraq, and calling for more diplomatic help from the United Nations.

"We need to ask the U.N. to handle the military contracts so there aren't any Halliburton sweethearts," he said, referring to the company overseeing the military contracts whose former CEO was Vice President Dick Cheney.

Kucinich also spoke of the possibility of a draft, which he thinks is very likely if the U.S. Armed Forces remain in Iraq. He claimed that "40 percent of the troops in Iraq are national reservists or non-combatants," and that many of the soldiers that are serving are staying for longer periods than they were originally told.

Kucinich has been portraying himself as the alternative democratic candidate. He cites his voting record on Iraq as proof of leadership in the fight against other democrats and republicans on what he deems "an unjust war."

At one point he performed an improvisation of George W. Bush in a mock debate against Democratic Presidential candidate John Kerry to show how his stance on the war differs from that of rival Kerry. His 30-second performance pointed

See KUCINICH on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantanatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Features Editor S.J. Port
News Editor Ferron Sabniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jachyun Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kiggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Assistant Production Lisa Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Catherton J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marinelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is independently owned, operating as advertising manager in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life and the Collegian Sibyl in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been awarded 5 pushcarts and 88 honorable mentions since 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 A.M. and 5:30 P.M.

Write for news

SGA denounces Alcohol Task Force findings

Senators vote in support for gay marriage

By Melissa Blankstein
Collegian Staff

Last night the Student Government Association disapproved of some of the Alcohol Task Force recommendations and passed a motion in support of same-sex marriage.

At the meeting the Senate heard nine motions, and passed eight.

Last week, the Senate had asked that the two motions dealing with the Alcohol Task Force recommendations be sent to the University Policy committee. On Sunday, the committee discussed one motion that disapproved of some of the Alcohol Task Force findings for three hours.

"I thought it had to be done," said Patrick Higgins, chair of the ways and means committee, on his motion being sent to the University Policy committee. "Everyone has a take on an issue as important as alcohol abuse, and everyone has a right to provide input. That's why I am so proud of this motion, because I believe that everyone did."

The motion in opposition to the Alcohol Task Force findings stated that the University should not need to restrict dormitories by age, that the fraternities and sororities do not need a faculty advisor for alcohol abuse and that parents should not be notified of alcohol-related offenses. It also asked that security staff be used for dorms with more than 400 students and for more representation of students if there are additional task forces.

The Alcohol Task Force was formed last year with 21 members of faculty, administration and three student members. The members met to discuss what steps the University should take on the prevention of alcohol abuse.

One of the student members, Brian Long, secretary of University Policy, was the sole representative from the SGA.

This fall the Alcohol Task Force presented Chancellor John Lombardi with an 11-page document which included several attachments with their findings.

They made many recommendations with both long-term and short-term goals. The recommendation being considered by Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, asks that "parents and legal guardians be notified when their sons or daughters under 21 years of age are subject to disciplinary action due to a violation of the University of Massachusetts Amherst Alcoholic Beverage Policy."

Gargano is specifically considering sending a letter home for a first offense when a student is charged with having a large volume of alcohol or providing it to minors. A letter will be sent home when a student is charged with a second offense for having an open container or being underage with alcohol.

Senator Tim Busiere led the opposition to Higgins' motion. He said he felt that alcoholism is a major problem at UMass. He brought several studies to the Senate to prove his case. Based on the UMass Amherst Project Pulse Survey and CORE Alcohol and Drug Survey, he showed that 65 percent of students believe that "the social life here at UMass is too focused on alcohol" and 74 percent of students said that, "too many students on this campus abuse alcohol."

Busiere's motion, which supported the Alcohol Task Force Policies, failed.

"It makes me sad," said Busiere. "I've brought countless studies and even University polls to demonstrate the enormous alcohol problem on this campus and its adverse affect on students just to have it rejected."

After the lengthy debate, Higgins said he still showed respect for Busiere.

"Tim was a force behind rejecting the motion," said Higgins. "I believe that a lot of people gained respect for Tim, but in the end [my motion] passed on its merits in the committee and in the Senate."

After a second lengthy debate, the Senate also passed a motion to support same-sex marriage. Senator Dan Pomeroy and Senator Raul Brens co-wrote the motion, which passed with a clear majority.

Senator David Bettencourt was the first to speak out against the motion.

"I am opposed to this motion for three reasons, none of which are because of personal animosity toward any homosexuals," he said. "One, I don't know how many of you read the editorials in The [Massachusetts Daily] Collegian, but if you have, you will notice that there is a serious problem. It says that anybody who disagrees with this because of their religion is a bigot and a homophobe, and that's crap. I think if this motion passes, it feeds into what these guys do at The Collegian."

Emilie Duggan/Collegian

Brian Long, secretary of University Policy, announces his candidacy for SGA President, last night in the Campus Center.

His second reason was that the Senate should not be lobbying. He also argued that he did not think that the majority of students supported gay marriage.

Pomeroy fired back, arguing that a majority of students would support the motion.

"We all represent 250 students," he said. "If you don't know what your constituents think, then you need to get to know your constituents better."

Pomeroy had brought several of his constituents to the meeting.

"This effects every student's future here," said UMass junior Michael McKinstry, a constituent. "I don't want to feel threatened that I am in a secondary relationship."

"We're not telling the students what to think," said Senator Dan Pozmanter. "I have a sneaky suspicion that students will applaud us for taking a stand."

In the announcement portion of the meeting, Long announced his campaign for presidency. As of now, he does not have a running mate. Higgns also announced his; he said his running mate will be student trustee, Timothy Daly, current governor of Southwest. Mina Safaiin, secretary of public policy and relations, later told The Collegian that Attorney General Mark Morrison would also run for the presidency.

Democratic candidate Dennis Kucinich makes campaign stop at UMass out that Kerry and Bush hold similar positions on the war. The Bush character was pointing out that John Kerry had voted with him on the U.S. going to war and agreed with him on his position to keep American troops in Iraq.

KUCINICH from page 1

The Presidential hopeful spoke on a few other key issues, including removing the U.S. from the North American Free Trade Agreement, the World Trade Organization and the Free Trade Area of the Americas. Just days ago on his campaign Web site, he blamed NAFTA and the WTO for moving many American high-tech and manufacturing jobs overseas. He cited an Akron Beacon Journal article that said, "Policy Matters Ohio, a liberal Cleveland think tank, said Ohio lost 14,653 jobs from 1999 through 2003 as a direct result of NAFTA."

"I will act swiftly to cancel NAFTA and the WTO," he said at his speech.

Another key issue in the Kucinich campaign has been a proposed single-payer healthcare system. Before the candidate could answer a question on the issue, a woman in the crowd appeared in front of the microphone and pointed out how the U.S. is one of the last countries without a universal-style healthcare system.

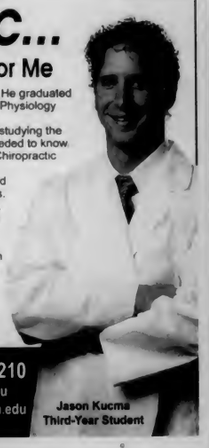
"Right now, there is a third-world country about 90 miles off the shore of the United States that has a single-payer healthcare system," the woman said, before asking the candidate how he feels about a universal health care system

Kucinich responded to the woman by pointing out the difference between health care and health insurance.

"We have a for-profit system that takes one dollar out of every four dollars we spend on health insurance for themselves," he said. "This equals $400 billion per year."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian met with Congressman Kucinich after the rally. When asked how he would pay for his proposed plan for free college tuition, he answered by saying the money would be taken out of the additional $87 billion President Bush spent on defense.

"I would cancel the tax cuts to the top brackets and revoke the extra $87 billion the president spent on the defense budget," he said. "This would be included in the $60 billion I would spend on education."



The education plan would be applicable for any American student who wishes to attend any public institution, college or university.

Part of Kucinich's plan for education includes his Universal Pre-Kindergarten Act, which would build on existing federal and state pre-kindergarten initiatives. His plan would offer pre-kindergarten for people voluntarily and free of charge.

Kucinich has been consistently near last in the polls throughout his campaign, except in Maine and Washington where he grabbed a third-place win. His first second-place win happened Tuesday in Hawaii's caucus. He came in second place, beating North Carolina Senator John Edwards. He received eight delegates from Hawaii, which now brings his total delegate count up to 10.

Chiropractic...
The Choice For Me

Jason Kucma is a Third-year student from Medford, NJ. He graduated from Ithaca College with a Bachelor's Degree in Exercise Physiology concentrating in Cardiac Rehabilitation.
"The only thing that has ever captured my attention was studying the human body. The more I learned in school, the more I needed to know. The most logical step for me was to become a Doctor of Chiropractic so I could truly help people."
Before making his decision to attend Logan, Jason visited nearly half of the chiropractic colleges in the United States. "Logan is in the perfect location in a safe, residential area. The Admissions staff are very friendly and helpful and the faculty are excellent."
Logan College offers students an incredible learning environment blending a rigorous chiropractic program with diverse and active student population. If you are looking for a healthcare career that offers tremendous personal satisfaction, professional success and income commensurate with your position as a Doctor of Chiropractic, contact Logan College of Chiropractic today and explore your future.

Logan College of Chiropractic
1-800-533-9210
www.logan.edu
loganadm@logan.edu
1851 Schoettler Rd Chesterfield, MO 63017
Jason Kucma
Third-Year Student

SALZBURG MARIONETTE

March 3,

Performing to recordings of 18th and 19th century operas made by the world's leading orchestras and singers, the eleborately costumed puppets are praised by audiences and critics alike for their stunning, often hilarious physical feats and amazing life-like range of expression.

Wednesday, March 3
Mozart's
The Magic Flute

Thursday, March 4
Rossini's
Barber of Seville

Bowker Auditorium at 7:30

The Fine Arts Center
University of Massachusetts Amherst
For tickets: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
www.fineartscenter.com

Free & Open to all students
Atlantic 10 Shootout
$10,000
Register at www.atlantic10.org
Or visit the intramural office for details
2-Person Shooting Competition
Win Airline Tickets!!
Win Basketball Shoes!!
Three Divisions: Men, Women & Co-ed
QUALIFYING ROUND
Thursday, February 26
7pm - Curry Hicks Cage
CAMPUS FINALS
Saturday, February 28
2pm - Mullins Center
GMAC
Mars Fruit Breezers
new balance basketball
Pontiac
US Airways Caribbean
XBOX
Free Samples From Altoid, Coast, Nestle Crunch, TicTac and UltraMax
Alumni Barnes & Noble Collegian kinko's odwalla Ultimate Fitness wmua

Electrical basement fire causes Lederle Graduate Research Center to lose power kind of incident. For them, the difficulty was getting back into the building to plug their equipment into backup batteries.

FIRE from page 1

According to Bryngelson, the coldest freezers, which refrigerate at negative 80 degrees Celsius, can hold the work at sufficient temperatures for about five to six hours without electricity.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department officers and Emergency Health Services officials coordinated escorts, who guided researchers to their offices in the dark. This process began at 3 p.m. First, those in charge went over a list of freezers they knew to be critical to the preservation of research. The list, which was from a planned shutdown of the tower almost two years ago, had to be updated before it could be used to assist those managing the effort.

The reentry was a slow process for both officials and researchers, who waited for several hours as they were called by floor to return to their equipment. Within the first hour, only the five highest floors had been entered.

Those in charge of the process urged people to go home if they did not need to tend to equipment critical to their experiments.

Several students questioned police officers about the reopening of the building and expressed concern for missing their courses.

Multiple sources confirmed that the tower will remain closed today. One official coordinating the reentry announced that the building may be closed for several days. The closing does not include the low-rise building.

The town's electrical inspector is working with the University to further investigate the cause of the electrical arcing, said the AFD.

No estimate of the damage caused to the building was available at press time.

For more information visit www.umass.edu/closing.

Emilie Duggan/Collegian

Amherst firefighters receive instructions from their captain during an electrical fire yesterday in the Lederle Graduate Tower.

Paluseo pleads guilty

PELUSEO from page 1

Elizabeth Paluseo, and Jennifer's boyfriend, William Barrus, asked her if she was pregnant. She denied to both her mother and her boyfriend that it was a possibility.

Paluseo said that she told no one that she was pregnant and denied the pregnancy if anyone asked, including her friends at school. Her roommate, Loukisha Hyman, asked Paluseo if she was pregnant in February, and Paluseo denied it, according to the court papers.

On May 1, 2002, Paluseo woke up with cramps, but didn't think that the cramps could be related to having a baby. She said that around 7 p.m., she gathered three towels and her basket of toiletries to take a shower.

While in the shower, Paluseo allegedly said that she started bleeding and felt as if something was pushing down on her abdominal area. She then allegedly sat down on the floor with the water still running and "everything came out," according to the affidavit.

Allegedly, Paluseo then wrapped herself in one towel and wrapped "whatever was on the floor of the shower," in another towel. She went back to her room, put everything in a trash bag, e-mailed her sister and friend, ate a bowl of cereal and then took the trash to the trash room. The thought of calling for help never occurred to her, according to the affidavit.

According to the search warrant, police seized Paluseo's computer, along with items that had evidence of blood, including a towel, two pairs of underwear, trash bags and a pair of scissors.

Yesterday, the prosecutor said that Paluseo stated that if she had scissors, they would be in or on her desk, and that she would have used scissors to cut the cord but didn't remember cutting it.

The affidavit, signed by Paluseo states, "I do not remember much of what I was interviewed about, although I know it had something to do with what had happened to me the night before."

The next court date is scheduled for March 31 at the Franklin Superior Court in Greenfield.

UMass Haitian students react to uprisings

REACTIONS from page 1

people of Haiti have a history of revolting against corrupt leaders who do not practice what they were put in power to do.

One of the main concerns among Haitian students is the lack of government aid given to Haitian people to build schools and roads.

"If the only places that are paved are the driveways of the government officials' homes, then there is a problem with the distribution of money," said Laroche.

The uneven distribution of money and materials is a predominant problem in countries that are developing and have relatively smaller economies, explained Professor Vladamir Zhdanov of the political science department.

"Democracy in developing countries is hard, because the very definition of a democracy is the sharing of resources with the people," said Zhdanov. "However, when your resources are limited, as in the case of Haiti, the struggle for power is rampant."

A lack of U.S. involvement

Some Haitian students acknowledged that the United States shares the blame for the recent conflict. At interview time, the United States had not yet sent 50 U.S. Marines to protect the U.S. embassy. Some of the students noted that the United States' reluctance to help might very well be a contributing factor to the constant up rises.

"Bush is always preaching to fight terror. Well, there is terror right under our nose in Haiti," said Shirley Antoine, a nursing and Spanish major. "So why won't the U.S. help?"

Students argued that the United States is refusing to get involved because there is not an economical interest at hand.

"The only reason the U.S. doesn't want to be bothered is because we don't have oil, like Iraq. There would be no 'compensation' for the U.S. if any soldiers were lost," said Stania Alexis, a sophomore French and sociology major. "To the U.S., this would just be a waste of man power and money."

Professor Zhdanov blames the lack of U.S. enthusiasm on the timing of the entire issue. He said because the presidential elections are approaching, every candidate is very conscious of their image.

"Going into Haiti is too much of a risk; casualties would outrage the voters," said Zhdanoz.

Hanania Pierre-Louis, freshman premed major, said he thought the United States is waiting until the problem escalates.

"The U.S. is just waiting for the problem to get worse so that when they do step in, they will just look like heroes," he said.

Visions for the future

Despite the fear that many students have for the current status of their country, most continue to maintain a positive outlook. Students agreed that the problems in Haiti would take time to heal and require gradual reconstruction.

"We as Haitians shouldn't allow these problems to dishearten us; we should use this as a fuel to boost us in the right direction," said Ernald Nicolas, a sophomore computer science major.

Students agreed that Haiti needs a government that will resolve matters without using force. They explained that a new government would provide a good example by being open and straightforward with the people, so that gradually, there might be some trust developed between the two.

Many Haitian students are aware that the future of Haiti depends heavily on the actions of the Haitian youth and most importantly the youth living in America.

"My fear is that the youth there have not seen problems resolved another way, so it just becomes a cycle and the people don't know how to stop," said Alexis. "When revolts against the government begin, the government must defend themselves, so everyone starts fighting and it continues and escalates."

Pierre-Louis said the youth are the Haitian people's most important asset and should be building a stronger community for the future.

"They are the ones who will make a change in the country, but staying at home will not help them," said Pierre-Louis.

The students agreed that the future for Haiti would eventually be a prosperous and happy one, free of turmoil and coups.

As Antoine phrased it: "Perhaps with the education that we as Haitian descendants get here, and our power in numbers, we will be able to go back and be models of what we want the Haitian people to follow."

A history of Haiti

HISTORY from page 1

force, however they were quickly extinguished. Haiti declared its independence on Jan. 1, 1804 making it the first black independent nation to declare independence and became a model for other black nations who sought independence from European Imperialists.

Haiti, like many Latin American nations of the early nineteenth century, has had a history of political instability and violence. In 1915, during World War I, the United States invaded Haiti and the U.S. military occupation continued until August 15, 1934.

In an attempt to initiate changes to the shaken country, Catholic Priest, Jean Bertrand Aristide in 1990, was elected as president. Seven months into office he was overthrown in a military coup. Three years later after an international embargo, a blockade and threat of U.S. invasion, Aristide was restored to his position as President. According to the Associated Press, in May of 2000 Aristide's party swept the presidential election that observers say were flawed. Mr. Aristide intends to serve out his term until its expiration in 2006. However, many civilians are challenging his presence due to his lack of accomplishments for the country in his past decade in power.

Party at
The Blue Wall Pub!
21+ To Drink
18+ To Party

Every Wednesday Open Mic
Come perform for your friends and classmates
First come, first serve
sign-up sheet goes out at 6:00PM every Wednesday
Weekly winners will be awarded a full set Friday night in April.

Every Friday Live Local Music
Friday 2/13 at 7:00PM
Special Guests Pacifica Quartet
in a special intimate encore appearance following their morning performance at the Fine Arts Center.
Friday 2/20 at 7:00PM
Stay Behind and The Skeptics
Friday 2/27 at 7:00PM
Rudy Brown and Natural Descent

Admission to all events is free
Never a cover at the Blue Wall

Spend your summer in Boston

Northeastern University's Summer School lets you:

→ Choose from hundreds of courses in business, health, humanities, sciences, and the arts
→ Live in campus housing in the heart of the city
→ Transfer credit back to your college
→ Take courses online

Explore Boston. Discover Northeastern.
www.ace.neu.edu/summer925 or call 877-60-LEARN x925

→→ Summer registrations are now being accepted!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Gibson's new film already controversial

Mel Gibson's ambitious, controversial new film, "The Passion of the Christ," opened in theaters yesterday. After at least a year of publicity, hype and outcry, the film that could make or break Gibson's career has finally reached the public eye.

Since the release, the controversy has only gained steam. Protests have been vocal and harsh, and the loudest one has been from religious groups claiming that the film is anti-Semitic. The film makes some decisions on how Jesus of Nazareth's fate was determined, and those decisions have given cause for debate ranging from the casual conversation to vitriolic religion-based rhetoric.

It is also a brutally visceral depiction of the last days of Jesus' life, right up to his death on the cross atop Golgotha. The hours leading up to his death are full of torture and suffering, not only by Jesus but by his followers as well. It is clearly not a pleasant experience, watching a man being beaten to within an inch of his life, and then put on display to die in front of friend and foe alike — even if the images are fictional.

This has caused many reviewers to decry the film as too violent, too depressing and generally too upsetting to serve its purpose. However, it is because of these things that it does meet its own demands. What Gibson, a traditionalist Christian, has done is provide the most striking, emotional passion play in history. He has pulled no punches; he has worried over no criticisms, at least in how his film was produced. Though there is much being written and spoken of Gibson's own torturous feelings about the film and its subject, he has done well to keep his message clear.

Where that message has gotten lost is in a plot point that is debatable at the least, and damning at the worst. However, that single decision shouldn't be enough to cloud the relevant discussion here.

We live in an age where nearly every event in history, from the 1980 U.S. Olympic hockey team's upset victory, to the death of Christ, can be depicted on film with a strong measure of sincerity and accuracy. The other edge of this sword is that every minute detail is magnified, so that every decision the filmmaker makes is taken under consideration, and weighed against the true facts of history.

It is not as easy here, because it's harder to be sure of the history of Jesus' life. The Bible is the main source of information, but the book alone is one of the oldest causes of debate. So any film depiction of biblical events is sure to bring controversy and emotion.

What is being lost here is what the film actually is. It is a dramatic portrayal of the death of Jesus, considered by many to be one of the most important events in human history, and a large part of the basis of the Christian faith. And so, it provides a very important piece of our culture. We now have a very solid, extensive creation of the events, true or manufactured, of Jesus' time. We should marvel at the fact that there is such a piece of art that can bring the emotional discourse that "The Passion" has, and remember that the right to free speech is shared both by the filmmaker and the film's detractors.

If nothing else, the controversy surrounding "The Passion of the Christ" is a testament to the liberty that we hold so dear.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

More capitalism than conscious

Gilad Skolnick

Would you be disappointed if your university spent eight to ten grand to have a Neo-Nazi supporter come deliver a lecture? I should hope so, especially if your university is the University of Massachusetts, and doesn't even have enough money to buy any new books for its library.

That wasn't the main reason I was upset with the Political Economy Research Institute at UMass or with PERI for sponsoring Tuesday night's speaker. Personally, I have a hard time when anyone who supports Neo-Nazi's steps foot on my campus.

In Bowker auditorium this past Tuesday, an MIT lecturer by the name of Noam Chomsky gave a lecture entitled "Iraq and Beyond," and regardless of his opinion on the issue, this person should not be anyone's role model. A while back, he wrote an introduction to a book by Robert Faurisson, who denied the Holocaust in Germany, where over 9 million civilians were murdered, 6 million of which were Jews.

According to the book "Chomsky and the Neo-Nazis," Chomsky stated, "I see no anti-Semitic implications in denial of the existence of gas chambers, or even denial of the Holocaust ... I see no hint of anti-Semitic implications in Faurisson's work ..."

Furthermore, by helping Faurisson write a book on Holocaust denial he is supporting Faurisson's message. In Faurisson's book, he states, "The alleged Hitlerian gas chambers and the so-called genocide of the Jews form a single historical lie whose principal beneficiaries are the State of Israel and international Zionism ... what remains today is the truth. Let us dare to proclaim it. The non-existence of the gas chambers is ... good news that it would be wrong to keep hidden any longer."

How can we vow that such a tragedy will never happen again if we deny that it happened it the first place? Neo-Nazi extremist groups and skinheads have adopted the Holocaust denier's arguments, which is quite evident on their Web sites; at least there are some people out there who can agree with Chomsky on this one.

Chomsky goes on to say, "Anti-Semitism is no longer a problem, fortunately. It's raised, but it's raised because privileged people want to make sure they have total control, not just 98 percent control. That's why anti-Semitism is becoming an issue." So Chomsky believes that the reason Jews say anti-Semitism is a problem is because they want more power and control.

Never mind that swastika's were found on this campus a few years ago, and that hundreds upon hundreds of Neo-Nazi and white power groups exist in this country alone. In fact, the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) Web site reports "an opinion survey of adults in five European countries found that 21 percent harbor strong anti-Semitic views. The survey also concluded that 40 percent of Europeans and in Spain alone an unbelievable seven percent "believe that Jews have too much power in international financial markets."

Meanwhile, over 140 anti-Semitic incidents occurred in France in the past year alone, from synagogues becoming firebombed to Rabbis stabbed, resulting in thousands of French Jews fleeing the country, but Chomsky says that anti-Semitism is no longer a problem. Perhaps he meant that anti-Semitism wasn't a problem in Greenland.

The recent UMass guest also claims that the millions killed by Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge in Cambodia is fiction. The Khmer Rouge went on In the 1970s to kill intellectuals, city dwellers and hundreds of thousands of others in the country. This led to people dying from execution, starvation or forced labor.

Chomsky claims in an article "Distortion at Fourth Hand" in The Nation that "the 'slaughter' by the Khmer Rouge is a Moss-New York Times creation ..."

Apparently millions of people didn't die as the whole world and everyone in Cambodia thinks, but rather a newspaper made it all up. He argues that a lying and corrupt American Press presented distortions of facts and lies (from Cambodian refugees) about the "killing fields" to a large audience of duped Americans. Even though this genocide has been proven countless times, Chomsky refuses to apologize or acknowledge being wrong. Mr. Chomsky, perhaps China never took over Tibet either; maybe that's an invention of some newspaper as well?

It's odd how this man claims to be the "conscience of the American people" but profits considerably on his speaking tours and books. He looks to me like more of successful capitalist than a conscience. He's made millions upon millions on the numerous books that he's written and needs eight to 10 grand, the price of a new car, to come speak for an hour or two.

This wealthy genocide denier has some other interesting opinions. About five years ago in the Progressive, he said that the point of sports are "to build up irrational attitudes of submission to authority." Be careful next time you are asked to join a game of football by your hallmates. The list goes on and on about this man's strange theories and opinions, and books upon books could be filled regarding this subject.

I can't respect a man who denies that millions of people were murdered and supports those that deny the Holocaust. Fortunately, no other UMass club or organization other than PERI sponsored him. I'd like to hear an apology from Chomsky one day for the things that he's said, but I doubt that he's mature enough to do such.

At least I'd like an apology from PERI for sponsoring him. I agree that the man is a brilliant linguist and may have some intelligent things to say in regards to what's going on in the world. But I'm sure that Slobodan Milosevic, Saddam Hussein, or perhaps some other white supremacist out there may have some insightful things to say about the United States and the international world. Still, I wouldn't want to pay them 10 grand to speak or to come here either.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

The answer to your question

Sanam Hakim

I have been a student at the University of Massachusetts for almost two years. I came here because of its reputation as a good school with a good education for a low price. As the years go on, tuition is rising higher and higher, while the quality of education at the University remains the same.

The school keeps trying to come up with ways to improve the quality of the school, when the quality of the school doesn't rest in the hands of the administration. The administration is a tool; the students are the outcome.

Until we find out what our resources are, use them to the maximum capacity toward our own futures and give something back to our society, the quality of our school will remain the same.

Our school currently has multiple programs offered and over 150 registered student organizations, but not enough people using them, or even aware of them.

Schools function the same way as stores: If everyone is buying pants with a hole in the left leg and a little green square on the right thigh, stores will supply more pants with a hole in the left leg and little green square on the right thigh. More money will be put into this item because it is a good investment.

Similarly, the administration has provided the students with useful tools on campus that aren't being used to their maximum capacity, and, therefore, aren't being funded adequately. Hypothetically speaking, if the school introduced a new department X, money inputted into this department would be significantly impacted by the output of the department. If the department was outputting a large number of outstanding students into society, more money would be put into the department. The more students outputted into society, the more prominence becomes attached to the name UMass Amherst, and the higher the quality becomes.

Likewise, there are several resources on campus that aren't being utilized as much as they should be. Teacher's assistants are always saying that they sit alone in their office hours because no one goes to them for help, or even e-mails them to ask them for help. In addition, there are over 11 computer labs on campus, available for anyone who wants to use them. There are also free tutoring services offered through each department, and also through the CCEMBS program to help students reach their maximum potential.

In addition to tutoring services, there are also over 150 clubs on campus, created to give the University a sense of community. Most of these clubs average to about 20 students and they don't get adequate funding because no one uses them. Pretty much anything you can think of to do has a related established club on campus, ranging from a club for Macintosh computer users to a juggling club, to a club for women in sports management. When money is given to an organization, the first thing that is looked at is how many people are using it and what the output is. Thousands of dollars could go into a hypothetical club like "The Barbeque Club," and the thousands of dollars would continue going to "The Barbeque Club" if they put on events, attracted lots of students and provided the school with a sense of community.

The administration can only take school improvement so far. They are the bridge between the input and the output. But unless we take the input and utilize it into something useful and beneficial, the resources we have will forever remain resources. Until we find out what our resources are, use them to the maximum capacity toward our own futures, and give something back to our society, the quality of our school will remain the same.

Get out of your room, join a club, do volunteer work, attend an event, read a poster or two. The answer to your question is there. You're just asking the wrong person.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

Tired of all the fighting

I am tired. You must be tired, too. I no longer feel the need to defend Israel as I once did. I do, however, feel the need to explain Israel, to discuss it. Moreover, I feel the need for respect. Have we lost all respect for each other?

Robyn Brooks

I am an individual. I have my own opinions and ideas. Though I am proudly a part of the Student Alliance For Israel, I am not speaking for SAFI now. I am speaking for myself.

One can take any country and see their faults. Israel is far from perfect; show me an even close to perfect country! Then go at it from all sides, attempt to run it into the sea and terrorize its citizens daily from day one. But I regress.

There are so many incredible facets of Israel. The state in itself is a monumental achievement. Since when is a person or group of people taking pride in a country pathetic? Since when is celebrating the achievements and culture of a country close to my heart and the hearts of so many a cover-up for something else? I suppose one may see it as a public relations move: I see it as sharing information and ideas of a place that promotes tolerance and education and amity.

Many UMass students take pride in the countless aspects of Israel. In a survey conducted on our own in a few of the dormitories, over one thousand UMass students support Israel. Perhaps SAFI, those one thousand students or myself are not being clear. Israel is not just a bunch of facts tossed out and then some counter-facts tossed back.

Israel has to be explained. It takes time to understand it, but no time at all if you see it for yourself.

Okay, forget numbers for a minute. Forget about ceasefires and 1967 and the Oslo Accords.

We have two peoples, who long for security. Life. Recognition. Trust. Mix in retaliation, miscommunication, terrorists, innocent civilians and corruption.

The real Israel is not what you see in the news. There are so many aspects of Israel to be celebrated.

Let's talk about one of the two peoples for a minute. Strong, desperate, proud and waiting. Israeli's? Well yes, but this time, I was also referring to the Palestinians.

My freshman year, my best friend was a Palestinian. Many didn't understand. Just thinking about the looks we got from both some of his friends and some of my friends makes me tear. A pro-Israel girl and a Palestinian guy. We had everything in common. We forgot about numbers and technicalities when we were together. We had in common, friends, school, inside jokes and hopes for peace.

I miss him. His girlfriend disapproved of our friendship, so we slowly drifted apart. I miss him, but more than him, I miss our talks about the conflict. I miss that after we talked we'd hug, laugh or go catch lunch.

My old friend understood my pride in my culture, my pride in Israel, because he had the same pride in his own culture, and I understood that.

There is the respect. It would be an honor to read an editorial that did not mention Israel, but the pride of a people, a culture and a history.

We are a microcosm of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Those who oppose certain actions of the Israeli government have every right: that is fair and democratic. I even guarantee there would be Israelis who would agree with you. The real Israel is not what you see in the news. There are so many aspects of Israel to be celebrated. So celebrate the Palestinian people. Don't define them in terms of Israel. In that way, you de-legitimize them.

As an individual and one of the Vice President's of SAFI, I have a hope for peace. I'd like it to start on this campus. I'd like it to begin with respect. I will continue to celebrate Israel, but wouldn't it be nice to celebrate the hope of peace together?

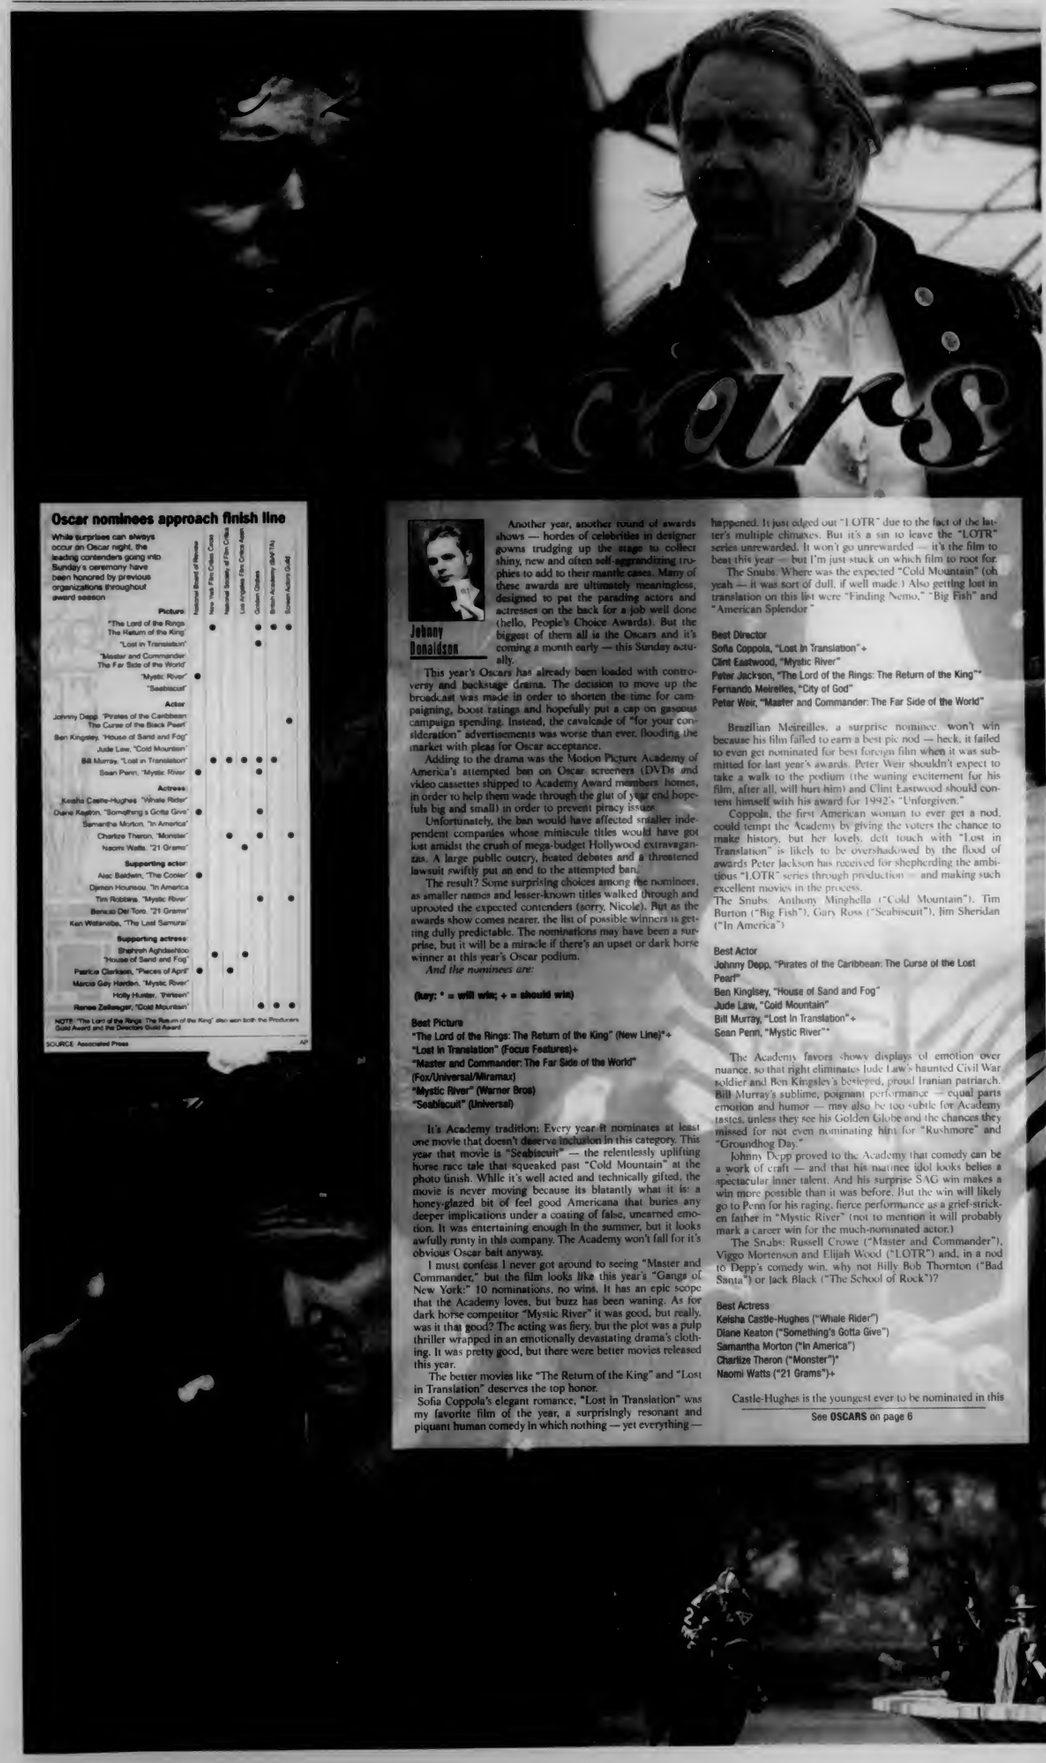
Robyn Brooks is a UMass student.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

CONGRATULATIONS

The Jewish Student Union would like to congratulate the cast and crew of the Vagina Monologues. We are proud to have raised significant amount of money, which will help end violence against women and children. All of the money raised went to several worthy charities, including our very own Everywoman's Center. We would like to thank everyone who came out to the show and contributed to this great cause.

We realize that the performance is controversial and contains some material that can be offensive. The Jewish Student Union would personally like to apologize to anyone who may have been offended by any part of the show. The ultimate message was one of empowerment and strength, and we hope that it was not overshadowed. We hope you enjoyed the show and appreciated the spirit of The Vagina Monologues.



Jewish Student Union, Sponsors of "The Vagina Monologues"

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Oscar nominees approach finish line

While surprises can always occur on Oscar night, the leading contenders going into Sunday's ceremony have been honored by previous organizations throughout award season

	National Board of Reviews	New York Film Critics Circle	National Society of Film Critics	Los Angeles Film Critics Assn.	Golden Globes	British Academy (BAFTA)	Screen Actors Guild
Picture
"The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King"		•			•	•	•
"Lost in Translation"					•
"Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World"
"Mystic River"	•
"Seabiscuit"
Actor
Johnny Depp, "Pirates of the Caribbean: The Curse of the Black Pearl"							•
Ben Kingsley, "House of Sand and Fog"
Jude Law, "Cold Mountain"
Bill Murray, "Lost in Translation"	•	•	•	•	•		•
Sean Penn, "Mystic River"	•						•
Actress
Keisha Castle-Hughes, "Whale Rider"
Diane Keaton, "Something's Gotta Give"	•
Samantha Morton, "In America"
Charlize Theron, "Monster"					•	•	•
Naomi Watts, "21 Grams"
Supporting actor
Alec Baldwin, "The Cooler"	•
Djimon Hounsou, "In America"
Tim Robbins, "Mystic River"					•
Benicio Del Toro, "21 Grams"
Ken Watanabe, "The Last Samurai"
Supporting actress
Shohreh Aghdashloo, "House of Sand and Fog"		•	•
Patricia Clarkson, "Pieces of April"	•				•
Marcia Gay Harden, "Mystic River"
Holly Hunter, "thirteen"
Renee Zellweger, "Cold Mountain"						•	•

NOTE: "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" also won both the Producers Guild Award and the Directors Guild Award

SOURCE Associated Press AP

Johnny Donaldson

Another year, another round of awards shows — hordes of celebrities in designer gowns trudging up the stage to collect shiny, new and often self-aggrandizing trophies to add to their mantle cases. Many of these awards are ultimately meaningless, designed to pat the parading actors and actresses on the back for a job well done (hello, People's Choice Awards). But the biggest of them all is the Oscars and it's coming a month early — this Sunday actually.

This year's Oscars has already been loaded with controversy and backstage drama. The decision to move up the broadcast was made in order to shorten the time for campaigning, boost ratings and hopefully put a cap on gaseous campaign spending. Instead, the cavalcade of "for your consideration" advertisements was worse than ever, flooding the market with pleas for Oscar acceptance.

Adding to the drama was the Motion Picture Academy of America's attempted ban on Oscar screeners (DVDs and video cassettes shipped to Academy Award members' homes, in order to help them wade through the glut of year end hopefuls big and small) in order to prevent piracy issues.

Unfortunately, the ban would have affected smaller independent companies whose miniscule titles would have got lost amidst the crush of mega-budget Hollywood extravaganzas. A large public outcry, heated debates and a threatened lawsuit swiftly put an end to the attempted ban.

The result? Some surprising choices among the nominees, as smaller names and lesser-known titles walked through and uprooted the expected contenders (sorry, Nicole). But as the awards show comes nearer, the list of possible winners is getting dully predictable. The nominations may have been a surprise, but it will be a miracle if there's an upset or dark horse winner at this year's Oscar podium.

And the nominees are:

(key: * = will win; + = should win)

Best Picture
"The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" (New Line)*+
"Lost in Translation" (Focus Features)+
"Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World" (Fox/Universal/Miramax)
"Mystic River" (Warner Bros)
"Seabiscuit" (Universal)

It's Academy tradition: Every year it nominates at least one movie that doesn't deserve inclusion in this category. This year that movie is "Seabiscuit" — the relentlessly uplifting horse race tale that squeaked past "Cold Mountain" at the photo finish. While it's well acted and technically gifted, the movie is never moving because its blatantly what it is: a honey-glazed bit of feel good Americana that buries any deeper implications under a coating of false, unearned emotion. It was entertaining enough in the summer, but it looks awfully runty in this company. The Academy won't fall for it's obvious Oscar bait anyway.

I must confess I never got around to seeing "Master and Commander," but the film looks like this year's "Gangs of New York:" 10 nominations, no wins. It has an epic scope that the Academy loves, but buzz has been waning. As for dark horse competitor "Mystic River" it was good, but really, was it that good? The acting was fiery, but the plot was a pulp thriller wrapped in an emotionally devastating drama's clothing. It was pretty good, but there were better movies released this year.

The better movies like "The Return of the King" and "Lost in Translation" deserves the top honor.

Sofia Coppola's elegant romance, "Lost in Translation" was my favorite film of the year, a surprisingly resonant and piquant human comedy in which nothing — yet everything — happened. It just edged out "LOTR" due to the fact of the latter's multiple climaxes. But it's a sin to leave the "LOTR" series unrewarded. It won't go unrewarded — it's the film to beat this year — but I'm just stuck on which film to root for.

The Snubs: Where was the expected "Cold Mountain" (oh yeah — it was sort of dull, if well made.) Also getting lost in translation on this list were "Finding Nemo," "Big Fish" and "American Splendor."

Best Director
Sofia Coppola, "Lost In Translation"+
Clint Eastwood, "Mystic River"
Peter Jackson, "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King"*
Fernando Meirelles, "City of God"
Peter Weir, "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World"

Brazilian Meirelles, a surprise nominee won't win because his film failed to earn a best pic nod — heck, it failed to even get nominated for best foreign film when it was submitted for last year's awards. Peter Weir shouldn't expect to take a walk to the podium (the waning excitement for his film, after all, will hurt him) and Clint Eastwood should contene himself with his award for 1992's "Unforgiven."

Coppola, the first American woman to ever get a nod, could tempt the Academy by giving the voters the chance to make history, but her lovely, deft touch with "Lost in Translation" is likely to be overshadowed by the flood of awards Peter Jackson has received for shepherding the ambitious "LOTR" series through production — and making such excellent movies in the process.

The Snubs: Anthony Minghella ("Cold Mountain"). Tim Burton ("Big Fish"). Gary Ross ("Seabiscuit"). Jim Sheridan ("In America")

Best Actor
Johnny Depp, "Pirates of the Caribbean: The Curse of the Lost Pearl"
Ben Kinglsey, "House of Sand and Fog"
Jude Law, "Cold Mountain"
Bill Murray, "Lost In Translation"+
Sean Penn, "Mystic River"*

The Academy favors showy displays of emotion over nuance, so that right eliminates Jude Law's haunted Civil War soldier and Ben Kingsley's bellowing, proud Iranian patriarch. Bill Murray's sublime, poignant performance — equal parts emotion and humor — may also be too subtle for Academy tastes, unless they see his Golden Globe and the chances they missed for not even nominating him for "Rushmore" and "Groundhog Day."

Johnny Depp proved to the Academy that comedy can be a work of craft — and that his matinee idol looks belies a spectacular inner talent. And his surprise SAG win makes a win more possible than it was before. But the win will likely go to Penn for his raging, fierce performance as a grief-stricken father in "Mystic River" (not to mention it will probably mark a career win for the much-nominated actor.)

The Snubs: Russell Crowe ("Master and Commander"), Viggo Mortenson and Elijah Wood ("LOTR") and, in a nod to Depp's comedy win, why not Billy Bob Thornton ("Bad Santa") or Jack Black ("The School of Rock")?

Best Actress
Keisha Castle-Hughes ("Whale Rider")
Diane Keaton ("Something's Gotta Give")
Samantha Morton ("In America")
Charlize Theron ("Monster")*
Naomi Watts ("21 Grams")+

Castle-Hughes is the youngest ever to be nominated in this

See OSCARS on page 6

'Eve' searches, while ending up in all the wrong places

Advice from Eve:

Q: Dear Eve, I love to go clubbing on the weekends, but my boyfriend prefers to sit at a bar with his friends. I always end up doing what he wants, and I don't know how to tell him how angry this makes me. What should I do?

A: Being open with your partner is probably the first step. Why don't you make it clear what you really want to do? Tell him you sacrifice most of your weekends for him and he might come around. Unfortunately, if most bar-sitter types agree to come they wont really enjoy themselves. You cannot expect a man to change who he is and what he likes to do, but they can still compromise. Your best bet is to have a girls' night out and you'll have more fun being surrounded by others that enjoy clubbing too.

Q: Dear Eve, my boyfriend criticizes everything about me. Whether it's what I say, how much I eat, or the clothes I wear. He says it's constructive, but I just feel worse. All of my other friends disagree with what he says. Who should I believe?

A: Yourself! Your boyfriend should love and accept you for all of you. Not love you for what he wants you to be. You should be confident and strong enough not to be bothered by criticism from any loved one. If he cannot be proud of who you truly are — then he isn't worth your time.

Original Sin

Eve

However, my friend found this fun Web site that offers activities that help you meet random people. So, I replied to a rollerblading ad get-together — assuming I would think it's funny, exciting, I don't know.

Think again.

At 12:30 p.m. I get a call from a man named Sabastien. Sounds great, but he woke me up. Plus, he assumed I was to meet him in an hour to rollerblade along the Charles.

What?! First of all, I had no idea what he was talking about, and second, who rollerblades now? It's 20 degrees below zero outside! I agreed to meet him out of duty, so I went. Great, I'm going all the way into the city to meet some random guy on rollerblades in this artic weather. I didn't even have enough time to get my morning coffee!

I finally get there, running across Mass. Ave with high-heeled boots and a bright red nose to meet my partner … 20 minutes late.

There he was, perfect. Just perfect. Standing tall in a cute sporty outfit, looking only a little upset at my tardiness. He looked at my feet and frowned. I explained myself briefly and put on my blades. However, of course, everything went wrong. The skates wouldn't tie the right way, my socks were too thick, and the wheels were rusty. I was not a professional.

He just stood there smiling. I didn't. So we rolled all around as he began to tell me his life story; He's not only a bungee jumper, skydiver, cross-country skier, scuba diver, native to Paris, but speaks Italian, French, and English..maybe more..and by the way, is doing his Ph.D. at MIT in Bio-BSC…or something.

So, as we are zipping along, I'm thinking all I want to do is sit down and have a cup of coffee or a drink. But he was the type of guy you have to keep up with. So, that wasn't happening. I was already turning into a pretzel for him! And he probably still won't call by the end of all of this. I was too cold to care.

He didn't really care either: "It iz so beautiful ze cold, non?" No. It's freezing, and I'd rather be eating, drinking, sleeping … or whatever. But the point is, I always seem to adapt to a guy so he will keep me, like me, call me.

Why? Why do I work so hard at changing who I am to be accepted by some guy? Then, when I end up breaking up, my entire identity is lost for a moment. How can I let myself get to this point? I guess you know when he's right if you don't need to alter yourself in any way. But I guess you really just have to know where to look …

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_orginalsin@yahoo.com. "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

'LOTR' in search of the Oscar

OSCARS from page 5

category, and, as with all child actors, they're will be some questions as to whether she's really acting or just playing herself. Morton's skillful, quiet turn as a mother dealing with the loss of her son suffers from the same curse that Law suffers from: it's too quiet. it doesn't have enough actorly fireworks for the Academy's taste.

Watts' beautiful-girl-goes-unglam role in the despairing "21 Grams," is likely to be shadowed by Theron's in "Monster" and the film's meager box office. but I'll throw my support behind her as she was the best thing in that uneven flick but (and, full confession. I have yet to see Theron in "Monster.")

Keaton could get an award for bringing depth to "Something's Gotta Give." But Theron has the same momentum behind her that propelled Nicole Kidman, Halle Berry and Hillary Swank to wins. In other words, she gets ugly for Oscar and will inevitably win.

The Snubs: If you are going to nominate a young ingénue, why not go for the more skilled, powerful portraits crafted by Evan Rachel Wood ("Thirteen") or Scarlett Johanssen ("Lost in Translation")? And then of course there's Nicole Kidman's Scarlett O'Hara retread in "Cold Mountain" and Jennifer Connelly's depressive in "House of Sand and Fog."

Best Supporting Actor
Alec Baldwin, "The Cooler"
Benicio Del Toro, "21 Grams"
Djimon Hounsou, "In America"
Tim Robbins, "Mystic River"+
Ken Watanabe, "The Last Samurai"+

Del Toro's tormented ex-con, wrestling with his demons and inner violence stands out amongst the unilluminating angst of "21 Grams," but his previous win for "Traffic" in this category may do him in. Baldwin got his career back on track with "The Cooler" but it's too small a film to make an impact.

Hounsou does fine work in "In America" varying between rage, tenderness and heartbreak, but really — he's playing a walking cliché. That leaves Robbins and Watanabe. The critical disparaging will likely wipe out Watanabe's chances, even though he gave a star-making turn that was the best thing about that otherwise weak movie. Robbins shrinks into his character's damaged, curdled skin, and his timidity offsets Penn's meticulous showboating to give "Mystic River" balance.

The Snubs: The biggest snub has got to be Sean Astin for "The Lord of the Rings." His loyalty to Frodo proved that he the movie was really all his.

Best Supporting Actress
Shoreh Aghdashloo "House of Sand and Fog"
Patricia Clarkson "Pieces of April"
Marcia Gay Harden "Mystic River"
Holly Hunter "Thirteen"+
Renee Zellwegger "Cold Mountain"*

In a perfect world, Hunter's fierce, tearful portrayal of a mother watching helplessly as her daughter self-destructs would take home the award, but since she's already got one the Academy may want to award a newbie. (Ditto for "Pollack" awardee Harden.) The Academy will wait to award Clarkson for either A) a bigger, Best Actress role or B) a better received movie.

COURTESY PHOTO/MIRAMAX FILMS

At the 2004 Oscars, Sofia Coppola could be the first woman to win the Best Director award.

But here's were the big upset may occur: Zellwegger's Southern-fried country gal in "Cold Mountain" was the shoo-in to win, reaping award after award — until the largely unknown Aghdashloo started babbling up in the buzz bin. She's the first Iranian actress to be nominated and could help the Academy Award make history by taking the gold. This could make the category the most exciting to watch this year.

Best Animated Film
"Brother Bear"
"Finding Nemo"*+
"The Triplets of Belleville"

Well, duh — this can be solved in two words: "Finding Nemo."

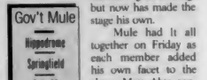
Johnny Donaldson is the senior movie critic for The Collegian.

New look Mules jam out the Hippodrome

By Scott Eldridge II
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue. Gov't Mule visited Springfield for the first time, took the stage at the Hippodrome for the first time, and played like they had well-worn footprints on the nightclub stage.

The old, Warren Haynes and Matt Abts, are the tireless and persistent musicians who have propelled a band beyond the tragic death in August 2000 of founding bassist Allen Woody.



The new, Andy Hess, stuck his foot in the revolving door that cycled through dozens of guest bass guitarists and was anointed this past fall to hold the permanent spot.

The borrowed, "Wild Horses," an encore that closed out three hours of intensity with a spot of poignancy. And something blue seemed somewhere far beyond the venue. Three and one half years after losing Woody, Mule is not a band obsessed in the grief that loss brought. Instead, they are a band elating in the music he inspired and created.

With Allen Woody's widow and daughter pressed close against the stage, packed in with the rest of the Mule aficionados and diehards, Warren Haynes put his heart on his strings and even broke one or two. "Andy's with us and he's not going away," keyboardist Danny Louis said a week before the concert.

Chosen in large part because of his ability to mesh with the three Mules (Louis, Abts, Haynes) who were searching for a fourth, Andy Hess had that "band thing," Louis said.

And Friday was a testament to that, as Hess' bass playing wandered in and out of Louis' organs and keys, Abts skins and Haynes' riffs. With time to get more and more comfortable with much what Mule has been playing, Hess appears more comfortable to extend on his own. Just over a year ago, the same bassist on tour was still finding his footing, but now has made the stage his own.

Mule had It all together on Friday as each member added his own facet to the show. Matt Abts continued in his way, drumming with fervor, propelling the band as a whole and providing an intensity that resonated throughout.

As has become his custom, Abts soloed towards the end of the second set, stealing the limelight from Haynes, who has made his name as one of the greatest guitarist still working.

But the strength of Gov't Mule doesn't lie in individuals except to the extent they work together. In knowing and telling glances, Haynes, Abts, Louis and Hess

See GOV'T MULE on page 7

COURTESY PHOTO/MIRAMAX FILMS

Gov't Mule lead guitarist Warren Hayes.

Ziggy takes solo act on the road

Son of music legend plus Spearhead to play Calvin Theater

By Glen Straub and Bradley Farberman
Collegian Staff

Here's the dream of a college-aged reggae music fan: the opportunity to see the superior musical genius and trans-continental superstar Robert Nesta Marley on a stage performing live, playing his illustrious 'roots, rock, reggae' and spreading his messages of social harmony.

Unfortunately, this pleasurable image must remain only as a dream — due to cancer, Marley passed away in 1981.

However, his soul, music and message have flourished since his death through the strong force of his disciples — the ones that are closest to his heart — his children.

So while the dream's transformation into reality is unattainable, Saturday night residents of the Pioneer Valley do have the chance to see a Marley live on stage, as the most successful of the family successors, Ziggy Marley, makes a stop at the Calvin Theater in Northampton.

Don't expect to hear a Wailers cover band though.

Ziggy may be a Marley and his lyrics come close to mimicking the prophesies of his father but his sound is all his own.

Combining blues, R&B, hip-hop and roots reggae, Ziggy has crafted a unique sound over the course of a two-decade career.

He is best known for his work as the driving force behind the group The Melody Makers, which joins him with three of his siblings (brother Stephen and two sisters Sharon and Cedella). Ziggy Marley and The Melody Makers released their debut album, "Play the Game Right" in 1985 and were playing together as recently as one year ago on a European tour. Nineteen years later, three Grammy awards and millions of records sold, The Melody Makers are considered one of the most successful bands ever to step out of Jamaica.

However, it will only be Ziggy performing on stage at the cavernous Calvin. He is touring in support of his debut solo album, "Dragonfly." Released last year, the production of "Dragonfly" — which took about one year — was a chance for Ziggy to dig deeper into his musical prowess and establish himself as a solo artist. The crowd in Noho will get a glimpse of what he can do all on his own.

Although he is going solo for his performance, his touring parade is far more crowded.

Helping him entertain the masses is fellow socially conscious reggae/rock/hip-hop/soul artist Michael Franti and his band Spearhead, who are scheduled to open up for the headlining Kingston, Jamaica native.

Michael Franti has a led a life in music that others could only imagine. In 1992, Franti founded "The Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy", an outfit that included famed jazz guitarist Charlie Hunter; the group released one album and toured with U2 before disbanding.

In 1994, Franti struck gold once again when his new group, Spearhead, was signed to Capitol Records. Over the next five years, Franti and Spearhead released two records to critical acclaim and established a fanbase around the country.

After parting ways with Capitol in 1999 though, ironically his career catapulted. Since going independent, Spearhead has scored opening slots for groups like Blues Traveler, Dave Matthews Band and Ani DiFranco. The band has collaborated with sax genius Karl Denson, Phish's Trey Anastasio and the String Cheese Incident. And last August, they released "Everyone Deserves Music," a concise, focused effort strongly representative of the group's trademark sound: tight, soulful arrangements enhanced by thoughtful, conscious lyrics. In October, Spearhead showed off their new songs at a concert at Pearl Street Nightclub.

Such Spearhead tunes as "Positive" and "Bomb the World" carry important messages, wrapped in firm beats and solid grooves. When Franti tells us that "You can bomb the world to pieces, but you can't bomb it into peace," you can feel his frustration and, just as important, you can feel the rhythm.

Between Franti and Ziggy performing on stage, there will be all types of rhythms manifesting at the Calvin Theater Saturday night.

The show starts at 8 p.m. with soulful-singer Beth Hart set to open the show. Tickets are $28.50.

Ziggy Marley
Michael Franti & Spearhead
Sat. Feb. 28
Calvin Theater
Northampton
$28.50

In support of his solo debut "Dragonfly," Ziggy Marley is touring the United States, for the first time without his band The Melody Makers. He performs at the Calvin Theater Saturday night at 8 p.m.

New bassist steps in for Gov't Mule bounce off each other musically as they work around each other on stage.

GOV'T MULE from page 6

Louis is showing his musical prowess more and more with Mule as well.

Either by intention or natural progression, the keyboards have become a more present force in the relentless tours. Straying from the typical and expected keys and organ, Louis distorts his sounds as much as any guitarist with an array of pedals. His ability resounds and stands out as a welcome addition to the band.

But one of the most compelling powers on stage was Hess, and to some of the audience he was the newest. Wrapped around the block during the cold pre-concert wait the chatter revolved around this newest mule and his ability. For those who had not seen him yet, Hess needed to prove that he deserved his spot on stage. The impossibility of replacing Allen Woody not withstanding.

Hess had to show that he could play with Haynes, Abts, Louis and the audience's ears.

From "Thorazine Shuffle" to "Soulshine," Hess rid Springfield of all those doubts. Still playing Woody's songs, he has adapted his style to the rest of the band. More importantly, he flows seamlessly with the old trio.

Labeled "a night with Gov't Mule," The Hippodrome show was the first following an opening stint for Kid Rock.

And to further drive home that Gov't Mule is moving forward — united and renewed — and not stopping, a new batik backdrop featuring a four-headed mule adorned the stage. The Mule has been reborn.

NEW THIS WEEK!
MATCHSTICK MEN
MY LIFE WITHOUT ME
PIECES OF APRIL
SPY KIDS 3-D
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator
JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2004
LAST MINUTE DISCOUNTS!
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 / www.ststravel.com

SPRING BREAK
Free People top
back slit capris
Steve Madden heel in pink and black
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

STORE CLOSING
Save Big $$$ Decorating Your Room
All Posters $3 or 5 for $10
beyondthewall
Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street
Hadley, MA
413-582-6181

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive, Chicopee
From Showtime, CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman" and NBC's "Late Night with Conan O'Brien"
BRIAN REGAN
1st Time Appearance!
MARCH 26TH BILL BELLAMY
APRIL 3RD JOHN WITHERSPOON
APRIL 10TH GREG PROOPS
APRIL 17TH MIKE EPPS
APRIL 18TH DAVE ATTELL

win a trip to europe! contiki.com/campus
get into a real greek week!
>we've got the ultimate toga party!
>new! mykonos resort 7 nights from $599
>aegean classic cruise 7 days from $579
>greek island hopping 14 days from $1289
>london to athens 23 days from $1799
prices are per person, land only, subject to availability.
>packages include accommodations, transportation, many meals and as much fun as you can handle! call now or go online to book the vacation of a lifetime!
contiki VACATIONS for 18-30 year olds
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com

UMASS AMHERST
STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
Helping students protect their rights for over 30 years
Free Legal Advice,
Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Worker Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
Call 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

chicago Pizzaria
Thursday/Friday/Saturday Special: large cheese pizza $5.00
Free Delivery
549-6073
160 Pearing Street
located on the corner of Pearing St. and Bancot Ave.
Open Hours:
Sun-Wed : 11am-1am
Thurs-Sat : 11am-3am

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
OOPS!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Boston University School of Medicine
MENTAL HEALTH AND BEHAVIORAL MEDICINE PROGRAM
Leading to a Master of Arts with License
Eligibility for Mental Health Counseling
OPEN HOUSE
Friday, March 5, 2004
Program Informational Session from 10 - 11:30 a.m.
Final Candidates Interviews from 12 - 2 p.m.
Boston University School of Medicine
715 Albany Street
Robinson Bldg., Suite B-2903
Boston, MA 02118
To R.S.V.P. or for more information, contact Bernice R. Mark at Boston University School of Medicine 715 Albany Street Robinson Building, Suite B-2903 Boston, MA 02118 617-414-2328 • nicey@bu.edu
R.S.V.P. by March 3, 2004
An equal opportunity, affirmative action institution.
BOSTON UNIVERSITY

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

TAMALES
Great Mexican food that's good for you!
Extended Hours at The Hatch
Due to overwhelming demand, the Pizza and Tamale

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Beer:
Heineken 24 btl case $20.99*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk cans $15.99*
Keystone 30 pk cans $13.49*
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans $10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl $10.99*
Guinness Draught 12 pk btl $10.99*
Harp Lager 12 pk btl $9.99*
Murphy's Stout 4 pk cans $4.99*
Wine:
Sterling Vineyards Chardonnay 750ml $12.99
Chandon Fresco Brut & Extra Dry 750 ml $8.99
Beaulieu Vineyards Coastal Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml $8.99
Papio Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt $7.99
Barton & Guestier Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml $4.99
Stone Cellars 750 ml... 2 for $10.00
Liquor:
Bailey's Irish Cream 1 lt $22.99
Crown Royal 750 ml $18.99
Romana Sambuca 750 ml $18.99
Jose Cuervo Tequila 750 ml $16.99
Yukon Jack 750 ml $14.99
Capt. Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $11.99
Smirnoff Vodka all flavors 750 ml $9.99
*all beer prices plus deposit
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 2/26 THROUGH 3/03
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Still rollin'...

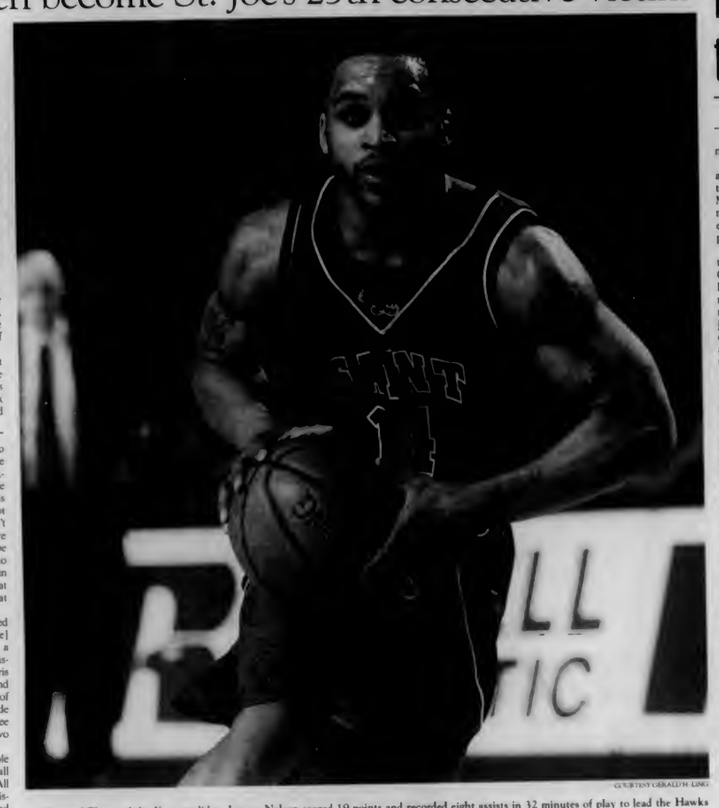
Minutemen become St. Joe's 25th consecutive victim

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team fought early but came up short against the still undefeated St. Joseph's Hawks last night at the Mullins Center in front of a season high 5,912.

The Hawks (25-0, 14-0 Atlantic 10) came out firing in the second half building a 24-point lead off of a 22-8 run less than seven minutes in. Delonte West started the run with a quick three and four different St. Joe's players contributed. The Minutemen (9-16, 3-10 A-10) were unable to get much going as their shooting and a tenacious St. Joe's defense posed the biggest problem.

UMass got off to a quick start up 13-9 at the 11:34 mark. The Hawks hit five buckets in a row, but the game remained in the Minutemen's sight as the first half lead never broke 10.



The Hawks led by six with just two seconds remaining, but the strength of the Hawks offense was made apparent by two quick UMass mistakes making the lead 10 going into the half.

"The end of the first half hurt," coach Steve Lappas said. "Two seconds to give up three plays like that. Like I told them in the locker room, I said, 'you can't make three mistakes in two seconds against a team that good and not expect to pay for it.' You don't know, but at least you would have liked to see what it was like to be down six and maybe cut it to three. They really haven't been in that many games to see what would have happened so that would have been nice to see.

"Anthony [Anderson] fouled on a three. Stephane [Lasme] boxed out but not enough. He's a little thin, the big kid kind of muscled him a little bit and then Chris Chadwick didn't see the ball and his man when they threw it kind of over his head when West made that shot. So it was really three fundamental mistakes there in two seconds."

Four Hawks registered double figures as Delonte West led all scorers with 23, pre-season All American Jameer Nelson registered 19, Pat Carroll added 14 and Tyrone Barley chipped in with 12.

See MEN'S HOOP on page 9

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

National Player of the Year candidate Jameer Nelson scored 19 points and recorded eight assists in 32 minutes of play to lead the Hawks to their 25th consecutive victory, one shy of Massachusetts' Atlantic 10 record for consecutive victories to begin a season.

Nelson a true winner

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The St. Joseph's Hawk may never die, but will it ever lose?

Jameer Nelson hopes not, and as he did in last night's 83-58 victory over Massachusetts at the Mullins Center, the nation's premier point guard is doing whatever he can to prevent it from happening.

"I don't want to lose a game this year," the 5-foot-11 native of Chester, Pa. Said. "Nobody likes to lose, and we know if we keep winning then we have a chance to make something special happen. I just always ask myself 'what can I do right now to best help my team, and then I try to go out and do that.' "

"It's worked pretty well this year, so far."

And worked it has. Nelson, a Pre-season First Team All-America selection has had a stellar campaign thus far, averaging team highs in scoring average (20.2 points per game) as well as assists per game (5.38). Nelson has also reached double figures in scoring in 35 consecutive contests dating back to last season, and twice in 2003-04 has he come up just short of his first career triple-double.

In other words, Jameer Nelson does it all.

"He's just a dynamic player," St. Joe's head coach Phil Martelli said. "His mental capacity on the court is unmatched, as is his vision, but he just always is able to pick and choose exactly which part of his game he needs to elevate for the betterment of the team.

"That's the mark of a great player."

With his 19 points against the Minutemen, No. 14 pulled within 66 points of 2,000 for his illustrious career, and within 49 of becoming the Hawks all-time leading scorer. His 240 career steals also rank second in school history, just 13 shy of becoming the historical leader in that category as well.

So how do you stop Jameer

See NELSON on page 9

Minutewomen set to battle A-10 foe George Washington

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

As the Atlantic 10 playoffs quickly approach, the Massachusetts women's basketball team is set to host one of its toughest opponents of the year in George Washington.

The Lady Colonials recently had an 11-game winning streak snapped at the hands of conference rival Duquesne, in a game that saw the Lady Dukes shoot 13-for-21 behind the arch. UMass coach Marnie Dacko sees the three-pointer as a vital tool in defeating George Washington, but knows her team hasn't been fully on target as of recent.

"If we could shoot like Duquesne, I would love it, but if you look at our three-pointers, you can tell it's not one of our strong points," Dacko said.

Another obstacle for the Minutewomen will be one of the largest front-courts in the Atlantic 10, led by 6'3 center Ugo Oha. Oha has been the backbone of the Lady Colonials, averaging 13.9 points and seven rebounds per game. She also leads the team in block with 87 on the season.

Also defending the post is power forward Anna Montanana who is averaging over 12 points per game and leads the team in rebounds, grabbing 7.7 per game. Montanana has been on a tear as of recent, and dropped 19 in George Washington's loss to Duquesne. With this impressive duo down low, UMass will need to change its recent game-plan, which has been attacking the post with the trio of Edris Bailey, Joyce Massey and Tamara Tatham.

The three players have been an intricate part of the Minutewomen's offense, but won't get the same looks against the post-laden Lady Colonials.

"They have two big kids, and I believe they have three of the top players in the conference," Dacko said. "We have to attack them and cause them to get into foul trouble. We can't just shoot over (Oha), so we have to play aggressive."

Apparently George Washington doesn't seem to mind traveling as it has only lost two games on the road this season. Their most recent loss was at Duquesne, before that

See WOMEN'S HOOP on page 10

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Senior Cleo Foster and the Maroon and White will face a stiff test in the Lady Colonials.

UMass to compete in 2003 Leadoff Classic

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

After a disappointing 1-4 start in Fiesta Bowl, the Massachusetts softball will now look right its ship in the 2003 NFCA Leadoff Classic, a tournament UMass won after defeating three Top 25 opponents to win the title a year ago.

The ninth-annual NFCA Leadoff Classic features 24 of top softball teams in the nation traveling to Columbus, Ga. for the three-day tournament. 14 of the top 25 teams will compete from Feb. 27 to 29. There will be six pools, with the top team in each pool advancing to the Gold Championship. The remaining teams, determined by record in pool play, will be placed in Silver and Bronze Championship.

This is the Minutewomen's ninth straight time being invited to the national tournament. UMass have No. 5 Oklahoma, Central Michigan and DePaul in their pool. The Maroon and White open pool play against DePaul on Friday at 2:30 p.m. and Oklahoma at 5:30 p.m. Saturday will have the Minutewomen matched up with DePaul at 12:30 p.m.

The pitching staff might have a challenge over the weekend with Kelli Arnold, the 2003 Leadoff Classic Most Outstanding Player, possibly out with a concussion. Arnold has barely practiced all week and was marked questionable by head coach Elaine Sortino. Arnold went 3-0 with a save, giving up only one run and four hits to then No. 11 Florida State in the championship game on her way to the National Player of the Week honors.

Without Arnold, sophomore Jenna Busa is now the leader of the staff after her success at the Fiesta Bowl. Busa posted a 1.79 ERA against the steep competition in Arizona.

"What we what to do is play better than we played out in Arizona," Sortino said. "The first place we are looking to is the pitching staff. I want to see if they cut down on the walks, increase the strikeouts and hopefully do a little better of a job neutralizing the offense. That would be a great mark and I think the outcome would get taken care of.

"At the plate, we want to do the reverse. I think what we want to do is increase our walks and cut down our strikeouts. Our goal is to extend the count and take the pitchers deeper in the count. If get the short game and run game going, we can open some things up."

Patty Gasso is well-known for getting her Oklahoma teams tremendous starts. OU has reloaded after losing their most accomplished class in the program's history. The 2003 seniors, including three All-Americans were the last class part of the 2000 national champions. The Sooners are left with a legacy of four straight College World Series appearances. OU posts a 12-2-1 schedule so far this season.

Returning All-American pitcher Kami Keiter has been sidelined with an injury in the early goings this season.

The Sooners' offense is lead by freshman Jaime Fox and senior April Valdez. Fox hit .500 with two doubles, two home-runs and 10 runs batted in last week, as Valdez is batting .500 over the last nine games.

"[Oklahoma] is going to hit the ball," Sortino said. "It's going to be a typical Oklahoma team with strong pitching, formidable hitting and always a solid defense. They are a little bit younger of an Oklahoma team, but we haven't seen them in three years so it's not going to matter."

Central Michigan will kick off their season at the Leadoff Classic after posting a 26-18 record, 14 -7 in Mid-American play. The Chippewas return nine lettermen lead by senior Amber Puchalski. The senior hurler, a two-time first team All-MAC pick, is chasing several school and conference records this season.

DePaul are 1-4 this season with three of the losses coming against Top 10 teams UCLA, Cal and Nebraska. The losses have dropped DePaul from the Top 25, who were previously ranked No. 21.

Junior Saskia Roberson is hitting .500 with five doubles and four RBI. Senior Sarah Martz is 1-2 in the circle with a 5.85 ERA and 17 strikeouts.

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

UMass Junior captain Anthony Anderson, here guarded by St. Joe's Delonte West, scored 10 points the Minutemen's loss to the unbeaten Hawks.

UMass can't stop St. Joseph's

MEN'S HOOP from page 8

Next to their shooting Anderson attributes the Hawks win, and their streak to defense.

"It's their defense, the way they can just turn it on," he said. "We were kind of close all game, they just felt when they wanted to turn it on they turned it on."

Junior transfer Chris Chadwick had 15 points last night in 24 minutes as his solid play has earned him more court time.

"Lately he's been much better," Lappas said of Chadwick. "I know it gets down played a little bit but he's new ... he's just getting a feel for how we want him to play. He's very good with the ball and he's got to learn how to play without it and I think that's what he's done. He's done a better job of knowing when to go and when not to go."

Sophomore Rashaun Freeman led the Minutemen with 21 points, regaining both his confidence and energy after shooting just 8-27 in the previous four games.

Although Hawks coach Phil Martelli wasn't expecting the best from Freeman last night, he wasn't surprised by his effort.

"When people sit down and start discussing who the best freshman or first year player is in the A-10 he's got to be the first person discussed," he said. "It was interesting because I watched the previous three games and I thought he was getting tired, he seemed to be tiring and tonight he certainly had a burst of energy early on, I guess he had eight of got to learn how to play without it and I think that's what he's done. He's done a better job of knowing when to go and when not to go."

Overall Lappas thought his team fought hard considering the mismatch.

"Obviously they're a really good team with some really good individual players, and I thought our guys did the best they could with our game plan," Lappas said. "I thought we did a pretty good job defensively, got beat one on one off the dribble a little bit but I thought our guys gave it everything that they had.

"I think we missed a lot of makeable shots," he said. "I thought we missed a lot of shots we normally have a good chance to make and that would have been a whole different ball game."

Maurice Maxwell hit the floor hard with just over three minutes left in the game. He limped off with help after being down a couple minutes. Maxwell was kneed in the thigh and Lappas is unsure of his status for the weekend.

Nelson proves he's a bona fide winner

NELSON from page 8

Nelson? As UMass and coach Steve Lappas found out for the second time this season last night, there might not be away.

Leading 6-3 at the 15:36 mark of the first half, Nelson pulled the Hawks to within one with a jumper, and then proceeded to drop seven of his team's next 13 points to push St. Joe's out in front 18-13.

Then at what may have been the game's most critical juncture, Nelson drew a foul while in the act of shooting a 3-pointer with just over two seconds remaining in the half, and his two made free throws combined with a basket by backcourt mate Delonte West off of his missed third turned what was a very competitive six-point affair into a 10 point game at 41-31.

However what may be most impressive about the National Player of the Year candidate is his aforementioned ability to alter his game to best suit his team and the flow of the action. After scoring 17 points in the first half and dishing out 2 assists, Nelson recorded just two points in the second half and handed out six helpers.

As Lappas will agree, for Nelson and St. Joe's it's simply what's worked for 25 consecutive games.

"... Nelson took over the game," Lappas said. "[He] starts going off the dribble, which [both Nelson and West] are very hard to stop off the dribble, and when you make a good play to cut them off with help they kick it to a guy he makes a three.

"That's kind of been the formula for them all year."

So with a plethora of national attention following their every move, Jameer Nelson and the St. Joseph's Hawks are two wins removed from not only a favorable place in Atlantic 10 conference history but, along with No. 1 Stanford, have a chance to become the first wire-to-wire unbeaten since the University of Nevada-Las Vegas in 1991.

Nonetheless, Nelson refuses to souk up any of the hype or media attention, because for arguably the nation's best player, the task will always remain the same:

"All I can do is just go out and be Jameer Nelson, play my game and do whatever I can to help my team keep winning basketball games, because in the end that's all that matters and is all I can do."

And why not? It's now worked 25 consecutive times ... and counting.

Sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman led the Maroon and White with 21 points last night.

What are you doing this summer?

How about keeping cool at an internship?

Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session to give your internship search a head start.

February 26
3 pm
104 Career Services

March 2
10:30 am
104 Career Services

March 4
10:30 am
104 Career Services

CareerServices

For more information, go to www.umass.edu/careers or call us at 545-2224

Let everything that has breath praise the Lord!

Gospel Concert 2004

Saturday, Feb. 28th
Bartlett Auditorium
Rm. 65
7 pm

Free Admissions

BROUGHT TO YOU BY:
BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN CHRIST
413-545-2789/UMASS_BASIZ@HOTMAIL.COM

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS

Discount Discount

18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441

Featuring "Bud & Bud Light" $19.50 30/pk

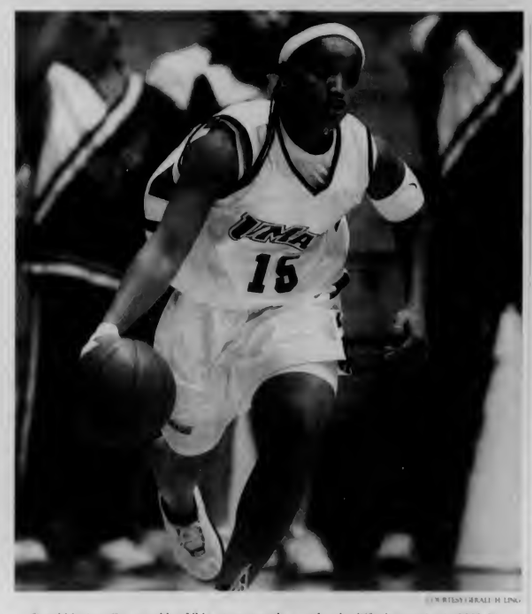
Absolut Vanilla $15.99 750 ml.

Busch & Busch Light $14.99 30/pk

Newcastle Brown Ale $11.99 12/pk bots

Heineken $10.99 12/pk cans or bots

Vodka 80° $5.99 Liter



Vodka 80° everyday price $9.99 1.75 ml.

Check out Russell's indoor wine specials!

Belhaven Pub Cans $4.99 4/pk

Jacobs Creek (all flavors) $5.99 750 ml.
Wild Turkey 80° $15.99 750 ml.
Seagrams Gin (your choice) $8.99 750 ml.
Jameson Irish Whiskey $17.99 750 ml.

Open 9:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. • Sun. 12:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. • Visa/Discover/MasterCard • All Beers Plus Deposit

Courtesy Jerall H. Ung

Guard Monique Govan and her UMass teammates have endured a difficult campaign in 2003-04

Minutewomen to host GW

WOMEN'S HOOP from page 8

their only other road loss was in the hostile confines of SEC power house, University of Florida.

Part of the Lady Colonial's success stems from their tenacious defense. George Washington has only allowed 60.6 points per game, on a meager .376 field goal percentage. Through this the Lady Colonials have put together a transition offense that has been one of the most potent in the conference.

"We saw their game videos and we know what kind of problems they are going to pose for us," Dacko said, "we have to come out intense and shut down their transition game. GW is going to be hungry after losing to Duquesne, they are going to want to put some points on the scoreboard."

A major part of the Lady Colonial's offense has been, last year's A-10 player of the year, Cathy Jones. Jones has averaged 20.4 points and 3.3 assists per game. The 5'11 guard is also a presence under the basket and ranks third on her team in rebounds with, 6.2 per contest.

UMass will be looking toward Hungarian sharp-shooter Judit Zsedenyi to find her rhythm against George Washington.

Zsedenyi has been averaging over nine points per game, and leads the Minutewomen in three-pointers made, with 39 on the season.

Dacko will be looking towards the seniors, who will be playing their last weekend at the Mullins Center, to pick up the slack and end their careers on a high note. With this she hopes her team is mentally prepared to not only compete this weekend, but to win.

"We've got nothing to lose and everything to gain," Dacko said, "We're home, it's the seniors last weekend, we have to play defense and execute.

"I can see in warm-ups whether or not they are physically ready to play. Mentally, I can't get a sense of what's going on inside their heads."

Nomar set to go

No. 5 says all is indeed forgiven

Nomar Garciaparra is back with the Boston Red Sox for 2004, maybe one of the biggest surprises of baseball's whirlwind offseason.

"Can you believe after these three months I'm still here?" he said with a smile Tuesday after reporting to spring training in Fort Myers, Fla.

Garciaparra acknowledged he was upset by Boston's attempt to trade him last fall. If the Red Sox had acquired Alex Rodriguez from Texas for Manny Ramirez, they planned to deal their star shortstop to the Chicago White Sox for outfielder Magglio Ordonez.

The White Sox, in turn, might have sent Garciaparra to Los Angeles.

"I was definitely hurt by a lot of it. I probably feel like anyone else would feel after spending their whole career in one organization," said Garciaparra, a five-time All-Star who can become a free agent after this season.

"I was gone. Basically, I was gone. So I dealt with that already because, as far as I was concerned, I was traded."

Pedro Martinez, Sammy Sosa and Ordonez all wanted to think ahead and forget about the past.

Martinez wants to forget his contract flap, his Game 7 flop and his Don Zimmer flip. He's concentrating on helping the Red Sox try to win their first World Series since 1918.

"I hope it is that we are the team to beat," Martinez said, "but I don't want to say it. I want to do it."

He considers the Yankees the favorite because they went to the World Series, losing to Florida, after defeating Boston in seven games during the AL championship series.

In Game 3, Martinez tossed Zimmer, then a New York coach, to the ground during a melee. And in Game 7, Martinez gave up three runs in the eighth, allowing the Yankees to tie the score.

He, too, can be a free agent after the season.

"If they don't want to sign me, that's fine," the three-time Cy Young winner said. "I'm pretty sure I'll probably get a job with somebody else. But if they do, I'll be more than happy to stay here."

In Tampa, Fla., the picture was just too perfect, even for people who forecast a stormy relationship between Alex Rodriguez and Derek Jeter.

All smiles, Rodriguez was relaxing after his first full workout with the Yankees. Surrounded by All-Star players and adoring fans, it had been a wonderful day.

That's when Jeter joined him at a picnic area right outside Legends Field for a media session. And within a minute of them sitting together, the fair skies turned foul, the wind whipped and a wicked rain started to fall.

Coincidence or correlation? Who knows?

"I'm sure you'll make it a good story," Jeter said.

About 2,500 fans watched Rodriguez work out at third and Jeter at shortstop.

"That's the largest crowd I've ever practiced in front of at spring training, and this is my 10th year in baseball," Rodriguez said.

New York made another move, reaching a preliminary agreement on a $2.25 million, one-year contract with Travis Lee, who will back up Jason Giambi at first base.

In Mesa, Ariz., Sosa brushed aside questions about steroid use in baseball, saying he doesn't know what other players are doing and can't control anyone but himself. His only concern is getting the Chicago Cubs to the World Series.

"I really don't want to make a comment about that because we've got a beautiful team here," he said following his first spring training workout. "We've got something else in mind, to come here and play baseball. I don't want to make a comment because I don't have anything to talk about."

Cubs manager Dusty Baker thinks suspicions about which guys might be using steroids smacks of a McCarthy witch hunt, tainting all players.

"They're looking to see who looks like a communist," he said.

Ordonez reported to the White Sox in Tucson, Ariz., and was more worried about batting practice than trade rumors. He's entering the final season of a $29.5 million, three-year deal that will pay him $14 million.

"I was relaxing and waiting for something, but nothing happened," he said of the talk of a possible deal to Boston. "They trade me, I'll go somewhere else and play hard and do my job. If I stay in Chicago, I got to do the same thing. I'm still here."

Frank Thomas also reported to White Sox camp and said there was no problem between him and new manager Ozzie Guillen, his former White Sox teammate.

"Ozzie and I have had some of the best times of our lives together. I'm happy he's managing now," Thomas said.

Kansas City's Carlos Beltran, also eligible for free agency after this season, reported for what could be his final year with the Royals.

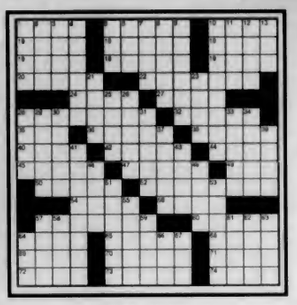
"What is going to influence me coming back is the owner talking to my agent," said Beltran, who will make $9 million this season. "Everything depends on the owner and what he wants to do with the club."

In other news, Philadelphia closer Billy Wagner will be sidelined for a week with an inflamed left middle finger that caused pain during a workout Tuesday.

Seattle reliever Rafael Soriano will be sidelined for three to four weeks after an MRI exam revealed a strained interior oblique muscle on his left side.

Yankees right-hander Jon Lieber will not throw off a mound for at least five to seven days because of an injured right groin.

-Associated Press



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 Courageous
5 Gretel's home
10 Humane org.
14 Old barge canal
15 Second Boomer
16 Secret
17 Get a salary
18 Maintain
19 Where Tehran is 20 Like tartan
22 Underhood
24 Many centuries
27 Hatem of "Sleepless in Seattle"
28 Sugary sweets
32 Eucalyptus eater
35 Ado
36 More than snacks
38 Barber
40 Genial
42 Mist
44 Boring
45 Puts over
47 Herring
49 Basketball hoop
50 Staring at
53 Urban cruisers
54 Sharpen
56 Stanley system (hyph.)
57 Passed a bill
60 Easily damaged
64 Pickling ingredient
66 Uniform color
68 Attractive
69 Reinvent
70 Cut, as cookies
71 Sch. of Conservatoire
72 Recipe qtys.
73 Ticket prices
74 Type

Down
1 Electronic reminder
2 By mouth
3 Mean money
4 Contradicted
5 Bump hard
6 Pipen
7 Twinge
8 Nose-tip
9 New Jersey
10 Tiff
11 You're repair place
11 Try opening
12 Attired
13 Writer — Rand
21 Student's quarters
23 Grime
25 Case against
26 Arguments
28 Politeness cotton
29 Wed
30 "Bonsai" on "Star Trek"
31 Dozed off
33 Gene Tierney movie
34 Wing it (hyph.)
37 Abraham's wife
39 Shade trees
41 Embodiments
43 Coat length
46 Mirror
48 Minor talking-out
51 Deadbeat's (2 wds.)
52 Tent show
55 Perry's secretary
57 Sorrowful cry
58 Pundown
59 Sterilize
61 Parking label
62 Parking lot sight
62 Old Roman road
63 In case
64 Behind: on a ship
66 Kind of necklace
67 Feminine ending

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- BBQ Chicken Quarters
- Baked Chicken Quarters
- Grilled Ham Steak
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 15

FRIDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 23

SATURDAY
- High: 46
- Low: 25

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan

COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovley

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Meghan Healy, Samantha Nielsen

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Make use of those Marti Gras beads.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Wake up. Then go back to sleep.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Did you know midterms are in two weeks? Ugly surprise!

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Take a bite out of crime.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Burp out loud in lecture. Who cares?

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Stop tanning, or you'll get it.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
If you are really that hot, take off those fake Dior shades.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Cancun is full. No spring break for you.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Janet Jackson got implants. You should too.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Hockey girls make hot dates.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Someone wants to watch that basketball game.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Is that a form of corn on the cob?

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Good judgment comes from experience, and often experience comes from bad judgment."

-Rita Mae Brown

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1998 Honda Civic Ex Coupe 69,000 miles. Very Good Condition $8500.00 alvarob@cs.umass.edu 413-221-8835

Toyota Tercel Hatchback '89, 69K, original owner, new brakes, reliable, asking $1,450. (413) 665-2492

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 BMWE 5SPD 268K miles Runs great Must sell $1,000.00 413-531-7580

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 x.272 www.aroundcampus.com

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod, Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Summer on Cape Cod! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 4,5,6 + March 18,19,20. Check out our website at www.wychmereharbor.com + Call Amy at 508-432-1000 x129 for details.

500 Camp Jobs. NY, PA, New England. 1-800-443-6428 www.summercampemployment.com

Summer nanny position caring for 2 boys

EMPLOYMENT

5 and 8. Weekends Spring and Fall full-time (40 hours). Experience preferred. Call 625-2288.

The UMass football team is looking for interested students to fill the position of video assistant starting in late spring Experience preferred but will train. Come be apart of the Champion tradition! Contact Bill Sisler, video director 577-0319

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

FOR RENT

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

SERVICES

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

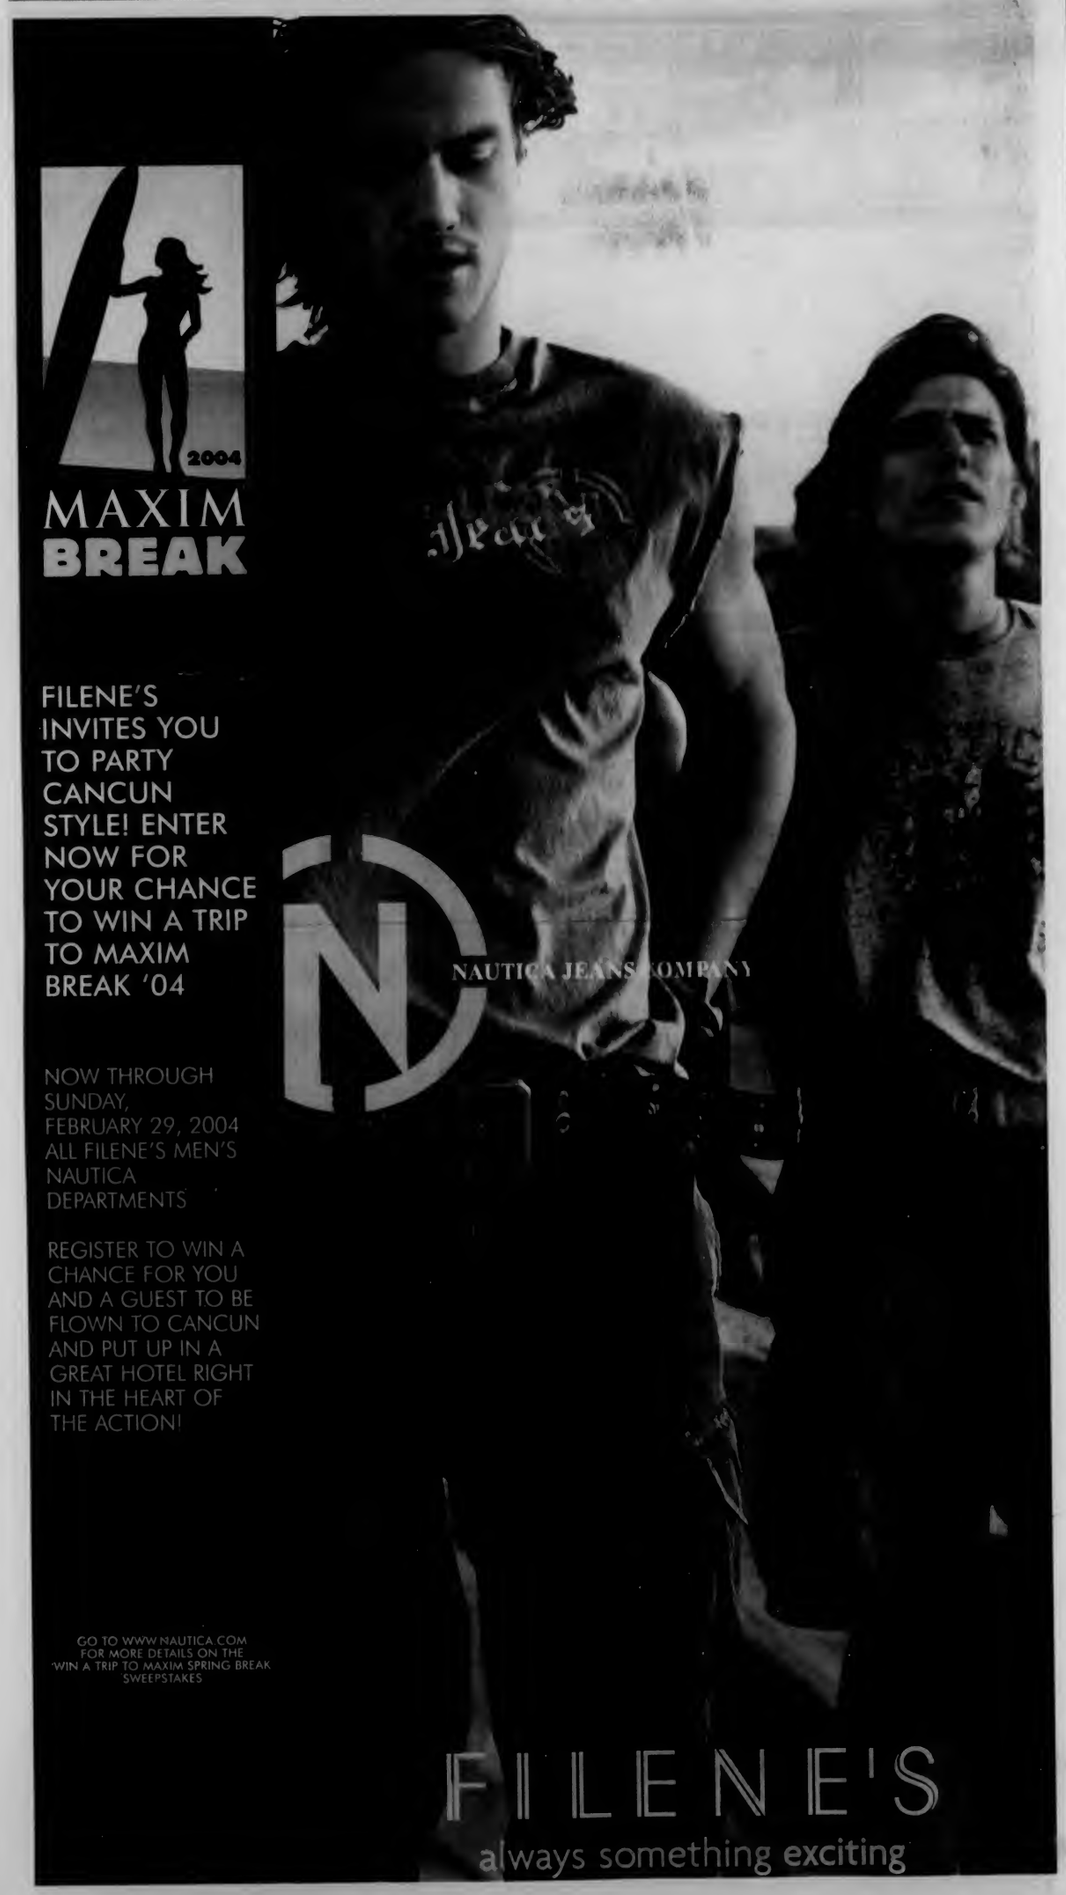
SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Spring Break 2004 It's here..book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710



TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED!: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.reproductivehopes.com

Advertise in The Collegian Marketplace! Call 545-3500.

'A Revolutionary Convening' honors the life of June Jordan
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

2004 UMass lacrosse preview
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

Friday, February 27, 2004 New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 Volume CXIV Issue 91

Officers nab male

Police officers were dispatched to a disturbance two nights ago after what witnesses described as a drunken resident allegedly became violent.

Officers from the University of Massachusetts Police Department arrived at Hamlin Hall at 10:34 p.m. Wednesday to investigate the situation and found five people restraining a person, according to Patrick Callahan of the UMass News Office.

UMPD officers placed into protective custody the unidentified male. There was no arrest, although the male was restrained.

According to Callahan, the male had sustained facial injuries.

Police presence included four cruisers parked behind Hamlin Hall in Lot 43. An ambulance was also parked in the lot during the incident. The UMPD have refused to comment on the incident.

A number of students have described the male as exhibiting violent behavior during prior drunken incidents.

No charges are being pressed at this time.

— Morris Singer

Panelists reflect on desegregation

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

A crowd of listeners assembled in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Thursday night in commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the 1954 Supreme Court decision in the Brown v. the Board of Education of Topeka, Kan.

The discussion was a part of the observance of Black History Month.

The four featured UMass faculty panelists that led the discussion were Professor John H. Bracey Jr. of the Afro-American studies department, Assistant Professors Thomas M. Hilbink and Bernie D. Jones of the legal studies department and Assistant Professor Laura L. Lovett of the history department.

The panel discussed the groundbreaking case, Brown v. the Board of Education of Topeka, which eliminated separate but equal status in public schools.

The panel addressed the history of desegregation and integration in schools, as well as the results the Supreme Court decision brought for social change.

Professor Bracey was the first speaker amongst the panelists, and recalled some of his experiences growing up in Washington, D.C. and dealing with desegregation and integration throughout his time as a student. He recalled the memory of having to use books in high school that were stamped as "discarded" that had once belonged to students from prominent white schools.

On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court ruled in a unanimous decision that the idea of "separate but equal" was unconstitutional because it violated children's 14th amendment rights by separating them solely on the classification of the color of their skin.

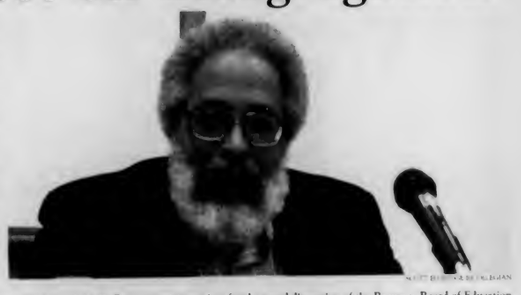
Then Chief Justice Earl Warren delivered the court's opinion, affirming that "segregated schools are not equal and cannot be made equal, and hence they are deprived of the equal protection laws."

The case was made in 1951, when Oliver Brown tried to enroll his daughter in a white elementary school. The school was closer to her home than the black elementary school. The principal of that school refused.

Thirteen other parents joined Brown and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People requested an injunction that would forbid the segregation of Topeka's public schools.

The decision did not automatically end school segregation, but it did destroy the constitutional foundation upon which legalized segregation.

"[The case] didn't lead to an immediate movement, but it changed people's expectations," Hilbink said.



Hilbink said he was inspired the moment he learned of the Brown case, and felt an emotional connection with Brown. Brown was a figure that represented social change, Hilbink said.

"Brown represented a rise of elite policy making," Hilbink said.

After the end of the discussions, the panel answered several questions from the listeners.

The panel discussion was open to the public, and took place at 7 p.m. at the Campus Center in room 166C.

The event was sponsored by the Student Activities Center and by Student Affairs and Campus Life.

Professor John D. Bracey participates in a faculty panel discussion of the Brown v. Board of Education decision. The dialogue marked Black History Month and the 50th anniversary of the decision.

Comic artist gets movie deal

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

A popular on-line comic strip, written and drawn by Univeristy of Massachusetts student Robert D. Kryzkowski and published in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian will soon be coming to a theater near you.

The movie rights to Kryzkowski's "Elsie Hooper" series have been purchased by Impact Media, who hope to turn the well-regarded strip into a major motion picture.

Producer Troy Neighbors and Kryzkowski, who is currently deep into writing the script, both hope to, in Kryzkowski's words, make a "bigger, better version" of the comic.

"Elsie Hooper" tells the story of a young man who sets off in the night in search of his kid sister, who has been kidnapped by a race of vicious, alien-like creatures. Armed with assorted weapons and accompanied by a young boy who has barely escaped the control of the monsters, young Ridley Hooper goes on a sometimes gory, violent quest to save young Elsie from the clutches of the clawed creatures.

It was the combination of the visuals and the story that attracted the attention of Neighbors, who was surfing the Internet for properties when he discovered "Elsie Hooper." The dark, nourish shading and the angular looks of the comic are distinctive.

It wasn't just the "striking" look of the strip, but the story that intrigued Neighbors as well. "The story of the brother going after the sister, the bond ... it was so well put together."

The producer hopes to make "Elsie Hooper" more "cinematic" and take it to "the next level."

Neighbors contacted Kryzkowski about eight or nine months ago, but the deal for the movie was not finalized until last month. Since then Kryzkowski has been hard at work with the screenplay, taking time off from his classes to work on the script (though he will receive class credit from his professors for working on the screenplay) and staying up all night, sometimes to five or six in the morning, working and talking to Neighbors.

The writer's original plan was to turn the comic strip into a lower budgeted movie on his own, with himself directing it. But when Neighbors contacted Kryzkowski about making into a movie, the creator jumped at the chance to do the movie on something more than "pocket change."

The comic strip is just the first element in what Kryzkowski hopes to be a large-scale phenomenon, complete with a video game, graphic novel and action figures. As the writer said: "The comic was meant to be a sketch, to help me find a groove." Now Kryzkowski hopes that his thriller will "connect with our generation."

Kryzkowski and Neighbors are both keeping mum on details of the movie, specifically the casting process and the attempts to find a major studio to distribute it. The duo is looking to make this a major, wide-release motion picture and, as Kryzkowski said, they hope to "find the perfect relationship to a studio." He did mention, however, that several actors and directors are circling the project, as well as possible distributors.

Neighbors said that they are "focusing more on the scripts ... it's premature to say right now," when it comes to the question of casting and possible distributors.

Kryzkowski is a large advocate of the Internet. As advice to aspiring filmmakers, he said that the best way to get exposure is to "find a medium which showcases your skills best and put it on the Internet."

He also mentions that the best way for fans to support "Elsie Hooper" is to go online, and to mention it to other friends in order to develop a grassroots following for the comic.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY ROBERT D. KRYZKOWSKI

Bush to end U.S. use of some land mines; won't join treaty

By Barry Schweid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration intends to end the U.S. military's use of land mines that are not timed to self-destruct but will not sign a 150-nation anti-land mine treaty, a senior administration official said Thursday.

The new policy also will double, to $70 million, what the United States spends annually to locate and remove mines considered hazards to people and serving no deterrent purpose, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Lincoln Bloomfield, an assistant secretary of state who is President Bush's special adviser on land mines, was expected to announce the new policy at the State Department on Friday.

From now on, all new U.S. land mines will be detectable to U.S. authorities and geared to become inert. But those considered to be part of deterring attacks, such as in Korea, will remain in use. Those mines will be timed to self-destruct, but they can be reset to remain operable.

In Afghanistan and Cambodia, among other countries, the buried land mines serve no military purpose and are a menace to farmers, children and other people who accidentally trip over them. The mines maim or kill.

Stephen Goose, executive director of the arms control division of Human Rights Watch, praised the plan to increase spending for mine clearance projects. But he said the United States is isolated by its insistence on using land mines in its defense programs.

"We have a great deal of momentum everywhere else around the world. The U.S. is the only country in NATO that hasn't banned this weapon. We have a situation where the U.S. is undermining the international norm against this weapon," said Goose, who said he was informed by the State Department on Thursday about the new policy.

Goose said that the U.S. goal, for a decade, has been to move toward the point where it could eliminate all anti-personnel mines.

"This is a goal that has been embraced by the entire world. But it's a goal that the United States has now given up on. They now say they want to use some types of anti-personnel mines, the so-called smart mines that self-destruct, anywhere in the world in perpetuity," he said.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., a leading opponent of land mines, said although there are some positive aspects of the policy, "on the whole it is a deeply disappointing step backward."

"This is another squandered opportunity for U.S. leadership on a crucial arms control and

See MINES on page 2

Lederle open

As of 5 p.m. yesterday, the Lederle Graduate Research Center had fully reopened. The tower was shut down after an electrical problem started a fire Wednesday afternoon. The fire self-extinguished and there were no major injuries. One firefighter reported difficulty breathing and was treated at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, and two electricians reported minor burns.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LEISURE EDITOR Glen Straub
CLASSIC EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reed
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salzinker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CREATIVE SERVICES MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagatta
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ADDITIVE OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jachynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LEISURE Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LEISURE Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Loxley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marrelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE SCHOOL YEAR EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATION PERIODS BY STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED BY THE STUDENTS. ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION ARE AVAILABLE UPON REQUEST. THE OFFICE IS LOCATED IN ROOM 113 OF THE CAMPUS CENTER. THE MAILING ADDRESS IS THE DAILY COLLEGIAN, 113 CAMPUS CENTER, UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST, MA 01003. THE COLLEGIAN IS PRINTED AT THE HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE IN FLORENCE, MASS. THE FIRST COPY IS FREE. ADDITIONAL COPIES ARE 50 CENTS EACH. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN PUBLISHED CONTINUOUSLY SINCE JANUARY 1890. IT IS ENTERED AT THE SECOND CLASS RATE AT THE AMHERST POST OFFICE UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879. SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE $150 PER SEMESTER, $250 FOR THE ACADEMIC YEAR. FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500. POSTMASTER: SEND ADDRESS CHANGES TO THE DAILY COLLEGIAN, 113 CAMPUS CENTER, UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST, MA 01003.

Campus Perspectives

By Scott Eldridge II

If the election was tomorrow who would you vote for?

sophomore
Psychology major
"Bush."
Amber Sargent

freshman
Neuroscience major
"Not Bush."
Carlyn Mamber

senior
Computer Science major
"I am going to vote for Bush cause I don't want Kerry."
Devin Collins

junior
Finance major
"I'm voting for Kerry cause he's a veteran."
Alex Ambroz

sophomore
Business major
"Anybody but Bush."
Luis Medina

senior
Plant and Soil Science major
"I'd vote for Nadar but I'm bummed out Dean left the race."
Troy Loruso

U.S. to limit land mine use

MINES from page 1

humanitarian issue," he said. "Worst of all, in a sharp departure from past policy, it says the United States will continue using land mines indefinitely."

The International Campaign to Ban Landmines, which won the 1997 Nobel Peace Prize for its efforts in getting the treaty approved in Ottawa, Canada, said 150 countries have signed on. They included Afghanistan, Canada, Germany, Italy and Britain. Among the 44 nations that had not done so, as of October, were the United States, China, Iran, North Korea, South Korea, Pakistan and Russia, according to the group.

The 1997 pact went into force on March 1, 1999, and bans the stockpile of mines and requires each nation to destroy its stock within four years.

Jody Williams, who shared the 1997 Nobel prize with the group she helped create, said in a telephone interview with AP Radio that the latest move "is yet another indication of the Bush administration's total disdain for international law. I wish I could say I was surprised, but I'm not."

In early 2001, a Pentagon-commissioned study said advances in technology could lead to alternatives to anti-personnel land mines that would pose fewer risks to civilians. But it said that not all of these emerging technologies were likely to be ready by 2006 — a target set by the Clinton administration for deciding whether the United States should approve the international treaty.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
*A Richmond Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

British intelligence accused of spying on U.N.

By Ed Johnson
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — Britain spied on U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan in the build up to the Iraq war, a former Cabinet minister said Thursday, triggering yet another postwar crisis for Prime Minister Tony Blair.

For Blair, the allegation is another potentially damaging aftershock of the Iraq invasion, following controversies over Britain's prewar intelligence dossiers, the death of a weapons scientist, the coalition's failure to find weapons of mass destruction and the collapse of a court case on alleged U.S.-British bugging of the United Nations.

But in a bravado performance at his monthly news conference, the prime minister insisted British spies always acted within international law.

The United Nations said any spying on Annan's office would be illegal.

"Such activities would undermine the integrity and confidential nature of diplomatic exchanges. Those who speak to the secretary-general are entitled to assume that their exchanges are confidential," U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said.

The opposition was quick to criticize Blair's government.

"I'm afraid the situation now seems to be a complete mess. It's about time the prime minister got a grip on it and sorted it out," said Michael Howard, leader of the main opposition Conservative Party.

Blair refused to confirm or deny the accusation and branded his former international development secretary, Clare Short, "deeply irresponsible" for commenting on sensitive security issues.

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator
JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2004
LAST MINUTE DISCOUNTS!
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

comedy CONNECTION
1st Time Appearance!
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive, Chicopee
From Showtime, CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman" and NBC's "Late Night with Conan O'Brien"
BRIAN REGAN
MARCH 26TH APRIL 3RD APRIL 10TH APRIL 17TH APRIL 18TH
BILL BELLAMY JOHN WITHERSPOON GREG PROOPS MIKE EPPS DAVE ATTELL

SPRING BREAK
Free People top
back slit capris
Steve Madden heel in pink and black
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Panda East 熊貓
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*SUSHI BAR!
*BEER & WINE ACCEPTED
*DELIVERY AVAILABLE!
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE
Location: 103 N. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923
(413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS OUTING CLUB
The UMass Outing Club & The 5 College Outdoor Festival Presents
David Anderson
World Renowned Climber
Campus Ctr.
Room 162
7P.M.
Friday
February 27th
Funded by S.A.C.E.F.

Millennium Hair and Spa Co.
Manicure/Pedicure Special
$39.00
March 1 - April 30
We offer full body waxing, from brow to Brazilian.
WALK-INS WELCOME!
Open:
Monday thru Friday
9-8
Saturday
9-3
Located on Rt. 9 on the bus route in the Registry building
585.1500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2004
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Warning signs important to preventing tragedies

Stories of children's depression, anger, and other negative emotions resulting in violence and oftentimes murders have been abundant in the news over the past few years. The increasingly busy lives of adults have put a strain on family relationships recently. And quiet children oftentimes make it hard for parents and teachers to be able to detect any problems. When problems are allowed to sit and fester, it creates the possibility of a hostile, even violent outburst.

A report released by Colorado's state attorney general yesterday said authorities had at least 15 contacts with the Columbine High School killers going back to two years before the horrific attacks.

Attorney General Ken Salazar summarized how Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold gave many warning signs before they attacked fellow students in their high school. A thrown snowball that cracked a car window and a prank phone call were among the mischievous acts the boys committed prior to their murders and suicides on April 20, 1999 — making it the deadliest school shooting in U.S. history.

There were other things that should have sounded an alarm. For instance, a deputy found a Web site run by Harris that said the two teens had built pipe bombs. It concluded: "Now our only problem is to find the place that will be 'ground zero.'"

The investigation should open the eyes of parents, teachers and authorities who may take similar signs and threats from teenagers lightly. If authorities had followed up on these threats and signs, the horrific action may have been prevented.

Perhaps these ominous signs were a cry out for help from Harris and Klebold. If authorities had questioned them and their parents, they may have been able to not only prevent the death of 12 students and a teacher, it may have even led to a happier life for the two young boys.

While there has not been a school shooting as big as the one in Columbine, there have been outbursts of violence from teenagers and young adults around the nation since. Oftentimes, there are warning signs that precede these attacks well in advance of the violence.

The years in junior high and high school are difficult for many students. Peers can be cruel to one another. Family strife may irritate students. Deaths in the family can bring in a flood of emotions for these youngsters. An array of other problems can also lead to or complicate problems.

And the problem isn't limited to High School students either. College students, facing the seemingly enormous task of balancing full-time jobs, five or more classes and an array of other responsibilities, oftentimes become overwhelmed. It is easy for college students to feel as though there is no way out, when in reality there is.

It is time that parents, teachers, psychologists and youth leaders are vigilant in watching out for warning signs from young people and follow-up on any suspicious activity. It could not only save the lives of those in need of assistance, but others as well.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board

Losing sleep can be a nightmare

Becky Martins

Many college students pull all-nighters or run on little sleep due to demanding course workloads. But deprive yourself of sleep, and a bad test grade or late assignment will be the least of your worries.

As I write this column, a quick glance at the clock tells me it is already one in the morning. My first class requires me to get up at 8:30 a.m., reminding me I will not be getting the recommended eight hours of shut-eye tonight. Yet, as I continue to work through my sleep debt, I do not think twice of the time ticking away.

As a college student, my internal clock seems to have permanently set itself back. 1 a.m. feels like 10 p.m.: allowing me to continue slaving over abundant amounts of homework into the early morning. Sometimes, I could go to bed early, but I am also guilty of surrendering to distractions and staying awake instead. I try to justify my late nights with the excuse that four hours of sleep is as good as eight. But waking up the next morning reminds me how poorly that reasoning is.

We have all felt the effects of sleep deprivation: mornings that come too soon, wandering to class with eyes too heavy to open and sleeping away 50 minute lectures like they are nothing. We sometimes stay awake at night to ensure our preparation for the next day.

Yet, our actions are counterproductive. A lack of sleep directly affects our concentration, reaction time, and comprehension, according to http://ia.essortment.com/sleepdeprivatio_rgyw.htm. As our body cries out for sleep, we perform our daily activities, but our performance suffers. It does not take long to realize staying awake to finish studying, or to do nothing productive at all, was not the most sensible idea. The next day we always pay.

A lack of slumber takes a larger toll on a person, though, than just feelings of fatigue. Sacrificing a good night's sleep could also be potentially detrimental to our health. The amount of sleep a young adult should get varies, but according to www.uchospitals.edu/, an average of eight hours per night is beneficial. Any fewer will bring ill effects: many of which can set in within a week of creating bad sleeping habits.

Denying our bodies their necessary rest can slow basic metabolic functions, such as storing and processing carbohydrates, as well as alter our glucose and endocrine levels, according to www.uchospitals.edu/. In less technical terms, interfering with such natural bodily processes can lead to problems resembling early aging, weight gain and the early stages of diabetes.

We have all felt the effects of sleep deprivation: mornings that come too soon, wandering to class with eyes too heavy to open and sleeping away 50 minute lectures like they are nothing. We sometimes stay awake at night to ensure our preparation for the next day.

Reducing our levels of sleep also lowers our body's defenses. According to http://ia.essortment.com/sleepdeprivatio_rgyw.htm, because our bodies are forced to work harder keeping us awake, we become more susceptible to illness. We get sick more often, despite other precautions to stay healthy. When it comes to fighting off illness, the immune system is running on overdrive, we have trouble warding off bacterium and viruses. Even with the common cold, recovery becomes a prolonged process. In short, though a person may lead a healthy lifestyle, reduced levels of sleep put him or her at risk for many health problems.

But the effects of sleep deprivation are not irreversible. A person has many options to correct bad sleeping patterns or to avoid becoming rest deprived at all.

According to www.cureinsomnia.homestead.com, this may simply entail avoiding certain things before going to bed. Any food/drink that is caffeinated, contains alcohol, or is consumed in large amounts will interfere with sleeping patterns. It is also important to avoid using a bedroom or any other sleeping area as a workplace. The body will subconsciously correlate this space with stress: making it harder to relax and fall into deep slumber.

To encourage good sleep, www.cureinsomnia.homestead.com recommends using a comfortable mattress and pillow, listening to soft music if rest is hard to come by and surrounding oneself in darkness. Pair these measures with others, such as deep breathing, light exercise in the early evening, and different relaxation techniques and a bad sleep should be hard to come by. But out of all the methods for treating, or preventing, sleep deprivation, the most beneficial is to go to bed at similar times each night, for at least eight hours. It is a foolproof way of maintaining good health and keeping a sharp mind.

We would never purposely expose ourselves to sickness, speed up our aging process or reduce our concentration skills. Yet, intentionally or not, cutting back on sleep produces such ill effects as these. So the next time we are tempted to pull all-nighters, or pretend 4 a.m. is a fine time to go to sleep, think of the consequences and remember the importance of a good night's sleep. We will thanks ourselves in the morning.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

Try spelling this one, Dubya

Frances Carr

There is no question about it: proper usage of the English language is difficult. English is also full of unpronounced letters: silent e's, c's, not to mention virtually all h's. It is understandable that people would have a hard time using it properly. You've got sentence structure, grammar, punctuation, diction, context and the most aggravating one of all, the king of finicky language restraints: spelling.

After all of the exercises we slaved over in junior high school language arts and the countless spelling quizzes and spelling bees in elementary school, as a result of e-mail and electronic spellcheck software, we have effectively unlearned how to spell.

Spellcheck programs have undone years of grammar study. I find that when I am typing I no longer bother adding apostrophes because the computer does it for me. Forget about capitalizing i's. It's a waste of energy; the computer's got it covered. When I misspell a word a squiggly red line alerts me of the fact and all I have to do is right-click for a list of alternatives.

With frequently misspelled words, if you invert a commonly mistaken letter, as in the case of "recieve" and "percieve," the computer changes it for you without even asking for permission. So, at this stage, the computer is correcting your errors without your knowledge. That computer is very considerate. It doesn't want to embarrass you.

Melville Dewey was the Amherst College librarian who invented the Dewey Decimal System, which is used in more than 96 percent of all libraries in the world. Dewey, who legally changed the spelling of his name to Melvil Dui, was also the founder of the Spelling Reform Association. Mr. Dewey and his cohorts didn't believe in extraneous letters cluttering words and sought to do away with them. As early as 1898, there were reformers promoting a list of 12 alternate spellings. Included were tho, altho, thru, thruout, thoro, thorolv and thorofare.

President Theodore Roosevelt also supported simple spelling, issuing an order to the Government Printing Office to comply with a list of 300 simplified spellings. However, resisters in Congress overturned Roosevelt's order and the complication endured. And with the advent of other software on computers, we have gotten sloppy.

A couple spelling errors here and there certainly aren't going to kill you or determine your fate.

Is it the fault of Mr. Spellcheck or an overall informality in our culture? I look to our government for answers. We learn something from each person that sits in the White House. Ronald Reagan taught us that ketchup was a vegetable. George Bush, Sr. taught us that it wouldn't be prudent. Clinton taught us that oral sex is not sex. And the great George W. has taught us that American English is not the native tongue. That not only do you not need to know how to spell, but apparently you don't even need to know how to speak to get by anymore.

A few of my favorite Bushisms for your reading pleasure:

"Families is where our nation finds hope, where wings take dream." Agreement?

"More and more of our imports are coming from overseas." Uh-Huh? And? What's your point?

"I am a person who recognizes the fallacy of humans." Fallibility?

"They said this issue wouldn't resignate with the People. They've been proved wrong, it does resignate." Resonate? I wish he would RESIGNate.

"This is what I'm good at. I like meeting people, my fellow citizens, I like interfacing with them." Interacting?

"I don't need to be sublimanbable." I rest my case.

Someone who is well spoken can get away with not being a bad speller because no one necessarily reads his or her words. But someone who can't speak reveals his weaknesses outright through his communication. When you are president, you don't have to be able to spell, speak coherently and you are allowed to invent new words.

Basically, as long as W. inhabits the White House, spelling is the least of our concerns. In fact, his presence in the White House alone is proof that almost anything is possible.

A couple spelling errors here and there certainly aren't going to kill you or determine your fate. In conclusion, don't worry about it. Take a page from our fundamentally illiterate president. You shouldn't be judged for your youthful indiscretions.

"I'm not going to talk about what I did as a child. What I am going to talk about — and I am going to say this consistently — [is that] it is irrelevant what I did 20 to 30 years ago. What's relevant is that I have learned from any mistakes I made. I do not want to send signals to anybody that what Gov. Bush did 30 years ago is cool to try."

Information from www.bushisms.com and www.burnsdle.demon.co.uk was used in this column.

Frances Carr is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

FREEDOM REMAINS IN WAR-TORN NATION

In response to Yousef Munayyer's article entitled "Thank you, Israel," I feel that it would be wise to inform the reader of the points the flyer campaign is intended to make. While it must be admitted that the Student Alliance for Israel is not an unbiased group in regards to the Arab-Israeli conflict, it must be pointed out that every single point made about Israel in regards to democracy and civil rights is 100 percent true.

First of all, Israel is the only democracy in the Middle East. No one would venture to say that Syria, Jordan, Egypt and Saudi Arabia are democracies. Every person living in Israel was granted Israeli citizenship once independence was declared in 1948. This included Jews, Palestinians, Druze, Bedouins, Christians and anyone else who was there at the time.

Anyone residing in Israel after a time has the right to apply for Israeli citizenship regardless of race or creed. All citizens are equal in the State of Israel. Non-Jewish citizens also have voting rights, and the right to run for office. There are currently Israeli Arabs that have been elected and are serving in Israel's Parliament. Nowhere else in the Middle East can a country be found that is so committed to the values of democracy.

All Israeli citizens have freedom of religion. Unlike in many other Middle Eastern countries, where government is according to Islamic law, Israel is a secular state. In Israel, Muslims are allowed to mark Ramadan, Christians are allowed to celebrate Easter and Christmas, and anyone is free to practice no religion at all in Israel. Freedom of religion, speech, and press is guaranteed. Nowhere else in the Middle East would one be able to criticize one's government, let alone publicly, but in Israel this is accepted as a valuable aspect of the democratic process.

The vast majority of Israelis would support a complete withdrawal from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip as long as the security of the State of Israel could be guaranteed. The Palestinian leadership, however, has not been able to guarantee Israel's safety from suicide bombings, as is apparent after Sunday morning's suicide bombing in Jerusalem. Israel is fighting for its existence. Israel is fighting to remain the only democracy in the Middle East that truly respects the values of democracy and civil rights.

The last thing Israel wants is war. I know because I have recently been to Israel and I have interacted with Israelis. But what else can a country be expected to do in the face of such attacks besides defend itself? The Israeli people have decided that terrorism will not deter them, that they will not be pushed into the sea and that they are determined to remain the only country in the Middle East that truly respects the values of democracy and human rights.

David Hamilton
UMass sophmore

EDWARDS A MORE THAN WORTHY CANDIDATE

On Super Tuesday, March 2, the eyes of the nation will be on Massachusetts, when you citizens make known whom you believe should be the Democratic nominee to face George W. Bush. I hope you are giving serious consideration to John Edwards. My wife and I went to our Iowa caucus for him.

We both thought that this was one of the best democratic fields of candidates to ever come through Iowa. All were worthy people, but we thought Senator Edwards stood out as the best — a good man who has vision that our nation needs in these pressing times. In addition, we believe he can beat Bush.

I would not suggest that my judgment is any better than yours, however, I would say that Edwards is as impressive as any candidate I have ever met in my lifetime, and that goes back many years. In fact, when I was young I thought the president had to be named FDR and the pope Pius.

My wife and I met, heard and shook hands with all the candidates that we could, even with Wesley Clark, before he dropped out of the Iowa caucus. Edwards seemed so good that we went back to hear him over and over — to make sure he was for real. We concluded he was in fact the real thing.

There are all sorts of reasons that make me think that John Edwards can and should beat Bush, but just let me say that I hope he does. Our nation needs a man like him at this time. So please go and meet Senator Edwards when he is in your area. I think that you too will find him to be the person who can carry the next election and put our nation back on course to the kind of future that we, and our children, and children's children want for this great land of ours.

Sam Osborne
West Branch, Iowa

DEFENSE OF ISRAELI POSTERS

In relation to the criticism targeting the pro-Israel poster campaign, I would like to express my feelings about the issue.

I think it is important to show the campus the positive accomplishments of Israel. When the news is reporting on the conflict in Israel, do they stop to mention the fact that Israel is the only country in the Middle East granting basic rights such as freedom of the press or granting voting rights to its citizens? The posters educate students, the same students who are reading your misleading articles, who do not know of Israel's great achievements.

Lesley Yalen addressed questions to the Jewish population. This isn't a matter pertaining just to the Jewish people. There are supporters of Israel from all religions, races and ethnicities.

You suggested that perhaps pro-Israel supporters should look to protect the country's environment instead of wasting their time advocating Israel's triumphs. Israel's environment does not need protecting. If you had read the posters, you would have realized that one states that Israel is the only country in the world to enter the 21st century with a net gain of trees.

The unemployment and poverty rate is directly related to the terrorism inflicted by the Palestinians. Due to fear, tourism has dramatically dropped. Entire areas of businesses are shutting down and people are becoming employed.

The Student Alliance for Israel took a proactive, not a reactive, role. They took a higher road, highlighting Israel's accomplishments instead of Palestinian terror acts. I apologize that the alliance "disgusted" you with their positive messages. I'm sure the alliance has learned their lesson. Next time, they'll be sure to put up posters saying "Suicide Bombers: The Best Way to Express Your Desire for Peace and an Independent State."

Talya Mazor
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, FEBURARY 27, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'007' gets perfect 10 by gamer

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

James Bond has returned to the video game world once again in Electronic Arts' "James Bond 007: Everything or Nothing." The game includes the voices of Pierce Brosnan, Judi Dench, John Cleese, Willem Dafoe, Shannon Elizabeth, Mya and Heidi Klum.

Richard Kiel also returns to once again to voice the character he played in "Moonraker," Jaws. Along with a new plot and twists, the game plays just like a Bond movie would.

This new addition to the James Bond franchise of games is by far one of the most unique and well-done Bond games since "Goldeneye." It gives players the opportunity to use gadgets that, until now, could never have been used in a video game. You will get a chance to try out unique gadgets that Q creates for Agent 007 — the 'repel' device being one of the cooler items, as it allows you to scale up and down high places.

"Everything or Nothing" also sets itself apart from other Bond games by enabling the gamer to use more stealth tactics to increase secret agent skills. Players are rewarded for figuring out extra side tactics to reach objects, take out enemies or to create a Bond-like type of trick, such as taking out a mass of enemies by collapsing the bridge they are on. You can press yourself against the wall and target an oncoming soldier and as he rounds the corner. You can take him out with a quick snapping of his neck.

'James Bond 007: Everything or Nothing'
Playstation 2
Gamecube
X-Box
Gameboy Advanced
Publisher: Electronic Arts
Developer: Electronic Arts
Rated T
Grade: A

Tactics that kill, or take out, enemies silently are the key to staying alive in most scenarios. If you fire off an AK-47 at an enemy, others in the area will react to it. It becomes easy to trigger responses from patrolling soldiers and the player can be quickly overwhelmed by an onslaught of enemies. Using hand-to-hand combat is a good way to silence enemies as well as to save your ammunition incase you get surrounded.

The weapons are very variable from one to the next. Some guns fire rounds quickly while others are slower but more powerful. You can run out of ammo very quickly so practicing sneaking up on enemies is a good idea. Your best bet is to use AK-47s or SIGs and salvage your Desert Eagle ammo for when you need to take out a few enemies quickly. The AK tends to miss, while the Eagle packs a powerful punch and takes fewer shots to eliminate an enemy.

Bond also gets his shot at driving in this game. You get to try out a few different vehicles including cars, tanks, motorcycles and helicopters. Each are equipped with machine guns, bombs and missiles. In some cases Q adds some extra toys to help you take out your pesky enemies or to get rid of the road rage built up inside of you. The motorcycle in one level includes side-mounted flamethrowers to make sure other motorists don't come to close. Each driving level does occasionally involve a timed mission, but they usually take only two or three tries to finally complete.

The multiplayer is a very unique addition to the Bond series. The arena battle is not available right off the bat. First you and another player must gain points in co-op missions in order to unlock areas and eventually enable the arena battle option. It's a very unique way of assuring players get the most out of the game by requiring them to complete other tasks before being able to use the modes most players want to play. It may seem annoying at first, but it forces you to try an option that most players might overlook.

The single player also has its benefits of completing a job well done. If you can complete special tasks on the hardest levels, you a granted cheats to use in all levels. If you manage to achieve a high score on normal, you get other things granted to you such as production stills. These can appear to be simple tasks but as the game progresses it becomes more and more difficult to attain these hidden objectives. Also once you use a cheat in a level you have not already completed, you will not be allowed to move on to the next mission.

This addition to the popular "007" series is absolutely fantastic. It delivers a challenging set of missions that are difficult enough to provide a challenge without becoming annoying. The graphics are very smooth and the controls are a little complicated, but learnable.

"James Bond 007: Everything or Nothing" is a must buy for any fan of the Bond series or of other third-person agent games. Average cost is around $50.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

'A Revolutionary Convening'

Conference to explore the works of writer June Jordan

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Staff

"This is the time for the creative man. Woman. Who must decide that she. He. Can live in peace. Racial and sexual justice on this earth."
"Poem for July 4, 1994," Sonia Sanchez.

Voices of political activists, scholars and artists will be heard this weekend at the University of Massachusetts for the celebration of the life of poet and activist June Jordan.

The coference will start with a lecture by keynote speaker Sonia Sanchez tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The presentation of "A Revolutionary Convening: The Vision of June Jordan," has been organized by Women's Studies Department in association with New WORLD Theater, the Black Student Union, the Women of Color Leadership Network of EWC and the office of ALANA affairs.

"My life seems to be an increasing revelation of the intimate face of universal struggle," June Jordan wrote in the foreword to her 1980 book, "Civil Wars." Jordan, who died in 2002, was a woman whose life has survived by the works she enduringly produced — including two-dozen books and an extensive anthology of poetry.

Her collection of essays, journalistic articles, plays and children's books has made Jordan one of the most published African American writers ever. In addition to being an acquaintance of Malcolm X, and a career as a professor at the University of California, Berkley, she was also accredited with National activism awards for her role as one of the most critical activists of the 20th century.

Some of Jordan's works include: "Kissing God Goodbye: Poems" (1997), "Haruko/Love Poems" (1994) and "Things That I do in the Dark." Her memoir, titled "Soldier: A poet's Childhood," was published in 2000 and most recently, "Some of Us Did Not Die: New and Selected Essays of June Jordan" (2002).

While there isn't a holiday in commemoration for June Jordan's role as a leader for progress, she will be celebrated this year at UMass. Using Jordan's work as a foundation for conversation, Sonia Sanchez, along with panelists from a variety of spheres, will engage in roundtable dialogues about arts, politics, anti-racism and anti-sexism.

Beginning on today at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, Sonia Sanchez poet and activist will commence the two-day seminar with a keynote speech. Sanchez has lectured at over 500 universities and colleges in the United States. Her first book, written in 1969 and titled "Homecoming," was inspired by the social tension around her in the 1960s. Sanchez has published over 16 books of poetry as well as journals. She is an advocate of criticism of "white America," and "white violence" as well as sexism, child abuse and generational and class conflicts, according to the Women's Studies Web site.

COURTESY VOICES CA UMN EDU

The vision of writer and activist June Jordan will be explored during today's conference, "A Revolutionary Convening."

Roundtable discussions will be held tomorrow from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the Campus Center, room 101. Issues including anti-sweat shop and breast cancer activism, along with directors from the Third Wave Foundation, National Center for Human Rights Education, American Friends Service and Voices of Today will be present for discourse.

Following these events, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the presentation of "Blueprints for Revolution: A Performance," will conclude the conference. Artists and poets including Sonia Sanchez, Magdalena Gomez, Evelyn Harris, Kate Rigg, Project 2050, Jane Sapp and the Voices of Today are scheduled to perform.

All of the events are free and open to the public. For further information regarding "A Revolutionary Convening: The Vision of June Jordan," please contact any of its sponsors.

UMass explores 'Generations of Struggle'

Celebration of culture leads to discussion on challenges facing students

By Monique Jemmott
Collegian Correspondent

> "Lots of our faculty is world famous and much of the student body is not familiar with them. This was a great opportunity to have them share a moment with the student community and expose them to these people."
>
> -Eduardo Bustamante

Wednesday night the Student Union's Cape Lounge was transformed into a cultural wonderland.

Balloons and streamers representing the national colors of Africa, Puerto Rico and various West Indian countries hung from the walls. Tables were topped with biographies of influential African-American leaders. The room was filled with the sounds of the African, Latino, Asian and Native American Latin-Jazz/funk All-Stars, the compilation band comprised of University of Massachusetts students and community members. The group played with a traditional Afro-Cuban sound, strong percussion and — much to the audiences pleasure — performed renditions of famous songs such as "Evil Ways" by Carlos Santana.

This was the scene for "Generations of Struggle" an event put on by the office of ALANA affairs as well as the Black Student Union, the Black Mass Communication Project, Casa Dominicana and other student organizations belonging to the ALANA community. Dozens of faculty members, students and community members of the ALANA community as well as others joined to listen to the music, performances and to enjoy dinner that included cultural African and Haitian dishes prepared by the African Student Association and the Haitian Community. The night was opened up by Nelson Acosta, director of ALANA affairs, with a history of the struggles of people on color on the UMass campus.

"When I arrived here, there were only six Latino students and Black students were just arriving in numbers due to the CCEMBS [Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students] program," Acosta said. "We are standing on the shoulders of giants," he added. "It is important that we keep our community together as one."

Performances included moving poetry by UMass students Ohgo Oruma and Carlos Pena. The night was topped off by a discussion with various UMass professors who are also members of the ALANA community.

Professors Ekweme Michael Thelwell and Bill Strickland of the African American Studies department, as well as professors Joye Bowman and John Higginson of the history department, led a discussion on the many challenges and struggles facing students of color, including the war on Iraq and its effects.

Students who attended the event were pleased with the outcome.

"Everything was so great," said senior ndubuise nduagubа, a computer engineering major. "The school is making a big mistake cutting funding on programs such as ALANA. UMass is not as diverse as it could be, and looking at this event that could be different."

Event coordinators Gladys Franco and Eduardo Bustamante spoke about the event.

"The idea was to bring the community together in honor of Black History month," Franco said. "We had so much support by so many members of the ALANA community such as the Native American Community and BASIC, Brothers and Sisters in Christ. It's great to see all these cultures working together on this same event."

"We wanted to do something that would make a difference as well as bring the students out," Bustamante said. "Lots of our faculty is world famous and much of the student body is not familiar with them. This was a great opportunity to have them share a moment with the student community and expose them to these people."

EMILIE DOUGANO/COLLEGIAN

Professors Bill Strickland and Ewkeme Michael Thelwell lead discussions focusing on the challenges faced by students of color Wednesday in the Cape Lounge of the Student Union.

Hoops set to face St. Bonaventure

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Still in search of its 100th overall win at the William D. Mullins Center since the building's 1992 opening, the Massachusetts men's basketball team will take to its home court for the final time this season when St. Bonaventure (6-18 2-11 Atlantic 10) comes to Amherst Saturday for an Atlantic 10 contest slated to tip off at 2 p.m.

Usually a day reserved for Senior Day festivities, the lack of a fourth-year player on its roster other than injured guard Marcus Cox, who has not played this season, will allow UMass (9-16 3-10 A-10) to use the contest for what it is: one of three remaining games in what has been a tumultuous season, and additional chance to further growth for next season.

In other words, Steve Lappas' Minutemen are playing for pride.

The Bonnies will enter play fresh off NCAA-imposed sanctions that will, among other penalties, place the program on three years probation as well as prohibit them from entering post-season play in 2004. The sanctions come as a result of the discovery that the school did indeed knowingly compete with an ineligible player last season under then-head coach Jan Van Breda Koff.

This season, SBU has struggled mightily under first-year head coach Anthony Solomon. Losers of nine straight and 16 of their last 18, the Bonnies can however boast of a 77-71 victory over UMass on January 24 at the Reilly Center, which coupled with a win over Rhode Island just three days later accounts for all of the Bonnies conference victories on the season.

In the two teams' prior meeting, Junior swingman Patrick Lottin poured in 22 points and six rebounds while relying on his outside shooting to help key a 12-2 run to begin the second half that allowed Bonaventure to take a commanding lead and cruise to victory in Olean, N.Y. It was one of five consecutive losses for the Maroon and White.

St. Bonaventure is led by dynamic point guard Marques Green, widely considered one of the conference's premier players and a candidate for A-10 Player of the Year as well as All-America team consideration.

The shortest player in the A-10 at just five-foot-seven inches tall, Green is the first player in school history to record 1,000 points, 600 assists and 300 steals in a single career and currently averages 19.3 points, 5.0 assists, 3.7 steals and 3.3 rebounds per game this season.

Lottin is second on the team in scoring averaging 13.0 points per game, while Maurice Young (12.0 ppg) and Ahmad Smith (10.6 ppg, 5.7 rebounds per game) have also picked up the slack for the Bonnies this season.

The Minutemen are coming off their fifth consecutive loss; an 83-58 loss to undefeated No. 2 St. Joseph's at the Mullins Center in which UMass held a lead for more than 10 minutes into the game but was unable to hang on, falling down by 10 at the half and letting the game slip away down the stretch. The Maroon and White was led by Rashaun Freeman's team-high 21 points and 15 from reserve guard Chris Chadwick.

GW spanks Minutewomen

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team applied early pressure and took a 30-29 first half lead against George Washington, the best team in the Atlantic 10. Drained after an intense half, the Minutewomen lacked the depth to withstand 2003 A-10 Player of Year Cathy Joens' second half shooting display and lost to the Colonials, 70-51 last night at the Mullins Center.

GW	70
UMass	51

"[UMass] was ready to play when they came out, because they know who we are," Joens said. "I think that we were playing zone a lot and lost some offensive boards. In second half, we decided to go man-to-man and didn't go back to zone so they couldn't shoot and we had people to box out. That was the major difference in the halves."

"After a half when we played with a great deal of emotion, we didn't have the depth after fatigue set in," head coach Marnie Dacko said. "They switched defensively on us and our legs got tired. Fatigue kicks in and we're not as crisp as we are in the first half."

With 15 minutes to go, the Minutewomen were only down three before Joens decided to take over the game. The 5-foot-11 guard rattled off three straight 3-pointers followed by an assist to forward Valerie Williams, to push the lead to 12 points. Dacko immediately called a timeout to regroup, but the damage was done as GW continued to extend their lead as high as 20 points over the remaining time.

"I shoot threes, that's what I do," Joens said. "It's always exciting when you hit shots in-a-row, but you have to credit the team. They were looking for me. Liz Dancause played a great game, getting me open and got the ball to me, that's how I got my points."

UMass and George Washington battled out of the gates, exchanging the lead four times in the opening five minutes. Four different Minutewomen quickly moved the ball through and around the perimeter before finding a wide-open Tamara Tatham under the hoop, igniting a 10-5 run over the next four minutes and 27 seconds.

Sophomore Ashley Sharpton made a high arching 3-pointer over 6-foot-1 Anna Montanana's outstretched arm, giving the Minutewomen a 30-26 lead with five seconds left. Montanana quickly threw a pinpoint pass to Marsheik Witherspoon, who nailed an NBA range 3-pointer at the buzzer and kept the game within one.

Joens put on a show behind the arc, scoring 18 of her 22 points from downtown shooting .500 percent, while collecting five steals. The 2003 All -A-10 selection moved into third place on GW's all-time scoring chart.

The versatile Montanana kept the UMass defense at bay though she struggled with turnovers. The 6-foot-1 forward finished with 13 points, two assists, eight rebounds and eight turnovers.

Williams had a quiet 16 points and five rebounds.

Edris Bailey played a solid game with a double double (15 points and 12 rebounds). Maeweather contributed off the bench with seven points and five rebounds in only 13 minutes.

Tennis caught in Ivy

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

It wasn't exactly the best week for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team (4-2, 1-0 A-10). The Minutewomen dropped their last two road contests to Ivy League foes Brown and Dartmouth this past week.

UMass traveled to Providence, R.I. on Monday where they met the 65th ranked Bears.

Brown took control at the beginning of the match, defeating doubles team of Jenny Munroe and Stephanie Price. Christine Liehr and Dorothy Iwanowicz started strong, but eventually lost with a score of 8-6.

Susan Hyams and Sasha Edelstein won the third doubles set, but because Brown had the best out of three, the Bears won the doubles point.

The Minutewomen didn't fare any better in the singles matches, losing all but one, securing the Bears' victory. No. 1 Munroe fell 6-7, 6-0, 1-0, and Edelstein lost the No. 2 singles match 6-2, 6-3. Liehr lost the No. 3 spot with a similar score of 6-4, 6-1, but it was a good day for Iwanowicz, who brought in the only singles win with a score of 6-2, 6-2.

With this win, Iwanowicz managed to maintain her undefeated record for singles this season so far.

The team made its second stop along the Ivy League circuit in Hanover, N.H. to compete against Dartmouth yesterday afternoon. The match started out well, with Price and Iwanowicz taking down their opponents with a score of 8-4 in the first position doubles match.

The victory would prove to be the only win for the Minutewomen at the match, as the team was entirely swept in the singles matches. Price lost the No. 1 singles spot 6-1, 6-0, and was followed by Liehr in the No. 2 position, 6-2, 6-3.

Edelstein fell 6-4, 6-0 in the No. 3 match, and in the No. 4 position, Iwanowicz was defeated for the first time in singles this season, 6-3, 6-2. Bartoloni's luck wasn't much better in the No. 5 spot, as she lost 6-3, 6-2, and even veteran captain Hyams fell 6-4, 6-4 in the No. 6 spot.

The team may have lost to the Ivy League schools, but the Minutewomen are 1-0 in the Atlantic 10, having already beaten A-10 rival Temple University.

Despite a disappointing week, the future is anything but grim.

Track hits NE championship

By Leah Wyner and Brendian Hall
Collegian Staff

While the rest of the campus is still in class, the Massachusetts men's and women's indoor track teams will be en route to Boston University to compete in the New England Championships, bringing 10 women and six men.

Three athletes hit the road before the UMass campus begins to stir. Crystal Therrien, Ashley Creel and Nastaran Shams start the pentathalon at 10:15 a.m., while the rest of the events begin that evening, with the top performers in each event qualifying for the finals the next day.

Shannon Jackson starts the meet off for the Minutewomen in the 55-meter hurdles; she's ranked ninth going into the event. Defending Atlantic 10 Champion Elisabeth Budd and Kishana Hudson are competing in the 500 meter, where Budd is ranked third.

Kristen Ford is ranked fifth in the open 800-meter, and Troyanah Evans and Kishana Hudson will also represent the team in the 200-meter race.

The distance medley relay is extremely competitive. Alexis Anzelone leads off in the 1200-meter, Budd and Ford return to run the 400 and 800-meter legs and Kate Markopoulos is the anchor running the mile. They finished an outstanding second to LaSalle last Saturday at the Atlantic 10 Championships, and their time of 12:15.81 catapulted them straight into the fast section of the finals. The only uncertainty is Anzelone, who suffered a muscle injury earlier this week. She has been recuperating since, and LaFreniere has hopes for a top five finish if Anzelone is fully recovered.

"There are six teams ahead of us, but often the relay members get switched around," LaFreniere said. "Plus, Markopoulos and Anzelone will be fresh, and I'm confident that Budd and Ford will have enough time to recover from their earlier races to run at 100 percent."

The Massachusetts men's indoor track squad will be sending six representatives to the New England Championships this weekend.

"We could have squeezed out a qualifying spot or two more in the New Englands, but I think all of the kids who would score at the New Englands have already qualified," coach Ken O'Brien said.

"The guys who are actually are going to score points will have already done the qualifying spots. The kids who couldn't qualify will probably end up running relays for us."

Among those qualified are top sprinters like Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng. Last weekend he defended his Atlantic 10 55-meter dash title successfully, taking first in 6.34 seconds — just one hundredth of a second off his personal best — at Rhode Island. A threat every time he steps into the blocks, Frimpong-Boateng has yet to lose a race, either in preliminary or final rounds, this season, and should be the favorite.

At the last meet on BU's track, distance runner Jon Korhonen took a feeble 39th in the 3000. However, the junior has been stronger lately, taking a New England-qualifying fourth in the mile in 4:18.29 last weekend.

Korhonen should have better luck this weekend running in his forte event.

Korhonen will also join John Jacobsen, Dave McMenamy and Matt Clark in the two-mile relay this weekend. Last Saturday, the four took a third-place finish in 7:56.62 to punch their ticket to Boston.

Let everything that has breath praise the Lord!
Gospel Concert 2004
Saturday, Feb. 28th
Bartlett Auditorium
Rm. 65
7 pm
Free Admissions
BRING IT TO US By
413.545.2799 UMASS.BASIC@HOTMAIL.COM

Chicago Pizzaria
Thursday/Friday/Saturday Special:
large cheese pizza $5.00
Free Delivery
549-6073
160 Pearing Street
located on the corner of Pearing St. and Sunset Ave.
Open Hours:
Sun-Wed : 11am-1am
Thurs-Sat : 11am-3am

Attention all ALD Members
Just a Friendly Reminder...
What: The ALD Induction Ceremony
Where: Fine Arts Center, UMASS
When: Sunday, February 29 at 1:30 PM
Why: To honor your great academic performance first semester.
There will be about 500 inductees and their families at the event, so please, come early to sign in...anytime after 1:00 PM; and no sneakers or jeans. Thanks! See you there!
Light refreshments will follow in the Fine Arts Center Lobby.

NEW THIS WEEK!
MATCHSTICK MEN
MY LIFE WITHOUT ME
PIECES OF APRIL
SPY KIDS 3-D
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Introducing FREE in-Network Calling Between 36 Million Verizon Wireless Customers.
From the National in-Network Coverage Area.
Requires 1 year agreement
Plus, unlimited night & weekend minutes and 400 anytime minutes when calling in the America's Choice® Network.
in-Network calling not available everywhere in the America's Choice Network.
for only $39.99 monthly access
Network not available everywhere. Select CDMA phone required. Calls placed outside of rate area are 69¢/min.
Are you in?
Bring in this ad and receive
$25 Mail-In Rebate Offer
When you buy and activate a V120a phone through February 29, 2004
$25.00 Regular Price
-$25.00 Less Rebate
$0.00
Your Price FREE
New 2 year agreement required. While supplies last. Limited time offer.
NWirel-04-04
verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
HOLYOKE
50 Holyoke Street • (413) 533-2500
HADLEY
322 Russell Street • (413) 587-3248
Nights 9:01 pm - 5:59 am M-F; Wknds 12:00 am Sat - 11:59 pm Sun.
Taxes & surcharges apply & may vary. Federal Universal Service Charge of 1.88% (varies quarterly based on FCC rate) & a 5¢ Regulatory Charge per line/month are our charges, not taxes.
Important Consumer Information: Subject to Customer Agreement. Calling Plan & credit approval. $175 cancellation fee, other charges & restrictions. $35 activation fee with 1-yr term. Cannot combine with other offers. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused minutes lost. Offers not available in all areas. National in-Network Coverage Area covers over 234 million people. ©2004 Verizon Wireless

ECAC 2004: a four horse race

Massachusetts

USILA rank: 5
Head coach: Greg Cannella (10th year, 77-47)
2003 record: 13-3
Key returns: A Jeff Zywicki, Sr. (41 g, 21 a); D Stephen Byrnes, So. (40 GB); G Bill Schell, Jr. (.590 Sv. Pct., 8.28 GAA)

The Minutemen begin 2004 as the highest-ranked ECAC squad. They cruised to the NCAA Tournament in 2003 after a number of thrilling victories, including a 14-13 overtime win over Syracuse in Amherst. UMass ran into Maryland in the tournament, and the Terps downed the Minutemen 13-7, ending one of the liner seasons in the program's history.

However, the Minutemen graduated a number of key performers, including Chris Fiore (35 g, 11 a) and Kevin Leveille (34 g, 17 a), who provided much of the offensive punch. Zywicki, a Tewaaraton award finalist, will be counted upon to improve on his explosive junior year, in which he scored 41 goals and added 21 assists.

"Any time you look at the preseason, you say 'hey these are the top guys on offense,' there are always the six or seven guys who step up and play well for you," Cannella said. "It happened last year with Chris Doyle, Kevin Glenz had a fine year, [Zywicki] elevated his game through the roof, so it wasn't just Fiore and Leveille, it was those other guys that really made this whole thing work along with the defense."

Penn State

USILA rank: 11
Head coach: Glenn Thiel (27th year, 190-137)
2003 record: 7-7
Key returns: D Rob Bateman, Sr. (eight assists, 90 ground balls); A Nick Whitaker, So. (24 g, 10 a)

"We're excited about where we are, we did lose some key people, but we're going to rest on Bateman," Thiel said in a media teleconference last week. "He'll probably do a number of things for us. We're also going to be counting on some young people around him on defense."

While Thiel's high esteem for Bateman is a good testimony to how important the senior from Sparks, Md. will be to the Nittany Lions this year, the coach will have a bigger handful to deal with. Junior Josh LaGrow enters his first season as the team's starting goaltender. LaGrow replaces Chris Garrity, who played all 14 games last year, racking up a .570 goals against average.

"Most coaches will agree that you win and lose games depending on how good you are in goal," Thiel said. "We lost Chris Garrity, and he certainly turned our season around. Now Josh will step in, different kind of goaltend. How well he does will be key, and how our faceoff matures will be important."

Rutgers

USILA rank: 7
Head coach: Jim Stagnitta (3rd year, 12-17)
2003 record: 10-5
Key returns: A Delby Powless, Sr. (32 g, 4 a); G Greg Havalchak, So. (7.55 GAA, .627 Sv. Pct.); A Leif Blomquist, Jr. (12 g, 19 a)

Havalchak turned out to be the biggest of many surprises on the Scarlet Knight squad. As a freshman in 2003, Havalchak emerged as one of the top goaltenders in the conference, and earned First-Team All-ECAC honors, as well as the ECAC Rookie of the Year nod.

"I think Greg surprised himself as much as anyone last year," said Stagnitta, who was named the USILA Division I Coach of the Year in 2003. "To be an impact player, to dominate the way that Greg can almost every game, you have the opportunity to be successful. I think he has passion and I believe that in time he can be one of the top goaltenders in country."

As a team, the Knights outdid themselves in 2003, completing a stunning turnaround from their 2-12 finish in 2002 to go on to the NCAA Tournament.

"Obviously we raised the bar and the level of expectation last year, and even I as a coach could not have predicted," Stagnitta said.

Georgetown

USILA rank: 8
Head coach: Dave Urick (15th year, 139-55)
2003 record: 11-4
Key returns: A Neal Goldman, Sr. (21 g, 11 a, 33 GB); M Walid Hajj, Sr. (23 g, 7 a); G Rich D'Andrea, Jr. (7.28 GAA, .569 Sv. Pct.)

The Hoyas finished 2003 as one of the best teams in the nation, before losing 12-7 in the NCAA quarterfinals to Virginia. However, they graduated 13 players from that team, and Goldman and Hajj will be expected to pick up much of the slack.

"We lose 13 seniors off of last year's team, which from a talent and character standpoint was one of the best classes we've ever had. We're going to have some players that have different roles than they've taken on in the past, and how they take on those roles will affect how we do."

The biggest of those losses are Kyle Sweeney and Mike Hammer. Both were First-Team All-ECAC selections last year, and their absences will certainly be felt by Urick's squad.

Minus two, ECAC moves on to 2004

ECAC from page A1

teams. I think that we all play very competitive schedules out of the league. Georgetown took our league last year, and I think Georgetown would have received a bid whether it was an AQ or not, so I think all four of us would have gotten to the tournament even if we weren't a league. Is it nice to have it? Yes. When your league is as strong as ours is, is it necessary in the short term? No."

Another big problem for the member institutions was scheduling for the 2004 season. With two teams leaving and a somewhat consistent non-conference schedule normally in the works, coaches needed to scramble to find non-traditional opponents to pencil in to the schedule.

"It was a little difficult based on the timing to replace the quality of a Navy or a UMBC in the short term," Stagnitta said. "I think that from our standpoint, we feel that our opener at Dartmouth is a good replacement, it's another playoff team. And obviously I'm pleased with the quality of teams that are coming in to the league next year. We've continued to provide from top to bottom what would be a competitive league on a daily basis. This year was a little bit of a scramble, but after this year, we'll be back to business as usual as far as the schedule goes."

Massachusetts added an opening game against North Carolina in Baltimore, Md. this weekend and a Friday night contest with Manhattan in April. Rutgers added games with Dartmouth, Quinnipiac and Fairfield, while Georgetown added Vermont and Delaware.

"We gained North Carolina and Manhattan, but we lost two good games in Navy and UMBC," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "You lose an Automatic Qualifier, so that hurts, not having that guarantee that someone's getting in. We'll miss those teams, the league takes a hit because we lose those two teams."

EMILIE TOOGIANCOLLEGIAN

UMass coach Greg Cannella and the Minutemen enter the 2004 season as the highest-ranked team in ECAC.

New year for Bolduc

WOMEN'S LAX from page 8

ing to a few freshmen to step it up," Bolduc said. "We've focused a lot on defense ... it continues to improve every day. We graduated a big class, so we're requiring our freshmen to step up faster than usual."

Redshirt freshman Lauren McCarthy has been named starting goalkeeper for the upcoming season.

For the third consecutive year, Massachusetts will kick off the season against the College of the Holy Cross. Tomorrow's game will pit UMass against a Crusader team that it has beaten 15-0 and 10-5 in the last two meetings.

Hope Zelinger may the UMass player to watch, due to her considerable success against Holy Cross in the previous season-openers. Zelinger netted three goals last year, and scored a career-high four goals in 2002.

Second-year coach Stephanie Pavlick hopes to improve upon last year's 7-9 record, which earned the Crusaders a fifth-place ranking in the Patriot League.

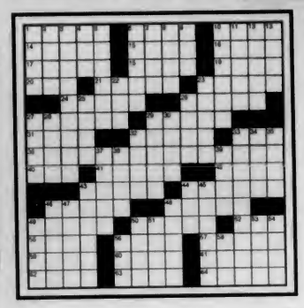
A 2-4 conference record was not enough to earn Holy Cross an invite to the 2003 Conference tournament. With 12 returning letterwinners and 11 newcomers, Holy Cross must find a way to compete despite returning only three defenders.

"Stephanie [Pavlick] is a grad of UMass, she graduated in 2000 so I was able to coach her for a year (as an assistant)," Bolduc said. "Knowing her as a player helped me understand how she approaches the game from a coaching standpoint."

Leading the team will be Second-team All-Conference selection Kati Britt. The senior captain led the team last year with 33 points, 28 of which came on goals. In each of her three seasons, Britt has either led or been second on the team in goals scored.

Britt will be joined by teammate Kerry Daly, a senior co-captain who spent last season abroad. In her sophomore season, Daly notched 12 goals and one assist.

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS

1 Horseshoer
6 Fitness centers
10 Hatchet handle
14 Sir
15 Groom
16 Doubles
17 Fire chief's superior
18 Movie scenes
19 Carefree escapade
20 Sugar amt.
21 Objectives
23 Invests a word
24 VCR button
25 Cuts calories
28 Nuisance plants
31 Large purse
32 Shouldered
35 "— Baby Baby" (Linda Ronstadt)
36 Winter sports gear (2 wds.)
40 That ship
41 Fr. governmental
42 To be, in Montreal
43 Face warmer
44 Diadems
46 Bogged down
48 Rare fish delicacy
49 Fortuneteller's card
50 Bill deposit
52 Utopia
55 Tripod legged
58 EEC currency
57 Sod grass
59 Beetle and Blyth
60 Throw rocks at
61 Abrasive
62 Jokester Martha —
63 Pub orders
64 Rodeo prop

DOWN

1 Wooden ship
2 Next after Earth
3 Clausen, e.g.
4 Boxing win
5 Closet item
6 Fantastic
7 Bellow
8 Bulk
9 Hot tub
10 Mush (hieroglyphics)
11 Expert
12 Spots
13 Producers
19 Rejoicing ducks
22 Ms. for Libras
23 Apple drink
25 Louis and Frazier
26 Auto mishap
27 Dalmatian
28 Tendon
29 Getting to
30 Sea eagle
32 Wild turkey
33 Big birds
34 Soup vegetable
35 Makes tracks
37 Candied
38 Love neighbor
39 "She Loves You" refrain
42 Window shop
44 Famous mummy
45 Signore Peron
46 Food from Provence
47 Sandwich
48 Piggy bank features
49 Russian ruler
50 Sword light
51 — Stanley Gardner
53 Freshens
54 Rochester cities
56 Non-commercial org.
58 GP group

Campus
er, room 1
is mandato Collegian s did not co

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Dill Salmon
- Chicken Masala
- Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 20

SATURDAY
- High: 46
- Low: 25

SUNDAY
- High: 47
- Low: 31

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Scott Eldridge II
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Oliver Chong Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Swallow your pride and get it over with.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Get to the gym!

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
It's time to get rid of those shoes.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Now, don't get any further into debt!

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
It's time to move on.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Live it up!

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Feel free to reward yourself today.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Go out and spend some money on yourself.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't get involved with a Scorpio.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Today, you need to go to bed a few minutes early to avoid problems.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Keep on trucking.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Take a second look at your lifestyle.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"The capacity of human beings to bore one another seems to be vastly greater than that of any other animal."

- H.L. Mencken

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$1 off previewed movies at campus ministore and Worcester munchie store with this coupon. 1 per customer good until March 31st

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Acura Integra-RS 136K Excellent, White. Detailed, 1 owner. 2,250.00 OR BO 413-502-9684

1998 Honda Civic Ex Coupe 69,000 miles. Very Good Condition $8500.00 alyarob@cs.umass.edu 413-221-8835

1987 BMWE 5SPD 268K miles Runs great Must sell $1,000.00 413-531-7580

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

ENTERTAINMENT

Experienced Hip-Hop DJ 413-335-5226

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst philosophydialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

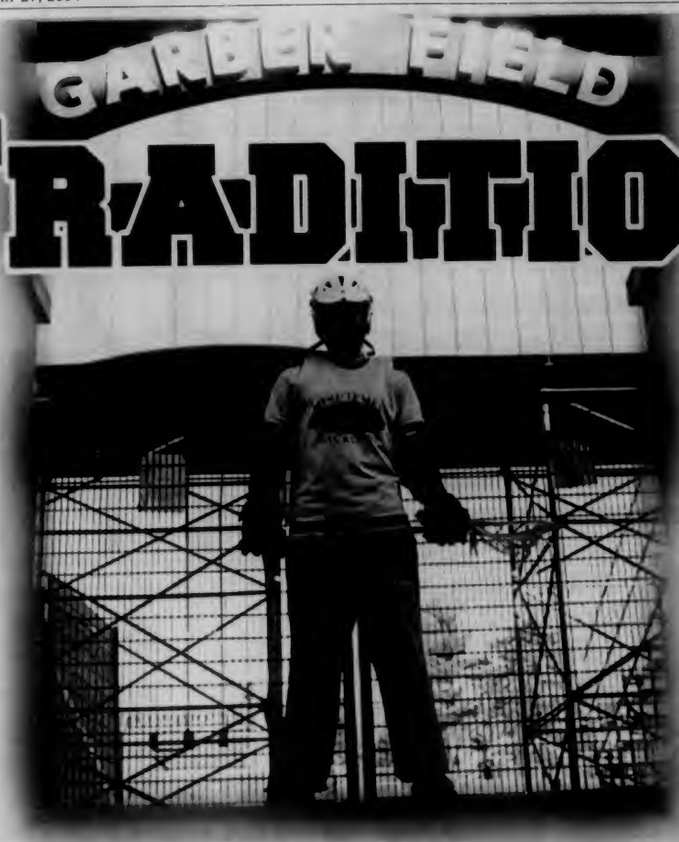
Spring Break 2004 It's here..Book now! Lowest Prices Hottest Parties #1 Airlines What more can you ask for!!! www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price. UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com



Place your own classified ad. Call 413-545-3500 today!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BRIAN D'ONOFRIO/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Brett Garber guards the entrance to the field that bears his family name. Garber, grandson of legendary coach Dick Garber, and the Minutemen begin their 2004 season tomorrow in Baltimore, where they'll square off against North Carolina. They return to Garber Field to face Hartford on Tuesday at 3 p.m.

The lacrosse legacy enters year No. 50

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It is a feeling that permeates throughout the University of Massachusetts campus. The epicenter is a small patch of land just west of the hallowed hall where legends like Julius Erving played basketball. Garber Field is the home base of the tradition of UMass lacrosse, a tradition that turns 50 years old this season.

If Garber Field is the home base, then the supreme general is the man whose name adorns every entrance to the facility. Richard F. Garber began coaching UMass in 1955. In his 35 years at the helm, he amassed a 300-141-3 record, the second-highest win total in Division I history. Garber's teams made nine NCAA Tournaments, and won 14 New England Championships. Dick Garber created the tradition.

Every player who adorns the maroon and white gets the tradition. From the great names of the past — names like Sal LoCascio, Mark Millon, Kevin Leveille — to the current crop of big-time stickmen, the pride and legacy of UMass lacrosse has become like a religion among everyone associated with the program.

Brett Garber, for one, gets it. He has to. Brett is former UMass coach Ted Garber's son and Dick Garber's grandson. He is a freshman, preparing to play his first season on his grandfather's field.

"It means a lot, it's like a dream come true," Garber says. "I grew up watching it all, and now I get to run on that field and play. I can't explain it. It's like a dream."

Greg Cannella gets it. He probably gets it more than anybody. His office is adorned with the many achievements of his UMass teams, whether it is the ECAC trophies he has sitting on a table near his desk, or the posters on the wall, depicting one of his players in battle. But that isn't the best indication of how much Cannella understands the UMass tradition. It's the passion he exudes for the sport, and the team.

That passion comes through loud and clear when he talks about the Garber family, from Dick to Brett. He begins to speak about Brett Garber, about the chance to have the Garber name back out on the field, and his voice cracks. He looks down, trying to compose himself, he focuses on tying the laces of his boot, anything to hold back the emotion that is boiling inside him. But it is no use.

In a gravelly, choked voice, he says, "I never could have imagined that. I try not to think about it too much. I just hope that he has ..." Cannella pauses for what feels like an eternity. "... That he has as good an opportunity and experience as I did." The lump in Cannella's throat is nearly visible.

"It's an incredible thing for [Brett]. I know it's a really incredible thing for his dad and his mom. So I just hope that ... that I can repay coach [Garber] in some way, that I can help his grandson along, help him find his way, be as good a person as his grandfather was and his dad is."

2003 is the Minutemen's first season since losing two of the highest-regarded players in the program's history, Chris Fiore and Kevin Leveille. Leveille tallied 105 goals and 54 assists in his four years in Amherst, good for 11th place on the UMass all-time scorers list. Fiore became a dominating presence on the field, and earned First Team All-American honors last year. Fiore was also named the Eastern College Athletic Conference Offensive Player of the Year in 2003, for his 55 goals and 11 assists.

Fiore and Leveille, both now on the Boston Cannons' (Major League Lacrosse) roster, are two of 35 UMass players to reach the pro ranks.

That was the past, and now the Minutemen move on with the new crop. Leading the way is senior captain Jeff Zywicki on offense. His 41 goals and 21 assists were the team-high last year. The former box lacrosse player from Nepean, Ontario now shoulders the full offensive load.

At midfield, the onus will fall on another senior captain, Neil Lundburg. At 6-foot-4, 225 lbs., Lundburg is certainly the easiest Minutemen to spot on the field. But these days, it's not just because of his size, or his shoulder-length brown hair. Lundburg is a versatile, physical player who can cover most any territory, from moving through the midfield, to holding off defender after defender behind the opponent's cage.

Among those midfielders is the man who gets things started, sophomore faceoff man Dane Collins. Collins won 160 of 343 faceoffs taken last year, and will be relied on to start the UMass attack.

On defense, a crew of players fill the back line, including sophomores Stephen Byrnes and Jack Reid. Junior Matt Garcia and senior Chris Gervat are among the elder statesman in a group that Cannella says will need to perform if the Minutemen will succeed this year.

"Obviously, the defense, we still have to stop people," he says. "Jack Reid, Chris Gervat, Matt Garcia, Aaron Paskalis, Steven Byrnes. You also have to look at [midfielders] Greg Scott and Justin Walker. Especially early in the season, we need the defense to play very well to be successful."

The last line of defense is junior Bill Schell, the man in front of the cage. Schell is already 10th on the UMass all-time saves list.

The Minutemen, ranked No. 7 in the nation, will be able to test things out against none other than No. 8 North Carolina tomorrow in Baltimore. The Tar Heels return their entire attack and defense units, and are coached by another man who returned to helm his alma mater, John Haus. Haus is 21-17 in three years as Tar Heel bench boss, and brings a talented group to Baltimore's Calvert Hall College.

The players get the tradition. The fans who will soon dot the grass grandstand on the east side of Garber field get the tradition. Cannella explains it, pretty succinctly.

"The tradition of UMass lacrosse is the legacy that coach Garber left. The exciting style of lacrosse that we're trying to emulate now. And the group of alums that played here, and the group of alums who played here and represented the University. I think the tradition is the players and Coach Garber."

Bolduc begins year two

By BRENDAN HALL AND MATT BARSTOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Coming off an 11-8 season in 2003 under second-year coach Carrie Bolduc, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse squad enters 2004 looking to carry that momentum to greater heights.

Last season, the Minutewomen fell to then-No. 13 Cornell Big Red 14-8 in the ECAC Championship. Currently, CU sits at No. 15 in the preseason rankings.

The Maroon and White have been named by Lacrosse Magazine and the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Association poll as a team on the bubble to crack the top 20 this season.

"It's great, because it's been a while since Massachusetts women's lacrosse has been recognized as a top 20 team," Bolduc said, alluding to the Minutewomen's glory days of the 1980s.

"I think our hard work last year has really paid off ... hopefully, this year's effort will prove that we are a top 20 team."

As far as living up to expectations is concerned, Bolduc is cool as ice.

"I don't think there's any pressure," Bolduc said. "I think we need to focus on ourselves and recognize that people are out there looking at us as a top 20 team. I don't think it changes anything. I think that we'll carry on just as if we were top 10, top 20, top 50 ... it's all relative."

Traditionally a defense-first team, the philosophy in recent years has shifted toward a more attack-focused approach. The Minutewomen's style focuses less on set plays and more on improvisation from their talented attack unit.

"When we're on, I think we're one of the top 10 attacks in the country," Bolduc said.

A young but deep unit will be heading an attack that specializes in one-on-one situations. It will be led by tri-captains Tracey Drown and Maura McGarrity, as well as Kerri Connerty, Lindsay Cassell, Hope Zellinger and newcomer Shelley Boyle.

Zellinger is UMass's returning leading scorer, netting 30 goals on 62 shots and nine assists for 39 points last season, good enough for third on the team. The senior attack also gathered 32 groundballs, caused 11 turnovers, and had 30 draw controls. McGarrity was right behind her in the stats column with 28 goals on 71 shots and six assists for 34 points.

Having been sidelined for the season with an injury after four games last season, Drown looks to have a terrific season should she stay healthy.

With a lot of new faces in the defense, Bolduc expects a lot of underclassmen to turn things up a notch in 2004.

"We've got a good amount of experience, but we're also look-

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 6

ECAC in turmoil

By MATT BRADY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The place where the dead neither suffered the pains of hell nor the joys of heaven according to mythology was called limbo. Limbo is precisely where the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference remains for the 2004 season.

The ECAC solidified itself as one of the best conferences in college lacrosse in 2003, comprising four of the 16 teams (Rutgers, Georgetown, Penn State, Massachusetts) that played in the NCAA tournament. But at the end of the season, the conference of six teams split apart, with Maryland-Baltimore Country and Navy bolting for much less powerful conferences, as UMBC moved to America East and Navy joined rival Army in the Patriot League.

That leaves just the four ECAC teams for 2004, but the league will add a trio of solid squads for 2005.

"Certainly we're looking forward to next year when we add three additional teams in Hobart College, Loyola College (Md.) and St. John's University," ECAC Commissioner Phil Buttafuoco said in a conference call last week.

"That will bring added excitement to the league. I think you can tell by the quality of the schedules that our coaches and our teams are willing to go out and play the best in the land at any time."

One of the biggest implications for the conference is that it loses its automatic qualifier for the NCAA tournament in March. In order for a league to receive an AQ, it must have at least six member institutions together for two years. That means the ECAC is without an AQ until the 2007 season.

"I'm not too worried about not having the automatic bid for the league," Penn State coach Glenn Thiel said. "Yeah, it would be nice when it does materialize down the line. I tend to think that if you're good enough to beat the likes of the teams in the ECAC, you're probably going to be selected for the tournament. I suppose a scenario could materialize where we all knock each other off, but the bottom line is you're going to have to have some significant wins anyway."

Coaches across the league seem far from worried about the loss of the AQ, as the conference's member institutions all likely would have made the postseason without the qualifier last season.

"It's not something we dwell on," Rutgers head coach Jim Stagnitta said. "There's four quality teams in our league that are all NCAA-caliber

See ECAC on page 6

MARCH

And one award show to rule them all...

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Freeman leads Minutemen over SBU with career-high 31 points

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 92

The Democratic primaries to arrive in Massachusetts

Candidates take a stand on issues concerning the nation today; in their own words

By DAN O'BRIEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tomorrow, "Super Tuesday" will bring primary elections to ten states — Massachusetts, New York, California, Ohio, Connecticut, Maryland, Vermont, Rhode Island, Georgia and Minnesota. Ohio is viewed by political analysts as the key state on March 2. Only two Democratic candidates have ever won the Presidency without taking Ohio — Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1944 and John F. Kennedy in 1960.

But history can be made in this year's election. In order to win the party nomination, the goal for the candidates in the primaries, is the number of delegates they receive. The "key state" of Ohio has 140 delegates, but there are big prizes in other states as well, including Massachusetts, which has 121 delegates and New York, which has 287.

In light of the razor-thin 2000 presidential election, people across America are feeling the pressure more than ever to come to the polls and vote. The Democrats claim there is more at stake this time around, attacking the changes that have been made since the Bush administration took office, including the Patriot Act and weakened environmental standards.

In the push for educated voters, the Collegian has compiled a list showing where each Democratic candidate — Sen. John Edwards (N.C.), Sen. John Kerry (Mass.), Rep. Dennis Kucinich (Oh.) and Rev. Al Sharpton, human rights activist from New York — stands in his own words on issues important to college students.

John Kerry is a Massachusetts senator from Boston, and is also a decorated war hero.

John Edwards is a North Carolina senator. He was elected in 1998. He has also worked as a trial lawyer.

Abortion rights

All of the candidates have said they are "strongly opposed" to appointing judges to the Supreme Court who will outlaw abortions.

Edwards: "I would help lead a fight to pass a federal freedom of choice act so that [a woman's] right to choose is guaranteed and protected no matter what the court does."

Sharpton: "My religion says that abortion is wrong. And while I may believe that life begins when the sperm meets the egg, and that only God should decide whether to take a life, I will not stand in the way of a woman's right to choose. If women do not have a right to choose, then it's a civil rights violation."

Kerry said: "I am prepared to filibuster, if necessary, any Supreme Court nominee who would turn back the clock on a woman's right to choose or the constitutional right to privacy, on civil rights and individual liberties and on the laws protecting workers and the environment."

For a period in Kucinich's political career, his stance on abortion was pro-life. However, his position on the issue has changed. He gives voters an explanation of his change of opinion on his website.

Kucinich said: "The decision to terminate a pregnancy is one of the most serious decisions a woman might make. It is deeply personal. In our society, all women and all men have a right to make difficult moral decisions and make personal choices. But women will not be equal to men if this constitutionally protected right is denied."

The Patriot Act

The USA PATRIOT Act is the bill that was put into law about two months after the Sept. 11 attacks, in response to a call for increased national security. The bill has been controversial since it went into effect. There are many politicians and civil rights groups that feel that many parts of the bill infringe on people's rights. Some of the controversial parts of the bill include giving the FBI easier access to wiretap phone lines, and access to search people's medical and library records if the authorities suspect a link to terrorism.

Sharpton: "[The Patriot Act] seems to be a throw-back to the COINTELPRO days of J. Edgar Hoover, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Black Panthers — making legal today what was illegal then. These "Patriot Acts" appear to be using the legitimate fear of 9/11 to pass illegitimate legislation. This legislation is unpatriotic in the most patriotic sense."

Kerry: "I strongly supported including a sunset provision in the Patriot Act. Bush reportedly plans to introduce a second "Patriot Act" — we have learned from the first Patriot Act that the last thing we need is John Ashcroft rewriting the Bill of Rights. I am alarmed by what has been reported to be part of "Patriot Act II" and I will very carefully review any new proposal and fight to ensure that it does not violate civil liberties."

Edwards: "I supported the Patriot Act because it contained provisions needed to strengthen our security, but I also believe this administration has abused its powers in implementing the law. One key provision of the act requires Congress to revisit key provisions of the law. I opposed efforts to repeal that "sunset," and Congress must rigorously review the Patriot Act —as well as any new legislation-to see whether it advances our security and honors our values."

Kucinich: "We have to repeal the Patriot Act, which is a basis of fear that was drummed up in this country without any rational basis for protecting this country. We're being driven by fear, and I have to say that it's time for us to challenge that fear."

The environment

Sharpton: "Converting our economy to renewable fuels as rapidly as practical and feasible would be one of my top priorities. I believe that protecting the environment is also labor intensive. Thus, creating a clean, safe and sustainable environment would also create jobs, not cost jobs."

Kucinich: "[I will help] make clean, healthy water a right for all, strengthening air and water protections. Regulation and enforcement against polluters will be increased, while environmentally responsible farmers and businesses will be rewarded and will work to stop privatization of drinking water and sewer systems, will make a major investment in water system infrastructure, and will make a significant financial commitment to providing healthy drinking water to all the world's people."

Kerry: "On Earth Day 2003, I announced a proposal to resume the battle against environmental injustice, in part by greatly elevating its priority for the EPA and other federal enforcement agencies and in part by creating environmental empowerment zones, in which the impact of federal decisions on the health of low-income and minority citizens would have to be taken into account before they are implemented.

"I also called for a measure that will be critical not only in dealing with environmental injustice but also in dealing with environmental health issues generally: establishing a national tracking system for chronic diseases and environmental health hazards."

Edwards: "The Bush administration ... has made major new loopholes in the [Clean Air Act] — allowing plant owners to pollute more. I held public hearings on this issue and am working to marshal opposition to these misguided plans. ... I have also fought to secure funding for environmental projects from western North Carolina to the coast. ... I also introduced legislation to offer a tax credit to dry cleaners who use environmentally-friendly technology and have fought for funding to research new waste treatment technology to help our hog farmers clean up waste lagoons."

Gay marriage issues

The gay marriage debate has not been at the forefront of this election, despite being a hot topic for politicians in recent months. None of the Democratic candidates have stood by President Bush's position, calling for a ban on gay marriage, but their positions are divided between supporting civil unions or supporting gay marriage.

Kerry: "I am for partnership rights. I am for civil unions."

Edwards: "Massachusetts has just made a decision that embraces the notion of gay marriage. I think these are decisions that the states should have the power to make."

Kucinich: "I would help to create a culture in America so that people could be whoever they are, because if America is about anything, it has to be about a chance for people to live out their dream and to express their own authenticity. And so, gays, lesbians, bisexual, transgender people under my administration would have full participation, and they would also have the right to marry."

According to the San Francisco Chronicle, Sharpton said the very question of whether gays ought to be eligible for marriage was insulting.

Referring to civil unions: "That's like saying you give blacks, or whites, or Latinos the right to shack up — but not get married. . . It's like asking 'do I support black marriage or white marriage. . . . The inference of the question is that gays are not like other human beings."

U.S. health care

With about 40 million Americans without comprehensive health care coverage, this is a key issue. And, the debate over how government should intervene in the health coverage is ongoing. Some candidates are approaching the problem by proposing government regulations to fight against health insurance companies, while other candidates are proposing a universal-style healthcare system, which would allow every citizen the right to receive benefits from a government-run healthcare system.

Edwards: "We can't deal with the health care crisis in America unless we have the backbone and courage to do what I have been doing my entire life: fighting against big corporations, pharmaceutical companies, big insurance companies, big HMOs. The president works for those people. There's a culture in Washington that stands against taking them on."

Kerry: "I will send to Congress a health care plan that stops spiraling costs, covers every child in America, and makes it possible for every American to get the same health care as any member of Congress."

Kucinich: "It's important that all Americans be covered, [including] alternative medicine, a prescription drug benefit, vision care and dental care and mental health care, and long-term nursing care-all covered under one Medicare For All, single-payer program."

Sharpton: "I have supported single-payer plan. I think the only way you're going to solve these problems is you've got to have a national single-payer plan for everyone. I think that we've got to stop going with half a loaf. I would rather have no bill and fight for something real than to continue to give people something that I think is a diluted version of what we need to have."

College affordability

Edwards: "My agenda includes a plan to make the first year of college free for any young person willing to work for it."

Kucinich said: "In order to pay [for my plan of free public college tuition] I would cancel the tax cuts to the top brackets and revoke the extra $87 billion the President spent on the defense budget."

Kerry's plans to help college affordability include tax credits and a "Service for College" plan, which would have students serve in the military for two years in exchange for a four-year college tuition payment towards a public college in the recipient's home state.

See DEMOCRATS on page 3

Al Sharpton, a Brooklyn, N.Y. native, is a Baptist minister and minority civil rights leader.

The war in Iraq

Kucinich: "I will work tirelessly ... to gain approval of this plan at the United Nations, and to put it into action, bring all U.S. troops home in 90 days."

Edwards: "Involve our allies, the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in establishing a free Iraqi government with legitimacy in the region and around the world."

Sharpton: "[I will] move to bring the troops home by appealing to Kofi Annan and the United Nations to convene as a world body to oversee, without United States control, the redevelopment and rebuilding of Iraq and would submit to that as a partner but not as a dominant force in terms of our contractors or in terms of military."

Kerry: "We should not send more American troops. That would be the worst thing. We do not want to have more Americanization. We do not want a greater sense of American occupation. We need to minimize that. And the way to do that is do everything possible, including sharing the power, to bring other countries in to take the burden."

Dennis Kucinich was an Ohio State senator and a U.S. representative.

RSO gets 'Hi-Score' on game development

By Caitlin Crowley
Collegian Correspondent

Hi-Score, a new registered student organization at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, is giving students from all majors and disciplines a chance to learn the ins and outs of computer and video game development.

Club president Dan Roy got the idea for Hi-Score when he met other computer science majors interested in a career in game development. Two-thirds of the club's members are computer science majors, but the club is looking for any students in the creative field who have an interest in game development. No background in computer science or programming is necessary to participate. Any students interested in programming, 3-D design, or art are urged to attend the meetings.

"We've advertised to the art department, music department, and English majors," said Roy.

After researching the game development industry, Roy found that if interested students were given the opportunity to collaborate with other people on games, working to build a quality product, their chances of getting a job after graduation would be much better.

"How you [enter the industry] is by making games on your own and building a portfolio," said Roy.

Networking is another important factor to entering the gaming industry. "Only 20 percent of jobs in the game industry go to applicants," said Roy. "80 percent are to people with connections."

One way Hi-Score is hoping to build these connections is to have dialogue with people already working in the field. "One of the things we're trying to do is bring a speaker from the industry each month," said Roy.

Brian Levine, an assistant professor in the computer science department at UMass, is giving Hi-Score $60 a month for putting on events and other club expenses. Roy says the club is still looking for a full-time faculty advisor.

Besides the opportunity to put together a portfolio in a supportive atmosphere, Hi-Score offers a social event each month. Currently, the club is hosting monthly "game parties" at X-Zone in the Hampshire Mall. Last Saturday, members played computer games at X-Zone from 2 to 5 p.m. for $4, rather than the usual $6 rate. Roy says that these social events are a way for interested students to relax and have fun.

"It's a lot more fun when you get people together to play."

Roy said while the club has 14 official members, 94 interested students attended the first general meeting on Feb. 5.

Female students are also being encouraged to consider joining Hi-Score. The large turnout for the inaugural meeting had only five women in attendance. Roy said that with a yearly attendance requirement, Hi-Score has a low-commitment rate that should be attractive to busy students. Hi-Score's next meeting is on March 4, 7 p.m. in room 1634 at the Lederle Graduate Tower.

SAGE group explores US war motives through documentary

By Brendan Heck
Collegian Correspondent

A documentary film that includes the testimonies of over 20 CIA analysts, weapons inspectors, and news paper editors who strongly disapprove the pre-war intelligence used to justify the United States' decision to go to war was presented by SAGE, a local grassroots organization in the Jones Library in Amherst last Thursday.

"Uncovered: The Whole Truth About the Iraq War," produced and directed by Robert Greenwald, attracted approximately 35 people, who read leaflets discussing pre-war intelligence, ate free cookies and juice, and signed a contact list.

SAGE is an organization that is made up of approximately 80-130 local residents. According to Susan Theberge, the group's chairman, the mission of SAGE is "to bring the community together on issues like civil liberties and economic and social justice."

The film was introduced by group member Kathleen Bridgewater. The film was first shown on Dec. 7, 2003, and was attended by over one million people. Additional copies were available in the back of the room for audience members to take at the end of the night.

The film opened with a discussion of the Sept. 11 attacks on New York and Washington. "George Bush panned on going to war with Iraq on September 11," said Ray McGovern, a former CIA analyst featured in the documentary.

The film expanded on the attacks by speculating that the U.S. government capitalized on the fear evoked from them to get the country to support a war with Iraq. McGovern theorized that the government used "scare tactics by convincing Americans that Iraq was linked to terrorist organizations."

The film also pushed the idea that President Bush and his cabinet used the idea of Iraqi nuclear weapons to scare Americans. The film quoted President Bush saying, "Facing clear evidence of peril, we cannot wait for the final proof, the smoking gun that could come in the form of a mushroom cloud."

Several people were quoted on issue of the U.S.'s poor pre-war intelligence, including weapons inspector, David Albright, who claimed that the U.S made a "deliberate attempt to portray an imminent threat by taking selective information about Iraq."

When the movie ended, Theberge and her husband René passed out handouts with questions and discussion topics on them. Over 20 people stayed and formed groups of four or five to discuss the film and any other topics.

SAGE was started by the Theberges as "a funky little group that met in our living room once a month," Theberge said. Susan's husband René said the main mission of the group was to bring people together to discuss issues such as economic inequality and especially racism.

"Racism is what keeps America divided, and every political question involves race," he said. "SAGE is part of a national movement of people who want change in America.

Harvard plans stem cell center

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Harvard University plans to launch a multimillion-dollar center to grow and study human embryonic stem cells, the school said Sunday.

The center, to be announced April 23 at a scientific conference, could be the largest privately funded American stem cell research project to date, the Boston Sunday Globe reported.

President Bush, citing ethical considerations, has limited federal funding for embryonic stem cell research to existing lines of cells.

Associated Press

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Ferron Saltzker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagtic
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kagins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marselli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as the Index. Later, it became the Collegian in 1903. The Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian and Beyond supplement since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Collegian Staff: EIC debates tonight at 7 p.m. in the Collegian Office.

Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide resigns, flees country

Women carry a looted sac of grain at Port-au-Prince's seaport on Saturday as people continue taking large bags of lentils donated by the U.S. Agency for International Development at a warehouse in the port.

By Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — President Jean-Bertrand Aristide resigned and flew into exile Sunday, pressured by foreign governments and a bloody rebellion. Gunfire crackled as the capital fell into chaos, and Washington dispatched Marines.

The Marines were arriving Sunday afternoon, expected to be the first wave of a U.N.-backed international peacekeeping force. France also said it was considering sending troops.

"The government believes it is essential that Haiti have a hopeful future. This is the beginning of a new chapter," President Bush said at the White House. "I would urge the people of Haiti to reject violence, to give this break from the past a chance to work. And the United States is prepared to help."

The head of Haiti's supreme court said he was taking charge of the government, and a key rebel leader said he welcomed the arrival of foreign troops.

"I think the worst is over, and we're waiting for the international forces. They will have our full cooperation," Guy Philippe told CNN.

U.N. diplomats said key Security Council members would begin talks Sunday about a resolution to authorize peacekeepers for Haiti, which erupted into violence 3 1/2 weeks ago when rebels began driving police from towns and cities in the north.

The U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, would not say how many Marines were expected in the speedy deployment, ordered President Bush ordered only hours after Aristide fled under pressure from the United States and former colonial power France.

Though not aligned with rebels, the political opposition also pushed for Aristide to leave for the good of Haiti's 8 million people, angered by poverty, corruption and crime. The uprising — only the most recent violence in this Caribbean nation — killed at least 100 people.

Anarchy spread across Port-au-Prince as news emerged of the president's departure.

Angry Aristide supporters roamed the streets armed with old rifles, pistols, machetes and sticks. Some fired wildly into crowds on the Champs de Mars, the main square in front of the National Palace. Looters emptied a police station and hit pharmacies, supermarkets and other businesses, mostly on the capital's outskirts.

Iraqis to agree on new gov.

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraqi politicians agreed on the draft of an interim constitution early Monday, reaching a compromise on the role of Islam and putting off the details of Kurdish autonomy, an Iraqi official said. The charter will likely be signed Wednesday.

Members of the Iraqi Governing Council, with U.S. administrators mediating, ended a second late night of negotiations at 4:20 a.m. with "full agreement ... on each article," said Entifadh Qanbar, spokesman for Shiite Muslim council member Ahmad Chalabi.

The interim charter, officially the Transitional Administrative Law, will remain in effect until a permanent constitution is drafted and ratified next year. It underlines that the rights of all Iraqi citizens will be respected and sets aside for women 25 percent of the seats in the provisional legislature, Qanbar said.

According to Qanbar, the interim constitution charter will recognize Islam as a major source of legislation and ban any laws which violate the tenets of the Muslim faith. U.S. officials and secular-minded members got their way with the phrase "a source" — out of many sources — but the ban on laws that violate Islam was aimed at pleasing conservatives.

U.S. administrator L. Paul Bremer had hinted he would veto conservatives' phrasing setting Islamic law as "the" main basis of law, which some feared would create an Islamic state.

Dem. debate is ongoing

DEMOCRATS from page 1

Politic-ians and political activists everywhere are trying to reach out to the 18 to 24-year-old demographic to get them to vote.

Students can vote in the town of Amherst. Voters must have registered prior to Feb. 11 with the town of Amherst.

Here are the polling locations for UMass students who live on-campus: Sylvan and Northeast: Immanuel Lutheran Church, Church Lounge, N. Pleasant St. Central (excluding Van Meter Hall): Wildwood School, Strong St. Orchard Hill (including Van Meter Hall): North Fire Station, E. Pleasant St. Southwest: Hampden Dining Commons.

Students who live off-campus may call Amherst Town Hall for polling locations. The phone number is 413-256-4004.

NEW ON TUESDAY!
COLD CREEK MANOR
DUPLEX
GOOD BOY!
LOONEY TUNES
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

On the Rocks School of Bartending
• Become a certified bartender in a weekend
• The course is held on campus
• Anyone 18+ may bartend in New England
• Bartending is a great summer job
Call us toll free at 866-MIX-5600 for more information or to register.
www.otrbartending.com

Clip & Curl
665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
SPRING FLING!
One hour massages or Aveda facials regularly $50
NOW $45
Sunkiss your hair before you even leave!
Highlighting starting at $40
$5 off with this ad!
Tips and Toes Package
Spa Manicure & Pedicure
Regularly $52
NOW $45
We use Aveda and Paul Mitchell products
Expires 3/31/04

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Another call for baby safe haven legislation

As former University of Massachusetts student Jennifer Paluseo pleaded guilty to charges of involuntary manslaughter and removing or conveying a dead body in Hampshire Superior Court last week, a two-year-old wound for many at the University was ripped open, and all the original questions remain.

At this point, most know the details. Paluseo, 21, killed her newborn infant in a James Hall dormitory bathroom, disposing of the body in a trashcan. Originally charged with murder, Paluseo pleaded guilty to the lesser charges and faces sentencing on March 31. She could be sentenced to as many as nine years in state prison.

What many people new to the University in the last two years do not know, however, is the debate the infant's death sparked on campus, and the opinion that many people on campus, including members at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, expressed at the time.

While the issue has quieted down over the last two years, the facts remain the same: Massachusetts needs baby safe haven laws.

As baby safe haven legislation comes up again for vote in the Massachusetts State House of Representatives on Wednesday, the state remains one of only eight that has no baby safe haven law in place.

The laws designate safe places for people to drop off unwanted babies with no questions asked, with one common goal in mind — saving lives.

The laws are not without flaw. Critics say the laws make it too easy for women to avoid the responsibility that goes with giving birth, and that safe haven laws enacted in other states already have not proven themselves to be able to fix child abandonment in our society.

The alternative, however, is frightening. The Collegian firmly believes implementing safe haven laws can do little but good for our state, and hopefully, can prevent tragedy in the future.

While we can only speculate if the life of Jennifer Paluseo and her infant would be any different now had there been another option, the fact that the number of babies who have been found dead in other states has declined speaks for itself. Baby safe haven laws do not always work, but if their implementation saves the life of even one innocent unwanted newborn, we believe the legislation has already exceeded any costs it may have.

— Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board

The questionable duties of RAs

Morris Singer

Well, friends, the University Babysitters are upset. They've reacted in a myriad of poor ways, but the one thing that is clear is that they are all distraught.

For those of you who don't remember, or are just joining the storyline, I suggested in my last column that the University of Massachusetts has a full-time babysitting program consisting of what they call residential assistants. These RAs, or babysitters, have a primary objective of assisting the University in keeping tabs on students through documentation and judicial proceedings. I also suggested that these RAs disguise their purpose by reportedly assisting the students — a lie that the University Babysitters have developed to make their presence more palatable to the residents.

This fake purpose is accompanied by an entire bureaucratic system of terminology and procedure. But the fake names aside, this is something that all of us are familiar with from our childhood because the University Babysitters use much the same processes that we experienced in our younger days. I'd like to take a minute to explain the process our babysitters today use. I'll be using our fictional friend from my last column, Nashville, to demonstrate my point.

Nashville has a system of rules. It's just like when we were five years old, and when our parents brought the babysitter over to the house; we had to be good. There were certain things we couldn't get away with doing. In those days, this system was just called "rules."

But the University Babysitters have come up with a more important term. To boost their apparent importance, the sitters now call it the "Code of Student Conduct." Unlike the simple system of rules that we all knew from childhood, this system is rather complex, and most of the students, I believe, don't know more than a sentence from it. Nashville loves the Code of Student Conduct because this is how he exercises the control over his residents.

I remember when I was young, if the babysitter was over and I misbehaved, the sitter would say something along the lines of, "I'll give you a bad report." I'm sure some variation of this situation applies to almost all of us. If we weren't good, the babysitters told our parents. Today this system is called write-ups.

This part of the system as well is much more complicated than the way it used to be. When we were little, our babysitters gave oral reports to our parents. Now, our babysitters must file official "witness reports." This is Nashville's favorite part. It must be, because he does it so often.

Our parents would get upset with us when we were bad to our babysitters. They would talk to us about what we did. Usually they'd take the side of the babysitter because in their minds, the babysitters usually were more credible.

For nearly everything our parents would do, our University, which serves as our new parents, has its analogous punishment.

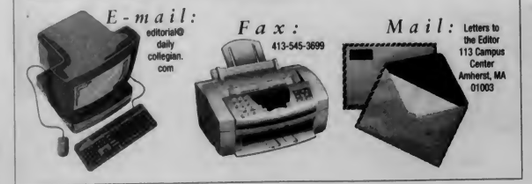
The same is true for the University Babysitters. While our parents didn't even have a name for this part of the process, the University calls it the "judicial process." This impressive name refers to the time in which we can appeal to a higher authority. In our younger days, we could just say, "Mommy, I didn't do it." Perhaps this would work better today than the logical, well-reasoned arguments that tend to get students nowhere in judicial process.

One Resident Director even said to me: "This isn't a process based on truth." Unlike in the real world, where one must prove beyond a shadow of a doubt, the University Babysitters must only prove that it is more likely than not that a situation occurred.

Our parents would then punish us. The university calls this "sanctions." Our parents would reprimand us. The university issues a "university reprimand." Our parents would ground us. The university "suspends" us. Our parents would take away our allowance. The university "fines" us. For nearly everything our parents would do, our university, which serves as our new parents, has its analogous punishment.

Sometimes, in my family, we had to discuss matters as a whole. When the University Babysitter facilitates this discussion, it is called a "floor meeting." Nashville, being a complete social recluse, is very bad at these, and averages only one a semester. Nashville and the University Babysitters don't like to communicate with their residents. It isn't as fun as writing them up.

I should acknowledge that, sometimes, we did fun things with our babysitters too. We all had our favorite ones, who would take us to Friendly's for a Happy Ending or would push our swings on the playground. Some of the better RAs at our University have fun with us too. Some of them organize times known as "social events." But most are like Nashville, and do next to nothing. Most of our RAs don't lift a finger when it comes to making the living environment a positive place, but, like Nashville, are all but overzealous when it comes to giving a slap on the wrist. If you have a good RA, you are fortunate.



In my last column, I may have generalized a little too much. I know some good RAs out there with whom, like with my favorite babysitter, I enjoy spending time. But Nashville's brand of babysitter is evil. I can only hope that our newfound University parents do a better job hiring babysitters for us in the future.

To all the good RAs out there, you are my favorite sitters — and I mean that in the most affectionate of ways. To all the Nashvilles, I can only hope the University finds someone to babysit you.

Morris Singer is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be no longer than 450 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

Safety before vanity

Erika Lovley

It couldn't have been a better day. Jenn, a 25-year-old assistant grocery manager at the local store, had just received the news that she was pregnant.

She was overjoyed. The entire store's staff surprised her later that night at her apartment to congratulate her and her new husband Bill. The two began immediately planning for the family that they had dreamed of since their high school graduation. But upon a visit to the doctor, the couple received devastating news. Due to the side effects of her acne prescription medication, Jenn's baby had a nearly 30 percent chance of being born with birth defects. Torn between keeping their first child and unwilling to bring a hindered child into the world, the couple chose to terminate the pregnancy early on, devastating them both, and throwing Jenn into a state of depression. Two years later, Jenn and Bill have yet to have their family. Jenn cannot seem to get pregnant, a possible side effect of her abortion.

With the wide variety of prescription drugs on the market today, just about anything seems curable with the pop of a pill. New medications are appearing on the market by the minute, designed to cure any arrange of ailments from depression to stress-related anxiety.

However, some of the new drugs seem to be doing more harm than good. The prescription of the drug called Accutane has been at the heart of this dilemma for over 20 years. Accutane is a powerful drug designed to treat severe nodular cystic acne, which can eventually be disfiguring. While it may seem like a positive treatment, Accutane has been linked to over 2,000 birth defects per year, according to the Food and Drug Administration. Deformities have included such atrocities as missing limbs, missing ears, lack of vital internal organs, and severe mental retardation.

According to The Boston Globe, last Friday the federal advisory council to the FDA recommended that the administration strengthen restrictions on Accutane, making it harder for women who are pregnant to take the drug. The FDA reported that pregnant women taking Accutane have a 28 percent chance of giving birth to a child with defects. 50 percent of those babies will have mental defects and 25 percent will have deformities, according to the Public Citizen.

Currently, the SMART program, a watchdog program designed to protect women from becoming pregnant while on Accutane, provides women with counseling and education sessions on birth defects, two forms of birth control, and monthly pregnancy testing. Women who will not take birth control vow to abstain from sex.

The only way the FDA can solve the Accutane problem is by pulling Accutane from the market entirely.

However, the numbers of birth defects are not falling, probably because the SMART program is voluntary, intensifying the push of the federal advisory council to make the program mandatory.

Why stop there?

The Health Research Group of Public Citizen had a more feasible plan, suggesting that Accutane be restricted to only patients who had not responded to any other forms of treatment. Even Hoffmann-La Roche, a division of Accutane's producer, tried almost two years ago to impose restrictions that would prevent pregnant women from being able to take the drug; however, the motion failed.

The drug has clearly proven itself to be not only dangerous, but life-altering. In 2002, 79 percent of the women who became pregnant, fearing birth defects, elected to have abortions. Moreover, Accutane has been linked to over 200 suicides since 1982, according to Actioday.org. In many of the suicides, the victim shows no signs of depression or suicidal thought. Experts have suggested that the urge to kill one's self probably arises so quickly that the victim becomes overwhelmed and loses all sense of reason, until it is too late.

Rep. Bart Stupak (D-Mich.) is ready to suggest new legislation that will require women using Accutane to be entered into the monitoring system. Stupak lost his son to suicide caused by Accutane in 2000. "How many babies have to be born with serious defects, how many more women need to have miscarriages, and how many more children have to die before the FDA implements meaningful protections and restriction on the use of Accutane?" he asked.

Although Stupak seems to have the right idea, the demand for the drug is high enough that restrictions have been hard to impose. Accutane has not only been prescribed for the severe acne it was designed to treat, but for less severe acne problems that are not disfiguring and could be treated with over-the-counter products. The demand seems to be for a more aesthetic need than a wellness need.

I cannot say that I have ever suffered from severe acne. However, most acne is not a life-threatening or physically-restricting problem. Where do we draw the lines between vanity and our own well-being?

Why are women, in an attempt to achieve something closer to that false idea of beauty society holds, risking the lives of their unborn children? Even if the SMART system becomes mandatory, no amount of watchdog monitoring can ensure that women will take their birth control, abstain from sex, or even worry about giving birth to a child with birth defects.

The only way the FDA can solve the Accutane problem is by pulling Accutane from the market entirely. Although it may help treat severe acne, Accutane poses a serious threat to the lives of not only its users, but the users' unborn children as well.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian columnist.

And the joke played on

Mark Ostroff

It's been over a year since I wrote my last column on the commission that was supposed to investigate the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. And even then, I thought the whole thing was some kind of a sick joke. You had Dick Cheney proclaiming that those who asked too many questions were "unpatriotic," and worse, you had President Bush thinking that the American public would be stupid enough to settle for that as an answer to 3000 people dead.

Unfortunately, all the made-in-China flags and sweatshop "God Bless America" T-shirts that Sept. 11 profiteers gorged the public with were still no match for the "unpatriotic" demand for the truth. And eventually Bush put on his "hero-of-the-people" face, gave into pressure, and set up a commission to investigate what rationally should have been investigated since the day it happened.

This commission, of course, was not meant for anything more than public appeasement; it was never supposed to be taken seriously. Not by Bush anyway. The investigation into Sept. 11 is yet another red herring to the truth that Bush and his White House cronies are obviously trying to hide. In fact, I'm going to go even further and say that this whole thing is a setup — a cheap scam to wire shut the mouth of rationality.

From the start, Bush's vision of this investigation was one of two things: either the concoction of a blithering idiot or an intricately planned scheme, solely designed to collapse in on itself.

To show you how concerned Bush was with investigating 9-11, he had actually given this commission less time and even less money than what Ken Starr had spent to investigate Monica's Lewinsky's sex life. According to CNN, the Bush administration had allotted $14 million dollars for the "independent" commission. (The original budget was only $3 million!) Starr, on the other hand, had spent over $40 million in his vendetta toward Bill Clinton. Basically, more priority was put into a stained dress than was put into four hijacked planes and thousands dead. I said it before and I'll say it again: I've seen car accidents with longer investigations than 9-11.

To really make sure the investigation would be sanitized, Bush picked a commission that was full of conflicts of interest. Either that or it's a ridiculous coincidence that over half of the commissioners represent airline companies, some of which were involved in the hijackings. Last March, CBS news reported that "at least six [out of 10 commissioners] represent the very companies they're now investigating." And if you think that such conflicts of interest are bad enough, just keep on reading. Let's take a look at who's in charge of this "investigation."

After Henry Kissinger steps down as head of the commission due to – what a surprise – a conflict of interest, Thomas Kean, former governor of New Jersey, takes the helm. Both Kean and Bush have something in common: they have both been in business with Khalid bin Mafhouz, the brother-in-law of Osama bin Laden. That's right: John Ashcroft can arbitrarily arrest anyone he wants for associating with Al Qaida, not even requiring evidence, but it's totally kosher to have a guy with two degrees of separation from Public Enemy No. 1 on the panel.

And just when you think this was enough to really screw things up, our crafty little cadres in the White House actually had the foresight to even plan in the event of these guys actually taking their jobs seriously. Such an unfortunate development for the Bush Administration had left them with its final contingency plan: stonewall like you've never stonewalled before. Control the clock until a win is imminent.

According to the New York Daily News, one commissioner is already threatening to step down. The commission was lucky enough to have an extension until late July to pour through literally "millions of pages, from 16 government agencies," reports CBS. Nevertheless, former Sen. Bob Kerrey (D-Neb) told reporters this week, "I am no longer ... feeling comfortable that I'm going to be able to read and process what I need in order to participate in writing a report about how it was that 19 men defeated every single defensive system the U.S. put up to kill 3,000 Americans on Sept. 11."

In order to keep the mainstream media off his back, Bush did make some token moves as a show of good (but not good enough) intentions. News24.com reports that that the administration had allowed only three commissioners to read Bush and Clinton's CIA briefings on the days leading up to the attacks. Other commissioners were barred from even looking at the notes taken by the three.

From the start, Bush's vision of this investigation was one of two things: either the concoction of a blithering idiot or an intricately planned scheme, solely designed to collapse in on itself. Either way, this investigation has been going nowhere fast.

So where does this joke go from here? Come late July, this investigation will come to a close. And with that, documents, testimonies, and any other relevant paths to the truth about the most tragic day in modern American history, will be put exactly where Bush wants them to go.

Many will be lost in the incessant buzzing of paper shredders in government basements, while others go under the lock and key of the government's most secured secrets — parts of American history better left unsaid.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Opeth pleases fans at the Palladium

By David Fonseca
Collegian Staff

The Worcester Palladium was graced by the presence of Moonspell, DevilDriver and Opeth Saturday evening. The lineup was as diverse in terms of the genre of music played by each band as the countries they represent. First up was Portugal's Moonspell. The band served its role as opening act well, stirring up the crowd with its distinct brand of Viking/black/goth metal.

Opeth, DevilDriver, and Moonspell
Palladium
Worcester
Sat. Feb 29

The set opened with "In and Above Men," a stand-out track from the band's latest release "The Antidote." Moonspell's front man Fernando Rebeiro also engaged in some humorous — unintentionally I'm sure — stage antics. These included the waving around of a giant walking stick with a skull on top and later invoking the crowd to raise the devil horns in praise of Satan. Other non-humorous highlights included the songs "Alma Matter" and the truly epic set closer "Full Moon Madness." All and all it was an enjoyable, if slightly cheesy performance from Moonspell.

Next up was DevilDriver, the metal-core project fronted by former Coal Chamber singer Dez Ferara. There's not much one can say about DevilDriver that hasn't been said about the hundreds of other metal-core acts that seem to be rising to prominence these days.

The band plays a very straightforward groove /thrash that may gain some points with a few people for its sheer aggressiveness but earns none in this reviewer's book due to its complete lack of originality or technicality. Considering the amount of superior bands like Lamb of God, Chimaira, and Unearth playing this style of music, I can't imagine why anyone would want to invest their time in a band like DevilDriver.

However, I will the give the band credit for showing up and play-

See OPETH on page 6

Bassist Martin Mendez provides the pulse that keeps Opeth's going.

Honoring a great woman

Celebrating the life of June Jordan

By Monique Jemmott
Collegian Correspondent

This past weekend the University of Massachusetts was transformed into the backdrop for a celebration — a celebration of the life work, and legacy of one of the most influential literary and activist voices of our time. The event was a two-day conference entitled "A Revolutionary Convening: The Vision of June Jordan," organized by the University of Massachusetts Women's Studies program, the Office of ALANA Affairs, the Five-College Lecture Fund and various other organizations. It began with an opening ceremony that brought various members, activists, and students in the Valley to the Student Union Ballroom to hear the keynote address delivered by activist, poet, and professor Sonia Sanchez.

June Jordan Conference
Student Union Ballroom
UMass
Feb 28, 2004

"When we answer what it is to be human, we will know what it means to become human, and then we will know what it is not to start wars and not to kill people, and to protect this earth and all of us. June Jordan attempted to answer this in her lifetime."

These were the words that Sanchez opened with on Friday night. She conveyed to a full audience Jordan's compassion, strength, beliefs, humor, fears and anger through the reading of poems by Jordan as well as her own. Barely 5-foot-2, she delivered her message sitting at a table on the stage instead of standing behind a podium. Despite all of this, her words conveyed an empowering message that was larger that life. The selections ranged in topic from sexuality, to a poem about slave abolitionist Sojourner Truth. "I chose to read particular poems so you can see that [Jordan] was always on time" Sanchez said. "She didn't wait to write, she wrote poems right on time when things were happening ... sister June Jordan was a distinguished poet, and wonderful woman."

Poet Sonia Sanchez gave the key-note address that opened the weekend celebration.

In addition to paying tribute to Jordan, Sanchez also used the time to address the importance of voting, and the role of resistance as a tool of activism. She quoted Jordan, as she spoke about resistance, saying "a few men are not the enemy, a whole system is." She encouraged listeners to except the challenge of what it means to resist.

"Can you resist 41 bullets? Can you resist war? Can you resist crack? Can you resist violence and beating up on each other?" she said.

She also conveyed her thoughts on the war and anti-activist sentiment from the government. "These are dangerous times, we are under attack in this country," she expressed. "If you young people don't do anything else at this place called the University of Massachusetts, you must vote. Let your voices be heard."

The conference events for the following day included panels and workshops centered on issues often addressed by the work of Jordan. Panels included "Art and Politics, and Revolutionary Pedagogy." Also on Saturday was a screening of Pratibha Parmar's "A Place of Rage." The conference was concluded with a performance of music and literary works featuring Project 2050, Magdalena Gomez, Poetry For the People and Sonia Sanchez.

"There has been so much hard work from so many people to make this event happen," said Arlene Ovarian, director of the women's studies program, and one of the primary organizers of the event. "The memorial for June two years ago made us realize the impact she and her work had on many of the students here, there was such a big turnout. Her activism and poetry has provided a lot on inspiration for us during such politically hard time.

"Sonia was a natural for the keynote," she added. "They are from the same generation, and they are both poets and activists. Sisters in arms."

When asked about what she and the organizers hoped to achieve from the conference, Ovarian responded, "we hope to spark much intergenerational dialogue. On one panel we have a young woman who is 16, on the same panel as a woman who is 80. This is what June Jordan's life and work was about, activism making a difference. These are the types of connections we want to see play out. When we all work together, nothing but good can come out it."

Poet and political activist June Jordan lived a life that we still honor today.

Lord of the Oscars

76th Academy Awards taken by final addition to fantasy film epic

By David Germain
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" won a record-tying 11 Academy Awards on Sunday, including best picture and director and became the first fantasy to win the top Oscar.

In the acting categories, all the winners took home their first Oscars: Charlize Theron won best actress for her transformative performance as serial killer Aileen Wuornos in "Monster," and Sean Penn was named best actor for playing a vengeful ex-hoodlum who falls back on his criminal ways in "Mystic River."

Tim Robbins won the supporting-actor prize for his performance as an emotionally crippled murder suspect in "Mystic River," and Renee Zellweger took supporting actress as a hardy Confederate survivor in "Cold Mountain."

After the first two installments of the "Lord of the Rings" trilogy were shut out of major awards, "Return of the King" swept all 11 categories in which it was nominated. It matched the record 11 wins of "Titanic" and "Ben-Hur" and became only the third movie to sweep every nominated category, following "Gigi" and "The Last Emperor," which both went nine-for-nine.

"I especially just lastly want to thank our wonderful cast who just got their tongues around this rather awkward text and made it come to life with such devotion and passion and heart," said "Lord of the Rings" director Peter Jackson, who shared the screenplay prize with co-writers Philippa Boyens and Fran Walsh.

Composer Howard Shore took his second Oscar for writing "Lord of the Rings" music, having won two years ago on Part 1 of the saga, "The Fellowship of the Ring."

"Into the West," the wistful tune of farewell from "Return of the King," won the best-song Oscar. The song was written by Fran Walsh, the film's co-screenwriter; Howard Shore, its music composer; and Annie Lennox, who sings the tune.

Zellweger won for playing a character in frumpy clothes and a layer of dirt from working the fields, a year after "Cold Mountain" co-star Nicole Kidman received the lead-actress Oscar for wearing a fake nose to simulate Virginia Woolf's plain-Jane features in "The Hours." And best-actress winner Theron, in "Monster," gained 30 pounds and was disguised behind dark contact lenses, false teeth and splotchy makeup.

"I hope it's a trend, meaning interesting parts playing women who are multifaceted and really rich in their journeys. It's what interests me most," Zellweger said backstage. "The more you can change yourself, the more removed the character is from your own experiences, the more rewarding it is."

Robbins won with his first-ever acting nomination, though he had been nominated as best director for 1995's "Dead Man Walking."

"In this movie, I play a victim of abuse and violence," Robbins said. "If you are out there and are a person who has had that tragedy befall you, there is no shame in seeking help and counseling."

Sofia Coppola won the original-screenplay prize for her quirky tale of friendship in Tokyo, "Lost in Translation."

French-Canadian filmmaker Denys Arcand's "The Barbarian Invasions," an alternately merry and melancholy story of a dying man's reunion with his estranged son, won the foreign-language honor.

The $340 million blockbuster "Finding Nemo," the story of a clownfish on a mission to rescue his wayward son from a dentist's aquarium, earned the Oscar for animated feature.

"I'm going to be forever grateful to the cast and crew of Finding Nemo for giving their incomparable talents to this little fish story I had," said Andrew Stanton, director of "Finding Nemo," the latest film from the makers of "Monsters, Inc." and the "Toy Story" flicks.

Director Errol Morris' "The Fog of War" — a portrait of Robert McNamara, U.S. defense secretary for much of the Vietnam War — won the Oscar for feature-length documentary. Morris compared U.S. military action overseas today with the Vietnam era.

"Forty years ago, this country went down a rabbit hole in Vietnam — millions died," Morris said. "I fear we're going down the rabbit hole once again."

Filmmaker Blake Edwards received an honorary Oscar for lifetime achievement. The ceremony included a spirited montage of clips from Edwards' films, including "The Pink Panther," "Breakfast at Tiffany's" and "Victor/Victoria."

Edwards said: "My mother thanks you, my father thanks you, and the beautiful English broad with the incomparable soprano and promiscuous vocabulary thanks you," the latter a reference to his wife and frequent star, Julie Andrews.

Billy Crystal, returning as host for the first time in four years, opened with his usual montage of nominees, having himself inserted into spoofs of key Oscar contenders, including Diane Keaton's screeching nude scene in "Something's Gotta Give."

He joked that for the first time, the show was being simulcast in Aramaic, a poke at "The Passion of the Christ," Mel Gibson's divisive religious film that took in $117.5 million in its first five days. The movie was done in Aramaic and Latin, with English subtitles.

Crystal said that the first time he hosted the Oscars 13 years ago, things were different from today. "Bush was president, the economy was tanking and we'd just finished a war with Iraq."

With all the awards for "Return of the King," produced in New Zealand, Crystal joked: "It's now official. There is nobody left in New Zealand to thank."

The Oscars returned to full-glamour mode after two years in which Hollywood's prom night was muted by world events — the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks in 2002 and the Iraq war in 2003.

With the passage of time, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences figured it was safe to make merry again for the 76th annual Oscars.

"Return of the King," the closing chapter of Jackson's epic adapt-

See OSCARS on page 6

COURTESY WARNER BROTHERS

Sean Penn took home Best Male Actor in a Leading Role for his part in "Mystic River."

COURTESY MIRAMAX

For her performance in "Cold Mountain" Renee Zellweger earned Best Supporting Actress.

COURTESY NEWSMAKERS

Charlize Theron won Best Actress for "Monster."

the source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondayMarch1

BOOKS

The Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley will host Jay Neugeboren, Author and former University of Massachusetts professor of English. Neugeboren will be discussion his latest work entitled, "Open Heart: A Patient's Story of Life-Saving Medicine and Life-Giving Friendship." The discussion will begin at 7 p.m. at the Odyssey Bookshop.

MUSIC

Karaikudi S. Subramanian will be featured in a concert of the improvisations and song of South India's classical musical tradition. The concert will be held in the Earle Recital Hall in Sage Hall on the Smith campus. David Nelson on the mriddangam, a type of drum will accompany Dr. Subramanian. The performance begins at 8 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

Dr. Subramanian is the eighth generation of his family to play this traditional music. Under the tutelage of his great-uncle, Karaikudi Sambasiva Iyer he mastered the art and has gone on to tour across Europe and the United States.

MUSIC

"Project AIR," a collaborative art endeavor taken on by four artists, will be held at Smith College through March 5. The four local artists work in varying media and will be creating works in full public view through out the duration of the event. They will work from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. in rooms 103 and 104 of the Campus Center.

The event is a joint effort between Smith's art department and the Berwick Research Institute's Artist in Research (AIR) program. The artists participating in the event include John Osorio-Buck, Christy Geog, Jessica Ryan and Meg Rotzel.

TuesdayMarch2

PERFORMANCE

The UMass Theater will perform Shakespearean romantic comedy, "All's Well That Ends Well." This classic satirical love story is given new life by the UMass Theater group and it is a fresh take on the timeless story. There will be performances of "All's Well That Ends Well" from March 2-6 all beginning at 8 p.m. All performances will take place in the Curtain Theater on the UMass campus. Tickets are on sale through the Fine Arts Center Box Office for $5 and $10.

ART

The Student Union Art Gallery of the University of Massachusetts will exhibit the work of Tony Deni. Deni's collection of paintings is entitled "Context Sesitivities." There will be an opening reception held from 4-6 p.m. in the Student Union Gallery. It is free and open to the public and refreshments will be provided.

This exhibit will be open to the public through March 5. The Student Union Gallery is located in the UMass Student Union, across the hall from Earthfoods.

WednesdayMarch3

PERFORMANCE

The Amherst College Theater and Dance group will perform "Hedda Gabler" in the Holde Theater. Directed by Eric Vennemeyer, the play tells the story of a woman who has lived a superficially satisfying life, but is suffocating in her boredom. To escape her mundane life Gabler delves into fanciful imaginings.

The performance is fee of charge, but seats are limited. To reserve tickets call the Holden Theater box office at 413-542-2277.

BOOKS

Acclaimed thriller novelist Joseph Finder will read from his new novel, "Paranoia" at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley. The reading will begin at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

PERFORMANCE

The Salzburg Marionette Theater will perform a set of shows at the Bowker Auditorium. On March 3, they will be performing their signature piece, Mozart's "The Magic Flute." Stemming from nearly a century of expertise, these wooden performers take on a symbolic meaning that is greater than just a bunch of swaying marionettes. On March 4, they will perform the popular "Barber of Seville" by Rossini.

Both performances begin at 7:30 p.m. The Tickets are on sale through the Bowker Auditorium box office for $15 and $30 by calling 1-800-999-UMAS or 1-413-545-2511.

ThursdayMarch4

PERFORMANCE

Helene Cixous' "Portrait of Dora" set to be performed at Mount Holyoke College. The story based on a famous of psychoanalysis is set in 1900 Vienna and follows her Freudian therapy sessions. The play depicts Dora as a character who is in need of mental and emotional reassembling. It looks at the sometimes-damaging power of science on the human being as Dora recovers from being "cured" of her "hysteria."

Show starts at 8 p.m. in the Rooke Theater. Tickets will be available at the door and are $3 and $5.

PERFORMANCE

Dance-O-Matic will perform their convention-defying dance performance at Mount Holyoke College's Kendall Studio Theater. With their scant clothing outfits and extraordinary fluidity and flexibility Dance-O-Matic are known across the United States as a unique and exhilarating group of performers.

The performance begins at 8 p.m. and tickets are on sale through the Fine Arts Center box office by calling 1-800-999-UMAS or logging on to resarts.com.

ART

Gallery A3 of Amherst is holding their first ever-invitational exhibition. They will be featuring the works of five artists, including Ric Campman, Karen Dolmanisth, Julie Lapping Rivera, John Willis, and Deborah B. Wojcik. Gallery A3 is presenting this invitation as a part of the "Gallery Walk," an event that takes place every first Thursday of the month and encompasses all of the art galleries located in downtown Amherst.

The event is free and open to the public and runs from 5 to 8 p.m.

FridayMarch5

ART

The Hampden Gallery, located in the Southwest Residential Area of UMass, will hold a reception for Sam van Aken's "Hybrids." This will be a closing event for the exhibit that has been on display since late January. The event is free and open to the public. Attendees will be given a chance to meet and talk with the artists about his unique creations of fused wax fruits that run the range from interesting to the flat out startling. The reception will begin at 4 p.m.

SaturdayMarch6

EXHIBITION

The Annual Spring Bulb Show returns to Smith College. An array of crocuses, hyacinths, narcissi, irises, lilies and tulips will adorn the Church Exhibition Gallery as spring makes an advanced appearance in Northampton. Noted horticulturist Lauren Springer will be the keynote speaker for the opening evening. The show will run through March 21.

The event is free and open to the public daily from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Groups larger than ten are requested to call 413-585-2740 in advance to assure space.

weekly pinup

A CARAVAN ON AN ODD TRACK

T-Model Ford and the rest of The Fat Possum Juke Joint Caravan will perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall today. Doors open at 7 p.m. and tickets are on sale at the Iron Horse box office for $15 and $18 at the door.

A toast to the best of film

OSCARS from page 5

ed from J.R.R. Tolkien's Middle-Earth saga, dominated earlier Hollywood awards.

The best-picture win was the first ever for the fantasy genre, generally overlooked by Oscar voters who favor heavy drama over otherworldly stories. Only a handful of fantasy or science-fiction tales have earned best-picture nominations, among them "The Wizard of Oz," "Star Wars," "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial" and the first two "Lord of the Rings" installments. "The Fellowship of the Ring" and "The Two Towers."

While "Return of the King" scooped up technical awards, it was shut out in the acting categories, which the film's Oscar-winning costume designers lamented backstage.

"It's a sad day they haven't been recognized, but they do know themselves they have done a beautiful performance that people will cherish for generations potentially," said Richard Taylor, who shared the costume-design Oscar with Ngila Dickson.

Eleanor Bateman
Scholar in Residence

Winter 2004

R. Perry Harris, III '61
Founder and President of Sterling Resort Group

Public Lecture
Entrepreneurship...
One man's story of success and failure on a profitable business journey.

Wednesday, March 3

Memorial Hall - 4:30 – 5:30 p.m.

Reception to follow - Memorial Hall

Free to Public

Organized by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Three times the rock in Worcester

Opeth, Moonspell and DevilDriver prove to be a true triple-threat

OPETH from page 5

ing with so much energy when it was quite clear that a majority of the audience saw them as nothing more than the band that was taking time away from Opeth.

Finally the band everyone was waiting for hit the stage at around 11:15 p.m. I arrived at the venue around 7:00 p.m. and I all I can say is that seeing Mikael Akerfeldt and company walk on stage was more than worth the wait. Much like the band's albums everything about their set was presented with the utmost of professionalism and class. The set opened with one of the heavier tracks from 2002's "Deliverance," "Master's Apprentices." Opeth then continued to pummel the crowd with their refined from of progressive metal with Drapery Falls, and crowd favorite "The Moor" off of 1999's "Still Life." The band then slowed things down with two tracks off of their latest album, the acoustic-driven "Damnation."

The crowd was more than grateful for the break. Considering the fact that the average song on Saturday night's set clocked in at about 11 minutes, a little break from the head-banging is always appreciated. However, the respite was short lived; after giving the crowd a chance to chill out and sing along to "Windowpane" and "In My Time of Need" the band kicked things into warp speed with "April Ethereal," inciting the single largest mosh pits I have ever witnessed at the Palladium. The band followed with another track from Deliverance and the title track from their 2001 breakout album "Black-Water Park." The band also indulged the crowd with an the perennial encore, "Demon of the Fall," off of "My Arms Your Hearse."

In addition to providing the crowd with a wonderful set-list, Opeth lead singer and guitarist Akerfeldt was also extremely engaging between songs. The soft-spoken frontman poked fun at aging rocker Ronnie James Dio and repeatedly threatened to break into Black Sabbath's "Paranoid" if the crowd's singing was not up to his liking. He also broke that sad news to the crowd that we would not be seeing them for quite some time. The band has been on tour since late 2002 and will be taking some time off to record a new album. Akerfeldt then joked with the audience "Well, we could just record a shit album and be back in two weeks!" Despite how long we may have to wait for new material, those who were in attendance Saturday night received more than enough entertainment to hold them over for quite some time.

Guitarist/Vocalist Mikael Akerfeldt leads Opeth.

UMass Campus Recreation

Get Those Forms In By:
Softball (M/W/C).....3/8
Co-rec Soccer.....3/8
Volleyball Special.....3/9

Officials Needed:
Softball Clinics.....3/22, 3/24, 3/25
Co-rec Soccer Clinics.....3/23, 3/24, 3/25
Volleyball Special.....3/23

Call for clinic attendance requirements, times and locations
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
• The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
• The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
• Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

STSTRAVEL.COM
Jamaica
Spring Break 2004
Last Minute Discounts
STS Student Travel Services
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

It's still not too late to write for the Arts and Living Section! Come down to the Campus Center basement today!

Tiger has no Love

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) — Tiger Woods simply has no match.

Spraying his tee shots all over the course, Woods went 25 holes before he finally took the lead Sunday, then roared past Davis Love III with key putts to win the Match Play Championship for the second straight year, 3 and 2.

"I was in quite a few places where I was in trouble," Woods said. "The good ol' flat stick is the great equalizer."

Woods won for the 40th time on the PGA Tour in just his 149th start, the quickest anyone has reached that milestone. Jack Nicklaus played 221 events before he won his 40th tournament.

Woods earned $1.2 million, the biggest prize to date on the PGA Tour, and reminded everyone who's No. 1 in the world — and who's the best when the world gets together.

He won for the eighth time in the 14 official World Golf Championships he has played.

Even more impressive is his back-to-back victories in the Accenture Match Play Championship, the most unpredictable format in golf because of the five 18-hole matches required to get to the finals.

Woods thrives on this format.

"Right from the first tee, it's eyeball-to-eyeball," he said. "That to me is a great rush."

His amateur record was among the best ever — three straight U.S. Junior Amateurs, followed by three straight U.S. Amateur titles. His professional record is starting to catch up, now 20-3 in this event.

His game wasn't sharp Sunday, but Love helped make sure that wasn't a factor by missing a half-dozen putts inside 10 feet and failing to answer once Woods finally took the lead.

"He was missing fairways the first 18 holes, and I let him get away with it," Love said. "I played pretty good. I just didn't have it on the greens."

He also had to deal with a heckler who let out a "Whoop!" when Love missed a par putt on the 20th hole that squared the match.

The fan started saying, "No Love!" as Love stepped to his ball on the fifth tee. He sought out the fan and said, "We're not leaving until he's out of here."

They got the fan out of there — and it wasn't long before Woods took Love out of the match.

Woods wasn't nearly dominant as last year, when he needed only 112 holes over five days.

He couldn't find a fairway in the morning session and was lucky to be only one down after the first 18 holes. Woods had to save par from behind the first green when the afternoon session began, squared the match when Love missed the second green and made bogey, and then it was a matter of who would take control.

The odds were on Woods, although no one could have guessed it would happen on No. 7.

Woods shoved another drive into the deep rough, behind two trees with a small gap between the branches. Woods took a mighty swing with a wedge from 158 yards and didn't see the ball until it dropped behind the flag, stopping 12 feet away against the fringe.

Caddie Steve Williams reached out to take the club, and Woods gave him a fist-tap, removed his cap, then closed his eyes and exhaled as he slowly placed the cap back on his head.

The birdie gave him a 1-up lead, and Woods found an extra gear. After another drive into the right rough on the par-5 eighth, he laid up and punched his third shot into 4 feet for birdie to win another hole, then seized control for good on the ninth when Love found the rough and made bogey.

Love missed several chances in the morning, none more crucial than a 5-foot birdie putt on the par-5 11th at a time he was poised to take a 3-up lead.

His last opportunity came on the same hole in the afternoon.

Love had a 4-foot birdie putt to cut the deficit to 2 up, and was stunned when it rolled around the rim of the cup. He failed to apply any pressure the rest of the way, and Woods closed him out on the 16th hole.

"He's tough to beat once he gets ahead," Love said.

Love knows that as well as anyone. It was the fourth time he has finished runner-up to Woods, and he is now 0-3 in match play. That includes the semifinals of the 2000 Match Play Championship, the '99 Grand Slam of Golf.

Still, he's never had a chance as good as this one.

Woods hit only two fairways on the front nine in the morning session, and Love twice made birdies outside of him, including the 10th hole for a 2-up lead.

Freeman lights up Bonnies at Mullins

BASKETBALL from page 10

1994 NCAA tournament game. His 18 rebounds also established a new Mullins Center record.

"Freeman was too much to handle," St. Bonaventure coach Anthony Solomon said. "If ever there was a day with an inside presence, UMass had it today."

The Bonnies, who dropped their 10th straight, were also led by an outstanding individual performance, as senior guard Marques Green went for 33 points, including eight 3-pointers, while playing all 40 minutes.

"Don't get me wrong, Green is a great player," Steve Lappas said. "But he shot 11 for 26, and Rashaun shot 14 for 19. I'll take the 14 for 19."

UMass also received solid contributions from freshman guards Art Bowers (13 points and a career-high nine assists) and Maurice Maxwell (10 points), as well as Viggiano, who chipped in with 14 points.

Maurice Young also contributed 14 points for SBU.

The Minutemen were able to seal the game from the free throw line down the stretch, after the Bonnies pulled within four with less than five minutes remaining. Maxwell converted a 3-point play to push the lead to 68-6, with 4:23 remaining. From there, SBU never got closer than five as UMass hit seven of 10 from the line to seal the victory.

"To play like that shows what we can be at some point when we do that on a consistent basis," Lappas said of his team's effort.

The Minutemen seemed poised to turn the game into a rout in the early-going, as they jumped in front 11-2 while holding St. Bonaventure without a field goal over the first 5:09. However the Bonnies fought back, tying the score at 15 with a Patrick Lottin bucket at the 10:09 of the first half.

The lost season

McGOVERN from page 10

Big One by the same means that their arch nemesis has done year in and year out?

I'm not in any way an advocate for the way that the Bombers have gone about achieving their success. If anything, the Bronx cash cow is ruining the very essence of the sport. So when the Red Sox start playing fire with fire the truly ugly business of the game begins overshadow this usually thrilling rivalry.

I more or less expect it from the Yankees. When they got Gary Sheffield it didn't phase me, it was just George flexing his financial muscles once again. Then they got A-Rod, and it was time to give every sports anchor in America something to talk about for the next eight months.

When the Sox beefed up their already stellar pitching staff with Curt Schilling and Keith Foulke, it became imminent why John Henry voted against a salary cap last year. Sure he voted for it this season, but to me it looks like a gamble. He is looking for 2004 to be an all-or-nothing season.

If anything this corporate arm-wrestling match gives the other fans some bittersweet entertainment, it gives us a pair of front-runners to root against. It is that Laker-esque feeling that everyone got when future hall-of-famers Gary Payton and Karl Malone went to the limelight of Los Angeles, just to get a ring.

It brings out that engrained human nature to root for the underdog, which in the case of baseball this year, is anyone besides the Red Sox or the Yankees. If I see the Yankees go on a three-game skid this year, it's going to be hard to not give a little smirk.

Of course there is that whole, "but we haven't won since 1918, how aren't we underdogs?" thing, but they aren't. Any team that has two of the top five pitchers over the last decade, on top of the most explosive lineup in baseball is hardly an underdog.

Unfortunate maybe, but not an underdog.

So when next season comes and the rest of the nation watches this rivalry once again take over our television screens and newspapers, are we really watching another chapter of an age-old rivalry, or just the microcosm of what's wrong with baseball?

When the crisp October air comes to remind us that the most talented boys of summer are facing off yet again, I hope it has the same feeling. That teams with talent, within normal financial constraints, beat out those that simply bought their way to the top.

Sort of like last year.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian Columnist.

Commitment. It's mutual.

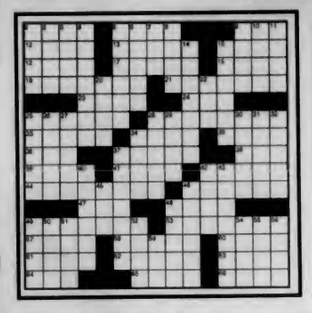
Join us and we'll make a commitment to you. A commitment to provide one of the best career experiences in the world. One that's full of opportunity, challenge, learning and support. In return, we expect a commitment from you. To perform at your best, to refuse second best, to take every opportunity we give you. It's a win-win.

ey.com/us/careers

Ernst & Young
Quality In Everything We Do

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across



1 Mountain pass info
6 Big pitcher
9 TD passers
12 Urban cruiser
13 Thief's — Lame
15 Pants and jacket
16 Tease
17 Fairy tale brother
18 Polynesian snuggle
19 Tchaikovsky brother
21 Trooper's prey
23 For the guys
24 Ga. neighbor
25 Fawning
28 Highway warning (2 wds.)
33 Frighten
34 Eqbal
36 Sport for heavyweights
37 Give the ordinary
38 Gum pellets
39 Judy Garland's daughter
41 Shakespeare play starter
42 Gets nosy
44 Grouch
46 Stick together
47 Involuntary movements
48 Pizza relative
49 Candidate
53 Former (hyph.)
57 Some nest eggs
58 Name
60 Pillsbury man, e.g.
61 S.F. transit system
62 Scoff at
63 Wagon-train puller
64 Dutiful
65 Not here
66 JFK's initials

Down

1 Singer — James
2 Grass
3 Gala
4 A, B or C
5 Border
6 Precincts
7 Gin inventor — Whitney
8 Rear-ends
9 Tobacco yield
10 Aid a whodo
11 Ages
14 Has an effect on
15 Creeps forth
20 Small change
22 Large deer
25 Rock stars, maybe
26 Wireless set
27 Southern vine
29 Wall Street deals
31 Palette color
32 Marshall's band
34 Lubricates
37 Taps
40 Monet or Jacquin
42 Ducks' haunt
43 Beats
45 Fasten temporarily
46 Tuna salad ingredient
48 Adults
49 Rubina' beaks
50 Spoken
51 Cracks figure
52 One, in Munich
54 Cash substitutes
55 Pie ingredient
56 Pay (for)
— incurred.
59 Herbal drink

© 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH

- Meatball Sub
- Chicken Fajita
- Chili Nacho Boat
- Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)
- Gardenburger (vegan)

DINNER

- Veal Parmesan
- Savory Baked Chicken
- Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan)
- Southern 6 Bean Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 42

TUESDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 35

WEDNESDAY
- High: 46
- Low: 27

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Caitlin Ott

COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Katie Dwan

PRODUCTION STAFF
Diana Mogilevsky/ Russell Silva

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Stay in your room and watch TV, you deserve some relaxation.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't complain, you could be stuck fighting in Iraq.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It is really odd to compare apples to bananas.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't be pushy, but don't back away from those shoes you want.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
There's nothing wrong with checking out a handbag and a belt.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Get ready to get wrecked.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
People from New Jersey will never be president.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You made such a long journey, and you missed your favorite person.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Remember who you are and where you're from, no matter where you are.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's ok to lose it sometimes.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't forget to vote in the primary, and it's not too late to get an absentee ballot.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Keep your room clean. It's gross to live in your own filth.

Quote for the Day

"You don't throw away a whole life just 'cause he's banged up a little."

-Seabiscuit

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N. Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Acura Integra-RS 136K Excellent, White, Detailed, 1 owner. 2,250.00 OR BO 413-502-9684

1998 Honda Civic Ex Coupe 69,000 miles. Very Good Condition $8500.00 alvarob@cs.umass.edu 413-221-8835

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Director Growing Co Looking for energetic, motivated personable phone supervisor to assist in managing sales staff Mon-Fri 5:00-8:30p.m. Must be proficient on phones to do Customer care Apt. setting No Telemarketing. $250.00 a wk. to start. Plus bonuses Call 413-253-6652

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Avg. pay: $44,000/yr. Flatbed tractor-trailer Family medical benefits Company paid pension plan www.kennedytrucking.com 1-888-922-0184 Ext.16

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst philosophydialogue.net

SERVICES

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional And Customized Offering to marketing your skills. Affordable prices, Timely Service. By Email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

TRAVEL

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/ Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

Martinez gets off to fast start in Florida

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Pedro Martinez's return to the mound was much better than his last appearance there.

The Red Sox ace threw 49 pitches Sunday — fastballs, curves and changeups — all with pinpoint control as he pitched for the first time in four and a half months. His motion was fluid and his arm felt fine in the spring training workout.

"For so long without actually touching a mound I thought it was great," Martinez said. "It was nice and loose, smooth."

His last pitch before Sunday ended in disaster. Jorge Posada's two-run bloop double in the eighth inning of Game 7 of the American League Championship Series last Oct. 16 against the Yankees tied the game 5-5.

New York won 6-5 in the 11th, and Boston manager Grady Little's decision to leave Martinez in during the eighth was widely second-guessed before Little's contract was not renewed.

Martinez, the AL ERA champion in four of the last six years, was much happier Sunday, although he wasn't facing hitters.

"I got a little bit excited today and I actually went and threw all three pitches and all three seem to be pretty comfortable," he said. "It's the first time ever that I threw breaking balls on the first time out on the mound. I normally just throw fastballs."

He plans to pitch once more off a mound then and twice against teammates in batting practice before throwing in a game. Manager Terry Francona said that first appearance should be about March 10 when the Red Sox visit the St. Louis Cardinals. Boston opens its exhibition season Thursday against the Minnesota Twins.

"I'm excited to watch him pitch," said Francona, Oakland's bench coach last season. "I like him more now that we're in the same uniform."

Dave Wallace, in his first spring as Boston's pitching coach, marveled at Martinez's mechanics.

"He pretty much has the delivery he has all the time," Wallace said. "After so many years of doing it, there's a certain precision and a timing to it and he's an incredible athlete so the coordination is just innate. The ball came out of his hand easy but firm."

Martinez had participated in two long-toss sessions and fielding practice since reporting last Tuesday. He showed up three days after the team's other pitchers because of a family medical issue.

He was 14-4 last season with a 2.22 ERA. He led the league in lowest opponents' batting average, .215, and had 206 strikeouts, one less than league leader Esteban Loaiza, even though he missed five games because of illness or injury.

"I knew I was in command of my physical shape and the way I finished the season actually told me that I was totally healed and ready to go," Martinez said.

He was 4-0 in his last five regular-season games, allowing three earned runs in 33 innings.

Although he has plenty of time to prepare for the opening game on April 4 at Baltimore, Martinez is off to a good start.

"I was actually shocked, especially throwing curveballs for strikes and not even make an effort to do it," he said. "I just hope tomorrow I'm not too sore."

Tee time

Tiger Woods admires his tee shot on the fifth hole during his 36 hole finals match against Davis Love III at the World Golf Championships Accenture Match Play Championship Sunday, in Carlsbad, Calif. Story, page 7.

Minutewomen have mixed results

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team saw what the top collegiate teams in the nation have to offer at the NFCA Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga. this weekend.

Returning as the reigning champion, the Minutewomen (4-6) were shutout by DePaul, 7-0, and Oklahoma, 9-0, on Friday, but managed to pull three wins out of their last four games including a nine-inning thriller over Ohio State, 4-3, in the consolation finals Sunday. Their third loss was to Florida Atlantic, 4-1, managing only two hits in the Saturday contest.

"I feel very comfortable about finishing .500 this weekend," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We found out a lot about ourselves as a team. We also found ways to win. I feel this was a good weekend for UMass softball."

UMass was down by one run to the Buckeyes until senior K.C. Budrewicz singled home freshman Amanda Acampora in the sixth inning to tie the game at one. The score remained the same until the Minutewomen managed to put up two runs in the top of the eighth. Pinch hitter Christina Douglas answered with a two-run blast to send the game into a tiebreaker.

Nicole Wilson started on second base in the ninth, and was moved to third on senior Jamie Cahalan's bunt. Wilson scored on an error on the following at-bat. After sophomore pitcher Jenna Busa went eight innings, junior Kelli Arnold put them down in order to finish the game, picking up the save.

Jamee Juarez struck out 16 batters in the game, one shy of the Leadoff Classic record set by former UMass hurler Danielle Henderson.

This was the second time this season the Maroon and White downed the Buckeyes.

Arnold had another stellar performance at the Georgia tournament after being named National Player of the Week and the Most Outstanding player at the Leadoff Classic a year ago.

Starting off with a couple shaky performances against DePaul and Oklahoma, Arnold remained poised and pitched a one-hit shutout against Central Michigan with her only run support being K.L. Kelley's solo homerun.

"She did an outstanding job on the mound this weekend for us," Sortino said. "She did a good job changing up the speed and moving the ball. She was very reliable and really showed a good change-up this weekend."

After scoring only two runs in its first four games this weekend, UMass found their swing against Army Sunday. Lead by Kelley's grand slam and Budrewicz first career homerun, the Minutewomen mercy ruled Army, 8-0. Molinari was perfect from the plate, going 3-for-3 and scoring two runs.

Arnold pitched 4 1-3 innings, giving up not a single walk or hit before junior Barbara LaFogg came in to finish the blowout.

"We went from flat line to having a pulse," Sortino said. "We are finding ways to get hits and this is only going to get better as the season progresses."

The Maroon and White had the opportunity after leaving eight runners on base, but could not score against DePaul, losing 7-0.

Busa found a rhythm as she sat down the first six batters and walked one batter in the third. In the fourth, Busa gave up a led-off single to senior Sarah Martz, but was saved by two straight fielder's choices. With two outs, Christina Douglas stole second and scored on Saskia Roberson's single, giving the Blue Demons a 1-0 lead. After one run in the fifth, DePaul exploded for five more runs in the sixth to end UMass' comeback.

The worst loss on the weekend for UMass came at the hands of No. 5 Oklahoma. The Minute-women could only muster one hit in the 9-0 Sooner romp.

Oklahoma's Jaime Fox and Heather Scaglione were both perfect from the plate in the game. Fox was 4-for-4 with a homerun, two runs and three runs batted in. Scaglione was 3-for-3 with two runs, two runs batted in, a homerun and a walk.

UMass slams HC

Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team entered the Hart Center in Worcester on Saturday having never lost to Holy Cross in its history.

That fact would cease to change, as the Minutewomen scored four unanswered goals to end the first half en route to a 9-6 win over the Crusaders in UMass' season opener.

Coached by former UMass player Stephanie Pavlick, the Crusaders had the upper hand early in the first half. Hope Zelinger fired a laser through the back of the net for the first goal of the game for the Minutewomen, less than 75 seconds into the contest, but thanks to two Crusader goals from Trish Sutton and Carolyn Smirti, UMass was kept on its heels for most of the half.

UMass	9
Holy Cross	6

"I commend them for stepping it up in the first 15 minutes of the game, but we need to change that," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said. "Now that we've had a game behind us, I think we'll see something different from them on Wednesday."

The absence of tri-captain Kristin St. Hilaire (high ankle sprain) on defense appeared costly early for the Minutewomen. But once the trio of Andrea Valachovic, Tracey Drown and Erica Shapiro found their stride, the Crusaders had a hard time working through the pressure.

"Erica did a nice job for us ... we pushed [Tracey] back to defense today, and we were really happy with her [performance] at that position. She created the plays for us on attack and transition," Bolduc said.

Lindsay Cassell knocked in a pass from Tracey Drown to tie it up at 17:59, but Kerry Daly reclaimed the lead for the Crusaders two minutes later with an unassisted shot into the back of the net.

After several missed scoring opportunities, it was clear the Maroon and White attack's speed had caught up with the hosts.

The Crusaders were penalized for an illegal pick at 12:24, and the Minutewomen immediately marched down the field. What resulted was another tying goal less than 15 seconds later, again by Cassell and again assisted by Drown. Zelinger tallied her second two minutes later, unassisted, to put the Maroon and White in the lead for good.

The duo of Zelinger and Drown connected twice in a span of 20 seconds in the final two minutes of the half to give the Minutewomen a 6-3 lead going into the break.

"They know what it takes to win, and they showed up today," Bolduc said of the two. "We need some leaders to step up, and they took on that role that we were looking for them to take."

All in all, Zelinger had four goals on the day, while Drown tallied four assists.

Cassell and Drown connected for a third time less than 15 seconds into the second half to put UMass up ever further.

Two minutes later, in what was arguably the most beautiful play of the day, Maura McGarrity went coast to coast untouched, and launched a bullet to the back of the net to give the Maroon and White an 8-3 lead, its largest of the day.

The Crusaders mounted a small comeback with three unanswered goals by Jacque Hastings, Katie Britt and Sutton, but the recovery fell short. Kerri Connerty put the nail in the coffin with an unassisted goal with two minutes remaining.

The Minutewomen will be back in action Wednesday, when they return to Garber Field for their home opener against No. 12 Boston University.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen top Bonnies

Freeman has career game

BY MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Saturday afternoon marked the conclusion not only of the Massachusetts men's basketball team's 2003-04 home schedule, but also of two careers that have gone largely unnoticed and under-appreciated over the last four years.

SBU	71
UMass	82

For the final time on the Mullins Center hardwood, senior walk-on Paco Kotaridis of Athens, Greece and senior student manager Eric Schwager, a sports management major from Long Island, N.Y. completed their duties within third-year UMass coach Steve Lappas' program, and Rashaun Freeman helped assure they went out as winners.

In an effort that earned him his sixth Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award of the season, Freeman put together one of the more dominating performances in UMass history, tallying 31 points and grabbing 18 rebounds in an 82-71 victory over St. Bonaventure before 3,140 on Senior Day. The win was the 100th for UMass at the Mullins Center since the building opened in 1982.

The Minutemen (10-16 4-10 A-10) return to action on Wednesday night at Temple, while the Bonnies (6-19 2-12 A-10) will also head to the Philadelphia as the last remaining hurdle between No. 2 St. Joseph's and a record-setting unbeaten season.

Nonetheless, the talk surrounding the Maroon and White focused on its dominant big man.

"I thought Ray played a tremendous game," Lappas said. "It has to rank right up there with anything [former UMass star Marcus] Camby did as a freshman.

"I don't know how many [first-year players] play a game like [Freeman]. The game that kid played was unbelievable."

"Obviously, every time Ray touched the ball, he did something good with it," sophomore forward Jeff Viggiano added. "Why not go to him as often as we could?"

Freeman's point total was the highest for a Minuteman since Monty Mack scored 32 in 2000, and was the highest for a first-year player since Camby also scored 32 in a

See BASKETBALL on page 7

Rashaun Freeman had career highs of 31 points and 18 rebounds to lead Massachusetts to an 82-71 victory over St. Bonaventure on Saturday. UMass heads to Temple Wednesday for an 8 p.m. tip off.

America's lost pastime

Bob McGovern

It looks like this baseball season is over before it even started.

For all of us out there that aren't members of either the Yankee or the Red Sox nations, this off-season has been one of the most frustrating in recent history. While other teams are trying to set up a respectable roster to bring into the 2004 season, these two Northeast monsters are simply eating up all the talent.

So the Yankees got A-Rod and now Red Sox fans are wiping their eyes with the same tissue that Nomah is using because the management wasn't nice to him. Please ... relax.

Just look at the names: Nomar Garciaparra. Curt Schilling, Pedro Martinez, Keith Foulke, Manny Ramirez, David Ortiz, Jason Varitek and Derek Lowe. When a fan of a financially strapped team hears Red Sox fans complaining, it's hard to feel sympathetic.

We small-market fans have to watch from the outside as this sandbox fight between the Yankees and the Red Sox swings out of control yet again. As our teams fill positions with question marks, these two storied powerhouses are doing it with exclamation points.

I almost feel bad for the rest of the teams in the American League East. How are teams like the Devil Rays and the Blue Jays supposed to stand a chance? I wouldn't be surprised to see half the guys on the Tampa Bay roster wait outside the Red Sox or Yankees locker room for autographs.

Then there are the Orioles, who for all intents and purposes gave its best effort to turn the face of the organization around. After several losing seasons the Oriole management decided to actually open its wallet and purchase some talent, namely Rafael Palmeiro, Miguel Tejada and Sidney Ponson.

If the Birds had this team last year, there is a chance they would have finished third and perhaps given the Sox a race for the wild card. Not this year. Sure, the Orioles might put up a fight, but it's pretty obvious that neither the Sox nor the Yankees have much to worry about.

One of the most common arguments I hear is that the Yankees buy rings, and I fully agree. But what happens if the Red Sox win it all this year? Will it really be that much sweeter to see the Sox win the

See McGOVERN on page 7

UMass drops opener to vibrant Tar Heels

BY ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BALTIMORE, Md. — It's one thing to play a season opener with a few key injuries. It's another thing to do it against the No. 8 team in the country.

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team fell 12-7 to North Carolina Saturday in a neutral-site matchup at Baltimore's Calvert Hall high school, with four of its top players hobbled or inactive.

Senior attackman Jeff Zywicki managed to participate, despite injuries that reduced their preseason practice time and greatly hampered his ability to get open looks throughout the game.

Sean Morris, who scored 14 goals and notched eight assists last season, was kept out of action to recover from mononucleosis, and defenseman Jack Reid was inactive due to a coach's decision. In the third quarter, junior defenseman Matt Garcia left the game with an injury, and his role was diminished significantly.

UMass	7
UNC	12

The Tar Heels, as a result, were able to tee off on the No. 7 Minutemen, and never trailed in the game.

Junior Jed Prossner scored three goals, all in the fourth quarter, to cap off the season-opening victory. But it was the work of sophomore Scott Falatach, who also tallied a hat trick to keep the Heels comfortably ahead of UMass, that made the biggest difference. Falatach's third goal, with 2:21 to go in the third quarter, ended up being the game winner. It also capped a three-goal run by the Tar Heels that distanced them from the Minutemen, after UMass looked like it was going to make it close in the second quarter.

"We made a few adjustments at the offensive end, and not [fouling], I think that was critical, and to clear the ball better," UNC coach John Haus said. "We just stuck with it, got on a couple-goal run which helped us."

UMass coach Greg Cannella said it all came down to the head game.

"You really have to be prepared mentally," he said. "Right away, we made three mental errors, we were man-up, go off-sides, and they scored. You have to try your best, but there's more to it than just going out there and playing physically. Mentally, you've got to be there also."

As for the injuries, Cannella wouldn't call them reason for excuses, but he did cite them as a cause.

"I think not having [Morris] and [Zywicki] at full strength really changed what we do, changed who we are as a team. Hopefully that will change, and those guys will come back. Jack Reid didn't play today, and Matt Garcia got injured in the third quarter, and that's it.

"You're talking about four of our best players, and you can't compete with a team like that."

The Tar Heels took an early 3-0 lead, before Neil Lundberg struck back with 4:14 left in the first quarter to get the Minutemen on the board. UNC scored two more quick ones in the second quarter, before Brett Garber and Ryan Connolly each hit on long shots that beat UNC goaltender Paul Spellman to the far side. It was the first career goal for Garber, the son of former Minuteman coach Ted Garber and the grandson of legendary UMass bench boss Dick Garber.

The Tar Heels added another in between the two Minuteman goals, and led 5-3 at halftime.

The first quarter was almost all Tar Heels, as they dictated play offensively, and held UMass mostly away from Spellman. In the second, the Minutemen looked to turn things around, slowing down their offensive-zone play, and playing good perimeter defense.

URI rips Minutewomen

BY BOB MCGOVERN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For most of this season the Massachusetts women's basketball team has had its share of turnover problems. It's no coincidence that in its 55-50 loss to conference foe Rhode Island, on senior day, a turnover was the nail in the coffin.

With a minute left in the game, the score was 53-50 after UMass' Judit Zsedenyi hit two crucial free throws. The Minutewomen fouled URI's Katie Stailing sending her to the line to shoot one-and-one.

Stailing failed to convert her first attempt and Monique Govan took off down the court to try and set up an offense to get a quick two. Govan attempted to pass the ball out Ashley Sharpton, but Denise King immediately intercepted it and made both free throws on the ensuing foul.

URI	55
UMass	50

UMass turned over the ball 25 times during the game and gave up 19 offensive rebounds to the Lady Rams. The Minutewomen played their best defense of the year, limiting Rhode Island to 29.4 percent shooting on the night, but it was the second chances that sealed their fifth-straight loss.

"We knew they were going to come out and deny us, so we knew we were going to need to go back door have a post presence and finish," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "With that we had a lot of unforced errors because we were extending passing angles instead of shortening them up."

The Minutewomen came out of the gates fast and built a 27-24 lead at the break. UMass' offense took a hit early on when freshman center Tamara Tatham picked up a quick two fouls.

Tatham, who has been pacing the Minutewomen's offense recently, saw limited play with her foul trouble, but was still able to scored 10 points and grab seven boards on the evening.

"We put our backs against the wall with out post players on the bench and it put us in a position where we had kids playing in the wrong position," Dacko said.

Going into the second half UMass had some trouble finding its rhythm. The Lady Rams scored the first eight points on the half, led by King, who scored the first four.

Joyce Massey broke the cold spell with a drive to the basket where she scored the bucket and the ensuing free throw. Edris Bailey follow suit and got and one call off of a Lady Ram turnover to take a 33-32 advantage.

URI quickly turned the tides and went on a 9-0 run, led by Laurisa Ewert and Tana Rhodes. Both players took advantage of the Minutewomen's foul troubles and put pressure on the paint.

UMass found itself down by six with minutes remaining in the game and were having trouble converting down low. Dacko switched up the game plan a bit and decided to get the ball out to the perimeter to the Minutewomen's sharp-shooters.

Sharpton, who has been sidelined with injuries for most of the season, made her impact felt in the waning minutes of the second half. Within 50 seconds Sharpton hit two three-pointers to tie the game at 45.

"Ashley possesses a great confidence in her outside shooting ability, but we need to make sure that we're matched up well defensively because her foot speed is lacking especially coming back from an injury," Dacko said. "If team's are going to play us in zone she's definitely going to get the ball."

Both teams began fouling and with time winding down, both squads were in the bonus. Bailey went to the free throw line with UMass trailing by two with 2:39 left, but could only connect on one of two shots. The Lady Rams then built the lead up to five points, 53-48, with 1:01 left.

Senior forward Glamora Maeweather was upset with the loss but has confidence in her team's ability to shine in the tournament.

"Honestly, it's the last home game of the season and we were looking for a win, we keep doing the same thing," Maeweather said. "We're all here for a reason, we all have scholarships, and we all know how to play basketball, it's just a matter of doing it. Hopefully this is just more fuel on the fire for when we go to the A-10s."

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Freshman Tamara Tatham had 10 points and seven rebound in the Minutewomen's 55-50 loss to URI yesterday. UMass travels to Philadelphia next weekend to play in the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Phantom Planet's latest suits only commercial needs

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Freshman Candice Molinari earns first conference rookie award

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 93

International fee challenged

Lombardi urges students to pay required fee

BY MORRIS SINGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts Chancellor John V. Lombardi said yesterday that he personally opposes the Student and Exchange Visitor Information System and surveillance in general at the University.

Despite this, it is important that international students pay their fees, Lombardi said.

"We are engaged in a conversation about the fee issue, but there is a bottom line, and that is that everyone has to pay their fees," he said.

While Lombardi said he is opposed to SEVIS and to FBI surveillance on campus in general, the way to bring about change does not involve a refusal to pay government-required fees, he said.

ANDY TAM/UMASS COLLEGIAN

Chancellor John Lombardi

"There's a process for changing things in a democracy," he said.

Those who don't pay their fees will be forced to accept appropriate consequences, Lombardi said.

"[If] people want to demonstrate, that's fine," he said. "But when we do things that we want, we also have to pay the consequences."

Lombardi stressed that he is not opposed to protests and opposition to the SEVIS fee, but urged that students continue to pay their required fees.

"Whatever happens to people who don't pay there fees will happen to those who don't pay their fees," he said, "just the same way if I don't pay my taxes, I'll still get hammered."

"Everybody can do what they want, but the University will do what it said it will do," Lombardi said.

According to Lombardi, the SEVIS program is only a small portion of the total amount of monitoring of University students done by the government.

"I do know that there's lots of surveillance going on, and that SEVIS is a tiny piece of it," he said.

Lombardi's statements on SEVIS came as part of his address to the Commonwealth College's "Pizza and Prof" event.

He also addressed the suggested expansion of the student body on the UMass Amherst campus. One of the major problems in expanding the University size is the infrastructure, he said.

"What we have is a campus that you would normally see ... if you gave an architect [the job of designing] a campus where there are no people," he said. "It looks terrific, until you try to deliver something."

According to Lombardi, it is difficult to vastly expand a University, the majority of which is inaccessible by car. However, the kind of increase in student body the University is considering will not like-

See LOMBARDI on page 2

Left: Students protesting the new international fee march into the Whitmore Administration Building Feb. 19. Right: Frank Hugus, director of the International Programs Office, discusses the $65 fee for international students.

IPO copes with budget deficit

BY S.J. PORT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The International Programs Office implementing an international student fee this semester has ignited a complex controversy on campus revolving around a number of hotly contested issues.

With the spring semester in full swing, international students will be receiving an additional $65 fee with their bill — a fee they say is unfair and pays for their own surveillance.

Opponents to the fee say it pays for the Student Exchange Visitor Information System, a requirement the Patriot Act put into place following the events of Sept. 11.

The University of Massachusetts is responsible for funding the system's installation and maintenance.

Part of the new fee covers compliance with SEVIS, which UMass is responsible for funding, International Programs Director Frank Hugus said.

He reported IPO instituted the $65 international student fee to pay for services rendered by the IPO to international students (both undergraduate and graduate) who are not citizens of the United States.

According to Hugus, eight percent of the $65 fee will be used to fund a one-person position whose job is to coordinate international students' visa information into the federal government's SEVIS database. The other $60 will be put toward specific additional services for international students provided by IPO, he said.

Price difference in international student fees

How other universities have paid for SEVIS and their international programs

UMass Amherst: +$65
UMass Lowell: +$140
UMass Boston: +$50
University of Minnesota: +$250 to $400
University of Indiana (Bloomington): +$50
University of Montana: +$75
McGill University (Quebec): +$2,637.40
Monash University (Australia): +$10,000
University of Edinburgh (Scotland): +$16,912.50

(all prices are in U.S. dollars)

GEO's opposition

The Graduate Employees Organization has led the protest against the new fee, saying it violates their contract as unionized employees at the University.

A rally to protest the international student fee organized by Graduate Employee Organization was held on Feb. 19, with protesters gathering outside the Student Union and marching to the Whitmore Administration Building protesters entered Whitmore with the hope of speaking to Chancellor John V. Lombardi, only to find Lombardi was away from the office.

"We've been trying to repeal this fee since the end of last semester," said Ibrahim Dahlstrom-Hakki, secretary/treasurer of GEO. "We filed a grievance [against the University]."

Dahlstrom-Hakki said GEO feels the issue is important on two levels. The first is that the fee violates their contract. "The University cannot discriminate graduate employees based on national origin," he said.

As part of their contract, graduate student employees have all curriculum fees waived in exchange for work as teaching and research assistants. The new international student fee is not considered part of the curriculum fee, Dahlstrom-Hakki said, and therefore cannot be waived for graduate student employees because it is not a uniform fee for all students, but is done through IPO. "If the curriculum fee is renamed in whole or part, that additional fee would be waived."

See FEE on page 2

UMass groups form coalition in support of equal marriage rights

BY MATTHEW CONSOLINI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The upcoming Massachusetts constitutional convention on March 11 has led many campus and community groups to unite in a coalition to educate students about the ramifications of a possible amendment that would ban gay marriage.

Tonight at 7 p.m. in room 917 in the Campus Center, the UMass Stonewall Center and Everywoman's Center, with other groups in the new University of Massachusetts Coalition for Marriage Equality, will host We Say, 'I Do' They Say, 'No Way,' a panel discussion about the importance of obtaining equal marriage rights for all Massachusetts families and keeping discrimination out of the constitution.

"This is an issue that affects everyone, and is ultimately the civil rights issue of our generation," said Felice Yeskel, Stonewall Center director. "There isn't anybody who isn't affected if we write discrimination into the constitution."

According to Yeskel, this coalition formed just two weeks ago in response to concerns about the upcoming convention and the possibility of discrimination being written into the Constitution.

"We had students asking what could they do. After hearing that from the tenth person, we called a meeting," Yeskel said.

The Stonewall Center hosted the first meeting to form a coalition and received a large response. Other organizations that have joined the coalition include the Office of Jewish Affairs, University Democrats, the UMass Pride Alliance, Men's Resource Center, ACLUMass, Qeshet, Tikkun Olam/Social Action Committee of the JCA and Family Diversity Projects. The coalition is in the process of reaching out to more organizations in the hopes of gaining more support.

"Basically, we have now till March 11 to have some impact and motivation to get people to act," said Yeskel.

She and other coalition members said they are not surprised at the huge support from groups on and off campus.

"I think most people see this as a human rights issue," said Sandra Mandel, associate director of the Everywoman's Center. "I think people are quite horrified at using the constitution to restrict freedom. The only time the federal constitution has been used to restrict freedom was prohibition, and that didn't work either."

It was this threat of discrimination that led many groups, like the Office of Jewish Affairs, to join the coalition even though gay and lesbian rights weren't the specific focus of their groups mission statement.

"The larger mission of this office, as all offices, is to create a safe, welcoming environment for all," said Director Larry Goldbaum. "We have to create an environment in which all are respected. If groups are experiencing discrimination or harassment, it lessens the safety of the campus climate."

Tonight's panelists will include Heidi Norton and Gina M. Smith, two of the plaintiffs in the case Goodridge v. the Department of Public Health; Stacy Roth, the Statewide Liaison for the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Political Alliance and Co-chair of the Executive Committee of MassEquality; and Reverend Jay Deacon, Senior Minister of the Unitarian University Society of Florence and Northampton.

Kerry seeks 10-state sweep; Edwards hopes for Super Tuesday surprise

BY RON FOURNIER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

John Kerry vowed that he would not be another "wishy-washy, mealy-mouthed" Democrat, pledging yesterday to wage a bare-knuckled campaign against President Bush as he sought a Super Tuesday sweep to lay claim to the party's nomination.

Kerry highlighted the short political career of rival John Edwards in an interview with a television station in Georgia, where advisers to both candidates say the freshman North Carolina senator poses the biggest challenge.

"I have a stronger, longer, broader, deeper record than John Edwards," Kerry, a 19-year Senate veteran, told WALB in Albany. "John Edwards I respect — he's been in the Senate since 1999. But there is no showing that he has a stronger record than I do with respect to putting people back to work and what we need to do to show the leadership of the future."

On the eve of their 10-state showdown, Edwards faced signs of political distress as Kerry's last major Democratic rival — meager polling, paltry crowds and a growing realization inside his own ranks that the end may be near.

"At some point, I've got to start getting more delegates or I'm not going to be the nominee," he said in Ohio.

Regardless of Today's results, Bush plans to begin a multimillion-dollar TV ad campaign Thursday to reverse his downward trend. Kerry's campaign is considering a modest response designed to put the White House on the defensive, said two senior advisers who spoke on condition of anonymity. Democratic allies may move sooner.

